MR. EDITOR: Mr. J. E. Remsburg gave us a very interesting lecture in Kent, on Tuesday evening, March 16th. The meeting was held in the Universalist church. His subject was "Sabbath-Breaking," and although the Salvation Army were holding forth, and other influences operating against the meeting, his lecture was well attended. At half-past seven the president, Mr. T. C. Heighton, introduced him to the audience. I forgot to mention that Miss Daisy Marsh sang a beautiful song, and Mrs. Hattie Longcoy presided at the organ, for which we all feel grateful. The speaker, in a few well-chosen remarks, introduced the subject, and went to his work in a calm, dignified manner, and in a clear and convincing way proved that the holy Sabbath was nothing but a historical humbug; and I must say that I never heard so much evidence from the early Christian fathers and standard-bearers of the cross presented, showing that it was but a pious fraud, from Constantine down through dark ages of terror and persecution to the present time. He also clearly proved that it was a heathen and pagan institution, and that much that we are taught to accept as Christian religion is nothing but paganism under the garb of Christianity, and I will here introduce the testimony of Bishop Newton on this point: "Is not the worship of saints and angels now in all respects the same that the worship of demons was in former times? The name only is different. The thing is identically the same. The deified men of the Christians are substituted for the deified men of the heathens, and, as the worship is the same, so likewise it is performed with the same ceremonies, the burning of incense or perfumes at one and the same time, sprinkling of holy water, the lighting of lamps or candles and wax candles in the day-time before altars and statues of their deities; the bowing down or kneeling before images; the solemn rites under the notion of penance; the variety of religious orders of priests; the imposing of celibacy and vows of chastity on the religious of both sexes; all these and many more are equally parts of the pagan and popish superstition; in short, almost the whole of paganism is applied to popery." And he might hav said the same of Protestantism, for it is nothing but paganism under the name of Christianity.

The Methodist minister honored us with his presence, but stayed only a few minutes. This was more than we could expect, as it requires but a short time to fill a small vessel. We all feel more than satisfied with Mr. Remsburg's lecture, for he spoke as one having authority, and not as the scribes. We suppose our orthodox friends are inquiring, "Hav any of the elders believed on him?"

Our thanks are due to the trustees of the Universalist church, and to Professor Marsh, for his influence and his moral courage in defense of truth and righteousness.

Yours for the truth, JOSEPH HEIGHTON.

ABILENE, KAN., April 5, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I am told that you hear both sides of a question. I therefore hope that, although an Infidel, you will be fair enough to publish this letter. I sincerely trust and pray that its plain statements of disgraceful facts will so disgust your readers that they will never want to hear of another Infidel lecture. A young upstart by the name of Rogers has been giving some Infidel lectures at Industry, and as the clergy were particularly invited, I attended one night, but shall never do so again.

Instead of the courteous treatment we were promised, we were most indecently slandered. He began by saying that for every dollar you spend you should receive an equivalent value; that whoever takes a dollar without giving an equivalent is a robber. He then tried to show that the ministers cost the American people a vast sum, but return no value—thus leaving the audience to infer that they are robbers. In trying to show that money is uselessly spent on foreign missions, he said that grafting Christianity onto Buddhism is not an actual improvement; that importing orthodox preachers into that country to improve the average morality was like holding a match under a thermometer in hopes it would make the weather warmer.

After abusing preachers in general, he proceeded to compare noted churchmen with Freethinkers. Professor Braden, the author and college student, who has forgotten more than this Infidel ever knew, was denounced as a foul-mouthed slanderer. The speaker read from a paper several affidavits to show that the professor had spoken falsely about an Infidel town. It is my opinion that he made the pieces up as he read, especially as one claimed to be from a minister, setting forth that the Infidels were decent folks. He wound up this tirade by saying that the slander had reached as far as Europe; that Professor Braden is a disgrace to the American nation, and could do a patriotic thing by committing suicide. At this disgraceful remark the audience laughed and applauded. May God forgiv them.

In speaking of Brother Boles, the county evangelist of this county, he became still more abusiv. He said Brother Boles made the great mistake of his life when he left the brick-yard for the ministry. He made great sport of his lecture against Ingersoll, and said that to compare Ingersoll to an orthodox preacher was like comparing Bunker Hill monument to a toadstool. In speaking of Brother Boles's assertion that if Darwin is right there would be some specimens half-way between man and monkey, he said it would be impossible to deny that as long as Brother Boles is alive. Had I not seen it, I could not hav believed that any audience was so lost to all sense of shame as to laugh at such blasphemy.

There are many Infidels in this county, but this one is the meanest. He nearly broke up Elder Knapp's class, that a hard winter's work built up, and when Elder Boles moved his tent into the neighborhood last fall, and everything was ready for a great revival, this Infidel began to scatter papers and books and lecture in the school-house against religion, and although the meeting was held fifteen nights not a single convert was obtained. O Infidel! what souls you will hav to answer for! But his efforts, like all others, will come to nothing. Voltaire said one hundred years ago, "In one hundred years there will be no more churches," but there are more to-day than ever. REV. GEORGE OLIVER FISHER.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Plow and Sword.

There was a count, the story runs,
Who knew that shortly he must die,
So called he to him his two sons
To share his goods and property.

Now for a plow, also a sword,
The aged warrior made request;
They brought him these, the sons adored,
That he could make them his bequest.

My elder son, my valiant heir,
You will this sword in future wield;
The mountain with its castle there
And all of honor you shall shield."

To you, not less, my kinder son,
To you the plow do I now giv;
In lands which quiet huts stand on
There you in peaceful toil shall liv."

Life-wearied then he falls to sleep
As he this simple blessing givs,
The sons his mandates truly keep,
And faithful are throughout their lives.

To-day where is that sword of will?
That castle and its hero man?
Where are the lands with villas still?
And where the humble, peaceful yeoman?

Oh! ask not how the story ends,
'Tis known full well throughout the throng;
To ruins deep the castle bends,
That trusty sword has rusted long.

The lands, though, lie in lordly pride
Beneath the sunshine's gladdening rays;
The golden harvests ripen wide
For one has held the plow these days.

How a Kind Action Changed the Course of a Woman's Life.

A little incident was brought to the attention of a reporter recently which illustrates in a marked degree how much good a little act of kindness may accomplish. About twelve years ago a young girl, only about thirteen years of age, was brought into the police court charged with being a disorderly person. She was fatherless and motherless, and had led a life which was quite the opposite of refining in its tendencies. But still her face was round and rosy, and with her golden hair she was a beautiful child. What to do with her was a question with the authorities. She was undoubtedly guilty of what she was charged with, and the only remedy for her case seemed to be a short term of confinement.

Just as she was about to be sentenced, however, a well-known attorney who was present asked to be allowed a few moments' conversation with the girl, which was granted. At its close, the gentleman surprised the court by asking that the girl's case be dismissed, promising that he would be responsible for her actions in the future. As it was the easiest way out of the dilemma, the judge was only too glad to comply with the gentleman's request, and the self-appointed guardian walked out of the court-room with his protégé in charge. He secured employment for her as a domestic in a private family, andmade her promis to come and see him as often as possible.

The girl lived up to her agreement, and the gentleman's kind treatment and advice which he gave her in her little troubles completely won her heart. Time passed rapidly, and the little girl became a young woman. She was an excellent housekeeper, her character was beyond reproach. She became more and more beautiful as she matured in years, until at nineteen she met a wealthy railroad man, who fell deeply in love with her. She returned his affection, but when he asked her hand in marriage she refused him. He pressed his suit, however, and finally she related to him the story of her early life, giving it as the reason why she had refused his suit. Her lover was not thus to be driven from her, and she finally gave consent to the marriage. The wedding occurred shortly afterward, and the newly wedded pair took up their residence in an elegant home in a Western city, where they now liv.

Last week a beautiful woman, handsomely dressed, arrived in the city and called upon the lawyer above referred to. At first he did not recognize her, but when she spoke of the little girl whom he had taken from the police court years ago, his eyes were opened, and he knew his visitor to be his former protégé. Both were deeply affected by the meeting, and fervent were the thanks which the lady gave the lawyer for his kindness to her in the past.

The next day the lady left for New York, and thence sailed for Florida. Through her benefactor the story reached the ears of a Bee reporter, but the condition was imposed that no names should be used. The story is a remarkable one, and, as remarked before, shows how an act of kindness can completely change the course of a life.—Omaha Bee.

Frank Ford's Fast.

Frank Ford filched five fat fowls, four finny fish, from fond father for Friday fast. Fearing fatal finis, Frank fasted from filthy flesh five Fridays 'fore Florida feast. Frank fasted faithfully (?)

Frisky fowls flew from Frank's fine fence for food; found finny fish 'fore Frank fed fowls. Four fowls fought for first fill. Fowls fought furiously; flopped, fretted, feigned fine feints, filched fine feathers from fancy frocks. Fun for fifth fowl. Finding firkin, fish floating, fifth fowl feasted. Few fowls fast Fridays, for fear fatal finis. Fowl finishing fourth fish, flew for field far from fighting fowls.

Frank found firkin, fish filched, fowls fighting, felt fearful faint. Frank flung fuel furiously. Fowls fled. Frank followed, flinging fuel, fretting for filched fish.

Far from farm fence fickle fowls fled. Fierce fox from forest found fowls faint from fighting. Fowl flesh fine food for foxes. Few foxes fast Fridays for fear fatal finis. Frank fled for flail, fight fox. Fowls filled fox full. Finishing fourth fowl, fox fled for forest. Frank, finding fowl feathers, finding feet, flung flail, fretted, felt far from funny.

Fierce falcon, flying from field, found fifth fowl fighting flies from fine feathers. Fowl flesh fine food for falcons. Few falcons fast Fridays fear fatal finis. Falcon flew for fowl. Fowl fluttered. Falcon fatally fixed fowl forever. Falcon, finishing fowl, flew for forest far from Frank's farm.

Fit finale.—Fox, falcon, feasted; fat fowls, finny fish, furnished food. Frank Ford fasted faithfully. D. G. CROW.

Fort Bayard, N. M.

[The above is a fine sample of alliterativ composition, showing the manner and motiv of the custom of fasting. We are obliged to its author for the contribution, and hope to hear from him again.—ED. C. C.]

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—CONUNDRUM.

What a bashful person dislikes.

2.—CONUNDRUM.

Why is Carrie not in earnest?

3.—A MOUTH-MAKING PUZZLE.

S—p last ninety-nine,
A single word which we define,
"Relating to the surgeon's sleight
Of forming, making mouths aright."
Here in the blank from "S" to "p,"
A large love-apple you may see;
And so the mouth is formed with skill
Which we with this love-apple fill.
But for Talmagean features wide,
A six-inch dash should be supplied;
While to displace this awful dash,
To well conceal the horrid gash,
The fruit that such a need supplies
Must grow to be a melon's size.
A melancholy tho't, I know,
When scarce such fruit is found below.
But "nature groans and man is sad,"
And, by the Jinks, it must be had.
Irwin, Ia. J. K. P. BAKER.

4.—THE "TREE PUZZLE."

The "tree puzzle" that follows is one of the most ingenious trifles of the kind now current:

1. What's the social tree,
2. And the dancing tree,
3. And the tree that is nearest the sea?
4. The dandiest tree,
5. And the kissable tree,
6. And the tree where ships may be?
7. What's the tell-tale tree,
8. And the traitor's tree,
9. And the tree that's the warmest clad?
10. The languishing tree,
11. The chronologist's tree,
12. And the tree that makes one sad?
13. What's the emulous tree,
14. The industrious tree,
15. And the tree that will never stand still?
16. The unhealthiest tree,
17. The Egyptian-plague tree,
18. And the tree neither up nor down hill?
19. The contemptible tree,
20. The most yielding tree,
21. And the tree that bears a curse?
22. The reddish brown tree,
23. The reddish blue tree,
24. And the tree like an Irish nurse?
25. What is the tree
That makes each townsman flee?
26. And what round itself doth entwine?
27. What's the housewife's tree,
28. And the fisherman's tree,
29. What by cockneys is turned into wine?
30. What's the tree that got up,
31. And the tree that was lazy,
32. And the tree that guides ships to go forth?
33. The tree that's immortal,
34. The trees that are not,
35. And the tree whose wood faces the north?
36. The tree in a bottle,
37. The tree in a fog,
38. And what each must become ere he's old?
39. The tree of the people,
40. The traveler's tree,
41. And the sad tree when school-masters hold?
42. What's the tree that has passed through the fiery heat,
43. That half-given to doctors when ill?
44. The tree that we offer to friends when we meet?
45. And the tree we may use as a quill?
46. What's the tree that in death will benight you,
47. And the tree that your wants will supply?
48. And the tree that to travel invites you,
49. And the tree that forbids you to die?

ANSWERS.

1. Pear. Tea.
2. Hop.
3. Beech.
4. Spruce.
5. Tulip. Yew.
6. Bay.
7. Peach.
8. Judas.
9. Fir.
10. Pine.
11. Date.
12. Weeping willow.
13. Ivy.
14. Spindle-tree.
15. Caper.
16. Sycamore.
17. Locust.
18. Plane.
19. Medlar.
20. India-rubber. Sago palm.
21. Fig. Damson.
22. Chestnut.
23. Lilac.
24. Honeysuckle.
25. Citron.
26. Woodbine.
27. Broom.
28. Basswood.
29. Vine.
30. Rose.
31. Satin. Aloe.
32. (H)elm.
33. Arbor-vitae.
34. Dyewoods.
35. Southernwood.
36. Cork.
37. Smoketree. Hazel.
38. Elder.
39. Poplar.
40. Wayfaring tree.
41. Birch.
42. Ash.
43. Coffee.
44. Palm.
45. Aspen.
46. Deadly nightshade.
47. Breadfruit.
48. Orange.
49. Olive.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN THE CHILDREN'S CORNER APRIL 10, 1886.

2.–Fifty feet.

3.–
DUCAT
USAGE
CAIRN AGREE
TENET

4.–
N PEW
EDWIN
NEWYORK CROWN
ORE
K

5.–
LAMP
AGUE
MULE
PEEP

6.–Cat-o-nine tails.

SOLVERS.—C. R., Lyle D. Gault.

Correspondence.

LIBERTY, MO., April 3, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Pa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for several years, and I like to read the Children's Corner. I go to the public school, and study arithmetic, geography, grammar, and I am in a third reader, and soon will go into the fourth. I hav five brothers and one sister. My sister is twelve, and I am only ten years old. My little brother don't go to school, but we teach him at home; he can spell some words; he is only four years old, and I am teaching him "The Ten Little Bigots." I hav twenty-six little chicks, and I am afraid that I will hav to knit some stockings for them. It is snowing very hard here, and it is about four inches deep. I had a piece to say Friday, and the name of it is "Ragged Jack." I think there are so many good pieces in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and especially in the children's letters, and the pictures in the paper are very amusing. I can't make out your Puzzle Box. This is my first attempt in writing a letter, so I will close, for I will weary your patience with so much nonsense.

Ever your friend, DORA L. HAYES.

P. S.—I will send you one of my cards.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My papa said if I would write to you he would change my prose into rhyme. I accepted his offer gladly, so I send you my thoughts thus transposed for the perusal of our little readers.

ELDA BILLINGS.

Children's Corner is a treasure
Prized by little folks at home.
Who its hidden worth can measure
In the future years to come?
Children's Corner is a blessing
E'en to children larger grown;
'Tis a treasure worth possessing,
This nice corner called "our own."

Auntie Susan Helen Wixon
Has a pleasant word for all.
For she does not feel above us,
Though we are but children small.
Writes for us such pretty stories,
Givs us, too, such good advice.
In our Corner, too, are puzzles
Executed very nice.

Homer, Helen Mar, and Elda,
Constitute "our trinity,"
But the very last name mentioned
Is myself, as you can see.
Ten years old in this month (April),
Go to school and try to learn.
Greet the children correspondents,
Each and every one in turn.

Elda Billings sends kind wishes
To the children, far and near,
Hopes when we are little older
We can pen our thoughts more clear.
Papa renders me assistance,
Puts my prosy thoughts in rhyme.
Will you put them in "our Corner"
If I'll write again—some time?

[Elda's letter in rhyme is very pretty; and so is the little picture sent us, which shows that she has artistic talent, and will in time perhaps become a celebrated artist.—ED. C. C.]

SUNLIGHT, NEB., March 13, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write you a few lines. My name is Edith Sowers and I am fourteen years of age. I love dearly to read the letters in the Corner. Ma and pa went to town to-day and we are here alone. I am going to school now. Our school has fifty scholars, but they do not all come; there are ninety-two in the district. Our teacher's name is Mary Hutchin. We are going to hav an exhibition the last day. Our school is out two weeks from to-day. I like to go to school, but I like to read the letters in the Corner better. We hav a town half a mile from our home. I love to liv in town. I am as bright as any girl is of my age. Pa says that I am dull and don't know anything, but I will show him. Well, I guess I will quit for this time. Good-bye, dear Miss Wixon. Yours truly,

EDITH SOWERS.

CLEARWATER, NEB., March 27, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: The weather has been very cold some of the time this winter. My father has been sick, and I hav had to do all the work. I hav had to take care of nine horses and six cows, and a lot of hogs, and draw water out of a well eighty-six feet in depth. The wells in this country on the table lands are from forty to two hundred feet deep. The most of them are bored with augers fourteen to sixteen inches in diameter. Sometimes when they are boring a well they come to trees down eighty or a hundred feet. The wood looks some like cedar, but is harder and finer grained, which shows that this country has at one time been a lake, as geologists affirm. EARLE A. FINCH.

P. S.—I hav read "All in a Lifetime," and like it well. It is a nice story. E. A. F.

WHEATLAND, OR., March 29, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I hav seen so many little boys and girls writing I thought I would write too. I am fourteen years old. Our school was out a week ago. When I go to school I study arithmetic, history, dictionary, geography, and grammar. Well, as I cannot think of any more interesting news I will close. Yours truly, JENNIE MAGNESS.

SALEM, ILL., April 5, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As it has been said in the Book of Books, as others hav written, I thought I would write. But I don't claim that my pen is inspired, as man is liable to error. My age is fifteen years. I hav been going to a six-months school. I hav studied all the seven common branches, and also Bryant's Common School Bookkeeping. We hav had ciphering matches almost every week. I hav four brother, two being twins, and two sisters alive; the two are named after two intelligent men, Alva Leslie, and Alta Darwin. I think the gourd-vine over Jonah is a different specie from that we now raise. It is the first gourd-vine I ever saw that grew straight up. When the paper is read of an evening, the things to look at are the beautiful pictures and the Children's Corner. I hav been reading Mr. Bennett's "Around the World." I think it is beautiful. There is one thing I would like to see in print; it is the orthodox "Sweet By-and-By." If you know of any quick rules of arithmetic, will you inform me of them? Hoping to see this in print, Yours for truth,

RUFUS WILLIAMS.

[We know of no quicker rules than are found in our modern school arithmetics.—ED. C. C.]

MOODY, TEX., March 28, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: As I am a reader of THE TRUTH SEEKER I think I will write a few lines for it. I am ten years old and I go to the Waler school-house to school. My mother takes THE TRUTH SEEKER and I hav a little sister three years old. I hav a little brother nine months old and his name is Robert G., after Robert G. Ingersoll. DESSIE SIMONS.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
T. Clappison, Hamilton, Ont.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
E. A. Stevens, 750 West Lake st., Chicago.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 315 North 10th st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

TEXAS.
F. T. Colwick, Norse.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

Mottoes for Freethinkers.

We hav received a supply of illuminated motto cards, which we offer for sale. These mottoes are intended to take the place of the "God-bless-our-home" placards which disfigure the walls of so many houses. They are printed on heavy cardboard, 9 inches by 22 1-2. The motto is in black, with colored borders, with an illuminated monogram of U. M. L. The following are the various readings:

THE LIVING HAV A RIGHT TO CONTROL THE WORLD.

FREE THOUGHT WILL GIV US TRUTH.

SUPERSTITION IS THE CHILD OF SLAVERY.

REASON IS THE LAMP OF THE MIND, THE ONLY TORCH OF PROGRESS.

THE SCHOOL-HOUSE IS MY CATHEDRAL.

UNIVERSAL MENTAL LIBERTY.

THE TIME TO BE HAPPY IS NOW, AND THE PLACE TO BE HAPPY IS HERE.

NEVER TROUBLE TROUBLE TILL TROUBLE TROUBLES YOU.

THE WORLD IS MY COUNTRY; TO DO GOOD MY RELIGION.

The price of each of the foregoing is 25 cents.

For Freethought societies there is a large card 22 x 15 inches, printed in colors, with an engraved heading, containing the Nine Demands of Liberalism. Framed it makes a splendid ornament for the lecture-rooms of Liberal societies. Price, 30 cents. Any of these will be sent postpaid, securely wrapped, on receipt of price.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York City.

A NEW PAMPHLET.—JUST OUT.

'ADAMI AND HEVA.

BY S. P. PUTMAM.

A poetic version of the Indian Story of the Garden of Eden, in which its superiority to the mutilated copy—the Genesis legend—is shown.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Price, Twenty-Five Cents.

THE

TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL

—AND—

FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC

1886.

(E. M. 286.)

WITH THIRTY PORTRAITS OF DISTINGUISHED EUROPEAN FREETHINKERS, SCIENTISTS, AND PHILOSOPHERS, AND NUMEROUS OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1886,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1885,	17
How the Church Filches from the State,	24
Public Contributions to the Church,	28
The Religion of Crime,	31
Chaplains in our Army and Navy,	32
The Higher Life. By Courtlandt Palmer,	34
My Dream. By Samuel P. Putnam,	37
The American Secular Union,	40
Statistics of our Foreign-born Population,	49
The Curate of Churnside. (Selected Story.) By Jas. Payne,	50
How Voltaire Died. By the Editor,	64
The Iron Virgin,	77
Religious Divisions of the World,	82
Paine Memorial Hall. (Illustrated),	83
The Story of 1885,	84
Immigration to the U. S. 1820–1884,	87
Freethought in Australia,	88
Freethought on the Continent,	92
Subjects of Illustration,	95
Freethought Journals,	100
Religious Denominations,	102
Area and Value of Farms,	103
Population of Large Cities,	103
Liberal Lecturers,	104

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Lick Observatory,
Girard College, Philadelphia,
Freethought Hall, Waco, Texas (Interior view),
Freethought Hall, Waco Texas (Exterior View),
The Tent,
Iron Virgin,
Paine Hall,
Moncure D. Conway,
Saladin,
Annie Besant,
Mary Wollstonecraft,
G. W. Foote,
Austin Holyoake,
J. S. Mill,
George Eliot,
Geo. Standring,
Ernst Haeckel,
Auguste Comte,
Edward Gibbon,
Max Muller,
Thos. Huxley,
Voltaire,
Chas. Darwin,
Rousseau,
Humboldt,
Byron,
Shelley,
David Hume,
Goethe,
Robert Burns,
Richard Carlile,
Herbert Spencer,
Castelar,
Bradlaugh,
Chas. A. Watts,
J. A. Froude,
John Tyndall.

NEW YORK:
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,
33 CLINTON PLACE.

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D
Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

Sabbath-Breaking.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG,
Author of "False Claims," "Bible Morals," Etc.

The best and most thorough work ever written on the Sunday Question from a rational point of view.

Large and Handsome Print.

SINGLE COPIES, - - 25 cents.
SIX COPIES, - - - - $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE
SHAKER EYE and EAR BALSAM.

SIXTY YEARS' INVARIABLE SUCCESS.

Best known remedy for all afflictions of these organs. WEAK EYES, WEAK EARS, DEAFNESS, and CATARRHAL AFFECTIONS immediately reached. FAILING SIGHT prevented. ROARING OR DRUMMING OF EARS will cease. One box tells the whole story.
Price by mail, 30 cents.
10t11 G. A. LOMAS, Shakers, N. Y.

A BEAUTIFUL HOUSE FOR $1200

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st floor shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney.

Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 39 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $6,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION, (Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702,) N. Y.

Bacon & Shakspere

PROOF THAT WILLIAM SHAKSPERE
Could Not Write.

THE SONNETS written by FRANCIS BACON to the EARL OF ESSEX AND HIS BRIDE, A.D., 1590.

BACON
Fatefactus Poeta Occultatus
"IGNOTO"
A.D. 1589-1600.

By WM. HENRY BURR.

Price, 25 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

REPLY
TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S
"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."
By B. W. Lacy

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, auther of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrins. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

S. P. Putnam's Works.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution, with some Criticisms of Universology. Price, 20 cts.

Waifs and Wanderings, a New American Story. Price, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cts. "A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Golden Throne, a Romance. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creativ spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words—the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read Golden Throne.'"—INGERSOLL. $1.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A conversation in rhyme between the Nineteenth Century Infidel and the Galilean Reformer, wherein it is shown there is much in harmony between them. Price, 10 cts.

Prometheus. A poem. "It is crammed with life, thought, and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary beauty."—DR. HENRY W. BELLOWS. $1.

Gottlieb, His Life. A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Price 25 cents.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand, and other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cts.

For all of the above address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Charles Watts's Works.

The History of Freethought. Bound in cloth and lettered. Price, $1.25. CONTENTS: Section I. Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II. What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III. Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV. Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V. Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

The American Secular Union; its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Secularism; Destructiv and Constructiv. 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Christian Evidences Criticised A reply to the "Christian Evidence Society." Introduction by Charles Bradlaugh. Contents: The Origin of Christianity; The Historical Value of the New Testament; Miracles; Prophecies; The Practical Value of Christianity; The Progress of Christianity. Price, $1.

Secularism; its Principles and its Duties. Price, 75 cts.

Tracts. The following tracts by Chas. Watts are published at the low price of FIVE CENTS EACH: Defense of Secular Principles; Is the Bible Reliable? The Christian Deity; Moral Value of the Bible; Freethought and Modern Progress; Christianity, its Nature and Influence on Civilization; Philosophy of Secularism; Science and Bible Antagonistic; Christian Scheme of Redemption. For all of the above works address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By Wm. McDonnell, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 90 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By William McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth. $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By Frederika Macdonald. 404 pages. $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By Winwood Reade, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

All in a Lifetime. A Romance. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. "The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks." Price, $1.50. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

AT LAST! we hav a "Secular Funeral and Marriage Hand Book," which can be used in all cases, and is indorsed by all classes of Liberals.

Price (cloth bound) by mail, fifteen cents in currency or postage stamps. A liberal discount to agents.

Address Dr. A. R. AYRES, 810 Broadway,
2t17 Hannibal, Mo.

LITHOGRAPHS
OF
CHARLES DARWIN.

Admirers of the Great Naturalist, and practically the father of Evolution, will be glad to know that we hav a fine lithograph of him for sale—size 18½x24 inches on heavy plate paper. Framed, the picture will make a splendid ornament for the parlors of Freethinkers. Price, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY:
OR,
MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.
A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who hav helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.

Price, - - - - - $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Poetry.

What Then?

With "ashes to ashes and dust to dust,"
Life's drama closes—what then? what then?
We shall go, to be sure, where perforce we must—
Perhaps it will be with the wicked men.

Or we may be borne upon pinions strong,
Beyond the clouds, through the upper air,
To the regions above, where no more we'll long
For the unattainable, all too fair.

But shall grasp, and hold, and call it our own,
And roll in such very excessiv bliss,
That we'll list with joy to the trumpet's tone,
And wouldn't a thrill of the harp-strings miss.

Or we may, like clods, in the coffin lie,
And dry, and crumble, and moulder away,
Till there's nothing left of the once proud "I,"
But a very small handful of worthless clay.

Then who shall say what the end will be,
When we bid farewell to this earthly crust
And cross forever the boundless sea,
But ashes to ashes and dust to dust? —J. W.

Book Notices.

THE ORDER OF CREATION: The Conflict between Genesis and Geology. A Controversy between the Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. T. H. Huxley, Prof. Max Müller, M. Réville, E. Lynn Linton. New York: The Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place. Pp. 178. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

As a relief to the worries of the political situation last year Mr. Gladstone fell foul of the Hibbert Lecturer for 1884, Professor Réville, of the College de France, whose "Prolégomènes de l'Histoire des Religions" was translated by Squire in that year, with an introduction by Max Müller. In "Dawn of Creation and of Worship" the distinguished rhetorician who sways the destinies of the British Empire attempts to demolish the position of Réville as to the meauing of the first chapter of Genesis, moved thereto by Réville's choice of an early book by him (Gladstone) as an example of the errors of men of intellect regarding this momentous subject. Gladstoue does not cite Professor Dana, of Yale College, but his mode of reconciling the first chapter of Genesis with the geology of to-day is so similar that at each page one expects to find that name. Dana's essay has been before the public these thirty years in the various editions of his most valuable "Manual of Geology," which is a text book here and abroad. Gladstone acknowledges that since he wrote the book cited by Réville he has changed his mind considerably, but after establishing to his own satisfaction the coincidence of the Genesis creation with that told by the rocks, branches off into his favorit study of Greek mythology, and ends with a pathetic note concerning Mrs. Lynn Linton and another woman writer, who rejoice at the prevalence of the doctrin of evolution.

Professor Huxley took up the cudgels for science and Réville in the December (1885) number of the Nineteenth Century, and pointed out the difficulties in the way of accepting Mr. Gladstone's adjustments. Then Max Muller had his say, chiefly to protest against the Gladstonian insinuation that he considers the solar theory of the myths a panacea. Next comes Gladstone's reply to Huxley and Muller, in which Professor Dana's name appears and Prof. Asa Gray is quoted. A postscript to this paper givs one to understand that he has just heard of Dana and Arnold Guyot, of the United States, and of Prof. Othniel C. Marsh, of Yale. The turn of the French professor comes next. Professor Réville is even more courtly in style than his English defenders, but makes a very admirable defense. Huxley says a word more in February of this year, remarking incidentally, "I think that Mr. Gladstone might hav been able to put his case with a good deal more force if he had thought it worth while to consult the last chapter of Professor Dana's admirable 'Manual of Geology,'" and referring him to the "Lectures on Evolution," which Mr. Huxley delivered in New York. Finally, Mrs. Lynn Linton comes in for a "Protest and a Plea."

The controversy seems to show that all Professor Dana's skill in marshaling his profound learning had not convinced advanced evolutionists like Huxley of the agreement which he found long ago between the geologic and the Genesis record of creation. There is, however, much to be said on both sides, and the champions say it with a good deal of spirit.—New York Times (April 4th).

THE ORDER OF CREATION CONTROVERSY.

Mr. Gladstone's review of Réville's "History of Religions," which appeared not long ago in a London periodical, and in which he undertook to affirm the harmony of Genesis and Geology, drew forth answers from Professor Huxley and Professor Max Müller. Then followed a rejoinder from the propounder of the harmony theory, which in turn elicited communications in rebuttal from Professor Huxley and Dr. Réville. A woman also figures in the list of disputants, an allusion in the original article having brought out a protest from Mrs. E. Lynn Linton. These papers hav attracted unusual attention owing to the eminence of the principal controversialists in their respectiv fields, and many persons will be glad to learn that they hav been collected in a volume reprinted in this city by the Truth Seeker Company. It may be said at once that while all the authority resulting from distinction and admitted competence in scientific inquiry is arrayed upon the side of Mr. Gladstone's antagonists, yet such a master is he of rhetoric and dialectics, that for the majority of readers the victory may seem doubtful. Let us try to set forth briefly what Mr. Gladstone sought to prove, and the grounds on which his assertion was challenged by Professor Huxley, the specific issue raised by Professor Max Müller being of subordinate importance.

Mr. Gladstone contended in his preliminary essay, and, with some modifications, reaffirmed in the rejoinder to his critics, that "the origins, or first appearances of plants, fishes, birds, mammals, and man are given to us in Genesis in the order of succession in which they are also given by the latest geological authority." This scriptural order of succession has, he says, been "so affirmed in our time by natural science that it may be taken as a demonstrated conclusion and established fact." From the assumption of this coincidence of the Pentateuchal story with the results of modern investigation, he draws the inference that "either the writer of Genesis was gifted with faculties passing all human experience, or else his knowledge was divine." Inasmuch as the first "branch of this alternativ is truly nominal and unreal," the conclusion is, "so stands the plea for a revelation of truth from God, a plea only to be met by questioning its possibility."

Professor Huxley begins by submitting that if Mr. Gladstone's assertion of the confirmation of Genesis by geology can be shown to be not merely inaccurate, but directly contradictory of facts known to every one who is acquainted with the elements of natural science, his deductions touching the inspired character of the scriptural narrativ must obviously collapse. He has no difficulty in showing that the term "great sea monsters" (used in the passage of Genesis under discussion) must include the most conspicuous of great sea animals like the whales, dolphins, and porpoises, and as these are indubitable mammals it is impossible to affirm that mammals come after birds, which are said to hav been created on the same day with fishes and sea monsters. Inasmuch, moreover, as these cetacea and sirenia are certainly modified land animals, their existence implies the antecedent existence of land mammals.

Furthermore, Mr. Gladstone's term fishes is shown to be too narrow to cover all the moving creatures that hav life which, according to Genesis, were bidden to fill the waters in the seas. Such moving creatures of the seas would include marine mollusks and crustacea, echinoderms, corals, and foramenifera, which are abundant in the paleozoic rocks, ages upon ages older than the rocks in which the first evidences of true fishes appear. If, then, in a geological book Mr. Gladstone finds the quite true statement that plants appeared before fishes, it is only by a complete misunderstanding of the word fishes as technically used is zoölogy that he can be led to imagin that the statement serves his purpose. "As a matter of fact at the present moment it is a question whether, on the bare evidence afforded by fossils, the marine creeping things or the marine plants hav the seniority. No cautious paleontologist would express a decided opinion on the matter. But if we are to read the Pentateuchal statement as a scientific document, then, as it is quite clear that only terrestrial plants of high organization are spoken of in verses eleven and twelve of Genesis, no paleontologist would hesitate to say that at present the records of sea animal life are vastly older than those of any land plant describable as 'grass, herb yielding seed, or fruit tree.'"

These objections seem sufficient to refute Mr. Gladstone's reconciling hypothesis, but there are others which are merely glanced at in the following sentence: "As in my apprehension," says Professor Huxley, "there is not a shadow of justification for the suggestion that when the Pentateuchal writer says 'fowl' he excludes bats (which, although mammals, are expressly included under 'fowl' in Leviticus), and as I hav already shown that he demonstrably includes reptils as well as mammals among the creeping things of the land, I may be permitted to spare my readers further discussion of the 'five-fold' order.'"

After all, to read this second paper by Professor Huxley seems like witnessing the slaying of the slain, for, as the following sentence from Mr. Gladstone's rejoinder shows, the latter felt himself hopelessly overmatched, and endeavored, by attenuating his original assertion almost to the point of impalpability, to lay a basis for an interminable logomachy. In the following sentence Mr. Gladstone seems to resort to the expedient of those sea animals which, when in peril, manage to eject a cloud of inky fluid between themselvs and their pursuers: "If I am asked," he says, "whether I contend for the absolute accordance of the Mosaic writer as interpreted by me, with the facts and presumptions of science as I hav endeavored to extract them from the best authorities, I answer that I hav not endeavored to show either that any accordance has been demonstrated, or that more than a substantial accordance—an accordance in principal relevant particulars—is to be accepted as shown by probable evidence."—New York Sun (April 11th).

OUR RELIGIOUS-SCIENTIFIC DISCUSSION.

The discussion of the great subjects of religion and science that has been going on in this paper since December last has recently been enriched and intensified, the scope and compass enlarged, and the whole reading world directed to it by the engagement of a similar discussion across the Atlantic, in which Dr. Réville, an eminent divine and scholar of France, perhaps the most famous in that country noted for its rich and splendid literature; Hon. W. E. Gladstone, the greatest statesman of Great Britain, and who is styled the "Ulysses of dialectics," and who is said by Professor Huxley to be the "greatest master of persuasiv rhetoric among English-speaking men of his time;" Mr. Huxley, who heads the world's special scientists, and whom Mr. Gladstone recognizes as an authority than whom there is none higher; Mr. Max Muller, the most finished scholar of classical literature; and Mrs. Linton, a novelist of sufficient reputation to hav been specially mentioned by Mr. Gladstone in one of his papers in this famous discussion, are the combatants. On this side of the water these papers hav been republished in a scientific monthly, with copious comment by the editor, and are undergoing review by Mr. Henry Drummond, and will no doubt receive widespread attention. These papers combine the thought of the ripest scholars of the age on a theme that has been eloquently discussed in all ages and in all languages. They are collected in book form by the Truth Seeker Publishing Company, 33 Clinton Place, N. Y., price 75c. Every one interested in this discussion should send for a copy of this work.—Ocala Banner.

Our enterprising publishers hav resorted to a new device for attracting the book buyer. We hav offered to us books that are Round Tables of controversy. If some leading article in an English review by a famous hand is answered by an equally famous one, and in turn is answered by the former, eliciting a rejoinder, and so ad nauseam, then the American publisher gathers them into a book and baptizes it with the name of "that irrepressible book." The duel between Mr. Spencer and Mr. Harrison finds a successor in what, from the number of combatants drawn in, we must call the quadrilateral duel between Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Huxley, Mr. Max Muller, and M. Réville. In the Nineteenth Century for November, 1885, Mr. Gladstone opened fire on M. Réville, the distinguished Hibbert lecturer for 1884. M. Réville givs us an amusing account of how, at a table d'hôte in Italy, one day he took somewhat warmly the side of Mr. Gladstone against an old English lady, who was vehemently denouncing the leader of the Liberal party. The irony of fate, he says, occurred a few days, after, when an Italian count suddenly said to him: "You are M. Réville, are you not, professor of the College de France? Well, it seems that Mr. Gladstone has been attacking you sharply in an English review." That was the first news he had of the encounter that has resulted in this neat book issued by the Truth Seeker Company of New York.—Unity.

J. K. Ingalls has written a book called "Social Wealth." It is very radical in its views, but written with force and evident thought. The theory adopted is that man's relations with the soil are intimate and interdependent. Labor and the soil are the two essential and primary factors in production. Since labor is the source of man's subjugation of the soil, labor has a right to a fair share of what is produced. The author then comes to the scheme which will restore the equilibrium and giv labor the means of living in proportion to its effort. The remedy is limitation of land-holdings. By allowing one man to hold only so many acres he thinks there will be enough to go around so that everybody can be sure of a respectable and wholesome life. "Rational Communism" purports to hav been written by a capitalist. It begins with a vision in which the United States appears as it would if the laws of equal distribution and justice were observed. The rest of the book is devoted to showing how a rational communism would bring about the ideal state. This author, like Mr. Ingalls, has no patience with the notion of property in land.—Kansas City Times.

ADAMI AND HEVA. A NEW VERSION. By Samuel P. Putnam. Published by the Truth Seeker Company, New York. Price 10 cents.

There is hardly any department of learning that has not received new lights from India. It is in the ancient world of Vedic literature that the germs of Aryan religions are to be studied.

No one can understand even the historical possibility of the Christian religion without knowing something of the Jewish race, which must be investigated chiefly in the pages of the Old Testament. And in order to appreciate the true relation of the Jews to the rest of the ancient world, and to understand what ideas were peculiarly their own and what ideas they shared in common with the other members of the Semitic stock—or what moral and religious impulses they receive from their historical contact with other nations of antiquity, it is absolutely necessary that we should pay some attention to the history of Babylon, Nineveh, Phœnicia, Persia, and India.

In the legends of India and the legends of the countries to the west there are strange coincidences to be found, without our being able to say how they traveled.

That at the time of Solomon there was a channel of communication open between India and Syria, and Palestine, is established without doubt by certain Sanskrit words which occur in the Bible as names of articles of export from Ophis; articles such as ivory, apes, peacocks, and sandalwood, which, taken together, could not hav been exported from any other country but India.

The Mosaic account of the origin of man and of creation were no doubt drawn from ancient records which existed in his day, and which assumed different forms among the various nations of the old world.

The poem, whose title stands at the head of this article, is one of those accounts of the creation of man, after the manner of the translations from the sacred books of the Hindoos. The work is without a preface, but is otherwise of that rich, luxurious, and glorious style so characteristic of the oriental mind.

The description of the awakening of Brahma and

"Creation's dawn upon the hollow gulfs;
The sparkling effluence of divinest joy,
Flowing and dancing, breaking into stars,
Long trains of light, and comets' golden hair,
And rhythmic sweep of cloud with breast of fire, Whence constellations burst and traveled space," is dramatic, and if not equal to some of the great epics of the west in the brilliancy and variety of its coloring and the music of its style, is not inferior to them in that masculin power which only rude, uncivilized nations can produce.

As an example of the author's style his description of love may be taken:

"Love can enrich the sweetest life of all,
Adami said. It is the heart of fire
Within the lily's bloom and star sublime;
It is the music of the summer's wind,
It is the song the birds sing evermore.
The waves do whisper it by day and night;
The thousand leaves are tremulous with its breath.
It is the secret grace of every joy;
There is no perfectness in anything,
So love makes not its home within its breast."

The "new version," as it is termed, is written by Samuel P. Putnam, of New York, and is well worth the perusal of every one. It can be had of the Truth Seeker Co.—Denison, Texas, Sunday Gazetteer.

SHORTHAND Text-book and Instruction by mail to master it, given by the author of the system for $6. Most popular and EASY method. Indorsed by 1,000 graduates and professional stenographers. Book alone $1. D. L. SCOTT-BROWNE, 23 Clinton Place, New York, N. Y.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, 1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50cts; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to Be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Francisean. 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3. Millions of these should be circulated by Freethinkers.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, prepaid, for 50cts, or either one for 15 cents.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine, and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price, $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should hav these busts.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22x28, $5; panel, 10½x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cents; card, 20 cts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

J. E. Remsburg's Works.

False Claims Revised and Enlarged. Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture: Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbatic Idea; The Jewish Sabbath; The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; The Sabbath during the Middle Ages; The Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; six copies, $1.00.

Image Breaker. Six Lectures: Decline of Faith, Protestant Intolerance, Washington an Unbeliver; Jefferson an Unbeliever; Paine and Wesley; Christian Sabbath. Each 5 cents; bound, paper, 25 cents; per doz. 40 cts.

Thomas Paine. The Apostle of Religious and Political Liberty. Tells the story of the Author-Hero's life, delineates the leading traits of his character and genius, and vindicates his name from the aspersions cast upon it. Choice extracts from "Common Sense," "American Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason" are given; also, tributes to Paine's character from more than one hundred noted persons of Europe and America, many of them written expressly for this work. Second edition, 160 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound, and containing a handsome steel portrait of Paine. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Apostle of Liberty. An address delivered in Paine Hall, before the N. E. Freethinkers' Convention, January 29, 1884. Price, 10 cents.

For all the above works address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

The Perpetual Calendar.

Working the Year of Science

And the Common Computations.

An Almanac Forever

Showing the day of the week for any day of the month for all time past and present and to come, and other useful information. Price, 40 cents; three for $1.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
Canvassers address L. Martin, Brunswick, Ga ures. The contents of the volume are:

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS: Introductory; Accident Insurance; Chiefly Women; Why Women Support It; What It Teaches; From Moses to Paul; The Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge; Knowledge Not a Crime; As Much Inspired as Any of It.

VICARIOUS ATONEMENT: Fear; Beginning to Think; Creeds; Self-Control What We Need; Vicarious Atonement Not a Christian Invention; Twin Monsters from Intellectual Pigmies; Geographical Religion; Revelation; Evidence of Faith; Did He talk? What You May Think; Intellectual Gag-Law; The Vicarious Theory the Cause of Crime; Revision; The Church's Money-Box; Shall Progress Stop?

HISTORICAL FACTS AND THEOLOGICAL FICTIONS: Church Fictions; Historical Facts—(Civilization, Comparativ Status, Women as Persons, Education, As Wives, Not Woman's Friend, Morals).

Price, Cloth $1.00; Paper, 50 Cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts,

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

SOCIAL WEALTH:

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

PRICE, CLOTH, $1 00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

THE PRESENT

AND

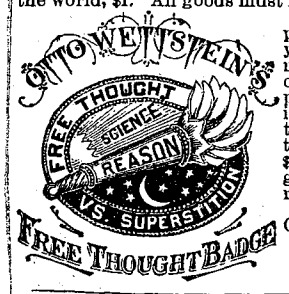
THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.



RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

Bible Inquirer. A Key to Bible Investigation. Revised Edition. This pamphlet refers specifically to 148 Bible propositions, with numerous references and citations, that are contradicted in terms by the same number of other propositions in the same book. Price 25 cents.

Otto Wettstein's

Popular Jewelry Store, Rochelle, Ill.

Genuin diamond jewelry; fine gold and silver watches, chains, bracelets, gold and plated jewelry, silver and plated ware, optical, art, and fancy goods. 3 oz., coin silver, Elgin watch, $9; 4 oz., $10.50; 4oz., stem wind, 11 jeweled, $14.50; same, 15 jeweled, $19; same, adjusted, $22. In filled gold cases, warranted 20 years, 7 jeweled, stem wind, $21; 11 jeweled, $28.50; 15 jeweled, $28; adjusted, $31. Best filled cases add $4.50. Ladies' filled, best cases, $20, 7; $22. 11; and $30 for 15 jeweled movements. Ladies' solid gold, 10 k., $22, 7; $24, 11; $32, 15 jewels. For 14 karat cases add $8. Gents equally low. Watches cleaned, $1; springs $1; and returned per registered mail. Best spectacle in the world, $1. All goods must suit or cash back.

And what is a nicer present for either your lady or gentleman friends than one of my latest improved model badges in solid gold, artistically enameled in three colors? Price, $3, $3.50, $4. With genuin diamond in rising sun, $8 and $10.

OTTO WETTSTEIN
Rochelle, Ill.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent. SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catch-penny get up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magnetic appliance, but simply a medicin to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

N. B.—Dr. Fellows begs leave to say that he is an Infidel of the most pronounced character. Bro. Liberals, your patronage is solicited.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German. A new cheap edition at only $1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY

John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

THE BEST YET.

Rev. A. J. Swarts, editor MENTAL SCIENCE MAGAZINE AND MIND-CURE JOURNAL, and president Mental Science University, 161 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill., has issued three pamphlets of 16 pages each. The 1st—"EVOLUTION, THE GARDEN, THE SERPENT, THE TREE. A NEW THEORY ON THE ORIGIN OF EVIL." This is original and overturns every theory yet advanced. It is unanswerable. The 2d—"PERSONALITY AND IDENTITY" destroys forever the scientific possibilty of a local heaven or a local God. The 3d—"IS GOD A PERSON?" It is useless to argue the individuality, or visible nature, of God in the face of this lecture. Every preacher should read this. It shatters dogmas Each of the above 3 cts. a copy, or 24 cts. per doz.

News of the Week.

THERE is a general movement in New York in favor of the Saturday half-holiday.

GOVERNOR HILL has signed a bill making twelve hours a day's work on the street cars.

THE bishop of Madrid, in Spain, was fatally shot last Sunday morning by a recently dismissed priest.

WHILE Catherine Brennan was praying in church last Sunday a thief robbed her of a pocket-book containing $12.

A GREAT flood in Montreal last Sunday inundated many of the principal streets and did a large amount of damage.

BARNUM'S great elephant Alice, the former consort but now the relict of the deceased Jumbo, arrived here last Sunday.

THE Shoe Salesmen's Union takes advantage of the Sunday law to coerce those who keep their stores open on Sunday. Several dealers hav been arrested for that offense.

MISS FOLSOM, of Buffalo, the young lady who report says is to marry President Cleveland, is twenty-two years old, a college graduate, and good-looking. Mr. Cleveland is in luck.

COMSTOCKISM is carried so far in Montreal, Can., that a gentleman has been prosecuted for hanging a picture of the Venus de Milo and other works of art on the walls of his own house.

REPORTS from Quebec, Can., say that a large trade in innocent girls is carried on between that city and the larger cities of the United States. The authorities are consulting over the matter.

IT is discovered that an Ipswich, Mass. selectman who warns the druggists of the town to stop selling cigars and candy on Sunday has himself been selling cider all winter without a license.

THE Rev. W. A. Hammond, of Franklin Falls, N. H., who recently ran off with $2,000 of his wife's money and was brought back and orced to disgorge, has disappeared again, this time taking his wife's clothing and silver.

A PHYSICIAN in Laurens county, S. C., claims to hav found a twelve-year-old boy whose backbone is prolonged into a tail eight inches long, covered with a thick growth of hair. The boy can wag the tail.

A TERRIFIC tornado visited St. Cloud and Sauk Rapids, Minn., on the 14th, nearly destroying the two towns. From seventy-five to one hundred persons were killed outright, and two hundred or more injured. Great suffering prevails.

THE railroad strike in the Southwest is still on, with small prospect of immediate settlement. Martin Irons, the local leader at St. Louis, has been indicted for tapping Gould's telegraph wires. His arrest is generally believed to be unjustifiable. Conferences and consultations are under way.

A MAN named Adams, who had committed a murder, was hanged at Northampton, Mass., last week Friday. In the morning of that day he humorously remarked that he would prefer to go off early, so he could reach hell in time for dinner. He was evidently a good man gone wrong.

DRIVERS on the Third avenue horse-car line of this city struck last Friday, and only a few cars were run. The company failed to come to terms, and on Monday the drivers and conductors on all the other lines except two deserted their cars. Up to the present writing the affair is not settled.

JOHN H. NOYES, head of the Oneida Communists, died at his home at Niagara Falls, N. Y., on the 13th inst., aged 74 years. He was born at Brattleboro, Vt., studied theology at Andover, and was licensed to preach. He was a fervent Christian, his peculiar doctrin being that women, as well as goods, should be enjoyed in common lot. He led an interesting and eventful life.

BOTH Mrs. Bartlett and the Rev. Mr. Dyson, of London, were acquitted of the charge of murdering the former's husband, who died from the effects of chloroform. It came out in the course of the trial that Mr. and Mrs. Bartlett were married with the understanding that their relations were to be "platonic," and that the Rev. Mr. Dyson was to be the real husband, which program seems to hav been carried out with great fidelity and assiduity on the part of the woman and the minister. Mrs. Bartlett testified that when her husband seemed inclined to violate the terms of the marriage agreement she had a habit of checking him with chloroform. It is supposed that he committed suicide.

Odds and Ends.

IN a popular choir a man whistles an accompaniment. See here, Brother Talmage, are you going to allow them to get ahead of you in this way?

"How do you like Smith?" "First-rate; only he is so superstitious." "How so?" "He never goes fishing on Sunday, because he is afraid the fish won't bite on Sunday."

TEMPERANCE advocate (to young man in restaurant): "My dear young friend, do you know that the Bible says, 'Look not upon the wine when it is red?'" Young man (surprised): "No, does it? Here, waiter, make that Rhine wine instead of claret."

THE story is told of a famous Boston lawyer, that, one day, after having a slight discussion with the judge, he deliberately turned his back upon that personage, and started to walk off. "Are you trying, sir, to show contempt for the court?" asked the judge, sternly. "No, sir," was the reply. "I am trying to conceal it."

MABEL and Floy Atherton, a clergyman's daughters aged eight and six, respectivly, were overheard one day in the following conversation. Says Mabel, "Now Floy, which would you rather do, liv here and hav a good time, or die and go to heaven?" "I'd rather hav a good time," innocently returns Floy. "Why, Floy Atherton," was the response, "is that all your religion amounts to?"

HJP hjp fjhurrahj! The Minnesota Norwegians hav again been celebrating the discovery of America by Niels Niederson the Red. The exercises opened with the reading of the Djeclaratjon of Fjinderpendjience, and closed with the singing of

Hjail Cjolumbia, Fjhappy Jland, Fjail, ye Jheroes Fjheaven bjornyterne bjand, whjich wjas gjven wjth a vjim that ljfted the fjroof off the wjgwamj.

DEACON BONESET: "Mornin', Brudder Wilsung. I's powfully pleased wid dat summon ob you'n las' night." Brother Wilson: "Wall, I's glad yo' liked it. But, ter tell de fec', I's rudder discou'aged." D. B.: "How so? We sut'nly had encou'agin' signs." B. W.: "Yaas, but yo' see, arter I had done closed wid dat pow'ful appeal, an' axed all dem ez felt de desiah to commence a new life ter come forrard, not a soul stirred. An' den when I axed all ez was Christians to stan' up, de hull congregation riz—not one ob dem a sinner, not one ob dem!—Harper's Bazar.

IN EXISLE.

Cast ashore on a lone, barren isle
In the sea into which flows the Nisle,
With no clothes but a battered old tisle—
From a full suit a rather scant pisle—
I, of course, could not dress with much stisle,
While I dwelt in that residence visle;
But as there was no one to smisle,
I managed the years to begisle—
That had else been a long weary whisle
With many a stroll in my tisle,
And many an innocent wisle,
That kept in good order my bisle;
Till a ship that sailed many a misle
Brought me home from my dreary exisle,
And I this way the tale place on fisle,
With the trust that it no one will risle.

—Norristown Herald

THE WAIL OF A CHICAGO WIDOW.

I show by my distressful tones
And by my doleful features,
How much I miss the Rev. Jones,
That best of modern preachers.
When his Chicago work was done
He paused not to consider
What grief the parting brought upon.
One lorn and lonely widder.

I used to wend my way each night
To revel in his teachings;
My burdened soul grew airly light
Beneath his magic preachings.
I occupied a seat reserved
For struggling young beginners.
And hung upon the blasts he served
To unrepentant sinners.

Farewell to those delicious times
Of silent adoration;
My idol speeds to other climes
To ply his sweet vocation.
Oh! that he might forget her not
Who boldly makes assertion,
That from her lonely, widowed lot
She hankers for conversion?

—Chicago News.

THE BEAUTIES OF THE ENGLISH ORTHOGRAPHY.

A scribe in writing right may write
To write and still be wrong;
For write and rite are neither right,
And don't to Wright belong.

Robertson is not Robert's son,
Nor did he rob Burt's son,
Yet Robert's sun is Robin's sun,
And everybody's sun.

The person lies who says he lies
When he is not reclining;
And when consumptiv folks decline,
They all decline declining.

The dyer dyes awhile, then dies—
To dye he's always trying;
Until upon his dying bed,
He thinks no more of dying.

Alas, a lass is sometimes false;
Of faults a maid is made,
Her waist is but a barren waste—
Though stayed she is not staid.

The springs shoot forth each spring, and shoots
Shoot forward one and all;
Though summer kills the flowers, it leaves
The leaves to fall in fall.

I would a story here commence,
But you might think it stale;
So we'll suppose that we hav reached
The tail end of our tale.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents; twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents; per hundred, $1.50.

Gems of Thought.

WHEN will men and women learn to be just and charitable to each other? When can the simplest demands and instincts of nature be answered without a life of cruel disgrace to follow?—D. M. Bennett.

So long as men believed, with Dante, for instance, that this world was the center of creation, and the important part of it, that sun and stars were only convenient lights set to enlighten this world, and revolving daily about, so long it was not difficult to believe that God once took a special human form, went and came in Palestine, and, if you please, died upon the cross. So long it was possible to think of him in a certain place; to think of the savior as now "sitting at his side," and to adopt in good faith many of the medieval formulas of theology or Christology. But, in that sense, this is not possible now. When a man says now that God was incarnate in Christ, he does not mean what the church fathers of the Middle Ages meant. When, therefore, an amiable and well-meaning man, like Dr. Thomson, says that when Jesus Christ walked about Nazareth, he must hav taken a peculiar interest in traveling about the hills he had made, he says something which is simply ridiculous to men of this time. They know that Nazareth and its hills were formed by an infinit power, about whose name there may be question; about whose nature there may be division. And they know that it is not in any fair sense of words that anyone says that Jesus Christ, who walked in Nazareth, made those hills, any more than Mary, his mother, made them.—Edward Everett Hale.

A MAN who is married to a woman his inferior in intelligence finds her a perpetual dead-weight, or worse than a dead-weight, a drag, upon every aspiration of his to be better than public opinion requires him to be. It is hardly possible for one who is in these bonds to attain exalted virtue. If he differs in his opinion from the mass; if he sees truths which hav not yet dawned upon them, or if, feeling in his heart truths which they nominally recognize, he would like to act up to those truths more conscientiously than the generality of mankind, to all such thoughts and desires marriage is the heaviest of drawbacks, unless he be so fortunate as to hav a wife as much above the common level as he himself is.—Mill's Subjection of Women.

THE KING'S GATE.

A beggar sat at the king's gate
And sang of summer in the rain—
A song with sounds reverberate
Of wood, of hill, and plain,
That, rising, bore a tender weight
Of sweetness strong and passionate;
A song with sigh of mountain pass,
Ripple and rustle of deep grass,
The whispering of wind-smote sheaves,
Low lapping of long lily leaves,
Red morns and purple-mooned eves.

The king was weary of his part,
The king was tired of his crown;
He looked across the rainy land,
Across the barren stretch of sand,
Out to the breadth of rainy sea.
He heard the wind beat loud and free,
The gilded casement, sullenly
Fallingly away with mist and rain.
"But, oh, it is a weary thing
To wear a crown and be a king!
Oh, for one golden hour and sweet,
To serve the king with willing feet!"
But he would sleep and from his heart
The jeweled, silken girdle loose,
And giv it room to turn and choose
An easier measure for its beat.

Into the gilded chamber crept
A breath of summer, blown with rain
And wild wet leaves against the pane.
The royal sleeper smiled and slept.
"I thought that all things sweet were dead!"
They heard him say who came to wed
The crown again to the king's head.

—Boston Transcript.

THE parts and signs of goodness are many. If a man be gracious and courteous to strangers, it shows he is a citizen of the world, and that his heart is no island cut off from other lands, but a continent that joins to them; if he be compassionate towards the afflictions of others, it shows that his heart is like the noble tree that is wounded itself when it gives the balm; if he easily pardons and remits offenses, it shows that his mind is planted above injuries, so that he cannot be shot; if he be thankful for small benefits, it shows that he weighs men's minds and not their trash; but above all, if he hav St. Paul's perfection, that he would wish to be an anathema from Christ, for the salvation of his brethren, it shows much of divine nature, and a kind of conformity with Christ himself.—Bacon's Essays.

IT is the duty of a man
To bless his greatest foe,
And shield the arm that late was was raised
To work his direst woe.

Just so, the scented sandal-tree,
In all its pride and bloom,
Sheds on the ax that lays it low
A sweet and rich perfume.

—Book of Epigrams.

TRUTH and the book of Genesis cannot be reconciled except on the hypothesis that the Bible means anything it can be made to mean—but then it means nothing.—Theodore Parker.

IT is a shocking waste of time to spend an evening in discussing the frailty of some woman with whom the divorce court will hav dealings, when the women of Shakspere wait for an introduction, or to keep company with a man of doubtful reputation, while Tennyson is neglected, and Walter Scott unknown.—Christian Register.

THE first grave was the first cathedral. The first corpse was the first priest; and when the last priest is one the world will be free.—Ingersoll.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 13. No. 23. PUBLISHED WEEKLY. New York, Saturday, June 5, 1886. 33 CLINTON PLACE. $3.00 per year.

OUR JANUS-FACED RELIGION.

Notes and Clippings.

A GROCERYMAN, of Portland, Or., has been expelled from a Baptist church for saying that he "would rather go to hell with a white man than to heaven with a Chinaman."

THE Dallas News has, as the boys would say, got Chicago justice down fine. It says: "They don't positivly know that they hav the man at Chicago who threw the bomb, but the man they hav will do to hang. He knew all about who did throw it."

A DAKOTA real estate agent was visiting in the East. "Hav you a church at your place?" asked a friend. "Church?" "Yes, a church." "Oh, yes, I know what you mean—one of these things where they ring a bell like thunder every Sunday morning. Yes, we've got one." "Don't you ever attend?" "Me? No, I never hav yet. I put in $25, though, toward building it." "How did you come to do that, if you don't take interest enough to attend?" "Oh, I knew what I was doing—we couldn't sell any town lots without one. There's nothing will catch the Eastern speculater when he comes out to buy real estate like a church with a long, slender steeple sticking up on it like the nozzle on a tin oil-can."

THE Sunday-school will get a bad name, says the Hour, if it keeps on graduating criminals at the rate it has been doing. Nearly every bank defaulter and embezzler of recent years has been a Sunday-school teacher or superintendent, and now, as if tired of that prosaic and sordid kind of roguery, it is beginning to develop suicide and murder. Cluverius, now under sentence of death at Richmond for murdering his cousin, Miss Madison, was a most devout church-member and superintendent of Sunday-school, and the broker, Latimer, who shot himself the other Sunday morning, had just finished notes for a Bible lesson he was to hav delivered before the Sunday-school attached to Dr. Talmage's Tabernacle.

JOHN JARRETT, ex-president of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, and Henry George spoke at Cleveland, O., May 26th, at the American Congress of Churches, on the reasons that the workingman distrusts the church. Jarrett said Christ, himself a carpenter, preached equality to all, but the preachers of to-day seldom preach Christ and him crucified, and are too loth to preach that the extortioner and oppressor, as well as the drunkard, and the employer who robs his men, hav no place in heaven. Mr. Jarrett has been a Sunday-school teacher for years, and related incidents illustrating how the church truckles to the rich. Henry George said that the feeling of the workingman against the church amounts to open hostility, because he recognizes the church as the bulwark of the condition of oppression of laborers.

THE Sydney, Australia, Evening News reports the following: "On the 17th of February, at the sitting of the Metropolitan Court of Quarter Sessions, presided over by Judge Forbes, Mr. T. M. Williamson, the attorney for a prisoner, was proceeding to test a witness's knowledge of the nature of an oath, when he was interrupted by his honor exclaiming, 'What nonsense!' Mr. Williamson: Surely, your honor, I can ask the witness whether she knows where she will go to when she dies if she tells a lie? His honor: Do you know? Mr. Williamson: Oh! well. His honor: I don't think you do, or any one else. Mr. Williamson: But the law allows us to anticipate. His honor: You would be satisfied, I suppose, if the child said, 'If I tell the truth I will go to heaven, and if I tell a lie I will go to hell.' Mr. Williamson: Yes. His honor: It's all claptrap—absurd. The attorney abandoned the question."

IT struck me as an incongruity, says the New York Tribune's "Man About Town," when I strolled into the office of a leading cemetery association, the other day, to find a stock ticker beside the secretary's desk, and to see that officer consulting the tape occasionally. But that does not compare with the experience of a friend who is a good church-member, and who went the other day to secure a pew in a city church. He told the sexton what he could afford to contribute yearly to the church, and got the reply: "Bless you, sir, that would not pay the ground rent of a pew. Land comes high in New York, and we hav to rent our pews accordingly." My friend does not now go to church, and he is in favor of opening the libraries and the art galleries and similar institutions on Sunday.

THE New York Sun printed, a few weeks ago, an account of a young girl who had been abandoned by her mother, and whose father was unable to support her, becoming a regular and apparently seriously interested attendant at a series of revival meetings which were being held at Milford, Pa., and who received one day a note signed "Ladies of the Church," telling her that her presence at the meetings was not desired unless she could come clad in better clothing and hav a more presentable appearance. As that was impossible, the unfortunate girl, whose name is Tabitha Weeks, ceased going to church, and, finding no one in the place who seemed willing to giv her a helping hand, she drifted from place to place, and a few days ago went to Port Jervis. There she stole some jewelry from a house, and was arrested and sent to the penitentiary for four months.

REV. DR. TALMAGE is not always happy in his illustrations. In a recent pulpit address he thus depicted Anarchy: "Anarchy is the abolition of right and property. It makes your store, house, money, and family mine, and all mine yours." Most persons, says Cooley's Weekly, will readily agree with the Brooklyn Tabernacle orator that Anarchy is a very bad thing indeed, but, after all, isn't Anarchy, as described by Mr. Talmage, exactly what Mr. Talmage's Lord and master preached while on earth? In fact there is no more doubt that the Lord and master preached Communism than there is that the servant and follower preaches something very different. Christ was crucified because he preached that doctrin; Mr. Talmage doesn't mean to be crucified. But why should Dr. Talmage, whose soul ought to be exclusivly concerned with his heavenly possessions, take heed for those earthly treasures that moth and rust may corrupt, and that thieves may break through and steal? If Talmage has any property, any store or house that he calls "mine," he should make haste to share it with his "dear brother in the Lord," and not prate about the "rights of property."

Communications.

A Bill of Indictment Against Religions Per Se.

BY JACOB HENDERSON.

II.

But I return from this digression to the line of my argument.

THE CHURCH THE OFFSPRING OF THE RELIGIOUS SENTIMENT, AND THE CAUSE OF STRENGTHENING ITS DOMINION IN THE WORLD.

Eighteen hundred years ago the Christian church, as a new sect of religionists, began its career, and her priesthood, setting aside the claims of the old heathen exorcists, monopolized the business of working the religious sentiment as a mine of wealth and power for themselvs. Like their illustrious pagan predecessors, the Christian hierarchy continued the policy of keeping the people in ignorance, well knowing the advantage it gave them in carrying out their ends. They appropriately called themselvs shepherds, and the people sheep—the most simple and gullible of all animals, whose nature is to follow wherever the shepherd, with his bag of salt, leads, and whose function, in the plan of the world, is to yield their fleeces to the shepherd for his clothing, and their carcases for his food. Like Christ and the apostles, the new hierarchy were firm believers in demoniacal possessions, and continued the practice of casting them out in the old way. The church accepted from the Jews their bloody law of the eight letters, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to liv," and, at her instigation, and to secure the favor of God for their rigid obedience to the divine precepts, the governments of Europe occupied themselvs for ages, mainly, in the work of hunting down heretics and putting witches to death thus proving themselvs to be true Christian governments.

In regard to witchcraft, it is almost impossible for us to believe the records of history as to the numbers that were sacrificed to this Moloch of religion, and the cruelties practiced upon them by law and custom before they died. The thousand years of history called the Dark Ages constituted the most religious period of the church. Religion had everything its own way, and had a chance to act out, and did act out, its own character without let or hindrance. Crime in all its ferocity, and vice in all its ignoble forms, were sanctioned and sanctified by the church, provided they were committed by the "saints." A man of man of ordinary sensibility who reads the history of those times feels ashamed that he belongs to a race of beings that could be guilty of such atrocious deeds; and all the more because they were perpetrated at the suggestion, by the authority, and in illustration of a sentiment which we hav been taught to believe is a good thing in itself, and a great, if not indispensable, adornment of the human character.

THE FIRST BLOW UNINTENTIONALLY GIVEN TO DESTROY THE SUPREMACY OF THE RELIGIOUS SENTIMENT.—LUTHER.

This reign of religions, dictating both faith and practice, continued till, by another step in the process of evolution, Martin Luther, in the sixteenth century, appeared upon the scene of human affairs, and soon attracted as much attention in Europe as a new constellation would which had unexpectedly revealed itself in the heavens. It seems as though all the millions of the dumb spirits of the human race, in revenge for what they themselvs had suffered at the hands of religion, and to save posterity from a similar fate, knowing and taking advantage of this man's natural courage, mightily struggled and finally succeeded in extorting an utterance from his lips that would turn the course of events into a new channel, and giv a death-blow to the sentiment of religion itself. For, although a priest of the church, and without even seeming to suspect what would be the legitimate result of his utterance in the ages to come, he proclaimed in the ears of Europe, concerning the Bible, which at that time was universally regarded as a revelation from God to the human family, that man, as man, had a right to read its pages and to judge for himself as to the meaning of its contents. Nay, more, that this right of private judgment extends not only to the meaning of the scripture text, but to the previous question, Whether the Bible itself was, or was not, the word of God, and infallibly inspired in all its parts. Luther, in the exercise of this right, rejected several of the books of the Bible which had been from the beginning, and still are, deemed canonical, because in his judgment they had no proof of inspiration.

Then it was, I think, that the human race passed the period of its childhood, and entered upon the career of its youth. What Luther did, and what in that day required the courage of a lion to do, and what should make his name immortal, was to proclaim that mankind had an inherent and inalienable right to listen to what was then considered to be the voice of God in the Bible immediately, and not be compelled to take the echoes and reëchoes of that voice as they came from the lips of the priesthood, from one generation to another to the end of time. That Luther meant his utterance of the right of private judgment to be mainly his justification for abjuring the despotic authority of the Romish church; that it was a suggestion of the intellect alone; that he had no idea whatever of the pregnancy of the principle he established, is verified by the fact that when he saw the leaven of his principle beginning to do its proper work of enlightenment among the populations of Europe, and freeing them from the bondage of superstition, the religion that was so deeply imbedded in him, true to its blind and ferocious character, waked up, assumed its sovereignty, and prompted him to draw up a creed of dogmas, and compel all his followers to accept it on pain of eternal damnation. He refused the hand of brotherhood to Zwingle, the fairest and most chivalrous of all the Reformers, and even held it to be extremely probable that, although he died for the Protestant cause on the field of battle, he would, nevertheless, suffer eternal torments in hell-fire, because he did not believe with Luther in the "real presence" of Jesus Christ in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper!

If there ever was a real demoniacal possession, Luther's religion was one; and as there was no exorcist in that generation powerful enough to cast it out, and as he was so infatuated by its satanic influence that he did not want it cast out, but blindly cherished it as a good spirit, the work of reformation, so happily begun, suddenly stopped in its progress, and has made no corresponding advance since. But after all his inconsistent blundering, the unintentional blow he gave to religion per se was a mortal one.

THE SECOND BLOW: BACON.

In the next century, and by a logical sequence, Francis Bacon arose, and, standing upon the solid ground which Luther had prepared as to the right of judgment, taught mankind how, in all the departments of knowledge, they should exercise this right—by the inductiv, rather than the old theological method of deduction. For the religious word credo, I believe, which had been in vogue from the beginning of the Exorcist's reign, he substituted the words skeptomai, I inquire, and scio, I know. The jumble of ideas which had entered the human mind through the wide door of implicit faith were driven out by the new learning, and gave room to real knowledge, arranged in an orderly manner, and fit for practical use. The intellect of man, thus liberated from the old bondage by Luther, and taught how to use its freedom in investigation by Bacon, soon became conscious of its powers, and began a career of inquiry into nature and her laws which has resulted in making the nineteenth the most wonderful of all the centuries of time. It has democratized knowledge and political power. It has filled the houses of the common people with blessings which their ancestors never dreamed of. It has set in motion causes which are bound, in due time, to equalize the condition of mankind, do away with war, and ultimately establish fellowship among the nations of the earth.

THE THIRD BLOW: PAINE.

But toward the elimination of this blind and dangerous sentiment of religion from the human character, the most heroic service ever done by man, all things considered, was performed at the close of the last century by Thomas Paine, who, made an intellectual freedman by Luther, and taught how to use his freedom by Bacon, and whose holy indignation at the cruelty of superstition was so intense that he took the Bible, which the church had made a fetich of, and brought its historical parts, and its prophecies and miracles, in detail, to the infallible test of reason, and proved, to the satisfaction of every impartial reader, that the book itself neither was, nor claimed to be, a revelation from God. His treatis, entitled, "The Age of Reason," was mainly written when its author was in a French prison, liable at any moment to be sent to the guillotine, because, as a member of the National Convention, he pleaded for the life of the king, and proposed that he should be allowed to accept an asylum in the United States, as the English people, in their revolution of 1688, had allowed King James II. to accept an asylum in France. The indebtedness of the world, and especially the people of the United States, to Paine for his "Age of Reason," and his political writings, has never been paid. For, although his services in our war for independence and nationality, and in founding the republic, were as valuable as the sword of Washington, the demoniac spirit of the church religion has blackened his reputation for a hundred years. It is even more relentless and unscrupulous in our day than it was in his, because his immortal work, so well adapted to the comprehension of the common mind, and circulating, as it does, among the English-speaking peoples of all lands, is doing more than any other book of the last century to destroy the power of the priesthood, and to extirpate from the human character its most dangerous element.

NO WONDER THAT RELIGION STILL HOLDS SWAY.

But it is not wonderful that an instinct which it took countless thousands of years to engraft upon the human character, and which the church for the last eighteen centuries has been constantly engaged in strengthening by every conceivable device of fraud and power, should be as blind and as strong to-day as it ever was. We are told in the New Testament that some devils who had entered into some persons were so determined to hold possession of their victims that the excorcist, although endowed with miracle-working powers, could not cast them out without resorting to auxiliary expedients. And therefore, in this nineteenth century, and in the light and liberty which science has given it, there remains still the same old fear of an angry, personal God, and of the devil as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour; the same old dread of the mystery of death; the same chilling doubt concerning the happiness of a future state of existence; and these fears chase their victims to the church, and lead them to hope, if not believe, that by some hocus-pocus which they cannot understand, the priesthood can make it go well with them at death and hereafter. I say we cannot wonder at this. For these dreadful ancestral experiences of ignorance and fear, reaching through so many ages, with no science to counteract the malign influence of the everywhere-present priest, worked the sentiment of religion so effectually into the warp and woof of the human character that it can still laugh to scorn both science and philosophy. But the case is not hopeless. It is in the power of science to create new environments, and, as the sun, advancing in his upward march to the zenith, scatters the rays of light everywhere, so science will change the condition and circumstances of mankind, and bring them under the operation of the eternal law that all creatures, from man down to the insect, must conform to their environments or perish from the earth.

THE CHARACTER OF RELIGION AS PROVED FROM CHURCH HISTORY.

I hav been reading once more the great text-book on church history, recognized as authority in all Protestant theological seminaries, where young men are sent to prepare for the Christian ministry. It is entitled, "Institutes of Ecclesiastical History, Ancient and Modern," by John Laurence von Mosheim, D.D., chancellor of the University of Gottingen, translated from the Latin by the Rev. Dr. Murdoch. It givs a detailed history of the Christian church from the birth of Christ to the seventeenth century inclusiv, and I feel safe in saying that if an educated Hindoo, who had never heard of Christianity or the Bible, and therefore had no prejudices, either pro or con, would read these three volumes, it would inevitably produce the conviction on his mind, first, that the institution called the church, from the very beginning of its existence, was a fraud and a swindle practiced by the priesthood on the ignorance and credulity of mankind, and, secondly, that the sentiment called religion, which it was the sole function of the church to cherish, has been the deadliest curse that ever afflicted the human family, and that civilization might hav been advanced a thousand years from where it now stands but for this obstacle. Mosheim notes, in sections of his chapters on the early centuries, the "pious frauds" of the times, or the brazen-faced lies and forgeries, as we would call them now, practiced by the church on principle, for the purpose of strengthening her hold upon the ignorant masses; and it is very remarkable that the nearer you go back to the time of the apostles the more numerous they become. The evidence is clear that the more intense the piety and zeal of the churchman, the more unscrupulous was he as a liar and a forger. It was by an implicit faith in what the priest told him that the humble Christian was sure to find favor with God living or dying.

THE EMPTINESS OF THE CHURCH'S CLAIM OF PROMOTING POLITICAL FREEDOM.

The church claims that her doctrin of the salvability of all souls, whether a man or woman, bond or free, king or subject, countenanced the American doctrin of the equality of all persons before the law. I admit the fact. But it was a mere obiter dictum, never used nor intended to be used as a political principle in the affairs of this world; for, despotism of the most crushing kind reigned supreme through the centuries, and the church was always on the side of the monarch against the people. The sciences of anatomy and physiology, counting the bones and muscles and examining other parts and functions in the bodies of the various races of mankind, and seeing that they were all physically alike, taught the doctrin of human equality ages before there was a church or a Bible. To be sure, as in the case of the church, it was obiter dictum; for the sole function of science is to ascertain facts, leaving the philosopher, the statesman, and the inventor to draw such inferences from them and make such uses of them as they see fit. Besides, it was during the reign of the church despotism that Roger Bacon, for the crime of having ground common glass on a stone so as to giv it a highly magnifying power, was sent to prison on the charge of magic and being in league with the devil. In those Dark Ages, science, chased like a wounded deer by the hounds of the church, was afraid to tell what she knew, or even to call herself by her own name.

But the doctrin of equal rights which is now shaking civilized nations to their center needed no revelation from heaven to prove it to be true. As men of all races mingle with each other, and see that they are alike human, it is a dictate of common sense that if one man is endowed by nature with inherent rights which ought to be respected by the rest, then each of all the rest has the same rights; and the material duties growing out of these convictions constitute the code of natural morals. The founders of this republic who were, almost without exception, Infidels to all religions, with the great book of nature lying open before them, adopted the principle of human equality so ably expounded by Thomas Paine and his political associates, and made it the corner-stone of the government. Seeing also from the history of the world and what was then transpiring before their own eyes in Europe what a nuisance and a curse religion was and always had been in the affairs of government, they drew up a Constitution for the protection of their posterity which most scrupulously ignores the very existence of a God, of a church, and of religion in any of its forms.

THE EMPTINESS OF THE PLEA THAT SOCIETY WOULD REVERT TO BARBARISM BUT FOR THE RESTRAINING INFLUENCE OF RELIGION AND THE CHURCH.

The church to-day, unable to defend her creed of dogmas from the attacks of reason and criticism, pleads for the continued existence of religion and of herself as an organization for the sole purpose of strengthening and perpetuating it, on the ground that her teaching and influence are necessary to the formation of a good moral character; that society would become disintegrated, and its members degenerate into brutes and devils in two or three generations, but for her restraining power; that we owe to her teaching our knowledge of right and wrong, and that the hope of heaven and the fear of hell which constitute the religious sentiment are absolutely necessary to any advancement in civilization. But I deny these claims, because they are founded in falsehood. The estimate we put on the value of the church and her religion, as civilizing agencies during the past ages, is based upon the facts of history written by her own sons, and not by her enemies, and, in view of the record, no sentence in all the voluminous works of Charles Darwin embodies more truth and wisdom than the one I hav placed at the head of this essay, that he "did not see the need of any religion." If the arrogant pretense of the church were well founded, that nothing but religion keeps mankind, and each of the individuals who compose the genus, from reverting to their primeval state of brutality, then Charles Darwin should hav nearly lapsed into the condition of a quadruped going on all fours, for he was destitute of every spark of religion, and ignored it entirely. He feared no gods above, no devils beneath, no hell of fire and brimstone, and no priests of any faith; and as for death, he considered it as natural an event as birth. Yet, for all that exalts man in the scale of being, both for nativ intellect, attainments in knowledge, and excellence of moral character, he had no superior. He had spent his whole life in scientific investigation. He had studied the history of the human family, and the part enacted by religions in their slow progress from barbarism toward civilization. He observed the workings of the religious sentiment in his own and other countries, and in all its different creeds and ceremonies; and, after profound reflection, he tells the world, in the simplicity and honesty of his truth-loving character, that he does not see the need of any religion. Darwin was a mere scientist. He did not profess to be a reformer, and the sentence quoted was only a minimum of what he believed and felt. But, notwithstanding this sober judgment of one of her wisest and most illustrious sons, the English government expends more than twenty millions of dollars annually, and employs more than twenty thousand clergymen in one sect alone, to say nothing of others, in keeping in existence a totally useless thing! May we not hope that the opinion of Darwin, like leaven in a mass of meal, will gradually and surely spread itself among the priest-ridden people of England, till they see their way clear to abolish a system so useless and expensiv, and install science as the people's teacher?

THE ESOTERIC PHILOSOPHERS.

We hav a school of timorous thinkers among us who maintain that while they and the rest of the refined and educated classes hav no need of the restraining influence of the religious sentiment, and reject it as sheer superstition, we must hav some kind of popular religion with a hell and a devil in it which the priesthood can exoterically teach and manipulate, or else society could not protect itself against the vicious and criminal classes such as gather in large centers of populations. They point to the fact that when a posse comitatus, or even a company of armed soldiers, fail to quell a mob or an insurrection in a penitentiary, a priest can accomplish the object if the insurgents be Catholics, as they are likely to be, by threatening the criminals with the displeasure of the church, excommunication from its privileges, and finally hell fire in the next world if they do not obey the priest's command and submit. The criminal saint has no fear of the civil magistrate, but treats his mandates with scorn; and he submits, not because he ought to submit, but because his priest commands him to do so.

But, even admitting that converting the church into a police force, armed with religion as a bludgeon, might, in some cases, serve a good purpose, the conditions of the world, past and present, show that with all the enginery of heaven and hell at their command for eighteen hundred years to work upon the hopes and fears of mankind, practically, and as a general rule, these doctrins hav lost their restraining force. The statistics of crime show that the three largest sects in this country which use this sheet-iron thunder to frighten sinners away from crime—the Catholics, the Methodists, and the Presbyterians—hav produced more convicts for the gallows and the penitentiaries than any of the rest in proportion to their numbers. The fact is that the preventiv and reformatory power of punishment depends, not upon the amount of it, but upon the absolute certainty of its infliction upon the trangressor; and this certainly is destroyed entirely by the doctrin of the forgivness of sins. The very first lesson which the church teaches a child is to fear an imaginary God and an imaginary devil, and in case of sin to depend upon the priest as a meditator between him and them. Such a false education, taking away from a man all ennobling motivs, and reducing him to the condition of a mere cowardly churchling, is sure to make him a dangerous member of society; and it seems very ungenerous and unfair that his superinduced scoundrelism should be made a reason for continuing the policy of degradation. Reformatory efforts of all kinds, as is shown by the failure of the temperance enterprise to make sober men out drunkards, to be successful, must teach men to respect themselvs too much to descend to the degradation of vice and crime; to stand on their own legs instead of depending on their religion or the helping grace of God; and to achieve by disciplin the power of self-control so as to stand and not fall in the moment of temptation.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Our Name.

People who hav not learned to differentiate the value of names in their influence on the progress and fate of a movement or the popular acceptance of a doctrin are apt to think of a certain flower that, so long as its fragrance pleases, it is immaterial whether it be called a rose or a skunk-cabbage. Differing as I do very widely from those who think in that way, I wish to address a few words to them on this subject through the columns of the sterling old TRUTH SEEKER.

Suppose two armies meeting, prepared for a conflict a l'outrance, and that one of the belligerents possessed a charm which would paralyze or very much reduce the force of the other side; would not that charm be of very great value to its possessor? Now, sir, we are one of those armies; and does it not behoove us to adopt every available means toward disarming the bigotry and preventing as much as possible of the misrepresentation which we must inevitably encounter? I suppose the answer will be a universal affirmativ. In any case, when we get into close quarters we are safe enough, the caliber of our artillery and the skill of our gunners amply compensating for any disparity of numbers; but let us not meet an enemy unnecessarily exasperated by false conceptions of our character and belief.

The several sections of the Liberal host, till quite recently, hav been sailing under designations not sufficiently explicit or indicativ. We hav Deists, Liberals, Freethinkers, Materialists, and Atheists. The first and last, of course, affirm direct opposits—the one that there is a personal God, and the other that there is no such being. The intermediate names are vague, and indicate little or nothing; and they all, as far as they are dogmatic, are equally guilty of presumption.

The Deist, for a reason presently to be stated, can not know; while, for the same reason, the Atheist's negativ asseveration is equally irrational. When we reflect upon this universe, in which our world is a mere microscopic speck—this limitless space, across which lightning may fly forever, in any direction and with unabated speed, and never get out of the center; and when we further consider the organic potentialities and vital tendencies of the matter around us—how pueril and crude seem all positiv assertions anent the deific problem. The men who dogmatically assert that there is a God are only a little less illogical than those who as confidently antagonize the affirmation—for aught either side knows, there may be a billion gods or not one at all. Before they expect people to accept their conclusions on this subject—which can be logically based only on the comprehension by the mind of a grub of this limitless area, with its furniture of blazing suns and whirling worlds, let them try the infinitly easier task of forcing the liquid contents of a hogshead into a gill measure. Their failure in such an experiment may teach them modesty. It may suggest to them the impossibility of crowding a boundless space, its innumerable contents, and its infinitly varied phenomena, into the cranium of either a hair-brained fanatic or the profoundest thinker in the world. Hence, the unknowable thing called God has eternally eluded human cognition. In the nature of things, and for the reason I hav tried to explain, the best thing the savage or civilizee could do in the creation and investiture of a god was to giv him personality and certain of the attributes of his creator. Thus the poor barbarian stood,

> Watching the shade from his own soul upthrown
> Fill heaven and darken earth, and in such mood
> The form he saw and worshiped was his own.

Of course. What other form could it hav? "What can we reason but from what we know?" Hence the gods of all tribes and ages hav been mere transcripts of the temper and culture of men and their times. Christians hav adopted the Jew God, and to show how far they hav progressed in the art and mystery of god-making I need only refer the reader to the end of the thirty-third chapter of Exodus, in which the carver of the Decalog shows Moses his "back parts." This, too, after the pair had conversed "face to face" in the same chapter! This illustration of manners can hardly be called godlike, and was not the best schooling for a man who was to wield so vast an influence. But to "Our Name."

From the foregoing it will be seen that the mental attitude of nearly all Liberals toward these contested points will need a little readjustment. It will be necessary to abate somewhat of the confidence of our assertions, if not of our convictions. We may be ever so firmly convinced that the forces inherent in matter are equal to the production of all the phenomena of the universe, which is my belief; or we may be quite unable to account for the harmonious plan of things without inferring a designer—a necessity to which the Deist finds himself driven; but, after all, neither of us knows. If my postulate (just stated) be true, and if "nature makes nothing in vain," there would seem to be but one conclusion left for the rational mind—since, under the postulate, there would be neither need nor function for the Deist's designer. Yet, let us cease to either affirm or deny in connection with questions so far beyond our finite faculties, and so manifestly unrelated to all human interests. Conjecture and speculation will still be permissible, either as a logical exercise or an intellectual pastime, but all dogmatism is obviously forbidden by these considerations, and all bitterness of feeling and bigotry would naturally disappear with the dogmatism.

The final outcome of this canvass is to teach us a modesty and moderation to which we are equally bound by duty and policy. Let us eliminate from our doctrins and nomenclature everything grossly offensiv. All through my mature life the name of Materialist has been good enough for me; but latterly, shough my opinions hav not changed a jot, I hav come to regard that title as too nearly akin to the offensiv word Atheist, which I believe no man or woman has a right to use; especially (for the reasons already stated) if the word carries with it the positiv assertion that there is no God. The name which I prefer lacks the familiarity of Materialist, but a little persistent use would make that all right. That name is Agnostic, which the scientists of the world hav lately done much to popularize. This name is fortified by our finiteness and reason, and would divest our cause of that opprobrium which grows out of grating and too positiv and extreme assertions. "What are you as to religious belief?" queries the Christian. The reply of the Liberal is, "I am an Agnostic." "And what may that be?" is the next question. To which the reply is, "I am a finite being, with no pretensions whatever to comprehend infinit things." Would not such a modest reply go far to shame the intelligent opponent and disarm bigotry of its venom? Would it not be a far fitter and more consistent reply than the avowal, "I am an Atheist?" Would it not throw the onus of the affirmativ on the superstitious maggot who might affect to hav compassed infinity? Why not, then, adopt the name Agnostic for the Liberal host, and at once slough off from our body the odium attaching to the word Atheist? I am not pleading for cowardice, but for consistency and policy. It will impugn no man's courage nor disparage his perspicacity to confess that he knows nothing of things about which the wisest of his fellow-beings cannot possibly know anything. If a knowledge of the being and attributes of God were essential to human happiness or virtue, that God, being good, would hav rendered doubt as to his existence as impossible as it is to doubt the existence of the sun. He has not done so, and therefore the inference is irresistible that either God is not good or a knowledge of him is not among human needs.

The cause of mental freedom never occupied so proud and dominant a position as it does to-day. With nearly every scientist in the world either an avowed or known-to-be Agnostic—Henry Ward Beecher admits that ninety per cent of the men engaged in the higher fields of research are of that class—what is to hinder the progress of Liberal thought if its champions do but remove such impediments as I hav indicated? Let us still hope for the dawn of that day when man shall shake off the manacles of priestcraft and stand no longer enthralled by sanctimonious humbug and superstitious hopes and fears. It is to hasten that dawn that this letter is written. Science, a growing popular intelligence, and such papers as THE TRUTH SEEKER are making havoc among the erewhile victims of priestly artifice; and speed the work, say I. JAMES P. KENYON.

Brooklyn, May 18, 1886.

The Liberal Club.

The meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club held on the evening of May 28th was the last of the season. At the door the man with a badge-pin chased a five-cent piece around his pocket, and having captured and delivered it over to Treasurer Morris as a souvenir, passed into the pleasant hall. The seats were nearly all filled, many of the visitors being ladies, most of them young ladies, the others younger. Several familiar faces were absent. The solid member, Mr. Eckhart, was missed—he had gone to Europe. The tall member, Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., was not there—he had gone to Boston. The handsome member, Mr. King, had not found time to come. Robert Blissert, the member from Killarney, has discontinued his visits altogether. Nevertheless, it was a large meeting.

Madam Elizabeth M. Delescluze, the speaker of the evening, radiant in those embellishments of attire with which womankind love to adorn themselvs, sat by the secretary's table studiously conning a copy of "The Order of Creation." She beckoned the badge-pin man to approach, and inquired if a brief synopsis of her remarks handed in at the office the next morning would be acceptable. This was not done to impeach the accuracy of the account which it was known the scribe would render, but merely to save him the labor of deciphering his notes, for which he is duly grateful. The synopsis will be found in its proper place.

President Wakeman had an extended list of announcements to read. The Spiritualists were to hav a Decoration Day celebration, and, providence permitting, the president of the club would address the visitors at the Workingmen's Free Library, 143 Eighth st., Friday evening, June 4th. The extra entertainment which the club had promised for the present evening had, for obvious reasons, been deferred until the opening of the fall season, October the 3d. Through Third Vice-President Edward W. Chamberlain, the committee appointed to draft suitable resolutions touching the bereavement of the club in the death of its first vice-president, Stephen Pearl Andrews, made the report which appears elsewhere in this paper.

Madam Delescluze, being introduced, spoke as follows on "Our Palace:"

Ours is a palace within a myriad of palaces—the Earth in the Universe. Our little earth holds a very modest place, it being only a fourth- or fifth-rate planet, and very insignificant when compared with the big planets of the solar system—Jupiter, Saturn, Neptune, and Uranus; yet it is a vast and beautiful palace, the purpose of which seems to be to furnish mankind with all things necessary for its happiness. On the material side, man has all that is necessary for his comfort and his pleasure. On the spiritual side he has love, faith, hope, aspiration. He is furnished with light from that large luminary, the sun, at the speed of 200,000 miles a second. The earth is 93,000,000 of miles from the sun, and light reaches us in eight minutes. To be sure, when we think of some of the fixed stars, their magnitude and their inconceivable distance—light from which would require thousands of years to reach our poor little earth—we should feel very modest and humble, and should readily imagin that "awe" of which Spencer speaks as being the sentiment which inspires the religion of the Unknowable. Carlyle, speaking of the universe, said we lived in the midst and were a part of the most astounding wonders. Some persons there are, however, who understand it all. They hav sounded the universe from its lowest note to the top of its compass, and see nothing in it to awe or overwhelm. To other poor souls meek and susceptible, who are thrilled and confounded on looking through a big telescope, there is only one thing that comes to answer their cry—faith.

We are a part of this vast immensity, these palaces of worlds, and hav, as they hav, a destiny. Everything needful has been given to the heart, the intellect, the hand of man, in this his palace of the earth. What has he done with all his gifts? Has he builded a palace within this palace of his? It has been said to him for ages, "Build me a palace fit for the king and queen." But heretofore his efforts at building hav been poor and incomplete.

It is related of a certain monarch that, having ordered an immense and beautiful structure to be built, he made ready when it was finished to occupy it on a certain day. But a great storm rose in the night, and when morning dawned, it was discovered that the great palace was in ruins. The necessary amount of lime had not been put into the mortar, and the huge structure seemingly so strong had fallen under the stress of a storm.

It is also related that a certain king sent for all the wisest men of his realm and commanded them to erect for him the grand and stately palace of Truth. Each of the wise men had brought a stone, but each insisted that his particular marble should be used as the foundation stone of the temple. So a terrible discussion and wrangle ensued. As the days and finally the months went on, the wrangle grew fiercer and hotter, until they—the wise men—forgot all about the palace of Truth in the debate over the stones. One morning, on arriving at the arena of their wrangle, full to the brim with zeal for fight, they found not a stone. They had, through their quarrels, come under the power of the wicked genii, who had, in the night, scattered the stones of Truth to the four corners of the earth.

Madam Delescluze urged that the palace fit for the king and queen, man and woman, can never be built until men cease fighting over the plans of the different architects. Men hav arrived at an astonishing point of progress in the arts and sciences. There is scarcely a known insect on the globe that some student has not examined with the closest attention its tiny structure, and watched with the most persistent care its habits. The only animal man refuses to study wisely and carefully is himself. Nothing in this world today, after all our advancement, is held so cheap and in such disdain as the multitude of men and women. Nothing could be more deplorable than the chaos reigning in what is called society.

Until this is changed, until society comes to think that all the achievements of art, all the discoveries of science, are insignificant when compared to human welfare, and that the happiness of the humblest mortal is a matter of importance to the state, the palace of truth cannot be built—the structure fit for the king and queen—the people—will not endure, but will surely crumble beneath a storm.

Human genius has produced wonderful and beautiful things to satisfy the material comforts of the race. A prayer of thankfulness went up from her heart for these. She often felt a sense of gratitude to the humble workman who laid a flagstone that kept her feet out of the mud, but in social science we were still barbarians.

Mrs. Cynthia Leonard followed the speaker of the evening. She had, she said, nothing but praise for the lecture. She alluded feelingly to Mark Twain at the last resting-place of Adam, weeping over the grave of a relativ. She felt that all mankind were her brothers; even the tramp was a brother, and there was nothing about our government to be proud of so long as a single person must sleep on the benches in the parks unprovided with a home. The palace which man had built was full of iniquity and impurity, and a general house-cleaning, in which woman should coöperate, would be necessary to make it a fit residence for mankind.

Dr. Eccles followed, speaking in a modulated tone of voice. His remarks, which were extended to great length, touched the custom which some writers and papers hav of criticising a speaker's style of discourse instead of dealing with his ideas. He intimated that this course was adopted because the critics were unable to combat the speaker intellectually. He did not consider that style the true scientific method. The audience listened to Dr. Eccles with a tranquility which, considering the longevity of his discourse, was certainly commendable.

Remarks were next made by Mr. Swartout, a new accession to the club's membership; and then the secretary, in an ornate speech, called upon our distinguished visitor, Dr. Cyrus Romulus Remus Teed, to address the meeting. Dr. Teed complied, with the explanation that he believed the secretary's remarks to hav been made in an ironical spirit. He then advanced the thought that there would be no progression until we had a new genus of mankind. This is the Teed of the "Bennett-Teed Discussion," and has no hesitation in affirming that he believes himself to be a reincarnation of Moses, Enoch, Abraham, and Jesus Christ. His utterances, therefore, hav a high scientific value.

After Madam Delescluze had pointed out the weak places in the critics' arguments, President Wakeman adjourned the meeting to October 3d. Then everybody shook hands, and the audience dispersed. The warm weather has admonished us that indoor gatherings are no longer practicable, and it is therefore a relief to all to lay down the burden of attending them. This makes it agreeable to the attendants, but the writer of these reports is desirous to know what is to become of him. It looks as if he would be obliged to temporarily subside. But when October comes again, when the summer is past and the harvest is ended; when death, poetic death, with hands that color what they touch, weaves in the autumn woods its tapestry of gold and brown—at that season of the year he will again emerge and take on once more the character of the veracious reporter of the regular weekly meetings of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

Meanwhile the club is not dead. Nothing beautiful can know the touch of dissolution. Bright things can never die, e'en though they fade.

Resolutions

ON THE DEATH OF STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS ADOPTED BY THE MANHATTAN LIBERAL CLUB, MAY 28th.

The Manhattan Liberal Club adopts and records, upon the occasion of the close of the life visible on earth of its most eminent and learned member and late vice-president, Stephen Pearl Andrews, the following statement of its sense of his worth and of its esteem for his memory:

Resolved, That our brother was a ripe, broad, profoundly cultured, acute, original, and fruitful philosopher, skilled in all the practical things of life, but in his later years having no time for them, because it was his most useful mission to be a teacher of the teachers, an inspirer of the profound, a mediator of the world's antagonisms. With the close of its author's life, his system of philosophic thought will begin to dawn upon the world.

Resolved, That the philosophy of Integralism, gathering up, as it does, and utilizing the most opposit modes of thought, forms of character, and types of life, philosophies, skepticisms, religions, and superstitions, virtues, passions, conditions, classes, and even crimes, so as to reduce them and the principles which giv rise to them to harmonious and coherent elements in the world's true life and composit progress, and the science of Universology on which it is based, are the most comprehensiv statements yet evolved of the relations existing between the various departments of knowledge and phases of being, out of which alone can grow the highest conceptions of social law, of economic interest, of legal right, and of ethical study,

Resolved, That philosophy is the systematic comprehension of the constitution of things as they are; that religion is the activ inspiration which works in all beings to induce their best and highest becoming; that while there appears to be a certain dualism and conflict in teaching both the wisdom of the constitution of things as they are, and the duty of working for their better becoming, the key to the highest life lies in the recognition of both truths; that the broadest and most scrutinizing philosophy ever remains allied to the truest religion, skepticism perfecting instead of paralyzing the change from the being to the becoming religion itself. He who best knows what is, best knows what best can be; therefore the essential doctrin of Integralism of obtaining unity through diversity in all things is not only profound in philosophy, but must prove to be the most salutary of all truths in its religious and ethical influence, for he who can accept philosophies and embrace religions as they are, is both less religious and less philosophic than he who can hasten their becoming what they must and will next be.

Resolved, That we commend to all minds the brief philosophic tracts, and afterward the larger treatises, upon Universology and Integralism, prepared by Mr. Andrews. The scientific generalizations contained in them cannot rest as theories, but will mold opinions and legislation, religions and codes, ethics and manners, as the teachings of Aristotle molded the Roman law, and the discoveries of Galileo put out the fires of persecution.

The committee appointed at the last meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club to draft and present suitable resolutions upon the death of our first vice-president, Stephen Pearl Andrews, respectfully report the foregoing resolutions and recommend that they be adopted and spread upon the minutes.

ED. W. CHAMBERLAIN.
E. B. FOOTE, JR.
VAN BUREN DENSLOW, Chairman.

New York, May 23, 1886.

Freethought in Texas.

During the past week my work has been confined to eastern Texas. This is not the Texas that I hav heretofore been laboring in. The people of northern and central Texas hav caught the progressiv spirit, and constitute the advance guard of the New South—the South that is to be. Eastern Texas belongs to the Old South. There are some intelligent persons to be found in it, but the masses are fifty years behind the age.

After leaving Houston, I went to Polk county, where Mr. J. A. Handley had engaged me to deliver a series of lectures, no Liberal lecturer ever having penetrated this region. My first lecture was to be given at Livingston, the county seat, at 2 P.M. on Tuesday. Mr. Handley living some twenty miles away, and being unable to attend, had placed the matter in charge of Mr. Epperson, the sheriff. I arrived in Livingston at noon. It was raining, Mr. Epperson was sick, and no hall had been engaged. The meeting had been announced, but I could find no one who seemed to know or care anything about it. I had almost abandoned the idea of speaking, when a young man, Mr. John Tackaberry, county attorney, volunteered his services, procured a hall, and rallied a respectable audience. I gave my lecture, and then proceeded to Moscow.

If my reception at Livingston was cool, that at Moscow promised to be exceedingly warm. The orthodox had resolved that no Liberal meeting should be held in the town. An alleged doctor named Powell and a preacher named Kirby were leading the opposition. This Kirby was some years ago deposed from the ministry for cutting out the tongue of a neighbor's horse that had invaded his premises. He has since been permitted to resume his pastoral duties, and doubtless thought that it would be more agreeable to his church for him to work on an Infidel's tongue. A paper was put in circulation calling upon all patriotic citizens to unite in a demand that my appointment for Moscow be withdrawn. I informed them that I wasn't built that way; that I had been engaged to deliver a lecture there, and that the engagement would be filled at the hour announced. This only increased their rage. The next morning was one of unusual excitement and activity. The sleepy old town was for once aroused. The Liberals were few and timid, and it looked for a time as though orthodoxy was destined to win. Before noon, however, the Infidel hosts began to pour in from distant parts of the county, and soon the streets were full of them. The skirmishing commenced, a vigorous war of words ensued, and then the soldiers of the cross retired. A large crowd assembled, and the lecture was delivered. The lecture was "False Claims," with the variations usually rendered on such occasions.

The next meeting was to be held in the Bear Creek settlement in the eastern part of the county. Ten or twelve miles of pine forest intervened, and a Texas pony was provided for me with which to make the trip. In the saddle, Richard was himself again. The meeting was held at eleven o'clock on Thursday morning. Nearly everybody turned out to hear me. A clergyman drove seven miles with an ox team to bring his family. Professor Parrish dismissed his school that he and his pupils might attend. It was a good, old-fashioned pioneer meeting.

John A. Handley resides here. He is one of the largest planters and leading merchants of eastern Texas, and has done much to Liberalize this community. Among the other sterling Liberals of Polk county may be named J. Morse, formerly of Iowa; John Morgan; the Parrishes; the Gay family; Mr. and Mrs. Pope; B. F. Haynes; Dr. Doughty and brother; and Stephen Lewis.

Mr. Hickman, an intelligent farmer living near Moscow, had, previous to our meetings, entertained strong prejudices against Freethought. He was one of those who opposed me, declaring that I ought not to be allowed to speak. He was, however, induced to attend our meeting at Moscow, and became so much interested that he rode ten miles to attend our meeting on the following day. He has experienced a "change," and, while the church has had his sympathy in the past, the Liberal cause will hav his support in the future.

On Thursday evening I returned to Moscow. From here I started for Henderson, which, after a tedious and roundabout journey over the narrow-gauge roads of the pineries, I reached Saturday morning. Saturday night, Sunday morning, and Sunday afternoon I lectured here. It had been arranged for me to speak in the court house, but Dr. Carleton, a Baptist theologian and author of some note, kindly tendered us the use of his church, which was accepted. Large audiences were present at each meeting. Dr. McBride, of Tyler, came fifty miles to hear me. Mr. Whitley, a lawyer of Overton, and editor of the Overton Sharpshooter, with his family, also attended.

Henderson is probably as free from bigotry as any town in Eastern Texas. Capt. C. L. Nunnaly, Mr. Lacy, William Baxter, and Mr. Rosenbaum are a few of the intelligent Freethinkers whom I met here.

Sunday evening, in company with Mr. Whitley, I took the train for Overton, arriving there at 6 o'clock. It happened that none of the churches held religious services that evening, and when Mr. Whitley informed the people that a Liberal lecturer was in town they expressed a desire to hear him. The word "Liberal" had a pleasant sound, and the lecturer wore a pious countenance. These at once commended him to their favor. The officers of the Methodist church cheerfully granted us the use of their edifice. Had it been 8 o'clock instead of six I would now hav the pleasure of stating that I lectured in two orthodox churches in one day, and this, too, in Eastern Texas. But two hours gave time to discuss and reconsider, and the result was, our meeting was held in the school-house instead of the church. A large audience was in attendance, however, and everything passed off pleasantly.

From Overton I came to Longview, where I am engaged in giving a course of lectures. I hav now filled twenty-five engagements and delivered forty-four lectures since I entered this state.

J. E. Remsburg.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

Vice-Presidents:

Charles Watts, Horace Seaver,
John E. Remsburg, William Algie,
Thaddeus B. Wakeman, Robert C. Adams,
Mattie P. Krekel, Titus L. Brown,
James Parton, Helen H. Gardener.

Samuel P. Putnam, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York. Courtlandt Palmer, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

Charles B. Reynolds, Chair. Ex. Com. E. M. Macdonald, Chair. Fin. Com.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged		$2,345.36
Lehi (per Henry Goodey, Samuel Brigg, and others		3.50
Luke W. Gallup		1.00
Payson (per Dr. Greer, Charles Long, and others)		4.50
Goshen (per J. W. White, David L. Evans, and others		3.80
Joel Shoemaker,		.50
Mt. Pleasant (per J. D. Page, and others)		17.60
J. H. Flickenger,	(annual member)	1.00
E. O. Smith,	"	1.00
G. M. Arthur,	"	1.00
Levi Goodrich,	"	1.00
J. C. Kendall,	"	1.00
Charles Otter,	"	1.00
W. W. Williams,	"	2.00
Wm. E. Cooper,	"	1.00
Herman Christensen,	"	3.00
Peter Madsen,	"	1.00
Total		$2,389.26

In the campaign fund printed May 8th, $10 were credited to Joseph Elliot, which should hav been credited to Josiah Elliot.

News and Notes.

The audience at Payson, Utah, on Friday evening, May 14th, was larger than the one on the previous evening, the opera house being nearly full. The larger part were members of the Mormon church. The maddest man in town, I understand, was the Presbyterian minister, who has an audience every Sunday of about six, and of course it vexed his righteous and Calvinistic soul to hav the Infidel gather a hearing almost a hundred times larger than his own. I believe he is about to retire from the field, for he has converted but one Mormon since he has labored in Utah—a period of several years—and his work is not encouraging and therefore not healthful.

I took a horseback ride upon the spurs of Mt. Nebo, and drank deep of the enchanting loveliness of the vast scenery, with the lake set in the midst, like a flashing diamond, the meadows on either side spreading for miles with blending colors of green and brown; with half a dozen villages in view, nestling along the bases of the mighty hills, and the hills melting with infinit variety of form into the luminous horizon. Horseflesh is a wonderful exhilarator when it bears one with the fleetness of the wind amid the splendid sunshine and a thousand pictures of beauty; and I spent a delightful afternoon. And although Mt. Nebo towered above me with its snowy peaks, I never once thought of Moses. I was not thinking of the old, I was dreaming of the new.

On Saturday I had a long, glorious ride of twenty-five miles with Dr. Greer, up into the canyons and over the hills to Silver City, into one of the great mining regions of Utah, where fortunes are made by the millions, where gold is found in an almost pure state, and a pocketful will make one wealthy. Winding up the canyon for miles, the view from the ridge was one of the most beautiful in the world. The gray hills rolled away from your feet to the softly-shining waters of the Utah lake, and beyond that the white and blue peaks rose in dazzling grandeur; and right before you opened the vistas of the American Fork, jeweled in its very center with an eminence whose precipitous forms seemed to catch all the glories of the departing day. It was like a vision from fairy-land, and no knight of old ever looked upon a more charming prospect or was refreshed with a sweeter glimpse of nature's exquisit face.

At Silver City I had the pleasure of delivering the word of science and humanity, where there was no priest and no church, where the sermon had not been heard nor the voice of prayer. I was ahead of the million emissaries of theology, and I was happy indeed. Silver City, with its cordial folks, will be a delightful remembrance, as being the first green spot in all this earth where the church has never set foot, and where the first discourse was a plea for liberty. The Freethought pioneer has something in this experience to giv his heart a glow of supreme satisfaction. The church has ruled for centuries, but there are some spots still unblasted by its presence.

On Sunday morning we came back to Goshen—a quiet land indeed—where you might imagin yourself on the "other side of Jordan," there is such a tranquility in the very air, while Mt. Nebo in the distance, like a white-veiled prophet, givs its perpetual blessing; for indeed, if it were not for the everlasting reservoirs of snow in its cavernous bosom, this valley would never bloom with harvests, and would be a desert indeed.

On our way down the mountains we met a pretty Mormon girl running away with her lover; he would not go through the nonsense of the "Endowment House," but wanted to be married in sensible gentile fashion, and so did she; and on this bright Sabbath morning they stole away, and, with swift steeds, went where a civil ceremony could be performed. Thus a dash of romance checkered the way of the pilgrim. It is not all philosophy; there is poetry now and then.

At Goshen I bade farewell to the pleasant companionship of Dr. Greer. He is a noble Liberal indeed, and has done great service to our cause in one of the strongholds of Mormonism. The Mormons would like to "boycott" him, but they can't do it; for they will get sick, and it seems there isn't brains enough in the Mormon church to make a first-class physician, and they must employ the "gentile." Dr. Greer has gone sometimes 150 miles to attend patients. Whatever talent the Mormons may hav goes into either theology or money-getting. If a Mormon youth has any brightness, he becomes a preacher—that is, if he retains the faith; or he goes into Zion's Coöperativ Mercantil Institute and tries to get rich. The Mormons are money-getters, like the Jews. I see that Dyer Lum, in Liberty, has some praise for the coöperativ system of the Mormon church, but there is no genuin coöperation at all—it is only a form of monopoly to put the profits into the hands of a few. If anything is run by the capitalist, it is the Mormon Z. C. M. I., with its "Holiness to the Lord." There is not a particle of democracy in Mormonism. It is the most thorough-going aristocratic and despotic institution in the world. It makes the few rich and the many poor.

I had an overflowing house on Sunday evening at Goshen. All the dignitaries of the church were present. I had a most enjoyable visit with Mr. J. W. White and David L. Evans, stanch Freethinkers who hav fought their way out of Mormonism, and know by actual experience what a tremendous tyranny it is. The Mormons are the original inventors of the "boycott," and in the palmy days of the "saints' kingdom" they hav used it with deadly effect.

On Monday morning I went down to Nephi, and from there to Mt. Pleasant, where I found plenty of good friends, Mr. J. D. Page, Mr. Cahoon, Mr. Ericsson, Mr. Bowman, and others. I lectured on Tuesday evening, May 18th, to a full house, and should lecture there again on Friday (this evening), but the Mormon who has charge of the hall will not let it go. My discourse was too much for him. There being no other place of meeting, the giving of another lecture must be abandoned. I find the Mormons rather Jesuitical. They are very affable so long as they expect something favorable to their side, but when they see that you will not defend their institution, then they show the tiger's claws and the bitterness of orthodoxy. The Mormons hav a smile for every new comer, but they also are prepared to strike.

On Wednesday I came down to Ephraim, where I am now writing this letter, a distance of seventeen miles from Mt. Pleasant. I came with R. Clawson, who is the trinity of Mormon abhorrence—he is an apostate, an Infidel, and deputy marshal; but for all that his neighbors like him, for he has the sterling qualities of a gentleman. I here met the president of the "stake," as it is called. He was quite friendly and attended my lecture in the evening, but I never found out how he liked it. I had a full house, large numbers being obliged to stand. There are some good Liberals in this place, but, of course, the vast majority are against them, and it is uphill work; but every day brings an improvement.

On Thursday I went with Mr. Clawson and Mr. Quinn, another Liberal friend, to Manti, seven miles from Ephraim, and the county seat. Here, also, on the side of the mountain, is one of the magnificent temples of the Lord. It has cost nearly a million dollars, and is indeed a beautiful building; but what is the use of it? It is built by the money of the poor, and it is for the convenience of the priest. Christ is expected to come here and reign. This temple will no doubt stand for a thousand years, but I fear the "Lord" for whom it is erected will never make his appearance, and all this wealth and toil is uselessly expended, and this massiv structure will be a sepulcher of human hopes.

I was glad to meet with Rev. Joel Shoemaker at Manti—once a Campbellite minister, then a Mormon, and now a Liberal. The first thing I saw when I entered his store was the face of The Truth Seeker, the last number, which I eagerly perused. It was a delight indeed to find The Truth Seeker and Liberal literature for sale in this far country. I did not expect anything of the kind—right under the shadow of the Temple, too, and the eye of the bishop. Mr. Shoemaker introduced me at the evening lecture. He has a full understanding of Mormonism, and has facts concerning it which are quite interesting. I also met here Mr. Herman Christensen, once a leading Mormon and president of the Danish colony, but now for twenty years a Freethinker and pronounced opponent of the church. The "saints" hav tried to crush him, but his cattle and sheep prosper, and he can snap his fingers at the church's inquisitorial power. I had a full house at the theater in the evening, and the lecture was well received. Manti, of course, as a sort of church center, is overwhelmingly Mormon, but there are Liberals in it who keep up a brave fight.

I hav thus given three lectures to audiences averaging from three to four hundred in San Pete valley, which is considered the stronghold of Mormonism outside Salt Lake City. No lectures of this kind hav ever before been delivered here. They are sure to create a vast discussion, and I look forward to beneficial results. All desire that the campaign be continued, and I hope to visit this valley again.

I came last evening in the moonlight from Manti to Ephraim. The last I saw of Manti was the huge temple just beginning to glisten in the rays of the moon that was rising over the dark boundary of the hills. It flung a weird splendor over that vast and to me sepulchral edifice. I almost seemed to be in some ancient city, far away from the nineteenth century, and even before Christ, upon the mountains of Judea, where barbarism still reigned and science was almost unknown; and I wondered if the light of day would ever penetrate these shimmering walls, and if this moonlight of fancy would ever vanish before the dawn of a glorious reality—or would this temple be for centuries yet the refuge of an ignoble superstition?

I am now in a quiet, comfortable nook writing this epistle, with a day's rest before me, green trees all around, blue skies flecked with brilliant clouds, happy birds, and the sparkle of gentle streams. I can dream for awhile, take off my spurs and lie upon the grass, and, let the hours go as fleetly as they may, I will take no note of time. The universe may move as it will; I will no longer be a reformer, an iconoclast, but will take things as they are—the sunshine and the songs, the flowers and the grass, the trees and all their blossoms, the measureless sky and the circle of resplendent hills.

To-morrow, however, I must up with the sun and away. That vigorous campaigner, George C. Viele, of our Fillmore League, has got a week's work planned out for me, and, rain or shine, I must be at the front. But until to-morrow's dawn, the long golden afternoon and the moonlight evening shall be a tent of peace, and life shall be like summer's breath of music.

Samuel P. Putnam.

May 21, 1886.

Mrs. A. H. Colby's address for June, July, and August will be 176 Terrace street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Send to The Truth Seeker office for a catalog of the books we hav for sale. The catalog is free.

Communications.

Freethought in Australia.

"We liv in a free country." Such is the expression which incessantly greets the ears of a Victorian resident. We hav just had another instance of Victorian "freedom" looming up in front of us, this time in the postal department. The prosecution of the Liberator having fallen through, the authorities having decided to take no further action in the matter, the bigots hav decided not to let the matter stop there, but hav for some time been spurring on the government to prevent its being sent through the post. The result is that the matter has been brought under the notice of the postmaster-general, Mr. Derham, and he has decided that no copies shall be sent through the post until they hav undergone a careful scrutiny and shown no traces of "blasphemy" or "offensivness" of any kind. The section of the act under which the Liberator is being denied the right of mailing reads as follows: "Notwithstanding anything in this act contained, the postmaster-general may at any time direct any letter, packet, or newspaper having anything blasphemous, obscene, offensiv, or libelous written or drawn on the outside thereof, or any obscene inclosure found in any letter, package, or newspaper, to be destroyed." The postmaster-general, who appears to be the cat's-paw of the religious party here, is determined to enforce this law in the case of the Liberator, according to the reports in the daily papers, and if he does, the Freethinkers of Victoria will hav another lively tussle before them, for Mr. Symes is equally determined to fight it out. As he told the audience on Sunday evening last, "If that be true, there is a little more fighting for us. If they do stop the Liberator from going through the post, they shall repent it." Past experience of Mr. Symes has shown us that he is not the man to cringe before such malice as that, but when he says a thing, he means it.

There is another section in the same act which is not yet decided upon, but which the postmaster-general has put into the hands of his legal advisers to ascertain its applicability to the Liberator. It is as follows: "If any person knowingly puts into any post-office in Victoria any letter, packet, parcel, or newspaper bearing any indecent, obscene, profane, or libelous address, signature, marks, words, or designs, or containing any indecent or obscene print, photograph, lithograph, writing, engraving, book, or card, or other indecent or obscene article, he shall be liable to a penalty not less than five nor exceeding fifty pounds." So you see they are determined at all hazards to crush out Freethought in this benighted community. They are not satisfied with an attempt to destroy another's property, but they also seek to heavily punish a man for using an institution which he is taxed to support, and which in common justice he has as much right to use as any of the bullies who seek to prevent him. If you fail to receive the Liberator by this mail, you will know the reason of it.

Matters hav been enlivened of late by a little rioting which has taken place. The new Factories and Workshops act, which came into operation on the beginning of last month, has been a fruitful source of discord in that direction. By that act, all shopkeepers, with a few trifling exceptions, are compelled to close their places of business at 7 o'clock sharp each evening, except Saturdays and public holidays. Many storekeepers hav stood out against this arbitrary rule and kept their shops open contrary to the law. The result is that in one of the suburbs mobs of larrikins met nightly in the principal thoroughfare, hooting the shopkeepers whose establishments were open after the fatal hour, smashing their windows with road-metal, and sadly interfering with the traffic. Efforts were made to create similar disturbances in other parts, but without success. A riotous disturbance has also taken place at Woodend, a country town in Victoria, not through any legislativ act, however, but in consequence of a Freethought lecture which was delivered there. Mr. Joseph Symes paid a visit to that sanctified district last month, and delivered, or attempted to deliver, a Freethought lecture; but it was more than they could endure. Freethought logic is a tough article for a cultured clergyman to tackle, and it is no wonder that the Woodend people should find it rather a heavy strain on their endurance. However, they brought their own arguments to bear against the lecturer's, but unfortunately their arguments were of a coarser kind, and consisted of stones, pepper, and rotten eggs, which they did not fail to hurl at him. They were more saintly than civilized. Mr. Symes and his friends had to fight their way back the best way they could, and make for their lodgings. He intended to visit another town in the vicinity of Woodend a few days later, but he was too unwell. The Salvation Army mustered in full force to receive him, no doubt anticipating a glorious scrimmage, but they were disappointed. A few days afterward, he had sufficiently regained his strength to revisit the religious hot-bed. He spoke for about half an hour, but could not make himself heard above the howls of these wild maniacs, and ultimately had to desist. There was no further disturbance on that occasion, as the lecture was delivered in broad daylight; on the former occasion the mantle of night had lent its aid to the malice of these "imps of darkness."

Since that little episode another gentleman has experienced somewhat similar treatment at the hands of the disciples of "the prince of peace," this time at Parramatta, Sydney, N. S. W. Mr. W. H. McNamara took occasion to reply to one of Christianity's defenders a few Sundays ago, and was proceeding to vindicate the character of Thomas Paine and the heroes of the French Revolution, when the mob made a rush at him, and commenced to yell and hoot at him with a vehemence characteristic of these "gentle lambs" of a celebrated shepherd, in order to drown the speaker's voice. The devoted advocate of ancient ignorance waved his Bible exultingly in the air, and helped to swell the hubbub. He and some others commenced "orating," and after a while the defender of Freethought had to leave the ground, followed by a hooting and jeering mob. Last Sunday he again stood the ordeal, and, I am informed, with still more disastrous results.

Mr. Symes is continuing his activ lecturing propaganda, and his utterances are as keenly appreciated as ever. On Sunday last he delivered an admirable lecture before a large and enthusiastic audience upon "Home Rule for Ireland: Its pros and cons." He has been asked to publish it and also to re-deliver it in the Melbourne Town Hall, if it can be obtained.

Mr. W. W. Collins, who has lately visited these shores, has fully realized, if not exceeded, the expectations formed of him. His pleasant manner and well-chosen language hav won him admirers in each state he has visited, while his well-stored mind and retentiv memory make him a valued worker, whom our New South Wales friends will not feel readily disposed to part with. He has already plunged into the journalistic line by starting a new Freethought paper, the only one, I believe, now existing in New South Wales. Another one has been contemplated, but I do not think it has yet seen the light. Mr. Collins's paper is entitled, The Freethinker and New South Wales Reformer. Each number is illustrated.

The Rationalist of New Zealand is still struggling along bravely, and, although it has been beset with "ups and downs" in its brief career, its indefatigable editor, Mr. Joseph Evison, still continues to keep it to the front.

A new society has been recently started in Sydney, bearing the name of the Australasian Freethought Union. Dr. J. L. York and Mr. Thomas Walker are the leading movers in it. A Freethought Society has also been started recently at Gosford (N. S. W.). The movement is also being energetically pushed on in Newcastle, Lambton, Goulburn, and the Hunter River District in the same colony, and in Ballarat, Sandhurst, and Bairnsdale in Victoria—a new Secular Society having been formed at the latter place. Adelaide plods along in its quiet, steady way, and would almost be forgotten were it not for its frequent "unemployed" demonstrations.

Great interest is taken in the expected visit of Mr. Charles Bradlaugh to these shores, and each colony is activly making arrangements for his reception.

An extraordinary scene took place last month at a Presbyterian church in Grafton (N. S. W.). Five members of the congregation called a meeting, when they resolved to take possession of the church and depose the minister. They accordingly fastened all the church doors, and when the parson and the congregation made their appearance on the following Sunday they were, of course, unable to enter. After beseeching in vain to be admitted, the parson procured an ax and burst open one of the doors, when some one inside struck him a tremendous blow on the temple with the clenched fist, the blood streaming down his face. There was instantly a violent scrimmage of men and women, which was said to "baffle description." Eventually the parson and his followers succeeded in ousting the five obstructiv members, and, after cleaning himself as well as he was able, the unfortunate cleric went on with his service.

You will recollect that a short time ago a case of TRUTH SEEKER publication was seized by the Victoria custom house officers, and Mr. Terry, who was importing them, had great difficulty in obtaining them. A week or two ago the same gentleman landed a few English publications, among which were a few copies of a London Unitarian magazine, edited by J. P. Hopps, and entitled, The Truth Seeker. The official confounded it, and still persists in confounding it, with the much-hated TRUTH SEEKER in which this letter appears, and seized the whole case!

S. Yarra, Melbourne, Aus. DAVID A. ANDRADE.

JUSTUS SCHWAB, the Anarchist Socialist, facially resembles the celebrated picture of Jesus Christ. A writer in the Boston Herald says that to maintain this reputation, he studiously, but without outward affectation, adjusts the volume and dress of his hair as nicely in conformity with the great painting as though it hung suspended above his toilet table. When his confreres, in the heated discussions of the evening, maintain that Christ was in principle a Socialist, the argument ends by pointing to Schwab, with the loud exclamation: "Da habben Sie es!—There you hav it!"

Canadian Notes.

"Woman: Past, Present, and Future," was the subject of Mrs. Reynolds's lecture last Sunday evening, and the large audience in attendance were manifestly well pleased with the able manner in which she handled what was in some respects a rather delicate subject to deal with, especially so in dealing with the women of the Bible. To Mrs. Reynolds belongs the credit of being the first lady who has had the ability and pluck to stand before a Canadian audience composed largely of her own sex, and to show them to what extent they are indebted to Christian teaching and Bible superstition for woman's degradation in the past, and many of the disabilities under which she labors at present.

As a gentleman in the audience afterward remarked, "It was a pity the lecture was not delivered in the Metropolitan church." This remark will be appreciated when I state that the average attendance at that institution is three thousand, fully two-thirds of whom are women.

However, there were quite a number of ladies (strangers) present, who no doubt went away taking with them considerable food for thought. A vote of thanks at the close of the lecture was unanimously and most enthusiastically carried, many of the audience remaining to congratulate the lecturer, and also to say good-bye, this being her last lecture here for the present.

As before remarked, friend Reynolds is to be congratulated on having so able a partner in the lecture business, and it is to be hoped he will use his influence to keep his wife in the field. He tells us that this was a sort of trial trip, and if so he certainly has nothing to complain of. Mrs. Reynolds's lectures hav been well received; both the matter and the manner are first-class, and we can heartily recommend her to the friends in the States.

We want more women in our movement; their numbers are the strength of Christianity; their lack of numbers among us the weakness of Secularism; and perhaps there is no better remedy for this state of affairs than to render all possible aid and encouragement to those women who hav the ability and pluck to take the platform in the face of the fearful odds of fashion and popular prejudice.

Mr. Reynolds lectured last night (Thursday) to a fair audience, and will giv his last lecture of this course next Sunday, after which he goes to the States to start the summer Tent campaign. He went to Morrisburg, Ont., last Monday, being under an engagement there for three lectures, and has had a rather lively experience, having been prevented from lecturing by bigoted rascality in regard to the hall engagement, by intimidation and threats of personal violence. THE TRUTH SEEKER has no doubt got particulars of the affair from Mr. Reynolds. He thinks of taking his Tent down there this summer; but if he goes without first getting his life insured, he is a more improvident and reckless man than he looks.

The old adage that "Satan finds mischief for idle hands" is truly confirmed by the actions of the Toronto Ministerial Association. Having nothing better to occupy their time, they make themselvs ridiculous by passing all sorts of silly resolutions, and agitating for legislation with a view to making the people sober and virtuous by act of Parliament.

They are determined that nobody but themselvs shall do any business on the blessed Sabbath; even the undertakers are to be shut up on that day, their latest freak being to call for united action by all the churches to put a stop to Sunday funerals. They consider it sinful in the sight of God for a man to fill up a grave on Sunday.

If this isn't running absurdity into the ground, what is it? It would seem that, to carry out this idea, they will hav to legislate to prevent people from dying on Friday, and then no doubt they will endeavor by law to prevent people from being born on Sunday, and so on ad—rot!

It has probably never occurred to these fanatics that there are cases where the keeping of a body over Sunday is likely to spread contagion and death among the community.

For the last year the city government, under pressure from this same ministerial association, has been trying to extirpate the social evil. Last week one of the city papers contained a statement to the effect that the good work had been nearly accomplished, the last "house" had been raided, and the inmates given a week to leave the city. Immediately below this, in the same column, was an account of the finding of the dead body of a new-born infant in an ash-barrel, and two others hav been found, one in a lane, the other in a back yard, during the past week. Can it be possible that these circumstances bear the relation to each other of cause and effect? All medical men agree that to attack a disease that breaks out on the surface with the idea of driving it back will only cause it to break out again in some other and, perhaps, more malignant form. The social evil is a cancer on the body politic, but it is in the blood, gentlemen, and you must attack it from within. Take the sage's advice, and if you would reform young men, begin with the mothers twenty years before the young men are born. When you pay half as much attention to the raising of human beings as you do to raising cattle, the race will improve; and as long as you preach and teach that the blood of Christ cleanses from all sin, as long as you place a premium upon crime by teaching that man can sin until the last hour, and by then taking an imaginary bath in this blood go straight to glory, just so long will you hav the social and all other evils to contend with.

Here endeth the first lesson. KANUCK.

Toronto, May 21, 1886.

The Chicago Troubles.

I left our Union to catch the cars the first Sunday evening in May (just after the semi-annual election of officers) for a brief trip through Michigan, little dreaming of the terrible notoriety some familiar names were shortly to achieve in connection with inciting to or committing crime. Several prominent in their efforts to "impeach" your humble servant were arrested, besides the unfortunates who are "indicted." Mrs. Holmes (nee Swank), Mrs. Ames, and the redoubtable A. H. Simpson were arrested, but I believe hav all been released. Had those parties still been members of our society the whole Secular movement would hav received a blow from which it would hav been extremely difficult to recover.

Nevertheless, the ministers are howling that Anarchism is only the ripe fruit of Infidelity; that Atheism and Anarchism are synonymous; that Infidelity will hav to be suppressed before Anarchism can be stamped out; and last Monday's Methodist ministers' meeting resolved to the effect that the blame for the so-called Haymarket riot should be chargeable to Robert Ingersoll. Chicago seems to hav become an overgrown lunatic asylum, and press and pulpit (the Herald excepted) vie with each other in suggesting the most diabolical means for the punishment of the indicted persons even before they hav had a hearing. That saintly organ of Sam Jones, the Inter-Ocean, prints approvingly a communication suggesting that an immense dried-beef cutter should be procured; that the most innocent should be taken first, and, commencing at the feet, they should be sliced up, slice by slice, until they reach the crown of the head, and the rest of the victims be compelled to watch this sickening process until their turn came. This veritable blood-tub, who out-Nero's Nero, signs such an atrocious diabolism in the name of "Justice." O justice! then indeed thou art fled to brutish beasts, and men hav lost their reason. For this ferocity we cannot but feel more sympathy with these Anarchists than if there had been the slightest disposition to do them justice. You know how I regard the criminal folly of those who hav been dubbed dynamiters; but the ruffianism of the police, the injustice of the press, and the frenzy of the pulpit hav made me feel more consideration for those old confreres than I hav felt for a long time. Through this circumstance, everything progressiv they will attempt to suppress. I hav heard that all communications seeking to calm public excitement against them hav been refused publication in nearly all the city papers, and people dare not say a word against the police on a car, or they are dragged to the station. Every one with a grain of sense knows there was less reason for the police being the aggressors on this occasion than at hundreds of similar meetings held in this city without interference during the past two or three years. While these Anarchists hav used very violent language, no one acquainted with them supposes them likely to put their threats into execution. That only one bomb was thrown puts the question of a concerted plan out of all probability, and it is likely that some unbalanced follower determined to do something on his own account.

That the wild vagaries of Anarchism hav gained any foothold in Chicago is directly attributable to the daily press. If anything, they are more culpable than the Anarchists. If their (the Anarchists') utterances were treasonable and indictable before a handful of listeners, how much worse to disseminate those utterances among tens of thousands, merely for the sake of a sensation; and this is what the press has done day after day, week after week, until, inflated by this notoriety, each of those speakers becomes more and more reckless. The Chicago press want a sensation—either Sam Jones sensationalism, which is religious slush or frenzy, or Anarchistic sensationalism, which is a labor frenzy. Let a good, sound, scientific lecture be given, and they hav not a word to say—nothing, if they cannot ridicule it. Our editorial idiots (the Herald excepted) mix Anarchism and Socialism so inextricably that little of what they say is worthy of credence, especially since that bomb was thrown. People's houses hav been ransacked by the police without law or warrant, but merely on suspicion of containing Anarchistic literature. Had they called on me and discovered the TRUTH SEEKER cartoons, the holy mother church would hav doubtless got me "on the list!" For Rome rules this city as well as New York. E. A. STEVENS.

Chicago, Ill., May 25th.

Mr. Appleton's Tribute to Mr. Andrews.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: There is to me a peculiar soul-felt loss in the death of Stephen Pearl Andrews. I seem to hav been bereft of a sort of spiritual and intellectual father in this sad announcement, and beg to put on record through your columns my appreciation of one who, I believe, taken all in all, carried the heaviest intellect on this continent, if not on any other.

Without immodesty I may perhaps be allowed to say that I hav played some little part in shaping the advanced thought of the times, but at every step, as my intellectual methods developed, I leaned upon Mr. Andrews for instruction, and was made mentally whole in many a thought-dilemma by his wonderful analytical powers. Once upon my telling him that I could not quite understand him, he replied characteristically: "I am not trying to hav you understand me, but rather to hav you understand yourself, which is your chief concern." I confess that no man has ever helped me to understand myself and find my own intellectual bearings as has Mr. Andrews.

When I see the papers filled with the goings and comings of rum-eaten politicians, military butchers, official rogues, canting divines, and little 6x10 frauds of every description, while this grand mental and moral figure goes out of the world almost unnoticed, or is booked by the "public judgments" as a crank, how miserably cheap a thing becomes what is called public opinion! How infinitly contemptible is the butchery and vulgarity of Grant, the low political cunning of Garfield, and the gilded ecclesiastical harlotry of McClosky, beside the record of this devoted teacher of the teachers, who patiently and laboriously gave his life to truth, and counted the shining prizes of society as naught beside the achievement of lodging the seeds of eternal truth in places where they would bring forth a higher life and a grander humanity after he had gone hence.

Whatever I may in the future be able to achieve for right thinking and truer social life, I shall ever carry with me the silent and grateful acknowledgment of what Stephen Pearl Andrews has done for my mental development, and hold in kind remembrance the tender, generous, and hearty spirit in which he bestowed upon all the benefits of his rare intellectual training and gathered wisdom. HENRY APPLETON.

Boston, May 23, 1886.

Jamieson's Type Shorthand.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: For more than twenty years I hav been at work, from time to time, to devise an instrument for reporting speech legibly and accurately. I was not particular who invented it, so when Edison's phonograph, or "talking machine," appeared, I concluded that the expected machine had arrived. It proved a toy. The stenograph was next in order. It was another; although fairly good work may be done with it. But it is lacking in speed and legibility.

In 1868 (eighteen years ago), while in Havana, Ill., filling a six months' engagement, I imparted my idea of the possibility of reporting speech by machinery to Dr. James Boggs. The result was not satisfactory.

In January, while stopping with my friends, Mr. and Mrs. Heald, Burlington Junction, Mo., the thoughts became clear and irresistible, and I began to reduce them to writing (in phonography) saying nothing to anybody until the plan was matured. Yesterday, April 27th, I received my papers from the commissioner of patents through my attorneys, Messrs. Munn & Co., of the Scientific American. I hav also received from the librarian of Congress my copyright of title to "Class Book of Type Shorthand."

This summer, while traveling and lecturing, I will be engaged in perfecting the invention during my study hours. If I do not attain a speed surpassing that of the pen or pencil of the stenographer no one need expect me to offer to teach it. In legibility it eclipses anything ever devised in shorthand.

My purpose is to make the acquisition of the art of reporting so easy and so plain that school-children can readily acquire it.

I am too familiar with the history of science, invention, and discoveries in general to expect a hospitable reception for my art from the old phonographers, albeit I hav a few tried friends among them. My champions will be the young.

By the way, you kindly published a letter of mine last January, entitled "Liberal Leaves." I hav received several letters concerning that recommendation to the Secular Union to do something practical. Is the Union in existence for the mere purpose of sending one or two missionaries out lecturing and organizing a few auxiliaries, and holding an annual convention to listen to a few set speeches? If so, Liberalism makes a very large expenditure of money for very meager results.

Far better invest money for back numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, Boston Investigator, and other Liberal journals, for free distribution at the hands of our public lecturers. Reissue a large number of the best tracts by Bennett, Denton, selections from Wixon, Slenker, Gardener, Severance, Lake, Colby, Gibson, Ingersoll, Chadwick, Bradford, and others. As a lecturer, I will take pleasure in scattering broadcast the writings of these people among the orthodox, who seldom, or never, read our literature, nor listen to our lecturers.

Why can we not do more to get the writings of Miss Wixon, Mrs. Slenker, Mr. Putnam, and others, into the hands of orthodox children?

We must do more for the rising generation. The opinionated, middle-aged, and rapidly-passing-away old people are convinced of their youthful superstition at a time when the enthusiasm of youth has died out. Hence the apathy of Liberals in public work for others; their standard expression, "Let others find out their follies as we hav."

Let us save the young from the torments of Christian dogmas. Is there any better plan than I hav proposed? Let us hear what it is.

Alexandria, Minn., W. F. JAMIESON.

Heaven for Murderers.

As a recent illustration of the demoralizing effect of the Christian scheme of atonement, I take the case of Wilson, a negro, hanged in Missouri two or three weeks ago for the peculiarly deliberate and atrocious murder of his companion, of whom he was jealous. On the scaffold, among other things, he said: "I am the sorriest man to-day living on the globe, but not because I must die—not at all—but for the one who is gone, for whom I pay the death penalty. I am sorry for her because she had no chance, as I hav, for eternity."

No emphasis could add aught to the terrible import of these words. Read them, Christian divines, and blush for your creed. It was your creed that led this ignorant creature to believe that, because he had given his victim "no chance" when he shot her down, therefore his and your God should giv her "no chance" in the hereafter. It was your creed that had filled his brain with the poisonous thought that it was better to be a murderer than to be murdered; that taught him to measure the transient pains of the "death penalty" against the infinit agonies of an unending hell; it was your creed that taught him to say that he hoped God would bless the young men present "as he has blessed me."

How had God blessed this murderer? Why, by making him a murderer, and thus giving him a "chance" to repent and be saved, while his victim, not having any "chance" to repent, as she had murdered no one, plunges straight to hell. Did you make a remark to the effect that no one's life would be safe were it not for the "Christian civilization?" I am aiming this interrogatory at you, Rev. C. B. Taylor, of the Congregational church of Valley Falls.

Some tender-hearted Liberals are much hurt by the TRUTH SEEKER pictures. No doubt Mr. Heston's cartoon in the May 1st issue will shock the good people. In the lower part of the picture we see a jail, a scaffold, and upon the latter stands the condemned criminal, his legs and arms pinioned, and the rope around his neck. Back of him stands the sheriff, black cap in hand. In front of him is the robed priest, the crucifix in his right hand, the outstretched index finger of his left pointing upward. This is Scene 1, the Departure.

Scene 2, the Arrival (fifteen minutes later), occupies the upper part of the page. Angels are greeting the "late lamented" of earth. Their wings are full size, while those of the new member of the choir celestial are just sprouting from his shoulders. One white-garmented and aureole-crowned being hands him a harp, and another puts upon his head a halo, while Guiteau comes with a wreath in his hand. Rugg, the negro wife-murderer, is playing upon his harp, and the recording angel is registering the name of the new arrival, who, but for the whiteness of his face, might reasonably be supposed to be the late Mr. Wilson, of Missouri.

Now, I respectfully say to Mr. Luse, Mrs. Lenont, and all others who object to cartooning the absurdities and barbarities of the old faith, that so long as Christianity shall giv birth to such monstrous immoralities as those mouthed by Wilson and hundreds of other criminals, and which hav abundant sanction in the Bible and in the creeds of most of the churches, every weapon of satire, sarcasm, ridicule, and caricature is legitimate, and perfectly proper to be used; and therefore I heartily exclaim, Clearness to the eye fertility to the artistic imagination, and skill to the hand of Watson Heston, and may his tribe increase!—E. C. Walker in Lucifer.

A WRITER in the Brooklyn Times notes that "Thomas Paine, as the pamphleteer engaged by Congress to agitate political questions in the early period of the Revolutionary war, was the first man to earn a livelihood in this country by the pen."

THE Evening Bulletin, San Francisco, Cal., of May 5th, prints an item under the heading of "Oakland Brevities," in which it is stated that suit for divorce has been brought by George Chainey against Martha A. Chainey.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - - JUNE 5, 1886.

The Impudence of Catholicism.

The people of Cloud county, Kansas, hav just been treated to a rare specimen of ecclesiastical impudence by the Christians of Concordia. It seems, in the words of a resolution adopted at a meeting of the churches of Concordia, that "the Catholic bishop of the great state of Kansas, as well as those who with him hav charge of the widely-diversified interest of that church, hav been looking with watchful interest over the middle and northwestern portions of that state for a suitable place for the center of one or more dioceses, and hav been attracted to the beautiful city of Concordia, which sits nestled in a rich valley almost surrounded with picturesque hills of the proper elevation for the location of a college, cathedral, hospital, or any other edifice needed to round out the most extensiv see;" and, with the thrifty business habits of the managers of the Catholic church, the bishop and his aids bethought them of a scheme to reduce the cost of these buildings to a minimum. The proposition of the bishop was that the people of Concordia should present the church with $5,500 to enable "Father Perrier and the trustees of the Catholic church of Notre Dame of Concordia, Kansas, to purchase an eligible and suitable site for college and cathedral grounds for said church."

Private subscriptions to the amount desired not being forthcoming, the priest called a meeting in one of the halls of Concordia, which was attended by a considerable number of the inhabitants. After the priest had explained the object of the meeting, speeches were made by several gentlemen in favor of raising the money somehow. At last a happy plan was hit upon. Concordia has just issued several thousand dollars' worth of bonds to raise money to build new water-works, and these bonds are now being marketed by the authorities. The meeting therefore passed a resolution as follows:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that if need be, and to expedite prompt action in this matter, that the city council be authorized and requested to borrow said amount of $5,500, from the water-works fund as soon as said bonds shall be cashed."

A committee was also appointed to make sure that the city council was informed of the "sense of the meeting," and it strikes us that some such committee was absolutely necessary. The council otherwise would never hav learned that the meeting possessed any sense.

But Concordia is blessed with quite an Infidel population, among them J. M. Hagaman, editor of the Kansas Blade. Although in a hopeless minority, Mr. Hagaman bravely protested against the steal. The constitution of Kansas positivly prohibits taxation for support of religion or religious institutions. Mr. Hagaman brought this fact to the attention of the meeting, and in his paper of the following week he said:

"The attempt to tax the people of this city to aid a religious society, as was done last Monday night, was one of the most unwise, absurd, and high-handed outrages ever attempted. Of course the mayor and council will pay no attention to the action of the mecting, as to comply with its request would be to violate their oaths of office, and to subject them to imprisonment. In the mean time the public should keep a close look upon those aspiring gentlemen who are trying to steal the water-works money, and to tax them for the support of religion and church edifices. If they can tax us to build churches, why may they not tax us to support their preachers?"

With the constitution on his side, Mr. Hagaman will probably be able to prevent the consummation of this attempt to fasten fifty-five hundred dollars of debt upon the city. If alone he is unable to do it, he should appeal for help from all over the country. "An injury to one is the concern of all."

A Test that All Christians Fail Under.

While the genial and energetic secretary of the American. Secular Union is out among the Mormons endeavoring to remove from their minds the superstition which keeps them slaves to priests, the attacked hierarchy has sent recruiting emissaries East. Seven Mormon missionaries began, week before last, a proselyting crusade among the people of Pennsylvania. Their first effort was made near Fayette City, in Washington township. The meetings were largely attended and a great many converts were made among the illiterate Christians of the community. This aroused another portion of the citizens, and efforts were made to induce the missionaries to leave the place. The last meeting held by the Mormons was the largest of all. Many people were impressed by the sermon, wherein the preacher claimed supernatural aid, saying that in the fulfilment of scripture he could drink deadly things and handle serpents. The prospect of converting more ignorant Christians was flattering.

At the conclusion of the services Barker Claybaugh, a justice of the peace, obtained the floor. He produced a glass containing a solution of arsenic, which he challenged the preacher to drink. The preacher refused to submit to the test, and Claybaugh branded him as an impostor. The meeting broke up in a great tumult, during which clubs, stones, and other missils were used on the missionaries. They fled for their lives, but were so closely pursued by the mob that they implored the protection of the justice, who succeeded in calming the turmoil and conducting them in safety to their stopping-place. Irresistibly one is reminded by this occurrence of the heathen lashing their gods because the representativs of divinity hav failed to please them. It seems that the Pennsylvania Christians actually believed what the preacher told them, until an Infidel came forward to apply the test. Then their idol was shattered, and they turned upon him and would hav torn him limb from limb had not the skeptic protected him from their wrath. Heathen act in the same way.

Probably few of the mob knew that the missionary was but claiming for himself a sincere and unfaltering trust in Christ, and that the offering of the poison by the skeptic was an overturning of holy writ. It is related in the last chapter of Mark that after his resurrection Jesus appeared to the eleven and upbraided them for their unbelief and hardness of heart in not crediting the story of his resurrection:

"And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover.

"So then after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and sat at the right hand of God."

There was the Mormon missionary's authority; there is the measure of every man's Christianity. Either Christ went to his father with a lie upon his lips, or Christians are proof against poison. How many followers of Jesus will stand the test? Not one. Like the Mormon missionary, they are hypocrits. They deny their savior; they doubt God himself, and their fate is pronounced by Christ: "He that believeth not shall be damned." A cheerful prospect for a good many besides the Mormons!

What's In a Name?

If any of our readers are familiar with the London Truth Seeker they will be amused at the report of our correspondent that the Australian customs authorities hav refused to deliver to the much-persecuted Mr. Terry a case of books because a few numbers of that magazine were among them.

Our London namesake is the mildest kind of a Unitarian periodical, one of the prunes and prism sort, with its heresy sugar-coated a mile deep. A careful perusal of only one number would leave the reader in doubt whether the editor had any settled convictions upon theological matters, and never would it be suspected that he is an Infidel. The collector need not fear; the church cares nothing for that sort of Infidelity, and he can do his master no good by suppressing it.

There is one thing in connection with the acts of this custom-house official that fills us with wonder; which is, that he has been left so long in a comparativly obscure position. So extraordinarily intelligent a man certainly deserves promotion. Genius must be unappreciated in Australia.

The Prison for Anarchists on General Principles.

Six months ago it was the popular thing to sneer at the Anarchists, and Communists, and Socialists as long-haired reformers, lunatics, fanatics. Six weeks ago it became popular to denounce them as incendiaries, traitors, murderers, thieves. This last came about through the acts of a few men in Chicago, and a few in Milwaukee. It is by no means certain that in the latter place the people were not more sinned against than sinning, while it is certain that in Chicago the police were the aggressors, and clubbed and shot many innocent people for the acts of a few insane foreigners. But the great American nation has been frightened into fits, and blatant preachers and sensational newspaper writers hav taken advantage of the situation to do a great deal of blood-curdling writing. The police, as usual, hav proved expert liars. In Chicago they hav found bombs at every turn—if we believe them. Scarcely a square yard of sidewalk, from the lake to the center of the state, but that has been undermined, and the space used to store dynamite—if the police are truthful. The water in all the gutters ripples over long lengths of gaspipe plugged with pine, and filled with the deadly chemicals that are to blow Chicago skyward—if we let the police tell the story. A clamor has been raised that drowns all words of soberness. The American people are drunk on Anarchy.

It is this childish hubbub over the Chicago and Milwaukee fracases, and a stupefaction of moral sense, that has convicted John Most in this city. Mr. Most is not a savory personage, and it is far from popular to say a good word for him, but nevertheless he is as much a victim as any political prisoner now rotting in Siberia's mines. Most was indicted and tried for inciting to riot, and has been found guilty. But when our authorities seriously and soberly consider his case, they will find they hav played the part of tyrants. When a man is put in jail, the first question asked by the people is, What has he done? In the case of Most and his confreres, the only answer can be that he talked! Twenty-five, yea, five years hence, we predict that the people will regard this conviction as repugnantly as they now do the convictions of Abner Kneeland and D. M. Bennett.

The substance of Most's remarks at the meeting on the 23d of April was that the workingmen should arm themselvs. As he put it in his address to the jury which convicted him, he said:

"The capitalistic classes are well armed. The police, their servants, are well armed. Only the workingmens hav empty hands. There hav been done lately terrible things against workingmens, women, and children, not only by the special police, but by the private police of the Pinkerton institution, bought, piece by piece, for $5, like in East St. Louis, to kill peaceful men and women. To a peaceful assembly there come the $5-a-day hirelings of Jay Gould, hired for the very purpose to kill anybody, with repeating rifles; and perhaps, gentlemens, they didn't cost $12, but $25. Then I explained what kind of arms were to be had. I said: 'In the Constitution of the United States of North America there is no specification as to arms, no exclusion. You can hav a caunon if you please, and, of course, a bomb if you please. You can hav a rifle. They hav made a law against concealed weapons. Therefore don't conceal them. Show them, free and open.'"

This sort of talk is foolish in the extreme, but if the existence of the American Republic is threatened by it, why, the American Republic is in a bad way. Some of the witnesses against Most swore to curious evidence. One said that Most advised the throwing of vitriol out of windows upon people. As the speech was in German, the witness was asked to repeat the actual word uttered by Most. The witness said vitriol. The word used was schwefelsaüre. Another witness said Most referred to the Chicago riots and advocated a like insurrection on the part of the workingmen of New York. Most delivered his harang on the 23d of April. The Chicago riot occurred in May!

On the Fourth of July and other patriotic occasions America is lauded as the land of the free, and the effete monarchies of Europe are vigorously denounced. But the American eagle is screaming to little purpose, and must be set down as a very hypocritical bird, no better than a turkey-buzzard, if every man who pulls a feather from its tail is to be shut up in jail. The eagle and the orators must roost considerably lower on the fourth of next month if Most's conviction stands. It is the most unjust legal proceeding that has happened within many months.

The Love of God.

In a recent issue of the Forum Monsignor Preston has definitly set forth what the Roman Catholics want in the matter of public schools. In concluding his statement Mr. Preston asks: "Why not let the gentle hand of religion, guided by the love of God, do its part in the commonwealth?"

There are, it seems to us, several reasons why the "gentle hand of religion" should be kept out of governmental affairs, and the love of God refused permission to guide the nation. In the first place the hand of religion is not gentle, and, in the second, the love of God is synonymous with hatred of man. A gentleman of rather higher eminence in the community than Thomas S. Preston has stated the reasons why the proposition is untenable: "In the name of God every possible crime has been committed, every conceivable outrage has been perpetrated. Brave men, tender and loving women, beautiful girls, and prattling babes hav been exterminated in the name of Jesus Christ. For more than fifty generations the church has carried the black flag. Her vengeance has been measured only by her power. During all these years of infamy no heretic has ever been forgiven. With the heart of a fiend she has hated; with the clutch of avarice she has grasped; with the jaws of a dragon she has devoured; pitiless as famin, merciless as fire, with the conscience of a serpent; such is the history of the church of God."

A few of the deeds committed by the "gentle hand of religion, guided by the love of God," may not inappropriately be specified, as a further reason why Mr. Preston's suggestion should not be too speedily acted upon: "In 1208 the Inquisition was established. Seven years afterward the fourth council of the Lateran enjoined all kings and rulers to swear an oath that they would exterminate heretics from their dominions. The sword of the church was unsheathed, and the world was at the mercy of ignorant and infuriated priests, whose eyes feasted upon the agonies they inflicted. Acting, as they believed, or pretended to believe, under the command of God; stimulated by the hope of infinit reward in another world—hating heretics with every drop of their bestial blood; savage beyond description; merciless beyond conception—these infamous priests, in a kind of frenzied joy, leaped upon the helpless victims of their rage. They crushed their bones in iron boots; tore their quivering flesh with iron hooks and pincers; cut off their lips and eyelids; pulled out their nails, and into the bleeding quick thrust needles; tore out their tongues; extinguished their eyes; stretched them upon racks; flayed them alive; crucified them with their heads downward; exposed them to wild beasts; burned them at the stake; mocked their cries and groans; ravished their wives; robbed their children, and then prayed God to finish the holy work in hell. . . . The Catholic burned the Lutheran, the Lutheran burned the Catholic, the Episcopalian tortured the Presbyterian, the Presbyterian tortured the Episcopalian. Every denomination killed all it could of every other; and each Christian felt in duty bound to exterminate every other Christian who denied the smallest fraction of his creed. . . . Giv any orthodox church the power, and to-day they would punish heresy with whip, and chain, and fire. As long as a church deems a certain belief essential to salvation, just so long it will kill and burn if it has the power."

From this Mr. Preston can see why it would be inexpedient, at this time, to let the gentle hand of religion—at least the Christian religion—do its part in the commonwealth.

Editorial Notes.

THE Observer advertises photographs of Irenæus, the ancient editor of that pious organ, in sealed envelopes; which causes the wicked to wonder if there is anything about the pictures to cause their confiscation if sent in the usual way.

W. W. COLLINS, the English Freethought lecturer who recently left England for Australia, has begun at Sydney the publication of a weekly journal called The Freethinker and New South Wales Reformer. Judging by the clergy's hatred of Mr. Collins, he is an exceptionally able representativ of English Secularism. The first issue of his paper is very bright.

A PRIEST in Australia was opposed to the election of a certain candidate, and from his pulpit he ordered his people not to vote for him. Those who would not obey he denounced in these words: "May the flesh rot from their bones, the grass wither under their feet, their homes be made desolate, and hell be depicted to their bosoms." This did not occur in 1486, but in the year of our lord and savior eighteen hundred and eighty-six.

THE Spiritualists of Melbourne, Australia, are raising funds to build a $75,000 hall. A children's progressiv lyceum and Spiritualistic lectures are to be maintained.

WHAT will the readers of the New York Observer say of it when they find out, as they are sure to some time, that its "seven activ editors" hav been wilfully, persistently, and knowingly lying to them, and concealing the truth about Thomas Paine? If this reaches the eye of any editor of the New York Observer, we trust the thought will giv him pause.

IN taking charge of the Sierra Valley Leader, Mr. Pritchard thus defines his religious position: "In all religions faith is the principal thing necessary, and my 'bump' of faith never developed, which was no fault of mine. I only desire to be honest with my conscience, and consequently am at the present time a Darwinian Evolutionist." So! Another Infidel editor in the West.

A RELIGIOUS paper whose editor was recently invited to make the lot of the prisoners in the Tombs in this city harder by preaching to them, reports that most of the accused people are Christians. Of the boys, ten out of twelve are Roman Catholics. Rum, he says, is the cause of seven-tenths of the crime committed by his temporary congregation. All of which, if true, is a very good argument against Rum and Romanism.

THE religious business is better in some localities than in others. In Buffalo it seems, from the following reading notice, to be booming: "We hav just received an invoice from New York and Philadelphia of religious goods, comprising statuets, crucifixes, glass, brass, and onyx candlesticks, rosaries, holy water fonts, rosary cases, etc. New styles and reduced prices. Call and examin at Catholic Union and Times office."

PARK COMMISSIONER BORDEN advocated at the last meeting of the Park board a resolution forbidding all licensed amusements in Central Park on Sundays. The resolution included sailing on the lake, riding in the goat wagons and the merry-go-rounds, and the use of the swings. The resolution was deservedly defeated, and Commissioner Borden's pious backers are much depressed. There will be music in the Park this summer on Sunday afternoons by Cappa's Seventh Regiment band.

THE New York Sun says that the advocates of increased pension payments "should be locked up, if it can be done lawfully." The Sun has been, heretofore, a newspaper of brains and American ideas, but it seems to be losing its grip. There is altogether too much loose talk about locking folks up and suppressing freedom of speech floating around nowadays. Because a few Anarchists of Chicago lost their heads is no reason why the whole American population should throw their reason overboard.

THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, N. Y., with our old friend E. M. Macdonald at the helm, is increasing in all good and pleasant things each week. Its illustrations are a marked feature of the progressiv thought of the age, and are doing more to educate the people in the right direction than three times the space of reading matter. Our neighbor at Carthage, Mo., Mr. Heston, is doing a noble work, and deserves the gratitude of all Freethinkers. His last cartoon, "Jesus Paid it All," in the May 15th number, speaks volumes, and ought to be carefully studied by all.—Missouri Liberal.

SOME of our readers may recollect that a few months ago a Hebrew correspondent of THE TRUTH SEEKER charged that the Rev. Jacob Freshman was converted from Judaism to Christianity for the money there is in it. A Christian paper now publishes the following advertisment:

THE REV. JACOB FRESHMAN,
Son of a converted Jewish rabbi, will lecture in.....
on.....at 8 o'clock.
SUBJECT: "The Jews: their Manners, Customs, Religious Ceremonies, Literature," etc., etc.

The lecturer will appear in the garb of a Jewish rabbi, and will exhibit all the articles used in Jewish worship, such as phylacteries, fringes, scroll of the law, etc. All Sabbath-school workers and all interested in God's ancient people should not fail to attend.

We are inclined to think from this rather circusy advertisment that our Hebrew correspondent was right.

AT a meeting of Methodist ministers in Chicago recently the blame for the late riots in that city was all laid by the Rev. Mr. Fawcett upon the broad shoulders of Colonel Ingersoll. A citizen of Chicago thereupon wrote to the Herald asking for specific statements. He says: "Mr. Fawcett did not specify any time, place, or occasion where or when Colonel Ingersoll ever advised or encouraged any such wickedness, or any violation of the law whatever. Is that fair? The accusation rebounds upon Mr. Fawcett and his order. I might content myself in a general way by referring to the many inflammatory Socialistic sermons that hav been delivered from the Chicago pulpit during the past year, and from other pulpits, too, but I will be fairer than Mr. Fawcett was, and present specifications: Three weeks ago, at the Methodministers' meeting here, a bishop mentioned a private citizen by name, and said that he ought 'to be taken by the nape of the neck and kicked all over the city of New York.' Was that not urging passionate and revengeful men to violate the law? A few weeks ago a Methodist minister, occupying a national and lucrativ office, that of chaplain to the House of Representativs, offered a public prayer to God, in the presence of Congress, in which he invoked a 'reign of terror,' and gave thanks that although 'for long the few hav mastered the many, because they understood the open secret—the tools to those who can use them—yet now the many hav learned the secret of organization, drill, and dynamite.' I understand that Colonel Ingersoll is not in the habit of praying, but is it not better for a man never to pray at all than to pray like that?" So far the heretic appears to hav the best of the argument.

THE Bible is either inspired wholly by God, partly by God, or not at all by God. If wholly, then to doubt the truth of a single syllable is treason to the Almighty, and punishable by spiritual death—in other words, by a sojourn of eternity in sheol, revised version. If only partly inspired, then who is to decide which part? Somebody might believe in the wrong part, and the conscquence would be fearful. If not at all inspired, then it is of far less use than Rollin's Ancient History and Shakspere's works. There is no foundation for the Christian religion, and the ministers are blind leaders of the blind. We commend these brief comments to the Rev. Dr. Kent, of Halifax, Nova Scotia, who is floundering around trying to subject the Bible to human reason, and at the same time save its alleged divine qualities.

"LAST winter," writes Mr. Remsburg to Lucifer, "a Christian clergyman said to me, 'The most damnably corrupt institution in America is the Women's Christian Temperance Union.' For brazen hypocrisy this and kindred Christian temperance associations hav certainly never been surpassed. Every honest and rational movement in favor of temperance is to be commended; but this nauseating stuff called 'Bible temperance' is unbearable. I hav long felt that this sham ought to be punctured. It has been done at last, and most effectually done, by the logical pen of E. C. Walker. His paper on 'Bible Temperance' that has just appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER ought to be flaunted in the face of every hypocrit in the land." The papers by Mr. Walker to which Mr. Remsburg refers hav been put into pamphlet form, with cover, which sells for ten cents per copy.

DURING the year ending Oct. 31st last the Ohio penitentiary received 766 prisoners, whose religious antecedents were as follows:

Swedenborgians	1
Quakers	1
Dunkards	4
Hebrews	4
Congregationalists	5
Universalists	10
Disciples	21
United Brethren	25
Episcopal	28
Presbyterian	58
Lutheran	61
Baptist	86
Catholic	188
Methodist	221
Number whose parents were not religious	53

Of those 766 criminals 622 had received a Sunday-school training, and 144 had not. The mental food furnished by the library of this prison is adulterated with 1,711 Bibles and Testaments, old versions, 11 revised New Testaments, and 116 Bible commentaries and dictionaries. It is said that the convicts greatly enjoy their religious privileges.

WE find the following in the Catholic Union and Times:

"Those American dupes who are just now subscribing liberally toward the erection of a monument to Giordano Bruno should learn that the killing of Anarchist apostles is an act of self-defense. Bruno was burnt at the stake in 1600, not for heresy as many allege, but for the preaching of Anarchy. The burning of one man like Most might save the lives of dozens of faithful policeman, one of whom is worth more to the community than a thousand Socialists. If THE TRUTH SEEKER persists in picturing Bruno as a martyr of free speech, it must now espouse the cause of Spies, Schwab, Parsons, and other Brunoites."

People hav become so accustomed to hearing heretics lied about that the foregoing will not cause any surprise. If Bruno was an Anarchist, so was George Washington, and so is Charles Stewart Parnell. But Jesus Christ is well known to hav been a Communist. He held "unlawful assemblages," advocated a Socialistic distribution of wealth, and on one occasion resorted to violence. We do not see how any person who accepts Jesus Christ as a teacher can object to the Communists of to-day. Justus Schwab holds himself to be a practical follower of Jesus, and he is more consistent than a majority of the so-called Christians. The person who rejects the doctrin of Communism denies the plainest doctrin of Christ.

THERE is a bungler connected with the Christian Advocate who, whenever a prominent Freethinker dies, takes advantage of the occasion to write himself down an ass. Here is his latest deliverance:

"Stephen Pearl Andrews, known as the Pantarch and Apostle of Universology, is dead. We hav been familiar with this eccentric human being for many years—familiar in the same sense as with George Francis Train, whom we hav often heard, whose writings we hav read, but whose personal acquaintance we hav never enjoyed or suffered. The Pantarch, as a speaker, was not content with driving a substantiv and six. His method of thought was that of generalizing from particulars and then expanding his generalizations into something more impalpable than the universal ether. He certainly had no competitor as the great American 'phrase-grinder.' He spoke for forty-five minutes once, during which time he did not complete the statement of a single idea. The audience numbered about eighty. A person present selected the only man who looked as if he understood the speaker, and asked him what the Pantarch was driving at. He received this reply: 'I think that he is propounding a conundrum.' He was one of the curious, abnormal growths of the nineteenth century. His funeral services, conducted under the auspices of the Liberal Club, with Thaddeus Wakeman as orator, with the congregation singing, 'Nearer, my God, to Thee,' and an address by the Rev. G. W. Samson (can this last be true?) was as extraordinary a melange as we hav had occasion to report for a long time."

This may be regarded as the final outcome of nineteen centuries of Christian charity. The congregation did not sing, "Nearer, my God, to Thee," but that the Rev. G. W. Samson made an address at the funeral of his dead friend is true. The only salvation of the Christian clergy from utter and universal contempt rests in the fact that there is occasionally found one among their number who is neither a bigot in religion nor a fool in philosophy.

Letters from Friends.

SOUTH BOSTON, MASS., May 8, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: With your permission I would like to reply to some statements made by Mr. Octavius J. Brosius in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 22d. Not that I think Mr. Holt is not capable of taking care of himself, but because of Mr. Brosius's apparent invitation to discuss "Freetrade vs. Protection" with some mechanic like himself, for he insinuates that Mr. Holt cannot be one or he would never advocate free-trade principles. Now, sir, I am, like him, a mechanic, a machinist, and earn my living by the hammer and chisel, the file and the lathe, and hav always had to work for my living from twelve years of age up to now. I am an Englishman, and hav had the advantage of living in the most free-trade country in the world, and, I had almost said, the most protectionist also.

Mr. Brosius speaks of the starvation wages and poor living of the toilers in England, Scotland, Germany, and France, and contrasts this with the "fresh meat seven days in the week, good clothes, comfortable homes," etc., of the American workingman, and attributes these different conditions to the different policies, free trade and protection, respectivly.

Now England and Scotland are free trade countries, while Germany and France are protectionist. So here, according to his own showing, are starvation wages under both systems; can he explain this? Nay, more, can he explain how it is that wages are higher in Scotland and England than in protectionist France and Germany? But I ask, is there no such thing as starvation wages in the United States? If not, then why these great combinations of workingmen, and these vast strikes at the present time? Surely the workingman here is intelligent enough to know when he is well off, or is it because he is never satisfied, but, like a true protectionist, wants the whole hog? I would like Mr. Brosius to read a few copies of John Swinton's Paper, and he will learn a little more of wages and living of the toilers of this country than he seems to know.

I quote now from his letter: "When England lands her goods on American soil and sells them at a discount over American goods or American prices, the arms that produced them hav been working at very unremunerativ wages." I am not sure about that. Let us reason. When American farmers land their grain on English soil, does it prove that American farmers are in a worse condition than the English farmers? Oldham (England) sends her cotton yarns into these States; but does this prove that Oldham operativ spinners are paid less than their fellow-competitors in Fall River? Not at all, for the reverse is the case, and I refer Mr. Brosius to the secretary of the Fall River Spinners' Association, Mr. Robert Howard, as my authority.

Again I quote: "It is not wicked selfishuess, as you assert [meaning Mr. Holt], but natural, legitimate home protection—protection from foreign capitalists, who would take the bread from my own and your children's mouths." Now if my protection friend is really a workingman, and if he has worked for more than one capitalist, he must know that capitalists are much the same the world over.

Again: "It is a protection demanded by the voters of a free and grand republic, who ask the right to sell their labor to the highest and best bidder." Good. This is what I ask and demand. Yes, I claim the right to sell my labor in the dearest market, be it in Europe, America, Asia, Africa, or Australia, and I don't ask for any law to accord me this right to the exclusion of another man.

I refer now to the anti-Chinese laws in force in this "free and grand republic." Yes, I claim the fullest freedom of locomotion over every inch of this earth, provided it is not already usefully occupied by another man. But more than this. I love freedom so much that I claim also the right to buy in the cheapest as well as to sell in the dearest market. My protectionist friend may say that by so doing I may be injuring my neighbor friends. Granted, but if my neighbor won't treat me as well as the stranger at a distance, he is no friend at all. The man who givs me the most for my money and the most for my labor is my best friend, be he near or far. Neighbors, as far as my experience goes, are not the fairest of people to deal with, as is proved by the fact that some American goods can be purchased cheaper in England than here. Manufacturers often sell cheaper abroad than at home.

My neighbor friend, who does this, and clamors for a protection law to coerce me from buying abroad, has queer ideas of liberty, justice, and freedom. Mr. Brosius says: "Do you wish to see the fair daughters of America dig in the mines to keep the wolf from the door of poverty? If you do, then we do not wonder at your free-trade logic."

Now, I challenge him to prove that women work in the mines of England or Scotland. Such has been the case in years gone by, I believe, long before free trade principles were propounded by Cobden, Bright & Co. Women do work now, or did up to six or seven years ago, on the top of the mines in the Wigan district. But I refer Mr. Brosius to John Swinton's Paper again for my authority for saying that this very kind of dirty, unbecoming work for females is done under protection laws in this country, down in the Pennsylvania coke regions. Yea, under still worse sickening conditions, with their babies with them.

Sir, I hav worked in the mills and workshops of Lancashire. I hav done the same here. This protectionist talk about "fresh meat seven days in the week," "good, comfortable houses to liv in," and "clothes of the very best," etc., is all brag, like his talk of a "free and grand republic"—as if there was no freedom outside of these States. Now, the English factory operativ may not dine every day in the week on fresh meat—though I know there are exceptions. Still, what he does eat is good, plain, substantial food; his beef, probably American; and that the best, better than the American retains here for his own people. His meals are not the regulation three, but four, and in many cases five, per day.

He does not go to work in apparently as good clothes as his brother workman here, for his clothes are bought specially to work in, good strong fustian or corduroy. He has extra clothes equally as good as, if not better than, people wear here, for Sundays and Saturday afternoons. Has every American workman two sets of clothes? I wish you could truthfully say Yes. How many workmen here occupy houses all to themselvs, from the cellar to the garret? I hav not seen one in a hundred in that happy condition to be able to say, "This house is my castle; this roof shelters none but me and my family; I stand at my own door; I join with no one." Now, this is the rule in free-trade England, while tenements, or unfurnished rooms, if you please, are the rule here.

We are all tainted with prejudice about the places where we were born and reared. Few of us can say with Thomas Paine, "The world is my country." But, believe me, I hav not written in a spirit of running down your country to prop up my own, but only to show you protectionists that the evils you speak of as the results of free trade flourish also in the sunshine of protection.

I vote for the cartoons. THOMAS RAYNER.

ERIE, May 24, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I herewith hand the distance and time that, according to the divine revelation given to man, is certainly the best time ever recorded. Your pictures lately published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Jonah's voyage caused some comments upon this whale of a story, but what was our surprise when Captain Louch told us that this whale with poor Jonah actually had to travel over 15,000 miles in 72 hours. Accordingly he has taken pains to giv us the exact distance, and assures me it is right. I want some orthodox divine to answer this and explain. Talmage and Jo Cook would be be the most competent, because, no matter what they say, they hav their congregations so trained that they believe anything, no matter how absurd. Trusting you will publish it, I am, as ever, C. L. HAWES.

JONAH'S VOYAGE IN THE WHALE.

	miles
Across the Mediterranean sea	2,300
West coast Africa Cape Town	6,700
Cape Town to Cape Guardafui	4,200
Cape Guardafui to Tigress River	2,000
Up river to Nineveh	450
Total	15,650
Duration of voyage	72 hours
Speed per hour	217.33
Speed per minute	3.62

Allow for feeding, blowing, and resting 12 hours, and you increase the speed 16 per cent. and make it 4.18 miles per minute.

CAPT. ABRAHAM J. LOUCH.

HEMPSTEAD, N. Y., April 22, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Reynolds's proposition to make the New York State Freethinkers' Convention a camp-meeting has just been read. I am in favor of the proposal. Hold it the last week in August, over two Sundays, and I will come. My family will come, and some of our friends will come. Let us hav the greatest reunion of Freethinkers the world has ever seen out in the vast and splendid temple of nature.

With best wishes, C. F. DEMOTT.

EAU CLAIRE, WIS., May 15, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Your article on the so-called riots in Milwaukee and Chicago is creditable, as being nearly the only one in type which lays the greater part of the blame on the proper shoulders. But you weaken a little before you get through. You call the Socialist leaders "madmen;" say they "hav a capacity to talk, a strong disinclination to work, and a fanatical belief in force as a factor in social economy." After admitting that the police at Chicago charged a mass meeting "from which no riot promised to spring," you say that in what followed the rioters were in the wrong; and that at Milwaukee the rioters seem to hav been wholly to blame. In all this I differ with you. It is not pretended that at Milwaukee a single one of these ferocious rioters was shot. Of the five victims, one was a school-boy armed only with his books. Another was an aged cripple who was feeding chickens. The others had no weapons. None of the heroes who shot them were injured in the affray. This is strange, but something stranger is behind. I hav observed that in such cases neither soldiers nor rioters ever do get hurt. It is always innocent people. Can you forgiv a skeptic's suggesting as the reason that there are never any but soldiers and innocent people there? The Milwaukee affair was a cold-blooded massacre. The St. Louis tragedy, a few weeks earlier, was a cold-blooded massacre. Similar atrocities are committed at every strike, for no other purpose than to intimidate the people. At Chicago the police advanced with drawn revolvers, crying, "Shoot the sons of b——s!" This time the people were not intimidated. They came armed, which the Constitution says they hav a right to do, and they thought they would vary the monotony of being shot by doing a little shooting. You say even in war no nation would [should?] use such horribly murderous weapons as dynamitc bombs. The Austrian government thinks differently. So do I. All the epithets, "barbarous," "cowardly," etc., now applied to dynamite were applied to gunpowder in its day. Yet gunpowder superseded spears and swords, with the paradoxical result that war is far less sanguinary now than formerly. And dynamite will supersede it, with the result, I hope, of putting an end to war altogether.

In regard to your article, "Knights of Labor Bigotry," I would say that the laws of the Knights absolutely forbid all religious discussion at their meetings, and all discriminations on account of religion. Boycotting by local assemblies is an irregular proceeding which will probably be prohibited at the approaching meeting of the General Assembly.

C. L. JAMES.

FILLMORE, UTAH, May 2, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a subscriber for your valuable paper for upwards of ten years, which may be deemed conclusiv evidence that I indorse its general features. One marked characteristic I specially admire is that it affords an equal opportunity to parties of opposit views to express their honest thoughts. If there is anything I despise, it is bigotry or intolerance. If one is a lover of fair play, will he not gladly extend the same courtesy to those who may differ with him as he would wish them to extend to him? Certainly. But I regret that many who deem themselvs Liberals forget this, and seem ready on every opportunity to denounce all who do not tread in their special grooves of thought. This, in my estimation, is altogether foreign to the spirit of genuin Liberalism, which, I think, involves perfect freedom of thought in every conceivable channel, and only asks that honesty of purpose be manifested in any theory advanced. To pronounce a man a knave or a fool because he advances ideas not in harmony with ours indicates a very contracted view of humanity and its surroundings. No one has sufficiently explored the universe to entitle him to speak authoritativly as to its infinit resources, and as we can reason only from what we know, which is little indeed compared to what is beyond our ken, it is well to be modest in our assumptions.

No one who has observed the correspondence on Materialism and Spiritualism in your paper can hav failed to notice how certain each seems to be as to the truth and consistency of his side of the question, and undoubtedly each is equally sincere. Yet, as both cannot be right, in spite of their strong convictions, possibly both may be wrong. It is well, therefore, to be temperate in expressing our convictions, so that, while we may feel certain we are right in our conclusions, we may manifest liberality enough to concede that our opponents may hav good reasons to decide adversely to us. Controversy conducted on this principle has a tendency to enlarge our view, and enable each to see his own mistakes and correct his own errors.

I will now, with your permission, say a few words in reference to your new departure. I notice that many speak in favor of your illustrations, but, with all due deference to their opinion, I most emphatically enter my protest against a great many of them as caricatures of things deemed most sacred among mankind, and therefore apt to create in the minds of thoughtful and well-meaning persons a feeling of disgust and loathing.

The lady who pronounced them simply horrid was not far out of the way. I would willingly pay something extra for suitable illustrations, such as would be worthy of a great Freethought journal, which treats of the gravest and most momentous questions, but all such caricatures I would leave to Puck and Punch, as belonging to comic literature. I really don't think they add to the respectability or intrinsic worth of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Ridicule may at times be necessary, but good logic and sound argument are much more effectiv weapons in demolishing superstition than any amount of raillery.

Hoping that my remarks may not be deemed offensiv, I close with kind regards for you and kind wishes for THE TRUTH SEEKER. JOHN KELLY.

MERIDIAN, TEXAS, May 15, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I am at this time just able to send you my subscription for the year 1886.

I hav read the Edmunds bill. I think it unconstitutional, and further think no good, honest man would accept an appointment under it. Such as Blatchford or Benedict, of Bennett fame, would. Is not Blatchford in Utah now, robbing the people of their rights and money both? I feel that our government is in the hands of the priesthood.

When such men as Senator Coake, of Texas, say to the voters, "You must scourge back these preachers and cut off their rations," it is high time for THE TRUTH SEEKER to show up on all sides with pictures and reasons why they should be scourged back.

I attended J. E. Remsburg's lecture at Morgan on May 10th, and was pleased as well as surprised at the men and women who came to hear him. I found good Liberals that I had no idea of.

This conflict for subsistence, or the life of a laborer, is hard to bear when one is getting old. The weight of years is on me, and I feel like turning aside to some resting-place, if it was to be found on this earth—for instance, Sinaloa, as A. K. Owens proposes to build up in Mexico. Can't you giv us light on A. K. Owens's plan, etc.?

Query: What has become of Mary W. Bennett? Is she yet alive?

Now the greatest troubles are the patent turnings and twistings of the exegetical machines of the reverend divines or preachers. "The word was, and the word was with God, and the word was God" (John). That is, they will make a lie look just like the truth. And it seems that the masses of the people had rather believe a lie than the truth—that is, they are afraid of the realities of this life, and seek comfort in superstition and absurdities.

Your Truth Seeker Company must not get too rich. Persecution and hard work made D. M. Bennett bright.

Yours with respect, S. D. GREER.

[Mrs. Bennett is alive and well, doing what good she can in her unostentatious way. There does not seem to be much danger that the Truth Seeker Company will get too rich. The expenses balance the receipts with provoking regularity. We are not familiar with the plans of Mr. Owen, but he has published them, we believe, in a pamphlet entitled, "Integral Coöperation," price 30 cents.—ED. T. S.]

TORONTO, ONT., May 11, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Having removed from Welland to this city, I hav missed the kind attention of our friend James Foster in the matter of subscriptions, and your dues on this account, or some other, hav been neglected. I now take pleasure, however, in remitting for the current year, and in sending also the subscription of William Tom, Credit Forks, Ont., to January, 1887. Mr. Tom, like myself, formerly lived at Welland, and I may add that several others hav removed from that town, which leaves the Secular Society there in a somewhat weak condition in point of numbers. Besides, there are those remaining who refuse to assume any prominence, much less to accept office in the society, and organized Secularism is, therefore, very much stunted in its development. But these are, no doubt, the experiences of most country towns, and still there is hope for the final triumph of this society, no matter where on earth established. Just so soon as the printing-press and the public schools are sustained, and men of intelligence and independent thought are born into the world, just so surely must the theological fabric, based on the hell-and-damnation theory, crumble to its fall, and with that fall must rise higher and higher the grand superstructure of the religion of humanity, under whose broad arches may stand together the man who, like Thomas Paine, believes in "one God and no more," and the man who, with equal sincerity, rejects the evidence adduced.

With regard to our city of Toronto, and the Secular Society here, I need scarcely speak, secing we hav another and abler correspondent. I may say, howcver, the condition of the society is improving, and with age and experience it will at least be able to "stand alone." Formerly, quite in contrast with the tendency at Welland, for instance, everybody aspired to be an office-holder, and a gread deal of difficulty was experienced in the creation of offices and the distribution of places. Again, the formation of the executiv committee, as well as numerous sub-committees, with power to add to their numbers, which power was invariably cxercised, and all of which resulted in numerous and long-drawn-out reports, occupying usually the full time of our sittings. All this we hav had to contend with, and with the handling of so much red tape even we had almost forgotten the religion of humanity, and trampled on our Nine Demands. But, as before intimated, the atmosphere is clearing somewhat, and as Brother C. B. Reynolds and his good wife are now holding a revival in our midst, we must surely come out all right in the "sweet by and by." J. PRIESTMAN, JR.,
Secretary Toronto Society.

NEWARK, MICH., May 16, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I come to you as an humble individual, but as one who has been a Freethinker in the fullest sense of the term from his fifteenth year, and as one who is deeply interested in freeing the human mind from the slavish thralldom of superstition and the blighting incubus of priestcraft. I venture to state my views as touching some phases of THE TRUTH SEEKER. I will state in the outset that experience has taught me that ridicule is not the weapon with which to successfully combat superstition when intrenched, as it usually is, behind the bulwarks of reverence which hav been built by the hand of parental affection. The citadel of ecclesiasticism, in my opinion, will never be taken by storm, but if taken at all, strategy, and that of the highest order, must be the weapon with which to disarm the enemy. I hav seldom failed in bringing a person whose confidence and affection I hav first been able to win, to my way of thinking. Show a person by kindness and courtesy that you are his friend; that you are deeply interested in his welfare, and he is then prepared to hear the voice of reason, and you may proceed, judiciously, to sow the seed of reason, with the assurance that it will fall upon good ground.

But when you attack the object of any person's reverence with ridicule, you are sowing seed upon unprepared ground, which will only be made more hard and stony by your assaults. Such, I apprehend, will be the effect of most of the illustrations recently published in THE TRUTH SEEKER upon the minds of those whose prejudices they are intended to reach and remove. They may amuse and please those who are already skeptical, and may add large numbers of Freethinkers to your subscription list; they may even afford amusement for those who hold no religious opinions in particular; but will they reach the minds of zealous working Christians in such a way as to do good rather than harm? We think not. On the contrary, we think they cannot fail to make such people less vulnerable to the appeals of reason.

I think also that some of the articles upon political questions and upon the labor question contain sentiments that are so extreme and utterly impracticable as to displease and disgust really intelligent and practical people. The spirit of dogmatism that pervades some of the articles is entirely unbecoming to one who claims to be liberal. While I agree with Mr. Kelso that the principle involved in granting gratuities to any person is wrong, and that the people ought to repudiate every member of Congress who votes away their money to those who hav not rendered an equivalent for it, yet I think many of his strictures upon General Grant are so unjust and so uncalled for as to disgust all fair-minded people. In his reference to questions touching finance and the tariff, he displays a spirit of dogmatism unworthy of a Liberal. In your paper of the 8th inst. Juliet H. Severance makes the remarkable statement that the national debt was nine billion dollars when the war broke out. Shades of departed school-boys, arise and rebuke such recklessness!

In conclusion, I would say that if the mission of THE TRUTH SEEKER is the overthrow of religious superstition, it must not be made a mouth-piece for political and social extremists, ranters, and cranks; but must confine itself to the work in hand, and exclude from its columns everything that may hav a tendency to create discord among those who would be co-workers with it for the accomplishment of the end in view.

Trusting these remarks will be received in the same spirit that dictates them, I am, Yours for truth and reason,
S. E. SOWER.

NORSE, TEX., May 13, 286.

MR. EDITOR: The able worker in the Liberal cause, Mr. John E. Remsburg, delivered his grand oration on Thomas Paine, the apostle of liberty, to a fair audience here on the evening of the 6th inst.

He traced with vividness the career and public services of this great and noble man, and with thrilling eloquence portrayed his self-sacrificing labors for freedom and humanity, his heroic devotion to liberty, the undaunted moral courage of him whose magic pen first wrote, "The Free and Independent States of America;" the inspiring genius that thrilled the American heart with the first glad notes of liberty—that first implanted in the patriot's mind a fixed resolve to do or die."

The speaker vindicated Thomas Paine's character against the vile aspersions cast upon it by superstitious bigots, and paid a glowing tribute to his memory. He placed Paine's fair name where it justly belongs, among the highest pinnacles of fame, as he was one of the most illustrious of liberty's promoters and defenders.

I also had the pleasure to attend Mr. Remsburg's lecture at Clifton, eight miles from Norse, on the night of the 7th inst., when he delivered his excellent lecture on "False Claims of the Church" to a good audience.

He invited criticism of his lecture, and a Rev. Mr. Barry had the temerity to say that the lecturer had made many false and erroneous statements. When called on to specify any such, he disputed and wanted proof of the presidents of the United States not belonging to any church. Mr. Remsburg cited abundant proof of his position, and thus silenced the parson. The reverend gentleman appeared to be very anxious to arrange for a debate to be held in the future, after due preparation, but he did not mention it after finding that the lecturer's position became only the more impregnable from his attempt to weaken it. T. THEO. COLWICK.

MYRTLE POINT, ORE., May 1, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I see by reading Friendly Letters that there are two sides to all questions, and I am sorry to be in the minority concerning the pictures in the good old TRUTH SEEKER. I say old, as I hav been a subscriber from the first number, and I thought that I always should be a subscriber, but if this picture business continues I think I shall hav to say good-bye, old friend, and wish you well.

A good many years ago, when Brick Pomeroy published the Lacrosse Democrat, he also had such things, or pictures, as you call them; and I well remember that the Republicans used to say that the Democrats could not read letters, but knew pictures, and so now the enemies of Freethought make the same remarks. I had a Methodist elder up at my house this week, and he made that remark. I can see no good in them, so if you continue to print pictures you may discontinue my paper when my subscription expires.

We hav a good many Infidels here, but the greater part of them do not preach it much for fear of the church. I hav been brought up a German Reformed Christian, but hav long since had my eyes opened. I am now nearly seventy years old, and I am getting further away from the church every day, and am considered beyond redemption by the saints and soul agents, although they come to see me and stop over night, and once in a while one will pick up THE TRUTH SEEKER and read it, but leave off making comments, for I keep a good supply of Freethought books on my table.

Inclosed find 50 cents for Remsburg's "Sabbath-Breaking." C. LEHNHEN.

AXTELL, KAN., May 14, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: "Large bodies move slowly" is probably the reason that you hav not heard from us ere this. The book of forms, etc., came all right, and we hav a good Union, with eight of as good and prominent men to start with as either of the churches here hav. I feel sure that the Axtell Liberal Union is a permanent power in the land, and that its usefulness and influence will widen, and that the next revival sky-pilot will not say, as the last one did, "that every Infidel is a liar, and that Ingersoll is the chief of liars."

We hav hired the best hall in town, and any leturer coming this way will please write us. We wish S. P. Putnam would come back this way and giv us lectures. I find that there is no town around here but has outspoken Liberals in it, and all they want is to get an opportunity, and they make it warm for the clergy.

We like the pictures, but if the paper could be afforded 50 cents a year less without, we that are poor would appreciate the reduction. I would like to correspond with Liberals in Texas, with a view of moving there to engage in farming. I hav read THE TRUTH SEEKER most of the time since it started. We are very thankful for past favors. E. W. MINER.

SOUTH LOWELL, ALA., May 16, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 1st Elmina D. Slenker says: "When we leave far behind the stone age, the brass age, and even the golden age, and reach the glorious intellectual age, where mind rules matter," etc. I wish to ask Elmina what is mind? Is it superior to matter, and is it something or nothing? Please giv a scientific and definitiv explanation.

Again, Mr. Wettstein, in same paper: "We know what causes the heart to beat, lungs to respire, etc." Now, will he or some one else tell me what does this? We know the heart beats, but what causes it to beat and lungs to respire? Facts are things or truths, but what causes facts and truths to exist as we see them in life? Again, who says that "a spiritual body is a shadow without substance; a name without a meaning?" Everything the mind can conceive of is matter in different degrees of fineness and purity.

The cartoons in THE TRUTH SEEKER are doing immense good. That hanging-bee ought to make every orthodox ashamed of his system of religion and his history.

J. K. DEARTH.

ASTORIA, OR., May 12, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find remittance to be disposed of for new subscribers, etc., as per memorandum. Expect to be able to get you new readers right along.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is grand and the illustrations giv force to "your otherwise mildly expressed views." There are probably more Liberals, proportionately, on this coast than anywhere else. I know whole settlements where the majority are Freethinkers. In such localities visiting preachers are not always treated as they should be (?); there hav been cases where they hav actually been made to work for a night's lodging. Outrageous, is it not? Heaven's representativ was furious, and in one case, it is said, he swore; but he worked half a day making hay.

The pictures of Paine and Ingersoll, in beautiful frames, adorn the walls of many happy homes, and a few are members of the American Secular Union. A great many Liberals reside in remote localities, and when we hav been favored with a visit from a Liberal lecturer the announcement has reached them too late, to their great disappointment. For instance, when Colonel Ingersoll visited this coast two years ago, certain postmasters withheld his circulars, and the farmers learned of it when the bird had flown, and thereby lost the opportunity of listening to "the nineteenth century Infidel and the world's greatest orator." If we could induce one of your Liberal lecturers to visit us this summer we would do our utmost to make it pleasant as well a financial success for him.

Well, Mr. Editor, this is my first venture in your columns, consequently I feel a little timid, and I therefore take the liberty to figure under the nom de plume of UNO.

CARTHAGE, MO., May 16, 286.

MR. EDITOR: Please send us your valuable paper and terms for one year. We hav been borrowing it for a long time, and it suits us exactly and explains our views so accurately that we hav concluded to subscribe for it. We hav read the borrowed papers until they were worn out, and we show them to our orthodox friends when they drop in. They grin and squirm and some get mad and say that no such stuff is in the Bible. Then I just turn right to it. Then they will say, "Never mind, when you come to die you won't talk so." This county is well steeped in superstition, there being several heathen pagodas in this neighborhood where they chant and rant praises to their God. Oh! how I do hate the church. The money is wasted, thrown away, to erect useless church houses when it is so much needed and should be laid out to help the poor that liv right under the shadow of the old church. Let them build good schools, good homes, distribute good clothing, not old cast-off clothing as I hav known many Christians to do; but good, new clothing that was not made for their backs; and then after all the suffering is relieved and everybody happy and contented, let them build pet houses for anything they hav a mind to; but let the poor be provided for first. I don't think they would hav very much left after doing that. We also hav a few Liberals, too, that would take your paper if they but read it once. I will close. Hoping to hear from you soon, we remain, Yours for truth and liberty,
CALVIN AND LIDA THARP.

WANSHIP, UTAH, May 17, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Samuel P. Putnam is very ably enlightening Utah as to the aims and objects of the American Secular Union. People seem to be surprised to hear an Infidel advocate morality and right-doing. He has delivered twenty-eight lectures to crowded houses, and only arrived here on April 14th.

His utterances, that a few years ago would hav consigned him to the dungeon or stake, are vociferously applauded. His eloquent poem, "Why Don't He Lend a Hand?" is listened to with breathless silence, then a storm of applause.

This lecture tour of our illustrious secretary is the greatest boon that ever struck Utah, and although some seed may fall on stony ground, I look for good results. All the towns and villages he has visited contain warm friends of our cause, and the energy they hav displayed in procuring halls, audiences, and entertainment for our eloquent secretary is highly commendable, and proves that Utah has a solid basis for a prominent Liberal district. WM. REYNOLDS.

GALION, O., May 19, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I received the books all right. I am delighted with their contents. "Men, Women, and Gods" should be read by every Christian man in the land. I think it would make them better even if they are good; better husbands and better citizens. Every woman should peruse the book; it is excellently adapted to lead women in the way to light and truth; it is a grand production. Helen H. Gardener is the Ingersoll of her sex. Now let me thank you for past favors, and for the within one dime send me Ingersoll's "Orthodoxy." Yours truly, JOHN P. FLICK.

LAWRENCE, MASS., May 8, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I am not a subscriber to your paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER, but I get it every week from a newsdealer, and I like it first-rate, especially the pictures. I show them around to people I know, and they nearly always draw a laugh. I get the Freethinker from England every week, too. I hav heard Bradlaugh, Ingersoll, Dr. Aveling, and Collins. I think I am a Secularist by birth, although brought up in Sunday-school and church. I can honestly say that I never swallowed the Bible. I never avoid an argument, although I seem to stand alone among my acquaintances.

HARRY OLDFIELD.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Gipsy and Fay.

Gypsy and Fay were playmates two,
One had black eyes and one had blue;
One had dark hair and one had light,
Both were beautiful, fair, and bright.

Glistening eyes of darkest hne,
Radiant orbs of deepest blue;
Which will you hav, the gipsy girl,
Or fairy sweet with hair in cnrl;

But first, yon tell me, I must say
Which is the best, Gipsy or Fay?
Then I must tell yon what I know,
Both are loved wherever they go.

Both are gentle and ever kind,
Loving, trustful, sweet, and refined,
Obey their parents' first request,
Never others wrong or molest.

Never rudely treat a playmate,
Never sneer at, taunt, or berate,
And scorn to strike, or throw a rock,
Or ridicule a shabby frock.

All the sorrowing and the poor,
From hillside, valley, and the moor,
List for the tripping of their feet,
The music of their voices sweet.

And smile with joy and pleasure rare
At a sight of their faces fair,
Like angels sweet from paradise,
They change to smiles all tears and sighs.

No more sorrowing, no more tears,
No more anguish and no more fears,
No more darkness and no more night,
If all were like these maidens bright.

SADIE A. MAGOON.

A Word from Candy-Land.

I was in a confectionery store the other day, where there were such quantities and qualities of candies, of all sorts, shapes, and sizes—of nearly all colors, too—that I said, "This must be a veritable candy-land."

"It's a 'branch store,'" replied the smiling clerk from behind the counter.

"Any adulteration in these pretty sweets?" I asked.

"Oh, no, indeed—not in ours. We make all our own candies. Come in the back shop and take a look."

Inside the back shop there were kettles and boilers and workers; sugar, molasses, and extracts; and candy in every form of development—caramels, lozenges, gum drops, kisses, cocoanut, chocolate creams, Jordan almonds, peppermints, cardamons, cassia buds, cloves, and bonbons of all flavors. The odor was delicious, and to watch the process of candy-making was delightful. I tasted and tasted and tasted, and was surfeited with taste of sweets and sours. Of course, I did not detect any adulteration of the confectionery. I am not an expert at that business, yet I feel quite certain the adulteration was there, just the same. The articles that giv the lovcly coloring to candies are poisonous, whatever may be said to the contrary; and starch and terra alba, or white earth, are used to a great extent in the manufacture of candy. Sugar is adulterated with terra alba, and that is never fit to bc taken into the stomach. You hav sometimes seen when the earth is moistened how solid and compact it becomes, and when by the heat of the sun it is made still harder, it is finally a solid mass, almost like a stone. In the human stomach, terra alba hardens the same way, and causes indigestion and vomiting. If not then thrown off, spasms, great suffering, and death at last are the result. There is no doubt many candy-loving children hav been poisoned in this way. Perhaps thc purest candy is the white rock, so-called, and even that may not be wholly free from adulterating properties. The old-fashioned boiled molasses candy, made at home, may be as harmless as any, and in small quantities is beneficial, rather than otherwise. This and the rock candy, these two, are the only kinds I would recommend for children or adults. The other kinds are pretty to look at, but not very good to eat.

S. H. W.

Bobby Exposes the Scheme.

"Will you hav a piece of pie, Mr. Goodman?" asked Bobby's mother of the minister.

"Thanks, no," he replied.

Bobby was asked the same question.

"N—no, I guess not," said Bobby, rather hesitatingly.

The minister looked at Bobby in surprise.

"I thought that all little boys were fond of pie," he said.

"They are," said Bobby. "I could eat that hull pie; but ma said if you didn't take any I mustn't, an' she'd save it for to-morrow."

Two More Prizes.

[The following letter speaks for itself. With four prizes in the field we shall look for a lively competition. We thank our generous friend for his kindness toward the Corner, and trust that he, too, with our other kind friends, may liv long and be happy.—ED.C.C.]

LEXINGTON, KY., May 25, 1886.

MISS WIXON: From the many excellent stories and beautiful poems you publish in the Children's Corner, I know there must be some talent among our young friends for literary work; and to encourage all such, I hereby offer, in addition to the two prizes you offer in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 1st, four dollars for the best original compiled story, and two dollars for the second best, both to be written and sent to your address by the 30th of June. The stories must not be over three columns in length, nor under two, and the competitors must be between the ages of fourteen and twenty years. No one who has written and published a story will be allowed to compete, as the prizes are intended for the benefit and encouragement of young writers alone; all others being excluded. I will leave you to decide as to the merits of the respectiv stories, which are to be published in the Children's Corner as soon as space permits; and if you will kindly favor me with the names and addresses of the successful authors, I will promptly remit them the prizes.

And now, after wishing you the success you so richly deserve, I hav the honor of remaining, Most truly yours,

D. B. COZINE.

Equine Pets.

Some years ago I owned a horse, writes a correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, with which I undertook to drive to a neighboring town over the hills in the winter. A spot of hidden ice suddenly tripped her, and for a time it was impossible for her to get up. But, by efforts that entirely exhausted me, I finally got her on foot again. She never forgot it. My approach to the stable was invariably welcomed by cordial neighs; and, that not sufficing, she would put her head affectionately on my shoulder or under my arm.

On one occasion my pet Morgan called me, while I was engaged fifty rods from the barn, with loud and persistent calls that I instantly understood meant trouble. Going hastily to the stables, I found the cows had broken down a door, and were capable of doing mischief. As soon as I approached the horse gave a satisfied whinny, followed by a long sigh of relief, and went to eating very quietly.

Remarkable Memories.

There was a Corsican boy who could rehearse 40,000 words, whether sense or nonsense, as they were dictated, and then repeat them in the reverse order without making a single mistake. A physician, about sixty years ago, could repeat the whole of "Paradisc Lost" without a mistake, although he had not read it for twenty years. Euler, the great mathematician, when he became blind, could repeat the whole of Virgil's "Eneid," and could remember the first line and the last line in every page of the particular edition he had been accustomed to read before he became blind. One kind of retentiv memory may be considered as the result of sheer work, a determination toward one particular achievement without reference either to cultivation or to memory on other subjects. This is frequently shown by persons in humble life in regard to the Bible. An old beggarman, at Sterling, known about fifty years ago as "Blind Alick," afforded an instance of this. He knew thc whole of the Bible by heart, insomuch that, if a sentence was read to him, he could name the book, chapter, and verse; or, if the book, chapter and verse were namcd, hc could giv thc exact words. A gentleman to test him, repeated a versc, purposely making one verbal inaccuracy. Alick hesitated, named the place where the passage was to be found, but at the same time pointed out the verbal error. The same gentleman askcd him to repeat the ninetieth verse of the seventh chapter of the book of Numbers. Alick almost instantly replied: "There is no such verse. That chapter has only eighty-nine verses." Gassendi had acquired by heart 6,000 Latin verses, and, in order to giv his memory exercise, he was in the habit of daily reciting 600 verses from different languages.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—NUMERIOAL PARADOXES.

One hundred eighty-four of us,

1. Is only just a score of us;
   Again, with all these tricks of us,
2. A score is only six of us.
3. In six there's only three of us;
4. In nine but four you see of us;
5. In three times nine, eleven of us;
6. "A Baker's dozen," seven of us;
7. "Two Baker's dozens," nine of us—
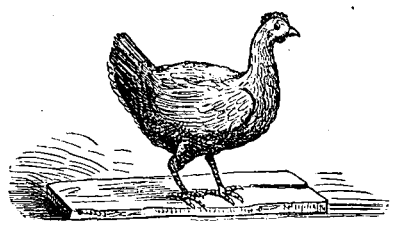
   Please answer true each sign of us.



Irwin, Ia. J. K. P. BAKER.

2.—OONUNDRUM.

A gentleman walking down the street met three tramps who asked him for money. To the first he gave ten cents, to the second he gave five cents, and to the third he gave ten cents, what time of day was it?

Lyons, N. Y. C. ROOKER.

3—PUZZLE.

Objects to be seen in this picture: 1. An account to settle. 2. Part of an army. 3. A romantic story. 4. My own dear self. 5. Part of a sentence. 6. What is unfair. 7. Source or beginning. 8. The refuse of flax. 9. Food and lodging. 10. Explosion of a rifle.

4.—OONUNDRUM.

This girl has cut her finger
Upon the navy sword;
And now they're like each other,
They are upon my word.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN THE CHILDREN'S CORNER MAY, 22. 1886.

1.–Claymore. 2.–In haste accuse no man. 3.–Tympans. 4.–Because he is seeing it wade,

Correspondence.

NEWARK, N. J., May 25, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Is has been a long time since I wrote to you, owing to my school and studies. I happened to take up THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 15th to-day, and looking over the Children's Corner solved the enigma which is second. The answer is "Stephen Pearl Andrews." It is a little late, but I hope it will reach you in time. I attend a school quite a distance from my home. My studies consist of arithmetic, geography, grammar, spelling, and history. I also hav writing, reading, and drawing to attend. My teacher sometimes reads physiology to us, but not frequently. I will now close.

I remain your sincere friend,

CORA JEWELL MARSHALL.

[We are pleased to welcome Cora once more, and hope to hear from her soon again. —ED. C. C.]

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

The Story Hour. For Children and Youth. By Susan H. Wixon. Without Superstition. The Only Illustrated Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page and 25 smaller illustrations; large type, heavy toned paper, broad margins, illuminated covers; 4to. 224 pp., bds., $1.25.

Two Little Red Mittens. A Story of the Rightway Almshouse. By Jennie Butler Browne. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

Apples of Gold. A Story-Book for the Young Folks. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellent work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

The Youth's Liberal Guide. By Prof. H. M. Kottinger, A.M. Price; $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

SELF-CONTRADICTIONS OF THE BIBLE.

A perfectly reliable, accurate pamphlet. Though anonymous, it is now known to be the work of W. H. BURR, one of our ablest correspondents. More than 30,000 copies hav been sold. Price, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.—Zadig; or Fate.—The Sage and the Atheist.—The Princess of Babylon.—The Man of Forty Crowns. The Huron; or, the Pupil of Nature.—Micromegas.—The World as it Goes.—The Black and the White.—Memnom the Philosopher.—Andres Des Touches at Siam.—The Study of Nature.—A Conversation With a Chinese.—Plato's Dream.—A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.—An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, $4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE RISE OF INTELLECTOAL LIBERTY

From Thales to Copernicus.

By FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND, Author of "The Reign of the Stoics."

"This is a book not only to be read once, but to be kept and referred to, and pondered over from year to year. It is a guide-book of Liberalism through the past centuries prior to 1600, the era of Copernicus and Bruno. It does not take the place of other histories like Gibbon, Hallam, or Lecky, but it makes them intelligible by pointing out the white light that has been cast upon the lurid clouds of ignorance, superstition, and cruelty, from the little stream of Freethought that has flowed in its ragged, broken, and obstructed course down through the ages which now liv only as our realm of Memory and Admonition."

Octavo, 458 pp. PRICE, $3.50.

Address THE TRUHT SEEKER.

ELEMENTS OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY

FOR

HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

This book is just what the busy world of to-day needs—a perfect compendium of history from 2.000 years B.C. on np to 1883, all in a nutshell.—Elmina Slenker.

As a text-book in schools, the book would occupy an important place; in the family it would be no less important, as conveying information that all shonld be acquainted with.—Susan Wixon.

Mr. Cottinger's intentions in writing this book are excellent, and his standpoint admirable. It may be commended as fulfilling its purpose of a concise and interesting historical text-book.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.

For Schools, in Quantities, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

BACON AND SHAKSPERE.

Proof that Wm. Shakspere could not write. The Sonnets written by Francis Bacon to the Earl of Essex and his bride, A.D., 1590. By WM. HENRY BURR. Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE CONVENTIONAL LIES OF OUR CIVILIZATION.

From the German of MAX NORDAU.

SEVENTH EDITION.

A most powerfully written book.—Phila. Record. This Book is not a Book! It is a Deed! and those who oppose it will prove that they fear it.—Vienna News. Price, 50 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 33 Clinton Pl., New York.

MOSES BEFORE THE COURT; OR, The Forgery of the Old Testament.

Dedicated to the clergy

BY

H. J. SEIGNEURET,

Secularist.

Price, - - - - - 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY:

OR,

MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who hav helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.

Price, - - - - - $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER. 33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE AGNOSTIC ANNUAL

FOR 1886.

CHAS. A. WATTS, Editor.

CONTENTS: Agnostic Religion, by R. Bithell, B.Sc., Ph.D.—Shifting the Center of Gravity, by C. N.—Misconceptions of Agnosticism, by Charles Watts—A Household of Unfaith? by G. M. McC.—Is Agnosticism, of Necessity, Anti-Christian? by W. Stewart Ross (Saladin)—Legend of the Devil's Dyke, Brighton, by Julian.—Emotional Agnosticism, by W. A. Leonard.—Agnosticism and Popular Christianity, by Col. R. G. Ingersoll.—The Special Senses, by H. J. Hardwicke, F. R. C. S.—Not Left comfortless, by F. J. Gould.—The Morals of Agnosticism, by Ignotus.—The Eternal Curse, by William Maccall—The Catholicity of Agnosticism, by Winifred, Lady Robinson.—Christianity and After, by Charles C. Cattell.—Unpalatable Truths, by F. Sydney Morris.—Opposit Poles of Thought, by T. Evan-Jacob, B.A.—Fortune and the Mendicant, by Thomas Mead.

PRICE 25 CENTS. For sale at this office.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
T. Clappison, Hamilton, Ont.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
E. A. Stevens, 750 West Lake st., Chicago.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 315 North 10th st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

Mottoes for Freethinkers.

We hav received a supply of illuminated motto cards, which we offer for sale. These mottoes are intended to take the place of the "God-bless-our-home" placards which disfigure the walls of so many houses. They are printed on heavy cardboard, 9 inches by 22 1-2. The motto is in black, with colored borders, with an illuminated monogram of U. M. L. The following are the various readings:

THE LIVING HAV A RIGHT TO CONTROL THE WORLD.

FREE THOUGHT WILL GIV US TRUTH.

SUPERSTITION IS THE CHILD OF SLAVERY.

REASON IS THE LAMP OF THE MIND, THE ONLY TORCH OF PROGRESS.

THE SCHOOL-HOUSE IS MY CATHEDRAL.

UNIVERSAL MENTAL LIBERTY.

THE TIME TO BE HAPPY IS NOW, AND THE PLACE TO BE HAPPY IS HERE.

NEVER TROUBLE TROUBLE TILL TROUBLE TROUBLES YOU.

THE WORLD IS MY COUNTRY; TO DO GOOD MY RELIGION.

The price of each of the foregoing is 25 cents.

For Freethought societies there is a large card 22 x 15 inches, printed in colors, with an engraved heading, containing the Nine Demands of Liberalism. Framed it makes a splendid ornament for the lecture-rooms of Liberal societies. Price, 30 cents. Any of these will be sent postpaid, securely wrapped, on receipt of price.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York City.

A NEW PAMPHLET.—JUST OUT.

ADAMI AND HEVA.

BY S. P. PUTMAM.

A poetic version of the Indian Story of the Garden of Eden, in which its superiority to the mutilated copy—the Genesis legend—is shown.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Price, Twenty-Five Cents.

THE

TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL

—AND—

FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC

1886.

(E. M. 286.)

WITH THIRTY PORTRAITS OF DISTINGUISHED EUROPEAN FREETHINKERS, SCIENTISTS, AND PHILOSOPHERS, AND NUMEROUS OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1886,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1885,	17
How the Church Filches from the State,	24
Public Contributions to the Church,	28
The Religion of Crime,	31
Chaplains in our Army and Navy,	32
The Higher Life. By Courtlandt Palmer,	34
My Dream. By Samuel P. Putnam,	37
The American Secular Union,	40
Statistics of our Foreign-born Population,	49
The Curate of Churnside. (Selected Story.) By Jas. Payne,	50
How Voltaire Died. By the Editor,	64
The Iron Virgin,	77
Religious Divisions of the World,	82
Paine Memorial Hall. (Illustrated),	83
The Story of 1885,	84
Immigration to the U. S. 1820–1884,	87
Freethought in Australia,	88
Freethought on the Continent,	92
Subjects of Illustration,	95
Freethought Journals,	100
Religious Denominations,	102
Area and Value of Farms,	103
Population of Large Cities,	103
Liberal Lecturers,	104

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Lick Observatory,
Girard College, Philadelphia,
Freethought Hall, Waco, Texas (Interior view),
Freethought Hall, Waco Texas (Exterior View),
The Tent,
Iron Virgin,
Paine Hall,
Moncure D. Conway,
Saladin,
Annie Besant,
Mary Wollstonecraft,
G. W. Foote,
Austin Holyoake,
J. S. Mill,
George Eliot,
Geo. Standring,
Ernst Haeckel,
Auguste Comte,
Edward Gibbon,
Max Muller,
Thos. Huxley,
Voltaire,
Chas. Darwin,
Rousseau,
Humboldt,
Byron,
Shelley,
David Hume,
Goethe,
Robert Burns,
Richard Carlile,
Herbert Spencer,
Castelar,
Bradlaugh,
Chas. A. Watts,
J. A. Froude,
John Tyndall.

NEW YORK:
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,
33 CLINTON PLACE.

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D
Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

Sabbath-Breaking.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG,
Author of "False Claims," "Bible Morals," Etc.

The best and most thorough work ever written on the Sunday Question from a rational point of view.

Large and Handsome Print.

SINGLE COPIES, - - 25 cents.
SIX COPIES, - - - $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.

BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.
Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st floor shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney.

Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 39 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $6,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION, (Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702,) N. Y.

REPLY
TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S
"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."
By B. W. Lacy

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, auther of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrins. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON.
The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works.

By THOMAS PAINE,
"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."
Price, Single Copies, 25 cents. Six copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.
By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 cents.

S. P. Putnam's Works.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution, with some Criticisms of Universology. Price, 20 cts.

Waifs and Wanderings, a New American Story. Price, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cts. "A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Golden Throne, a Romance. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creativ spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words—the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read Golden Throne.'"—INGERSOLL. $1.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A conversation in rhyme between the Nineteenth Century Infidel and the Galilean Reformer, wherein it is shown there is much in harmony between them. Price, 10 cts.

Prometheus. A poem. "It is crammed with life, thought, and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary beauty."—DR. HENRY W. BELLOWS. $1.

Gottlieb, His Life. A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Price 25 cents.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand, and other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cts.

For all of the above address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Charles Watts's Works.

The History of Freethought. Bound in cloth and lettered. Price, $1.25. CONTENTS: Section I. Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II. What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III. Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV. Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V. Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

The American Secular Union; its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Secularism; Destructiv and Constructiv. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Christian Evidences Criticised A reply to the "Christian Evidence Society." Introduction by Charles Bradlaugh. Contents: The Origin of Christianity; The Historical Value of the New Testament; Miracles; Prophecies; The Practical Value of Christianity; The Progress of Christianity. Price, $1.

Secularism; its Principles and its Duties. Price, 75 cts.

Tracts. The following tracts by Chas. Watts are published at the low price of FIVE CENTS EACH: Defense of Secular Principles; Is the Bible Reliable? The Christian Deity; Moral Value of the Bible: Freethought and Modern Progress; Christianity, its Nature and Influence on Civilization; Philosophy of Secularism; Science and Bible Antagonistic; Christian Scheme of Redemption. For all of the above works address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By Wm. McDonnell, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 90 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By William McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth. $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By Frederika Macdonald. 404 pages. $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By Winwood Reade, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

All in a Lifetime. A Romance. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. "The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks." Price, $1.50. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

AT LAST! we hav a "Secular Funeral and Marriage Hand Book," which can be used in all cases, and is indorsed by all classes of Liberals.

Price (cloth bound) by mail, fifty cents in currency or postage stamps. A liberal discount to agents.

Address Dr. A. R. AYRES, 810 Broadway,
6t19 Hannibal, Mo.

LITHOGRAPHS
OF
CHARLES DARWIN.

Admirers of the Great Naturalist, and practically the father of Evolution, will be glad to know that we hav a fine lithograph of him for sale—size 18½x24 inches on heavy plate paper. Framed, the picture will make a splendid ornament for the parlors of Freethinkers. Price, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

The Secret of the East;
OR,
The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office

Poetry.

Questioning.

Is there a God who sees and hears,
Who notes the sparrows when they fall,
Who knows his children's griefs and fears,
And never answers when they call?

Who guides them with a loving eye,
Permits no evil to assail?
Is near them when to him they cry,
Whose tender mercies cannot fail?

Nay, for I sought him in the morn,
I sought him in the eventide;
I sought him when, with cruel scorn,
One whom I loved cast me aside.

I lifted to him pleading eyes,
I came to him with "silent speech,"
So like the helpless babe who tries
Its mother's helping hand to reach.

Ah, if there is a God who hears
And pities when poor mortals cry,
He would regard my prayers and tears
And heal my soul's deep agony.

But nevermore an answer comes.
Back on my soul the surging tide
Of grief and sorrow rolls and looms;
No flowers bloom my path beside.

Tell me not, then, there is a God
Who bends to hear us from above,
And when he lifts the cruel rod
Applies it in the "tenderest love."

Such cant may do for those who make
Their living by the hideous lie,
But in my soul no echoes wake;
We do, we suffer, and we die.

ELVIRA MARIA SMYTHE.

Buffalo, N. Y., May 21, 1886.

Obituary.

MRS. SARAH C. HILTON.

This Liberal lady fell into the dreamless sleep which awaits us all, May 21, 1886, at the residence of her only daughter, Mrs. Sarah J. Paine, near Earlville, LaSalle Co., Ill. She was born in Embden, Somerset Co., Maine, June 11, 1818. Her parents were Timothy and Jane (McFadden) Cleveland.

Mrs. Hilton was baptized by the Rev. S. Stillson and became a member of the Free Will Baptist church, which relation was continued for twenty-five years; but as her religious views underwent a change, she found a happier association in the company of Freethinkers, and accordingly joined the New York Freethinkers' Association, and the Illinois State Liberal League. She was a woman of decided character, and possessed of a good and well-informed mind. She was known by all the community in which she lived as an out-and-out Liberal. For she added deeds to words, and was ever ready to lend a helping hand to those in sickness and suffering. Her funeral was attended by a large number of friends and neighbors, many of whom were greatly surprised and scandalized at the profanity of having such a ceremony without a Bible or prayer, or a mention of the name of Jesus Christ. Her last words were:

"'Tis a long, 'tis a last, 'tis a beautiful rest,
When all care and sorrow has passed from the brow and the breast."

Your humble servant read the burial service. W. S. BELL.

Death of Another Worker.

From the Liberal.

From the effect of uric poisoning, Brother Frank Searls, of New Lenox, Ill., cast off the mortal body Tuesday, May 11th, at 2 A.M. His sickness was not of long duration, but during the last three or four years he had at times had very serious attacks of a complicated nature.

Brother Searls was a man of no ordinary make-up. He was born in Westchester county, N. Y., in 1828. He came west in 1850 and settled in Homer township, Will county, and was married to Miss Emily White, of Lake county, O., in 1851. The following year, in company with others, he "crossed the plains" and dug for golden ore for over a year.

Shortly after his return, in 1854, he moved with his wife and baby boy about six miles, to the township of New Lenox, on a farm, on which they made a lovely home, and which they hav occupied for over thirty-two years. Brother Searls was a practical farmer and was noted as a very successful bee raiser.

The family consists of two children, the eldest a son who is quite successful as a physician. The daughter, Miss Aga, possesses rare artistic gifts.

Brother Searls and his wife were among the early outspoken Spiritualists, and both are an honor to the cause, and exemplars of the broadest and truest Liberalism. Frank had the reputation of the most sterling integrity, for his word was never doubted. His moral courage was too true and pure for any trimming or time-serving, and it is the common expressed opinion that in him was no taint of sham or hypocrisy. He was as generous as brave, and the tenderness of his heart found an outlet in the generous deeds of his hands in time of need. As his last written words to his friends, and which he desired read ere his body was committed to the earth, he said that, in view of the uncertainty of life, he desired to say that he wished no display or eulogistic manifestations over his remains. He did not wish his body taken to a church, and desired that no member of his family should wear mourning, as he was satisfied that this had grown into a foolish and senseless custom. All that did not come as the result of our pure emotions were of no avail. If there was aught in his life worthy of imitation, imitate it and bury his imperfections with his remains. Without casting any reflections on his friends, he was sorry to say that the custom was too common of trying to outvie each other in doing and saying good things about those who had passed beyond the reach or need of their good opinion, meaning thereby that the better way is to assist our friends while they are with us and the assistance will be more practical.

As one of his old time friends, by previous arrangement I spoke on the occasion of his funeral. Large numbers attended the services; and this I can say in all truth, after an acquaintance of thirty years I look upon him as the most complete man I hav ever known.

He was a friend and patron of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and a contributor to the Bennett monument. GEORGE LYNN.

Book Notices.

THE ORDER OF CREATION: The Conflict between Genesis and Geology. A Controversy between the Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. T. H. Huxley, Prof. Max Müller, M. Réville, E. Lynn Linton. New York: The Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place. Pp. 178. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

This book embraces the five articles which made the famous controversy on the above subject between W. E. Gladstone, Prof. T. H. Huxley, Max Muller, Albert Réville, D.D., and Mrs. E. Lynn Linton.

These papers hav attracted unusual attention owing to the eminence of the principal controversialists in their respectiv fields, and many will be glad to learn that they hav been collected in a volume and reprinted by the Truth Seeker Company. It may be said at once that while all the authority resulting from distinction and admitted competence in scientific inquiry is arrayed upon the side of Mr. Gladstone's antagonists, yet such a master is he of rhetoric and dialectics that for the majority of readers the victory may seem doubtful. To all who wish to keep abreast of the time in its best and most authoritativ utterances on these subjects the reading of this book cannot well be dispensed with.—Day Star.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL AND FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC for 1886 is replete with information of a useful and varied character. It also contains thirty portraits, in which we find "Saladin" (Stewart Ross) and Charles A. Watts mixed up with such celebrities as J. S. Mill, George Eliot, Mrs. Besant, Bradlaugh, Haeckel, Comte, Gibbon, Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall, Voltaire, and Humboldt. We hav no word to say against these young men; but they might hav been left to win their spurs before being knighted. There is a good article on "How Voltaire Died," which will tend much to destroy one of the strongest evidences of Christianity and with it one of the most awful warnings to unbelievers. It is a thousand pities that the pious stories so often told of the death scenes of Voltaire and Paine are no truer than the fall of man, the birth of Jesus, or the fitness of St. Kerferd for the judicial bench; but, alas! so it is. We expect the Christians will be compelled soon to invent a few noted modern death-bed scenes wherewith to defend their blessed religion. Without lying, it cannot be made to work.—Melbourne, Australia, Liberator.

The June number of the North American Review has articles as follows: Socialism in America, by Richard T. Ely; Free Trade in Discussion, by Gail Hamilton; Edwin M. Stanton, by Donn Piatt; Why am I a Presbyterian? by the Rev. John Hall; Defense of Charleston, S. C., by Gen G. T. Beauregard; The President and the Senate, by Dorman B. Eaton; Gladstone, by Gen. Adam Badeau; The Labor Crisis, by Henry Clews, Rufus Hatch, and S. B. Elkins; Notes and Comments, by Senator Ingalls and Jessee Coolidge. Price fifty cents. This magazine may be ordered through the Truth Seeker Co.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents; twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents per hundred, $1.50.

Impending Danger to Personal Liberty.

From the Mercury.

It is proper at this time to call attention to the fact that there is great danger of degrading the law to the level of oppression. The brief anarchic outburst at Chicago and the labor troubles at Milwaukee and in this city hav caused the more inconsiderate of the press to raise an unnecessary clamor which bodes no good to personal rights. In some cases selfish interests hav prompted the clamor and judges hav availed themselvs of it to ride into cheap popularity. But it is a great mistake to think that public opinion is veering towards despotism. The people are not ready for martial law in the guise of civil law. Judge Rogers, of Chicago, went very far in his charge to the grand jury when he made an accessory in a crime a principal. His idea seemed to be that of the days of Toler, the Irish judge, who was more incendiary than the alleged incendiaries whom he tried. There would be little freedom of speech if his views were carried out. Anarchists are a hateful lot, but their presence should not imperil free speech everywhere. Judge Mallory, of Milwaukee, charged the grand jury that trades unionists become conspirators when they combine to secure their objects. Such construction of the principles of law would cause the dispersal of political assemblies, in which the harangs are often violent and even revolutionary, and make every secret association punishable for conspiracy. The Federal Constitution prohibits Congress from making any law "abridging the freedom of speech, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and petition the government for grievances." That limiting clause applies to Congress solely. It affects the people of the states but indirectly. But what says the Constitution of New York? It directly ordains that "no law shall be passed abridging the right of the people peaceably to assemble and petition the government or any department thereof." It will be perceived that the state constitution gives a larger scope for the redress of grievances than the Federal organic law. But what is remarkable is the larger liberty given by the state constitution to the freedom of speech and of the press. It ordains that "every citizen may freely speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of the same." Responsibility for abuse, as the clause shows, alludes to the remedial proceeding in the nature of libel, and not to prosecutions by the state for incendiary language. But the clause is most specific and peremptory, and concludes, "and no law shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or the press." There is just now a need of a knowledge of personal rights as defined in the state constitution and which will be found in all the constitutions of the states. The right of free speech involves the liberty of the press, and when the mouths of all citizens are closed by law a free press will cease to exist.

Ingersoll's Tributes

REDUCED IN PRICE.

We hav made arrangements whereby we can offer these magnificent prose poems of Mr. Ingersoll's at greatly reduced prices. The Tributes are printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22 inches, illuminated border, large clear type, suitable for framing. The titles are:

The Vision of War,
Tribute to his Brother,
The Grant Banquet Toast,
Address at Harry Miller's Grave.

The price of these heretofore has been $1. We offer them now at FIFTEEN CENTS EACH; THE FOUR FOR FIFTY CENTS. Mailed secure from breakage. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Pl., New York.

A SKETCH OF THE LIFE
OF
APOLLONIUS OF TYANA,
OR THE
First Ten Decades of Our Era.
BY
DANIEL M. TREDWELL.

Designed to show upon the authority of History that Apollonius of Tyana performed miracles and spoke wise sayings equal to those attributed to Jesus Christ. 350pp., octavo, best style. Price $2.50. Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

A STUDY
OF
PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY
BY LEWIS G. JANES.

This book treats of the natural evolution of the Christian religion, its historical antecedents in Palestinian Judaism and Roman Paganism; investigates the history of the founder of Christianity in the light of the latest scientific criticism of the New Testament; shows that the true story of the Man Jesus, and his genuin teachings are separable from the later legendary accretions which hav confounded him with the mythical Christ, and traces the natural development of Christian dogma and ecclesiastical institutions. Complete references and full index. 320pp. 8vo, cloth, gilt top. Price $1.50. Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

THE HUMBOLDT LIBRARY.

Price 15 cents each number, unless otherwise marked.

1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. A series of familiar essays on astronomical and other natural phenomena. By Richard A. Proctor, F.R.A.S.
2. The Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers. 19 illustrations. By John Tyndall, F.R.S.
3. Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, Author of "The English Constitution."
4. Man's Place in Nature. With numerous illustrations. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
6. Town Geology. With Appendix on Coral and Coral Reefs. By Charles Kingsley.
7. Conservation of Energy. With numerous Illustrations. By Balfour Stewart, LL.D.
8. Study of Languages, brought back to its True principles. By C. Marcel.
9. The Data of Ethics. By Herbert Spencer.
10. Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Numerous illustrations. By By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.
11. 12. The Naturalist on the River Amazon. A record of 11 years' travel. By Henry Walter Bates, F.L.S. Not sold separately.
13. Mind and Body. The theories of their relations. By Alexander Bain, LL.D.
14. The Wonders of the Heavens. 32 illustrations. By Camille Flammarion.
15. Longevity. The means of prolonging life after middle age. By John Gardner, M.D.
16. Origin of Species. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. With other disquisitions. By Herbert Spencer.
18. Lessons in Electricity. 60 illustrations. By John Tyndall, F.R.S.
19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. By Richard A. Proctor.
20. Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kalley Miller, M.A.
21. The Physical Basis of Life, with other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
22. Seeing and Thinking. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.
23. Scientific Sophisms. A review of current theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. By Samuel Wainwright, D.D.
24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Illustrated. By Prof. H. Helmholtz.
25. Origin of Nations. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, Oxford University.
26. The Evolutionist at Large. By Grant Allen.
27. History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.H.S.
28. Fashion in Deformity, as illustrated in the customs of Barbarous and Civilized Races. Numerous illustrations. By William Henry Flower, F.R.S.
29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Numerous illustrations. By Andrew Wilson, Ph. D.
30. 31. Study of Words. By Richard Chenevix Trench.
32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.
33. Vignettes from Nature. By Grant Allen.
34. Philosophy of Style. By Herbert Spencer.
35. Oriental Religions. By John Caird, Pres. Univ. Glasgow, and Others.
36. Lectures on Evolution. Illustrated. By Prof. T. H. Huxley.
37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. By John Tyndall.
38. 39. Geological Sketches. By Archibald Geikie, F.R.S.
40. The Evidence of Organic Evolution. By Geo. J. Romanes, F.R.S.
41. Current Discussions in Science. By W. M. Williams, F.C.S.
42. History of the Science of Politics. By Frederick Pollock.
43. Darwin and Humboldt. By Professor Huxley, Professor Agassiz, and others.
44. 45. Dawn of History. By C. F. Keary, of the British Museum.
46. Diseases of Memory. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald.
47. Childhood of Religions. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S.
48. Life in Nature. Illustrated. By Jas. Hinton.
49. The Sun; its Constitution; its Phenomena; its Condition. By Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.
50. 51. Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. By Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.
52. Diseases of the Will. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald.
53. Animal Automatism, and other Essays. By Prof. T. H. Huxley, F.R.S.
54. Birth and Growth of Myth. By Edward Clodd. F.R.A.S.
55. Scientific Basis of Morals, and other Essays. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.
56. 57. Illusions. By James Sully.
58. 59. The Origin of Species. By Charles Darwin. Two double numbers, 30 cents each.
60. Childhood of the World. By Edward Clodd.
61. Miscellaneous Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.
62. Religions of the Ancient World. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, University of Oxford. Double number, 30 cents.
63. Progressive Morality. By Thomas Fowler, LL.D., president of Corpus Christi College, Oxford.
64. Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russel Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.
65. Conditions of Mental Development; and other Essays. By Wm. Kingdon Clifford.
66. Technical Education; and other Essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
67. The Black Death. An Account of the Great Pestilence of the Fourteenth Century. By J. F. C. Hecker.
68. (Special number, 10 cents.) Three Essays, by Herbert Spencer.
69. (Double Number, 30 cents). Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. By Fritz Schultze, Ph.D. Translated from the German by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.
70. Essays Speculativ and Practical. By Herbert Spencer.
71. Anthropology. By Daniel Wilson, LL.D. With Appendix on Archeology. By E. B. Tylor, F.R.S.
72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. By J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.
73. Evolution in History, Language, and Science. Four Addresses delivered at the London Crystal Palace School of Art, Science, and Literature.
74. The Descent of Man; and selection in relation to Sex. By Charles Darwin. In 4 parts. 15 cents each.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, 1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50cts; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to Be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscan. 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3. Millions of these should be circulated.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, for 50cts, or either one for 15cts.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitly fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine, and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price, $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should hav them.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22x28, $5; panel, 10½x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cents; card, 20 cts. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

J. E. Remsburg's Works.

False Claims. Revised and Enlarged. Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture: Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbatic Idea; The Jewish Sabbath; The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; The Sabbath during the Middle Ages: The Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; six copies, $1.00.

Image Breaker. Six Lectures: Decline of Faith, Protestant Intolerance, Washington an Unbeliver; Jefferson an Unbeliever; Paine and Wesley; Christian Sabbath. Each 5 cents; bound, paper, 25 cents; per doz. 40 cts.

Thomas Paine. The Apostle of Religious and Political Liberty. Tells the story of the Author-Hero's life, delineates the leading traits of his character and genius, and vindicates his name from the aspersions cast upon it. Choice extracts from "Common Sense," "American Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason" are given; also, tributes to Paine's character from more than one hundred noted persons of Europe and America, many of them written expressly for this work. Second edition, 160 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound, and containing a handsome steel portrait of Paine. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Apostle of Liberty. An address delivered in Paine Hall, before the N. E. Freethinkers' Convention, January 29, 1884. Price, 10 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Helen H. Gardener was first introduced to the public by Col. Ingersoll, since when she has won a place in the hearts of all Freethinkers by her ability, and by the brilliancy of her lectures. The contents of this volume are:

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS: Introductory; Accident Insurance; Chiefly Women; Why Women Support It; What It Teaches; From Moses to Paul; The Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge; Knowledge Not a Crime; As Much Inspired as Any of It.

VICARIOUS ATONEMENT: Fear; Beginning to Think; Creeds; Self-Control What We Need; Vicarious Atonement Not a Christian Invention; Twin Monsters from Intellectual Pigmies; Geographical Religion; Revelation; Evidence of Faith; Did He talk? What You May Think; Intellectual Gag-Law; The Vicarious Theory the Cause of Crime; Revision; The Church's Money-Box; Shall Progress Stop?

HISTORICAL FACTS AND THEOLOGICAL FICTIONS: Church Fictions; Historical Facts—(Civilization, Comparativ Statis, Women as Persons, Education, As Wives, Not Woman's Friend, Morals).

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

Photo-Engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50c.

SOCIAL WEALTH:

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

PRICE, CLOTH, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

THE PRESENT

AND

THE FUTURE REPUBLIC OF NORTH AMERICA.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A Book Advocating Associate Life as a Remedy for Poverty, Vice, and Crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

CONTENTS: The titles of some of the chapters are: Present External Appearance of Our Republic; Government and Laws; Finance; Public Improvements; Production and Distribution; Education; Morality and Religion; Marriage and Divorce; Life in the New Republic; Life in the Existing Republic; Examination of the Objections to Communism; Methods Proposed for the Transition from the System of Individual Property to a System of Collectiv Property; Danger. Price, $1.50.

Published and for sale by the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York City.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

Bible Inquirer. A Key to Bible Investigation. Revised Edition. This pamphlet refers specifically to 148 Bible propositions, with numerous references and citations, that are contradicted in terms by the same number of other propositions in the same book. Price 25 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER Rochelle, Ill.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catch-penny get up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magnetic appliance, but simply a medicin to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

N. B.—Dr. Fellows begs leave to say that he is an Infidel of the most pronounced character. Bro. Liberals, your patronage is solicited.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German A new cheap edition at only $1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Books on Practical Steps in Present Needs.

History of Woman's Costume Movement; its first 35 years, Events and Persecutions, Supplemented by Modern Martyrdom. 132pp., fine paper, 25c. Progress vs. Fashion. 32pp., paper, 10c. Woman's Way Out. 32pp., paper, 10c. Love and Transition. Poetic, in two parts; an Epic and an Argument. 191pp., in fine cloth and gilt, 75c.

Sent on receipt of price, by the author,
tojn1 M. E. TILLOTSON, Vineland, N. J.

Bible Fabrications Refuted

and

The Errors of the Bible Exposed.

BY O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Price, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Gems of Thought.

ENGLAND should rid herself of priestcraft and the shams of theology. They are expensiv incubi that bear down mercilessly upon the masses, and cause them to believe the most absurd falsehoods and to munificently sustain their promoters.—D. M. Bennett.

IF it be possible to interest the imagination and the heart in favor of error it is at least no less possible to interest them in favor of truth. If it be possible to extinguish all the most generous and heroic feelings of our nature, by teaching us to connect the ideas of them with those of guilt and impiety, it is surely equally possible to cherish and strengthen them by establishing the natural alliance between our duty and our happiness. If it be possible for the influence of fashion to veil the nativ deformity of vice, and to giv to low and criminal indulgences the appearance of spirit, of elegance, and of gaiety, can we doubt of the possibility of connecting in the tender mind those pleasing associations with pursuits that are truly worthy and honorable?—Dugald Stewart.

IN the last year of the reign of Charles II. a great change was made in London. An ingenious projector, named Edward Henning, obtained letters patent conveying to him for a term of years the exclusiv right to light up the city. . . His scheme was enthusiastically applauded and furiously attacked. The friends of improvement extoled him as the greatest of all the benefactors of his city. What, they asked, were the boasted inventions of Archimedes when compared with the achievement of the man who had turned the nocturnal shades into noonday? In spite of these eloquent eulogies, the cause of darkness was not left undefended. There were fools in that age who opposed the introduction of what was called the new light as strenuously as fools in our age hav opposed the introduction of vaccination and railroads, as strenuously as the fools of an age anterior to the dawn of history doubtless opposed the introduction of the plough and of alphabetical writing.—Macaulay.

THE belief in "the millennium" lasted on with the vulgar and with some eminent Christians after the most thoughtful and educated men of the church had abandoned it and frowned upon the Apocalypse, just as Luther did. St. Jerome (345-420), who is called the most learned of the fathers, pronounces "the millennium and the earthly rule of the savior" to be a Jewish error; but he adds that, by his disbelief, fury will be excited against him in persons of importance.—F. W. Newman.

No wonder that fable is the enemy of knowledge. A man with a false diamond shuns the society of lapidaries, and it is upon this principle that superstition abhors science.—Ingersoll.

THE law of servitude in marriage is a monstrous contradiction to all the principles of the modern world, and to all the experience through which those principles hav been slowly and painfully worked out. It is the sole case, now that negro slavery has been abolished, in which a human being in the plenitude of every faculty is delivered up to the tender mercies of another human being, in the hope, forsooth, that this other will use the power solely for the good of the person subjected to it. Marriage is the only actual bondage known to our law. There remain no legal slaves except the mistress of every house.—Mill's Subjection of Women.

COMPASSION ought, like all other feelings, to be under the government of reason, and has, for want of such government, produced some ridiculous and some deplorable effects. But the more we study the annals of the past, the more shall we rejoice that we liv in a merciful age, in an age in which cruelty is abhorred, and in which pain, even when deserved, is inflicted reluctantly and from a sense of duty.—Macaulay.

Odds and Ends.

IT was only a short time after Sam Jones left Chicago that the city began to hav riots.

IN these days the most popular minister is he who plays the saint with the men and the devil with the women.

BEFORE marriage a man thinks his girl prettier than his friend's. After marriage he thinks his friend's wife prettier than his own.

THE innate modesty of newspaper men is shown by the fact that a Texas editor killed three men the other day, and, in alluding to the incident afterward, acknowledged that he only tried to kill one.—Chicago Tribune.

"THERE are two things which I positivly will not eat for supper," said Gubbins. "And what are they?" asked his friend. "Breakfast and dinner," was the reply.—Dansville Breeze.

EIGHTEEN thousand dollars is an enormous price to pay for a small peachblow vase, that's a fact; but look at the man who squanders $30,000 on the flowing bowl, and all he has to show for it is a peachblow nose, not one-fourth the size of the vase aforesaid.—Norristown Herald.

THEY were arguing about the sinfulness of using tobacco. "What would you think," said the minister, impressivly, "if you met an angel coming down the street with a cigar in its mouth?" "What," retorted the sinner, "would you think if you saw one in a plug hat and a pair of ear muffs coming up the street?"—Lowell Citizen.

REGRET.

I do not mourn, sweet wife of mine,
Because those ruby lips of thine—
That marble brow—
Were kissed by one who might hav been,
Had I not chanced to step between,
Thy husband now.

I sigh not that his arms were placed
Some scores of times around your waist
So sweet and slim.
Oh, no, my love! the woe you see
Is mine because you wedded me
Instead of him.

"A YOUNG WIFE'S GREATEST TRIAL" is the title of a story in the Christian Observer. We know what it is all about just as well as if we had read it. She forgot to bring in the wood and break up the kindling the night before; then she overslept and the rain was pouring down like all possessed, and there was a small lake intervening between the back door and the wood-house, and her rubbers leaked; and then the fire wouldn't burn, and the coffee was muddy, and the muffins heavy, and the steaks burned; the baby cried, husband was cross and scolded, and she wondered why girls were all so crazy to get married.—Chicago Sun.

A SCENE-PAINTER'S Outfit and a Carpenter's Tool-Chest were hurrying down street when they met a Toiling Dramatist. "Out of the way!" they said, haughtily, as the Toiling Dramatist bared his head and Bowed Low. "We are going down to the Lumber-Yard to get a New American Play." "But," pleaded the Toiling Dramatist, "here is one I hav just written. The Heroin is a Pure Young Girl——" "That settles it," they said, harshly. "It's a Domestic Production. What we want is an Amerian Play that is Purely English, and hasn't a throb of any other Sort of Purity in the whole Five Acts, and we can Make it Ourselvs. Away, slight manager!" And, trampling over his Prostrate Form, they got their Lumber and Canvas, in twenty-four hours, sawed out a play which they filled with Circus Posters, and run every night for Two Years. Moral: The Race is not Always to the Swift, but sometimes to the Fellow who Cuts across the Course and Gets There.

AN old negro, much alarmed, went to a judge and said: "Jedge, dar's er lot er haugs been stoled down my neighborhood lately, an' fust thing yer know somebody's gwine ter be errested. I knows who tuck 'em, an' if you'll let me turn states everdence, I'll tell yer." "You were concerned, eh?" "Yas, sah; an' if yer'll let me turn de everdence, I'll tell yer zackly who tuck dem haugs." "All right." "Won't do nothin' wid me?" "Not a thing." "Will yer sw'ar it?" "Yes, if necessary." "But will yer put it in writin'?" "Yes." The judge drew up an agreement, and when he had read it, the old negro said: "Dat soun's sorter like it. Sho' dis dockyment'll stan'?" "Of course it will. Now tell me who stole de hogs." "Won't do nothin' wid me?" "No." "Well, jedge, I stoled dem hogs by mersef. Good-day, sah. I thanks yer fer yer kindness."—Arkansaw Traveler.

Paine Vindicated!

—o—

A thorough and overwhelming reply to the New York Observer's slanderous attacks upon the Author-Hero of the American Revolution. Containing both the slanders and their refutation.

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

—o—

The New York Observer (Presbyterian) having recently reissued its assault upon the memory of Paine, this pamphlet should be circulated everywhere in vindication.

60pp. Price 10 cents; 12 copies, $1.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

A Fabricated Account of a Scene at the Death-bed of Thomas Paine.

BY W. H. BURR.

This pamphlet shows that the account of Paine's dying moments attributed to Bishop Fenwick (upon which the Observer relies to prove its principal charges) is a forgery, it being impossible that Fenwick could hav written the alleged account.

18pp. Price 5 cents; 25 for $1.00.

For these two pamphlets address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY

John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 333 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

News of the Week.

CHOLERA is visiting Japan.

A PROHIBITORY liquor law has passed the Rhode Island House of Representativs.

THE body of Dr. Dio Lewis, who died May 21st, was cremated at the Fresh Pond, L. I., crematory.

SNOW to the depth of several inches was reported from various towns in northern Vermont on May 27th.

SEVENTEEN Icelanders and their families, who had joined the Mormon faith, landed at this port last week on their way to Utah.

A SCULLING match between Ross and Teemer last Monday for $1,000 and the championship of America was won by Teemer.

FIRE destroyed a church worth $70,000 in Elmira, N. Y., on the 27th ult. A church was also burnt in Franklin, Mass., on the same day.

THE Rev. Mr. Kittredge, under indictment for libeling a judge in Chicago, has been called to the pulpit of a church in New York city at a salary of $10,000.

COLLUM, chairman of the Executiv Committee of the Car-driver's Association of this city, is under indictment for theft, said to hav been committed four years ago.

AT Amsterdam, N. Y., Reuben Quihot, leader of the Amsterdam Salvation Army, charged with stealing sheep, has been convicted and fined $25 or three months in the penitentiary. He paid the fine.

THE Rev. Mr. Scott, pastor of the First Congregational church, of Evanston, Ill., has been asked to resign. The specific offenses charged against Mr. Scott appear to be cigar-smoking in public and riding a bicycle.

TWENTY-SIX bills of indictment were found by the Chicago grand jury against Spies, Fielden, and their confreres. The indictments are for murder, conspiracy, assault with intent to kill, and for unlawful assembly.

THE public schools were closed on Wednesday of last week in order that the Sunday-school children might parade. When the children of Jews or Freethinkers remain away from school for any cause, they are given demerit marks.

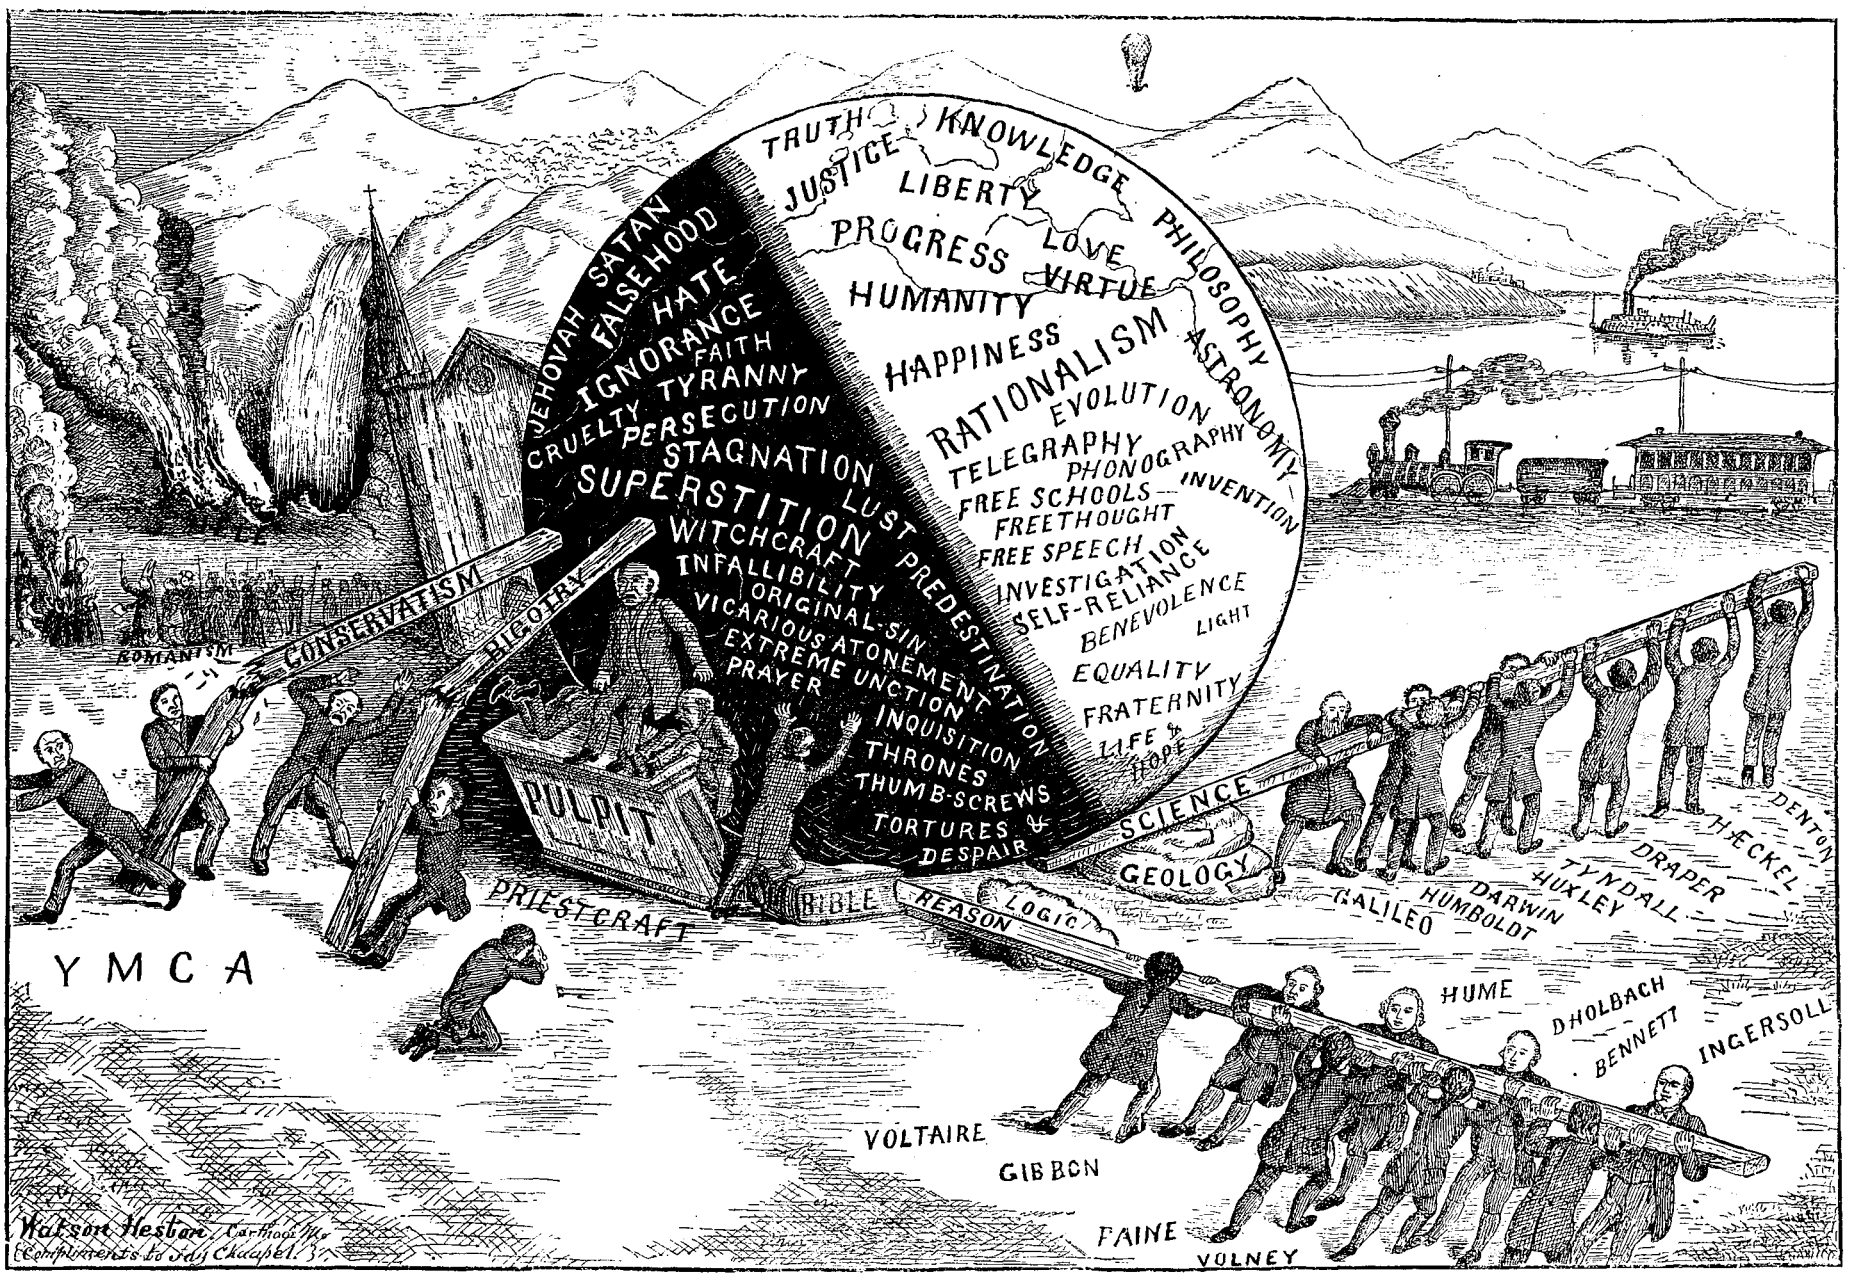
MISS ROSE ELIZABETH CLEVELAND, the president's sister, has written a poem, which was published in a number of papers last Monday. It is entitled, "An Old Virgil with Notes," and possesses no discoverable merit. It is pretty bad poetry.

COLONEL INGERSOLL, in association with Roscoe Conkling, is counsel in a $2,000,000 suit against the Western Union Telegraph Company, of which Jay Gould is the head. His opening speech was remarked upon as being almost unequaled in the annals of the bar.

MAY 24th was the 67th anniversary of Queen Victoria's birth. It was also the third anniversary of the opening of the big bridge between New York and Brooklyn. In the three years 45,136,854 people hav crossed the bridge, and the tolls hav amounted to $1,621,-639.87.

MONSIGNOR RENIER, aged 60, a prelate in the pope's household and an eminent writer and preacher, who is the descendant of a Venetian Doge, appeared before the Rev. Dr. Nevin, in the American Church of St. Paul, May 24th, abjured the Catholic faith, and entered the Anglican Episcopal church.

THE Maine authorities retaliated on the Canadian government (which seized two Yankee fishing schooners in Canadian waters) by holding at Portland a British schooner whose captain could not show his manifest or list of cargo. The fine imposed by law is $500. The schooner was released last Sunday as an example for the Canadians to follow.



DECORATION DAY was generally observed last Monday. President Cleveland reviewed the great processions in Brooklyn and New York, and, as his wedding day was set down for Wednesday, June 2d, the bands played wedding music when they passed the grand stand. The bride-elect, Miss Folsom, saw the ceremonies from a window. There were large crowds at Grant's tomb, and the war ships in the North River fired innumerable salutes. As usual, people living outside the city came in, and those living inside went out, so that the cars and boats were crowded both ways. The weather was favorable, and the general celebration exercises of the day were regarded as finer than any previous for a long time.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 13. No. 24. PUBLISHED WEEKLY. New York, Saturday, June 12, 1886. 33 CLINTON PLACE. $3.00 per year.

"THE WORLD STILL MOVES."

Notes and Clippings.

MRS. MARGARET DONNAN, a widow, cut the throats of her three young daughters, May 18th, and then killed herself. She resided in Lincoln county, W. Va., and left a statement saying she had been called upon by the Lord to make the sacrifice to satisfy divine wrath.

THE Rev. J. H. Cason, of Graham, Texas, said: "I am thinking of going North to beg some money to aid in building two Baptist churches in Texas. What would you advise?" We advised him to take with him enough to pay his expenses back.—Richmond Religious Herald.

IT is reported in an Augusta, Ga., newspaper that Sam Jones is making money fast and investing it with care. He owns several farms near Cartersville, and his house is the finest in the town. His family rides in a fine carriage drawn by good horses, and they do say in Cartersville that the first time Mrs. Jones aired her carriage she drove by the house of a certain neighbor thirteen times by actual count.

A THEOLOGICAL paper quotes an attempted translation of a passage from Edward von Hartman's "Religion of the Future," the following being the corrected translation: "Without eudæmonological pessimism evolutionistic optimism must lead to irreligious secularism; without evolutionistic optimism eudæmonological pessimism must become an indolent despondency or degenerate into religious ascetism." The theological paper attempts to ridicule this as unintelligible. The sense was clear enough, even in that which the critic had before him, the word "must" being the only one misplaced, the translator having followed the German idiom too slavishly. If the theologian does not permit a suitable technical expression for works of philosophy, he can find at least as much matter for sport in in the machine shop, in the laboratory, or in any branch of art or science. It would not do, however, to deprive theology of its technical vocabulary.—Galveston News.

GEORGE W. VAUGHAN, of Buffalo, has a big Confederate flag that floated over the Richmond Dispatch office until Richmond fell. Some time ago he wrote to the Dispatch people telling them that he had their old flag, and offering to exchange it for a Union flag. The answer came promptly and politely that they had had all they wanted of the rebel flag, and that Mr. Vaughan was quite welcome to it.

ON Sunday last the Roman Catholics dedicated in Stamford, Conn., one of the most magnificent church buildings in the United States. It has been sixteen years in building, and its total cost is more than half a million of dollars. Twenty-five thousand more will be required for a spire and bells. A chime similar to the famous Shandon bells will be put in when it is completed. It is superior to some cathedrals in large cities. That church has probably cost more money than the entire Catholic population of Stamford possesses, unless their circumstances hav changed within a short time. Roman Catholic methods command pecuniary success. They exact from the poor the two mites, "nolens volens," and from the rich all they will giv; and then, by a species of solicitation behind which the figure of the boycott appears, induce Protestant storekeepers and mechanics to contribute to their various collateral and subordinate enterprises. Hence, the magnificence of their churches does not imply the prosperity or even the comfort of their own people in general, but is one of the causes of their poverty.—Christian Advocate.

MR. RICHARD H. THORNTON, of Portland, Oregon, writing in the Church Press on Sunday observance, says: "(1.) St. Paul classes Sabbaths with 'new moons' (Col. ii. 16) in a manner simply impossible, had he regarded the decalog as integrally binding. (2.) Every commandment of the decalog, except the fourth, is substantially repeated in the New Testament. The fourth is not repeated, because it is ceremonial rather than moral. (3.) There is not a trace of any persecution of the primitiv Christians for refusing to work on Sunday, though many Christian slaves were owned by pagan masters, and the question must hav arisen everywhere, if the Fourth Commandment had formed a rule of their life. (4.) Passing by the opinions of writers like Grotius and the continental reformers, who are on my side, I refer to the decision of Bishop Sanderson, of Lincoln, a most illustrious divine, who assisted in the Prayer Book Revision of 1662. Certain cases of conscience being submitted to him, he decided 'that no part of the law delivered by Moses to the Jews doth bind Christians unto the gospel, as by virtue of that delivery; no, not the Ten Commandments themselvs, but least of all the fourth, which all confess to be, at least in some part, ceremonial.' He allows 'the moderate use of lawful recreations on the Lord's day,' but suggests, as to popular amusements, that 'shooting (with the bowl), leaping, pitching the ball, stool-ball, etc., are rather to be chosen than dicing, carding, etc.' (See Sanderson's Works, Oxford edition, vol. v.; and a valuable letter on this topic in the American Literary Churchman, July 16, 1883). The shield of Sanderson is broad enough to cover an Anglican."

SHE declaimed with fervid vigor on the misery of the Digger, cut a most dramatic figure while lamenting his condition.
And she said the bare Numidian, and the much-tanned Abyssinian, and the Cannibal and Guinean overflowed her with contrition.
And her deep sighs weighed the breezes for those lands where bread nor cheese is, for the Turks and the Chineses she was filled with deep emotion;
And her ardent love was greater, all the more she strove to cater to those tribes beyond the equator or across a distant ocean.
And like Rachael, that sweet Jewess, she wept tears as thick as glue is, at the actions of St. Louis and Chicago's degradation.
And that these towns where such sin is, such a race for golden guineas, might be made as good as Lynn is, was her prayer and supplication.
And the wild men of Alaska or of barbarous Madagascar, she would say, if you, should ask her, that she loved them deep and tender,
While her husband, luckless victim, looks as if the fates had licked him, and through back streets where they kicked him, walked about with one suspender.—Lynn Union.

Communications.

A Bill of Indictment Against Religions Per Se.

BY JACOB HENDERSON.

III.

RELIGION IN THE LIGHT OF SECULAR AS WELL AS CHURCH HISTORY.

I now come to examin the character of religion in the light of general history. In the Bill of Indictment I hav drawn up, not only to substantiate the remark of Darwin that it is not needed at all as a factor in making society either safe or happy, but that it is the most positiv and dangerous element in the human character, the difficulty is to know where to begin and where to end in citing the proof.

It is said that a tiger's whelp, when taken at birth from the dam, will lap milk and gambol round its keeper like a kitten, but that when grown up the smell or the taste of blood will develop its carnivorous propensity so that it will tear to pieces and devour its benefactor. It is exactly so with the religious sentiment. Overawed by circumstances and unprovoked, it remains latent, and its possessor gets the credit of being amiable. But when circumstances change by its being invested with power, and provocation comes, it rouses from its sleep and shows its true character. If there were a consensus of all the religionists in the world as to what religion really is, in itself considered, and as to the way it should develop itself, as proof that it was a good and safe principle of action; that its wrath would only be kindled against some form of error or of wrong upon which they were all agreed, the world might know what to expect. But it has a peculiarity visible in its whole history that, while it is intrinsically and in essence the same in all ages and nations as a force in the human character, it is totally unprincipled in selecting the objects on which it expends the force. It has a whole pantheon of gods to fear and worship, pagan, Jewish, Christian, and Mohammedan, with creeds as antagonistic as fire and gunpowder, and, like a Swiss mercenary, it has always been willing to serve each and all of them at the same time in shedding each other's blood. Its thirst for blood is unquenchable. It inspired the Athenians to put Socrates to death to appease the pagan gods of Greece. It impelled the Jew to stone to death even the wife of his own bosom if, for reasons satisfactory to herself, she changed her opinions and worshiped any other god but Jehovah. It enthused the prophet Samuel with holy zeal, and strengthened his arm when he hewed his captiv Agag in pieces before the Lord. It fired the Moslem's faith and made him giv his Christian foe the alternativ of accepting the Koran as a revelation from God, and Mohammed as the prophet of God, or the cimeter. It animated the Christian in slaughtering the Moslem because he would not giv up the holy places at Jerusalem to be occupied by the church, and to be made ready for Christ at his second coming. It prompted Catholic nations to war against Catholic nations, and Protestant nations to war against nations of its own faith. Its utter unscrupulousness made it act like a pack of wolves whose hunger is so intense that they fall upon and devour each other. It was not Catholic*ism*, Method*ism*, Presbyterian*ism*, Episcopalian*ism*, and Bapt*ism*, which in 1850, converted the ministers and members of those great national churches of the United States into legal bloodhounds to chase down Christian fugutiv slaves and return them to a bondage which they dreaded worse than death. It was their propitiatory religion which, believing that slavery was a divine institution allowed by the Old Testament and the New, sought to please God and brighten their hopes of heaven by imitating the inspired apostle, Paul, who returned the absconding Onesimus to his master. Our late civil war was essentially a religious movement. The clergy having taught the people till they believed it, that slavery was an institution of the Bible, what could so honor God as to found a vast Christian empire upon it as the chief cornerstone? To be sure their scheme, if carried out, would defeat the intentions of the fathers of the republic, and blast the hopes of the world for universal free government. It would require the sacrifice of half a million of men in the prime of life, and fill the land with widows and orphans. But what of that? They were faithful to their religious convictions, and believed, almost to the last, that the God of the Bible would interpose, as if by miracle, to assist them in executing their plans. This accounts for the fact that from Davis and Lee down so large a portion of the civilians and officers of the Southern army were devotedly pious and full of faith.

It was the same blind and cruel sentiment which led our Puritan fathers to propitiate heaven, and giv ease to their tender consciences, by torturing witches and Quakers and putting them to death in the most agonizing forms. When Servetus was burning at the stake in Geneva, Farrel, the reformer, and Calvin's right-hand man, implored him, with tears running down his cheeks, to confess that Christ was the eternal son of God, and thus be snatched as a brand from the burning in a double sense. It was the human heart throbbing in his bosom that was touched with pity for the sufferer. But it was the cruel devil of his religion which, when Servetus refused to recant, whispered in his ear that the sacrifice then being offered up was acceptable to God and made him acquiesce in the order to pile on the fagots.

After the destruction of the Jewish nationality, the bulldog pertinacity of the religious sentiment exhibited itself for eighteen hundred years in the persecution of the Jews. Although Christ himself was a Jew, and "the Virgin Mother of God" was a Jewess, The Christians persecuted the Jews until their race character was entirely changed. In Palestine they were an agricultural and home-staying people, living contentedly by their industry, and drawing their subsistence from the soil. But the religion of the Christians, by its undying hate, converted them into a nation of traders and money-lenders, whose wealth they could put into their pockets when the torch of persecution was lighted and they were compelled to flee for their lives. The very clannishness and exclusivness of their character superinduced by such long continued and cruel treatment has been the occasion of social discrimination and hatred in our day, and even under the American flag.

The Catholic Inquisition, which tortured the lives out of thousands of its victims, was called the "holy" Inquisition, because these human sacrifices were suggested by, and satisfied, for the time being, the craving of what is considered the holiest instinct of our nature, our religion. When the massacre of St. Bartholomew took place, and the streets of Paris were slippery with the blood of Protestants, and when the glad tidings reached Rome, the pope, with his retinue of cardinals, bishops, and priests, marched in solemn procession to the church, and there poured out their thanksgivings in a Te deum laudamus for the holy achievement of that faithful son of the church, Charles IX.

But you say it was the Catholic religion which in this, and in so many other cases, painted its own character with blood. Let us see if the Protestant religion is any better. In 1630 Laud, the Episcopalian bishop of London, in the exuberance of his pious zeal, set the hounds of the Star Chamber upon the track of the Rev. Dr. Leighton, a Puritan preacher, for a pamphlet entitled, "Sion's Plea Against Prelacy." For thus daring to question the divine authority of episcopacy, he was tried and sentenced to be publicly whipped at Westminster, to stand in the pillory there, to hav one ear cut off, one side of his nose slit, one cheek branded with a hot iron, the whole of this to be repeated at Cheapside, the following week, upon the other side of his mangled head, to pay a fine of £10,000, and suffer life-long imprisonment in the Fleet (see State Trials, vol. iii). When this terrible sentence was pronounced Laud took off his hat in the Star Chamber, and thanked God!

In 1634 Prynne, a Puritan lawyer, wrote a book against the theater, which the king and queen often attended. For this he was fined £10,000, branded in the forehead, had one ear cut off in Cheapside, the other in Palace Yard, stood twice in the pillory, had his books burnt before his face, and was imprisoned for life. Laud was the chief inciter of the process. Prynne, while in prison, wrote against prelacy a second time, was again indicted, was pilloried in Palace Yard, had his ears cut off again—for they had been sewed on, and had healed during his long imprisonment—and he was fined another £5,000, and sentenced to imprisonment for life. Laud, in the Star Chamber, made a most virulent speech against Prynne, and concluded by thanking that iniquitous court for its defense of the church. No one can read with dry eyes the account of this execution in the State Trials; how the executioner cut off one of Prynne's ears so close that he cut off a piece of the cheek with it; and how Laud, the bishop, refused to allow Prynne's servant to tend his masters sores. But the great principle of reaction in human affairs came into play, and, although Prynne was sentenced to bankruptcy and imprisonment for life, he lived long enough to come out of jail, to see Laud's head cut off by the executioner at Tower Hill, to hav the Star Chamber sentence reversed by the House of Commons, and an award of £5,000 damages against the judges of that court.

My object in these quotations from the volume of State Trials is to show the utterly diabolical character, not of Laud and his fellow-persecutors, but of that feeling or instinct called religion, which made them the cruel monsters they were. It selfishly demanded all the agony its victims endured, so that the persecutors—not the sufferers—might secure the favor of God by stamping out heresy. The religious hunger in man is by no means fastidious in its taste. It relishes one kind of food as much as another, provided it be bloody. In the two cases just recited it was the Episcopalian religion glutting itself with Puritan blood. But the Puritan religion was as fond of this diet as that of the pagan, the Catholic, and the Protestant Episcopalian. For, when Cromwell, the Puritan, returned from the wholesale slaughter of the Catholics in Ireland, he was as devout in his ascriptions of praise to God for the success of the cruelties he had so unscrupulously practiced as the pope and cardinals were over the massacre of St. Bartholomew.

Does the religious instinct behave any better in the "orthodox," or Greek, church than in the Catholic or Protestant churches? See a single sample in Elizabeth, the daughter of Peter the Great, who, although she was a notorious strumpet in her morals, condemned two ladies of her court to receive fifty lashes of the knout, in the open square of St. Petersburg, to hav their tongues cut out, and be banished to Siberia, for divulging some of her many amours. But what of that? She atoned for it all by her scrupulous yearly confessions at Easter, by her punctuality in all the daily offices of religion, and by the intense and exalted spirituality of her secret devotions. Her murderous crimes were mere peccadiloes—spots on the sun that don't affect its light or heat. A crime, if practiced by a saint, loses its blackness, if it be not whitewashed into a virtue.

The Crusades, which occupied the exclusiv attention of Europe for several centuries, was another purely religious movement of the Christians, who, hallucinated with the belief that, whereas Jesus failed to make good his promis that after his death he would return to earth during the lifetime of that generation, and set up his visible kingdom, he would now, at the close of the prophetic period of a thousand years, fulfil his promis. But as the throne of his power must be where his sepulcher was, at Jerusalem, and as the holy city was in possession of the Moslems, Peter the Hermit, after infuriating the religious zeal of Christendom, raised a vast army to march to Palestine, dispossess the Moslem, and prepare David's throne for "David's son," when he should come in the clouds of heaven to assume the royal scepter. But Jesus never came. The delusion, however, cost untold expenditures of blood and treasure, and ought to hav satisfied the world then of the danger and utter unreliability of the religious instinct which created it. But it lasted long enough for religion to display another feature of its character besides its taste for blood—its disposition to plunder. It was then that the priesthood, again taking advantage of the ignorance and credulity of the people, persuaded the pious crusader, when he enlisted for the holy war, in view of the end of the world being near at hand, to deed over his houses and lands to the church, leaving his wife and children penniless. The implicitness of the people's faith in the priesthood, and their brutal ignorance, are seen in this, that it never seems to hav occurred to the crusader to ask the rapacious priest, as he signed the deed of conveyance, "Of what use will these lands be to the church, if, after we hav expelled the Turks from the holy places, and Christ has taken his seat upon his throne, the world is going to be burnt up?"

The modern sects, that hav come into existence in later times—Baptists, Methodists, Quakers, Unitarians, and others—congratulate themselvs that their record is not stained with the blood of slaughtered heretics, as is that of the old sects—the Catholics, the Episcopalians, the Presbyterians, and the Puritans. But it is because they hav had no chance to let their religion show itself. They hav all, however, shown their canine teeth, which proves them to be the children of the same mother. Even Unitarianism, which boasts of having no creed, and which has scarcely any individuality of character at all, has plenty of the old leaven of religion, for it ached fairly, like the Catholic Torquemada, "to put a hook into the jaw" of the Boston heretic, Theodore Parker. But, shamed by the spirit of the age, the same men whose religion prompted them to attempt to silence his lips while he lived, like their illustrious predecessors, the pharisees of Jerusalem, are now garnishing the tomb of the great prophet by republishing his utterances with approbation.

THE ARGUMENTUM AD VERECUNDIAM.

The argument addressed to one's modesty is not a very modest one to use when he who uses it, however humble he may be, belongs to the class in whose favor it is urged. But facts are facts. As proof positiv that men may not only suppress their hereditary weakness called religion, but accomplish its entire eradication, and thus approximate perfection in moral character, I point to the master minds of this age, scientists and philosophers, in England, France, Germany, and the United States. I point, also, to that long list of noble women whose intelligence and love of truth hav liberated them from the bondage of this sentiment, which has constituted their sex a degraded caste for eighteen hundred years. For their knowledge, their uprightness in all the relations of life, and for their calm courage, and loyalty to their convictions of truth, there is no class of people so exemplary as the class called "Infidels." Among the bank defaulters, who plunder the trust funds of widows and orphans, and other transgressors of the law who obtrude themselvs upon the public attention in the courts of justice, how few, if any at all, are Infidels! All over this country, when the charge of Infidelity is made by the church people against anyone, it is presumptiv evidence that he is a thinking, intelligent man, and upright and honorable in his dealings. The singularity of this fact is fast changing the old, re-proachful epithet of "Infidel" into a term of honor. The superior intelligence of this class, their self-respect, and their consciousness that compliance with the rules of natural morality is both right in itself and best for the interests of society, make them willingly obedient to the law, and they giv no trouble to their country as criminals.

See, in contrast with this class, the astonishing number of religionists who are pilloried in the newspapers, shut up in penitentiaries, or compelled to join the Canadian colony of criminal saints, many of them being clergymen who in their lives violate their own teachings in the pulpit, and prove to the world that the hopes of heaven and the fears of hell, which constitute their religion, hav no restraining influence in making them either just or decent men. As a further elucidation of the point in hand, everyone has observed, in the long list of clerical delinquents in this country, that the most flagrant immoralities—rape, robbery, and other penitentiary offenses—do not seem to impair the confidence of the rank-and-file "saints" in the religious character of the criminals as ministers of the gospel. After the commission of the most abominable outrages, these "embassadors of Christ" go into their pulpits and perform their clerical functions, and their people listen as if nothing had happened! Thus the eternal distinction between right and wrong is entirely wiped out at the bidding of religion.

ONE REASON, PERHAPS, WHY THE SAINTS ALLOW THEMSELVS TO SIN.

When we analyze the emotions growing out of the religious instinct, we find that the criminal saint, when he is tempted to transgress the law, lays the flattering unction to his soul that Jesus, the great bondsman, will pay the debt he is about to incur, if he himself remains in good health, and repents of it before he dies. He has heard the cheering words of Jesus that "there is joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than in ninety and nine just men who need no repentance," because they hav not sinned; and under the influence of this secret bribe he induces himself to believe that he will make the heavenly arches resound with the acclamations of angels and glorified spirits, when, after he is satiated with sin, and repents, he will be brought back to the fold as the lost sheep by the great shepherd, while the rest of the flock remain in the wilderness. There can be no doubt that the natural tendency of the doctrin of vicarious atonement is to place him who believes it, and applies it to himself, at the mercy of any temptation that assails him, because he secretly feels that his sins were atoned for before he was born, and that, when he commits them, he can draw by faith on the merits of Christ's atoning blood to satisfy the demands of the violated law. A spendthrift son, whose deceased father had placed millions of money in the bank subject to his check, contracts debt without hesitation, because he knows he is abundantly able to pay. This doctrin, laid hold of by the necessities of religion, has always made the church a city of refuge for transgressors of all kinds. To-day, and in this country, when a shrewd and sagacious man becomes an ardent religionist, and is devoted to the church, he awakens suspicion, if he occupies a responsible position in a moneyed institution, that he is out on a plundering expedition.

The Infidel, for a motiv to an upright life, is under no such delusion as that which misleads a Christian. Happily for himself and society, he has no religion at all. He does right in his relations to himself and others because it is right in itself so to do, and conduces to the general welfare of society of which he is a member. Besides this he believes and practices upon the fact that for a wilful deed of wrong, either against himself or any other person, there is no such thing as forgivness; that, as it is a debt which he himself has contracted, so he himself must pay it, even to the uttermost farthing. The inexorableness of this law of natural morality, and the fearfulness of that most terrible word in the English language—remorse—as illustrated in the lives of evil-doers, are omnipotent motivs, and secure the perpendicularity of his walk through life.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Ingersoll on the Labor Question.

From an Interview.

Every man ought to be willing to pay for what he gets. He ought to desire to giv full value for what he has received. The man who wants $2 worth of work for $1 is no honest man. The man who wants others to work to such an extent that their lives are burdens is utterly heartless. The toil of the world should continually decrease. Of what use are your inventions if no additional comforts find their way to the homes of labor?

Why should labor fill the world with wealth and liv in want?

Every labor-saving machine should help the whole world. Every one should tend to shorten the hours of labor.

Reasonable labor is the source of joy. To work for wife or child, to toil for those you love, is happiness, provided you can make them happy. But to work like a slave; to see your wife and children in rags; to sit at a table where food is coarse and scarce; to rise at four in the morning, to work all day, and throw your bones on a miserable bed at night; to liv without leisure, without rest, without making those who love you comfortable and happy—this is not living; it is dying—a slow lingering crucifixion.

The hours of labor should be shortened. With the vast, wonderful improvements of the nineteenth century, there should not only be the necessaries of life for those who toil, but comforts and luxuries as well.

What is a reasonable price for labor? I answer: Such a price as will enable a man to lay by something for his declining years, so that he can hav the feeling of a man.

I sympathize with every honest effort made by the children of labor to improve their condition. That is a poorly governed country in which those who do the most hav the least. There is something wrong when men hav to beg for leave to toil. We are not yet a civilized people; when we are, pauperism and crime will vanish from our land.

I sympathize with the wanderer, with the vagrant out of employment—with sad, weary men who are seeking for work. When I see one of these men, poor and friendless, no matter how bad he is, I think that somebody loved him once; that he was once held in the arms of a mother; that he slept beneath her loving eyes, and wakened in the light of her smile; I see him in the cradle listening to lullabies sung soft and low, and his little face dimpled as though by rosy fingers of joy. And then I think of the strange and winding paths, the weary roads that he has traveled from that mother's arms to vagrancy and want.

There should be labor and food for all.

Concerning Christians.

Christians! What about Christians? Where are they to be found? What a query or brace of queries when they surround one on every hand! Yes, the Christians are a numerous body, counting in all claimed to be such, including all those born in so-called Christian lands of so-called Christian parents—Christians nominally by accident of birth—and a very much mixed lot they are, too, spreading out as they do, from pulpit to penitentiary, in every Christian land. But the real simon-pure Christians, ranking with the truly good men of any other or no religion, do they abound to any alarming extent? No; they are as few and far between as angels' visits or doctors' cures.

The saying, born in diplomatic circles in Europe, "Scratch a Russian and you will find a Tartar," cannot be applied in the Christian case, for one might scratch a thousand Christians and not find ten truly good men. The writer has been scratching them for thirty years, right and left, and the number of his fingers and thumbs exceeds that of true men found. Were there a saying to this effect, "Scratch a Christian and you will find a hypocrit," the rarity of exception would prove it an iron rule; yes, an iron rule, indeed.

"Then you assume," says a Christian at the writer's elbow, "that the average Infidel is a better man than the average Christian?"

"Inasmuch as he is not a pious fraud, stealing the livery of heaven in which to serve the devil, he is a better man," the writer answers. "An Infidel may be a moral, but, of course, cannot be a religious hypocrit; and of the two evils he is certainly the lesser one, for the religious hypocrit is always a moral hypocrit—a duality in hypocrisy.

Now, of two horse-dealers, one an Infidel, the other a Christian, and I wanted to buy a horse, I should certainly go to the Infidel, for, taking it for granted that I should be cheated in either case—somehow or other there seems to be an ironclad incompatibility between honesty and the nature of a horse-dealer—I should much prefer to be cheated by him than the other, as he wouldn't protest that he was a servant of Christ all the while he was trying to stick me with a wind-broken or spavined plug. Being an Infidel it is natural, I suppose, that I should go to the Infidel horse-dealer, the Christian as naturally going to the other, finding consolation later on in the fact that he was not stuck by a godless man, but by a man of God.

Square-toed, broad-backed, honest-Indian Christians are, in the light of my experience with Christians as they run, rara aves; yes, indeed, rare birds. It must be understood that the writer speaks of professional Christians. There are multitudes of nominal Christians lumped as the genuin article, but neither fish, flesh, nor fowl in the matter of theological opinion or religious belief, that would pan out a large percentage of square-backs, let us hope, even in the face of recent developments in high places; but I iterate and reiterate that square-backs are rara aves among the professedly pious population. Why, a Christian preacher, so-called—Jo Cook—speaking lately of the number of professional Christians in the world, said he hoped—hoped, mind that—that one in twelve was a real Christian! He didn't venture it as his belief, but hoped there was one in twelve! Eight and a half per cent! A rather small percentage, but greater even than he would flat-footedly claim.

If the Rev. Jo means by real Christians those who hav entered for the heavenly stakes, confident of passing under the string as winners, I think that when he hoped for only eight and a half real Christians even out of a hundred, he hoped for more than he could bag; for, unless the eleventh-hour or death-bed repentance, not to mention that of condemned murderers, when the gallows is the assured means to this end, admits of their being slated for heavenly joys, eight and a half per cent of those entered will not pass under the string winners, the trouble being that many will try to win by a "foul," and fail, and many more find they are too heavily "handicapped" to win.

The fact seems to be that the path to heaven is too narrow, if not too straight, for the pilgrims of earth to pursue with ease and comfort; the rules and regulations of the road seem to be too numerous, too onerous, and too exacting for human nature to comply with readily; hence the more numerously-traveled broad-gauge road to sheol. If the path and the requirements are not respectivly narrower and more onerous than they should be, then the mistake was made in human nature; it wasn't built up to meet the heavenly demands upon it; it is too weak or they are too exacting. This mistake, however, in the eternal fitness of things, wouldn't matter if all had a chance to repent at the last moment, repentance being the one thing essential; but many are cut off without a moment's notice, and the chance to repent is not theirs, and they perhaps walking much more in the narrow path than those who get in their repentance at the eleventh hour. Repent even at three-quarters past the eleventh hour, and ye shall be saved, and never another man so great a villain; shut out from repentance by sudden death, and your goose will be cooked, and be kept cooking for ever, in the oven of sheol, and never a squarer man in life! This doesn't seem to be the equitable thing; yet, nevertheless, it is the iron rule of the road to heaven.

Now, for an illustration of this iron rule, let us take one of these entries for the heavenly stakes. Let us say that he is fully up to the average of the "field," as good a Christian as you could find; in short, a squarely good man—such a one would be just as good a man by the name of Infidel as Christian—who keeps pretty steadily in the narrow path, shying over into the broad road semi-occasionally only, say, owing to the fact that his human nature is not always equal to his good intentions. Well, say he goes to bed to-night, after repenting on reverential knee of his sins to-day, with a prayer for forgivness, and sleeps the sleep of the righteous.—I once saw a murderer asleep, and a more peaceful slumber and pleasanter expression of countenance I never witnessed, but, perhaps, he was dreaming of heaven where murderers most will congregate, they generally having abundance of time for repentance.—Well, our friend gets up in the morning, and, after his orisons, sits down to breakfast, but, before the first mouthful, is suddenly confronted with a crumpled billet doux in the hands of his better half irate, with face flushing and eyes flashing, who, as every well regulated better-half is in duty bound to do, has gone through his pockets in his slumber, and brought forth to the light of day a damaging witness against her spouse, prima facia evidence of crim. con., horribile dictu, if not a catch flagrante delicto!

Staggered and thrown off the center, as it were, by the sudden apparition of the criminating witness, our friend plunges precipitately into the pitfall of prevarication, floundering about like a flounder hooked out of its nativ element and thrown into the basket of the fisher, and settling matters, after a fashion, only by a flat-footed fib at last—perhaps the first, surely the last, fib he ever told her. With half a breakfast, eaten without appetite—these billets doux, sweet per se, but contraband of conjugal love, and paralyzing when brought forth by the party of the third part, are not conduciv to appetite—our friend goes forth to the world as usual, leaving behind him the black fib, and is instantly killed by a falling stone as he passes a house in process of erection within a block of his own. Now, by the Christian or heavenly program, this man is doomed, or his soul is, to everlasting torment in the fiery furnaces of sheol! This seems to be horribly monstrous, or monstrously horrible, as you like it, but all the same it is the Mosaic law, and as immutable as the laws of the Medes and the Persians.

It would seem that Christians, to be cocksure of a seat in heaven, must needs be on the stool of repentance continually; but as they can't be, and attend to business, there ought to be, in view of sudden and unexpected calls to the other side of Jordan, a system of previous or advance repentance, so that a Christian could repent a month ahead, say, of whatever sins he might commit in that line. I should like to hear from Christians in regard to this idea, entirely original with me.

But I fear I am taking up space that should be accorded my betters, and in conclusion will say that as all that glitters is not gold, so all who shine as Christian lights are not, by a long shot, square-back mortals, the term "square-back" being understood.

SI SLOKUM.

Moody's Sermon on "Blood."

"Would you turn to Genesis xii, 13? 'And Abraham lifted up his eyes and looked; and, behold! behind him a ram caught in a thicket by his horns; and Abraham went and took the ram aud offered him up for a burnt offering in the stead of his son.' We find here another type. The ram was typical; he was offered up in the place of Abraham's son. God loved Abraham so much that he spared his son; but God loved us so much that he did not spare his son, but freely gave him up for us all. Here we find that mountain-peak sprinkled with blood. Abraham was willing to do all the Lord had told him, for he took the knife, and was ready giv all to God. . . Then again in Exodus xii, 13, we read: 'And the blood shall be to you for a token upon the houses where you are; and when I see the blood I will pass over you, and the plague shall not be upon you to destroy you, when I smite the land of Egypt.' . . Wherever blood was upon the door-post death passed over, and that kept death out. It was not what they were. He did not say, 'When I see your prayers, your good deeds, I will pass over you;' but 'When I see the blood I will pass over you.' A little child that night behind the blood in Goshen was as safe as Moses. . . But if you are behind the blood of the Lamb, you are as safe for heaven as any man living on earth. It ain't when I see how holy you are—how you go to church every Sabbath—how you say your prayers—how you pay your debts—but when I see the blood. . . It was the ark that saved the fly and the elephant, and it is the blood that saves the weakest and the strongest. . . The blood shall be a token, and the great question is, Hav you got the token? If death should come after any one of us to-night, are we sheltered behind the blood? that is the point. It is the blood that atones. Not my good resolutions, or prayers, or position in society, or what I hav done, but what has been done by another. God looks for the token. . . We must be born of the spirit, and sheltered by the blood, and then we become pilgrims for heaven. Turn to Exodus xxix, 16: 'And thou shalt slay the lamb, and thou shalt take his blood and sprinkle it round about the altar.' Even Aaron could not come to God until he sprinkled blood round about the altar. From the time Adam fell there has been no other way a man can approach God but by the blood. You cannot hav an audience of God until you come by the way of the blood. So it has been for six thousand years. It has never been otherwise, and never will be. Leviticus viii, 23: 'And he slew it; and Moses took of the blood of it and put it upon the tip of Aaron's right ear, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot.' I had used to read a passage like this, and say it seemed absurd. I think I understand it now. The blood upon the ear, that a man can hear the voice of God. A man must be sheltered behind the blood before he can hear God's voice. The blood upon the hand, that a man may work for God. You cannot work for God until you are sheltered behind the blood, and until you are sheltered it all stands for naught. You may build churches, endow colleges, pay ministers and missionaries salaries, but it all goes for naught until you are sheltered behind the blood. . . God demands blood. He demands life. Man has sinned, therefore life must be forfeited, and I must die or find somebody to die for me. My friends, I hav only just touched this subject. If you read your Bibles carefully you will find the scarlet thread running through the Bible. It commenced in Eden and flows on to Revelation. I cannot find anything to tell me the way to heaven but by the blood. That book [holding up the Bible] wouldn't be worth carrying home if you take the scarlet thread out of it, and it don't teach anything else, for the blood commences in Genesis and goes on to Revelation. That is what this book is written for. It tells its own story, and if a man should come and preach another gospel don't you believe him. If an angel should come and preach anything else don't believe it. And if you are in a church, either dissenting or established, and the minister doesn't preach the blood, you get out of it as Lot did out of Sodom. Don't trifle with this subject of the blood. In your dying hour you would giv more to be sheltered behind this blood than for all the world. . . When I was in Dublin I gave a lecture on 'The Blood,' and a lady wrote me and said, if the blood was so important, why was it the early preachers, the apostles, and Christ himself never referred to it? I hadn't time to write to the lady, but I wish she was present to-day, for I will prove that the early Christians preached nothing else. Would you turn to Acts ii, 22-36. It was Christ and him crucified the apostles preached, and nothing else. It was this preaching God blessed, and which brought so many in one day to the cross of Christ. [To further prove this, Mr. Moody quoted Acts iv, 10; Acts v, 29; Acts vii, 52; Acts viii, 32; Acts xvii, 2, 18, 31; Hebrews ix, 22; Matthew xxvi, 28; Revelations i, 5.] If a man makes light of the blood, how is he going to be washed in it? If he makes light of the blood, how is he going to get rid of his sins? and how is he going to stand before that pure God unless his sins are washed away? . . Colossians i, 20: 'And having made peace through the blood of his cross, by him to reconcile all things unto himself; by him, I say, whether they be things in earth or things in heaven.' The blood of the cross speaks peace. If I am sheltered behind the blood there is peace, and there is no peace until my sin is covered. . . . The blood of Christ speaks peace, and it will bring peace to every guilty conscience and aching heart to-day if you only seek it. John xix, 34: 'But one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came thereout blood and water.' There is a beautiful thought contained in this verse. The spear that went into the side of the son of God was the crowning point of earth and hell. I don't see how they could hav done a more cruel thing than that. You may say that was the crowning act of sin. And the blood came out and covered the spear, and a fountain was thus open in the house of David for sin. The blood touched the Roman spear, and it was not long before he had the Roman government. The blood ran down from his side, and God will hav the world by-and-by. . . God is going to judge the world by the blood. 'What did you do with the blood?' If we make light of that blood, and send back an insulting message, saying we don't want the blood of God's dear son, we shall stand speechless before God's tribunal. What hav you done with God's blood? If we make light of that blood what is going to become of our souls? . . Revelation xii, 11: 'And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony, and they loved not their lives unto the death.' I don't believe there is a word in the Bible Satan is fearing more than the word blood. I shall receive a good many letters to-morrow attacking me for what I hav said to-day. These letters will say it is heathenish to stand up and preach what would only do for an unenlightened age. May God forgiv anyone who would dare to teach such a thing. If you will read your Bible in the light of Calvary, you will find there is no other way of coming to heaven but by the blood. The devil don't fear ten thousand preachers who preach a bloodless religion. A man who preaches a bloodless religion is doing the devil's work, and I don't care who he is. It is said of old Dr. Alexander, of Princeton Seminary, that as the students left, he would take them by the hand and say, 'Young man, make much of the blood—make much of the blood.' . . Sinner, be wise! don't make light of the blood. An aged minister of the gospel, when on his dying bed, said, 'Bring me the Bible.' Putting his finger upon the verse, 'The blood of Jesus Christ, his son, cleanses us from all sin,' he said, 'I die in the hope of this verse.' It wasn't his fifty years' preaching, but the blood of Christ. When we stand before God's tribunal we shall be as pure as God, because we shall be washed in the blood of the Lamb. During the American war a doctor heard a man saying, 'Blood, blood, blood!' The doctor thought this was because he had seen so much blood, and sought to divert his mind. The man smiled and said, 'I wasn't thinking of the blood upon the battle-field, but I was thinking how precious the blood of Christ is to me as I am dying.' As he died, his lips quivered, 'Blood, blood, blood!' and he was gone. It will be precious when we come to our dying bed—it will be worth more than all the world then. . . The blood is upon the mercy-seat, and while it is upon the mercy-seat you go into the kingdom. God says, 'There is the blood; it is all I hav to giv.' The blood is there, and God says, 'As long as it is there, there is hope for you. I am satisfied with the finished work of my son, and will you be satisfied.' Don't go out until you can claim this as yours. Think of that Atheist we hav been praying for who is dying. I hope he will lay hold of Christ before he dies. How dark and sad it is to go to the bed-side of a dying Infidel or Atheist, or one who is dying without the light of the resurrection morn. I hope the light will burst in upon him before it is too late. If we trust to Christ, death has lost its sting and the grave its victory. You may hav read of that good man in America, Alfred Cookman. While his friends were gathered round his dying couch his face lit up, and with a shout of triumph, he said, 'I am sweeping through the gates, washed in the blood of the Lamb!' And this echoes and re-echoes through America to-day, 'I am sweeping through the gates, washed in the blood of the Lamb!' May these be our last words, and there will be no trouble then about an entrance into the kingdom of God."

Freethought in Texas.

Monday morning, May 24th, found me at Longview. Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday nights I lectured in the court-house at this place. The attendance was not very large, but greatly annoyed the bigots nevertheless. One devout Christian, named John Maddox, proposed that he would be one of a dozen men to take me out of town. Texans are noted for their bravery. Here was a heroic soul, who in defense of his creed stood ready to vanquish one twelfth part of a little Infidel.

The Freethinkers at Longview are not numerous, P. E. Coleman, W. W. Wood, Capt. A. W. Morrison, Luke Howard, and Col. Thos. Durham being about the only ones who take an interest in the cause. But these are all true men, and deserve much credit for the unpopular stand they hav taken. B. A. Norris, formerly on the staff of the New York World, and who attended my lectures at Corsicana, kept me company while at Longview.

Thursday at 3 A.M. I left Longview for Cooper, county seat of Delta county, where I was advertised to begin a course of lectures Thursday night. Near Marshall a wreck caused a delay of five hours, which prevented me from making connections at Jefferson, and compelled me to remain there a day. This is the second time during my lecturing career that a wreck has prevented me from reaching my appointments on time. Both, too, hav occurred in northeastern Texas. Three years ago my train was wrecked not fifty miles from where the present wreck occurred.

On Friday afternoon I reached Sulphur Springs, where I found Joel Hays waiting to convey me to Cooper, twenty miles distant. At Cooper I gave five lectures, speaking Friday night, Saturday afternoon, Saturday night, Sunday afternoon, and Sunday night. Saturday afternoon, Saturday night, and Sunday night large audiences were present. The meetings were held in the court-house. It was with great difficulty that a hall was secured. The churches, built to a great extent with funds begged from Liberals and with the understanding that they were to be used for secular meetings if desired, were of course refused. The county commissioners were Christians, and, although the heaviest tax-payers in the county are Liberals and the building used for nearly every purpose, objected to its being used for a Liberal meeting. They were, however, given to understand that if it was not granted a Freethought hall would be built in the town and regular meetings held. This caused them to yield.

The next thing in order on the part of the orthodox was to cast about for a clergyman to meet me and refute my arguments. Several resided in Cooper, but these were either deemed unfit or were unwilling to engage in the work. Finally, a parson was found in Paris who agreed to come on Monday night and answer me. I would then be one hundred and fifty miles away, and as he would not hear the lectures the task would be an easy one. It is the same old story. I do not believe that there is a Methodist, Baptist, or Presbyterian clergyman in Texas who will meet a Freethinker in debate. There are doubtless some in the rural districts who feel fully competent to do so, but their superiors forbid it. When no Freethinker is near the clergy are loud in their denunciations of Infidelity, and boast of their ability and readiness to meet Ingersoll or any other exponent of Freethought; but let even one of the humblest of its advocates appear and they are as silent as the tomb. One would think that the poor dupes of priestcraft would sometimes become disgusted with the cowardice displayed by these paid champions of the church.

The wealthiest and most intelligent citizens of Delta county are Freethinkers, and although there are not many of them, their superior standing in the community secures for Freethought a degree of respect which it would not otherwise enjoy. Joel Hays, Joseph Blackwell, E. Blackwell, Mr. McDowd, George Ryan, and Mr. and Mrs. Snyder are the most activ workers whom I met. Mrs. Snyder is a daughter of E. G. Thomas, a well-known Freethinker of Huntingdon, Ind. My stay at Cooper was rendered especially pleasant by the hospitality and kindness of Mr. Hays and his family.

Monday morning Mr. Hays took me to Honey Grove, on the Texas and Pacific railroad, thirty miles from Cooper, where I took a train to Fort Worth. On reaching Sherman, I felt an almost irresistible longing to turn northward toward home. But I had promised to visit Bowie, Cleburne, and Comanche yet, and so must remain another week. These engagements emphasize the importance of having the arrangements for one's tour perfected before leaving home, a thing which I generally endeavor to do. I passed through Bowie twice in April, visited Cleburne in April and again in May, and was twice within fifty miles of Comanche. Had these engagements been made earlier, but one hundred miles' travel would have been required to reach them; as it is, I must travel seven hundred miles.

The heat is very oppressiv here, and I almost envy Reynolds and Jamieson their work up north.

J. E. REMSBURG.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

Vice-Presidents:

CHARLES WATTS, JOHN E. REMSBURG, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, MATTIE P. KREKEL, JAMES PARTON, HORACE SEAVER, WILLIAM ALGIE, ROBERT C. ADAMS, TITUS L. BROWN, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York. COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com. E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged	$2,389.26
Salt Lake City (per James Ashman)	5.00
Harry Haines	5.00
Murray	4.40
Charles Crane	5.00
John W. Long	1.00
Mary Duff	1.00
Total	$2,410.66

News and Notes.

Contrary to my usual custom, on Saturday morning, May 22d, I arose with the lark, but did not like that bird sing at heaven's gate; but mounted the ancient seat of a lumber-wagon and rode ten miles to take the train. However, the mail carrier was a vivacious French Liberal, and I enjoyed his interjaculatory English, which I could about half understand; and between the pauses of the talk he would sing the Marseillaise hymn, and its resonant notes were quite in accordance with the bright steps of the day which "like an army with banners" was coming over the multitude of hills.

I was the only passenger on the train for twenty-five miles, and I chuckled to myself to think that King Solomon in all his glory could not hav chartered for his single convenience so elegant a coach as I had for my morning's journey. The Secular pilgrim was far ahead of the proudest despot of the Old World—thanks to the "continuity" and "solidarity" of the race and civilization in general. I gladly paid my dollar and seventy-five cents toll, and I don't think the railroad company made much out of that trip. If I had been like my friend Appleton, an uncompromising Anarchist, I should perhaps hav gone twenty-five miles afoot and alone, and thus hav shown my absolute independence of all that had gone before. But, being an eclectic philosopher, I was glad to hav my single self supplemented by the universal world, and with Socialistic complacency I accepted the iron horse and splendid coach furnished by the "long result of time," and was perfectly willing to pay taxes for the ample accommodations that I received. Will friend Appleton please take note of the immense advantages of a coöperation begun without his consent, which in the nick of time, over a rough sandy plain, offers for his solitary convenience a magnificent chariot that any old-time monarch would hav given millions to hav had at his command? I think Appleton, although taxation was compulsory, would take the train rather than walk; and he would admit that coöperation without consent in this case was a mighty benefit.

I came on to Nephi, Utah, and from Nephi to Juab, where I arrived at about noon of Saturday, and here stretched before me a journey of twenty-five miles in an open lumber-wagon beneath a broiling sun. I was met by Mr. P. C. Neilson, of Scipio, to which I was bound for a lecture in the evening. Off we went. For fourteen miles not a house was to be seen—only sage-brush, and sand, and rock, and hills that seemed to be boiling like potatoes in the air, which almost bubbled along the summits with the heat. The Utah sun is scorching when it sets about it. I found the New Version utterly at fault. Sheol would not do. King James's translation alone did justice to my fervent feelings. There are some old words that, like old wine, grow more vigorous with age, and are exceedingly useful to the righteous soul when it is vexed. At the end of fourteen miles we came to one solitary habitation. There we refreshed ourselvs with a drink of water, and then tugged slowly on again up the dusty canyon. At last we reached the summit, and Round Valley stretched before me just as the afternoon began to mellow its rays, and its golden shafts glanced on the far hillsides, and the whole valley seemed to sink into the embrace of sunset with a thousand gleaming jewels. I was repaid for all my wearisome journey by this refreshing and beautiful scene; I could almost imagin myself Rosalas coming from the parched desert into the Happy Valley. The moment the sun begins to sink at these lofty hights—7,000 feet above the sea—the atmosphere becomes delightful; cool breezes sweep through the palace of the night. The change seems almost magical from the parched noon to the star-lit hours when one has to wrap a blanket about him to keep comfortably warm.

I had an audience of about two hundred at Scipio. I enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Neilson. There are some good Liberals in this settlement, Mr. Monroe, Samuel Rowley, etc. I met Geo. C. Viele, of Fillmore, the most vigorous worker in this part of the country, and I was glad to shake hands with this frontiersman of our cause.

The next day, Sunday, I went with Mr. Viele to Fillmore, a distance of twenty-five miles, and lectured in the evening to a good audience in the old state house. Fillmore was once the capital of the territory and is laid out in a somewhat magnificent fashion, like the city of Washington, with broad streets and immense squares. The state house stands in solitary and somewhat decaying grandeur in the midst of what I should judge to be a forty-acre lot. Fillmore covers space enough for a city of fifty thousand people. Every front yard is a small farm. Fillmore was long since abandoned by the territorial legislature. It is fifty miles from any railroad station, is a quiet and pleasant place and is the headquarters of a vigorous element of Freethought. My stay here was very pleasurable. Geo. C. Viele, Mr. and Mrs. Kelley, Mr. and Mrs. Robinson, Mr. Christensen, and others are a happy company of Liberals. Mr. Viele, Mr. Christensen, and myself kept a bachelor's hall. I enjoyed the Bohemian life quite well, for they did cooking and the washing of the dishes, while I did the eating—that is, my share of it, which is always a good dividend, and I found such an arrangement very agreeable. I like to keep house on such terms.

Monday we drove down to Kanosh to the big ranch of Mr. Charles Crane, who runs about fifty thousand head of sheep in the territory and livs like a king, absolutely independent of the Mormons, who would like to starve him out if they could. He has fought the good fight—though not the fight of faith, but of pluck—and so far is ahead. Only those who hav passed through the experiences of pioneer Liberals, oftentimes alone in their struggles, can realize the barbaric nature of this ecclesiastical tyranny, which is a strange eruption in the nineteenth century of the ideas of four thousand years ago. There is nothing new in Mormonism. It is a dreadfully old affair indeed.

The school-house was full at Kanosh, about one hundred being present, the majority Mormons. The lecture on "Universal Mental Liberty" was well received.

On Tuesday afternoon we came down to the lava rocks, several miles from Kanosh, on whose solid surface could be seen human footprints. This was once a volcanic country. All over the valley are to be seen the waves and tumbling billows of lava that seemed to hav paused on the very bend, motionless forever. On the rocks I visited I could see the outline in full of human footsteps. They appear like fresh imprints, and not until I had carefully examined them could I believe that they had been on the massiv boulder for centuries. This is assuredly the case. Whence came these signs of a life long ago? Evidently these boulders had been hurled by some fierce convulsion from the neighboring mountain-top. The structure of the footprints makes it certain that they were made before the rock rolled to its present position, and therefore while it was on the hights above. Now, these hights were once scattered isles. Hundreds of years ago Salt Lake was an immense inland sea, and it dashed against these hills 150 miles south of its present boundary. The Indians passing along in their canoes would land upon the still plastic soil and leave these traces, all there is, perhaps, of a mighty race. The rocks will not tell their marvelous secret. There was something grand and awful to me in these few footprints on this barren rock, more impressiv than the thunders of Niagara, for these were human outlines, and brought me into the sublime presence of a fleeeting, rushing humanity grander than all the roll of waters. What a story might be told, if from these dainty marks, if from the dead form, we could traverse the living world, see the brain and heart that pulsed in that flying foot.

On Tuesday evening I lectured at Peterboro. This is a small settlement, but its people are all Liberals, and I had a pleasant sojourn with them. I enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Robinson.

On Wednesday I returned to Fillmore, where I lectured in the Mormon meeting-house on "The New Heaven and Earth." The bishop of Fillmore is quite Liberal. This is the first time I hav desecrated a meeting-house with my Infidel utterances. Hitherto I hav been confined to the school-house. The Mormons are a bit afraid I might hurt their temples of worship. But for once I hav entered the consecrated building, though I don't expect to hav another opportunity.

On Thursday I returned from Fillmore to Scipio, and lectured again in the school-house to a good audience. This Friday morning I hav come from Scipio with Mr. Samuel Rowley and Geo. C. Veile to Juab, where I take cars for Salt Lake.

I hav thus finished my campaign in southern Utah. I hav lectured almost every evening, and hav traveled two hundred miles in a lumber-wagon. I hav been jolted about ten million times, and I feel as if every atom in my body had changed position, and that I am a "new man." I am ready to be baptized. I hav a cartload of dust upon me, and am part and parcel of the very soil of Utah. I hav been thoroughly naturalized from head to foot.

On Saturday evening I lecture again at Murray, Utah.

On Sunday we hav our Liberal Festival at Haight's Grove. On Tuesday and Wednesday, June 1st and 2d, I lecture at Bingham, Utah; on June 5th and 6th, at Hailey, Idaho; on June 7th and 8th, at Bellevue; on June 13th, at Eagle Rock; on June 20th, at Butte City, Montana; on June 27th, at Helena; on July 4th and 11th, at Bozeman. On my return trip by way of the Union Pacific, I expect to lecture at the following places—but the dates are not fixed: Salt Lake City, Ogden, Echo, Park City, Heber City, Utah; Rock Springs and Laramie, Wyoming; Denver, Greeley, etc., Col.; Plum Creek, Seward, Fremont, Lincoln, West Point, and Omaha, Nebraska; Ottumwa, Leon, West Union, etc., Iowa; Chebanse and Chicago, Ill. The return trip will occupy August and September. Friends along this route who desire lectures must write at once to Wanship, Utah.

Juab, May 28, 1886. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The Library Club.

It was Friday evening, the fourth of June. The heavens bent with their accustomed serenity, and the ubiquitous weather was fair. In the absence of a regular meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club to attend, the writer of this sat in his room lonely and unoccupied as a fifth calf, if it be allowable so to speak. He unbuckled the badge-pin from the façade of his waistcoat, held it where the light was reflected from its lurid torch, and conned the legend that it bore. Within the sound of his voice a church bell was calling the worshipers at St. Ann's to abase themselvs once more before the altar of superstition. It made him tired, and recollecting the opening of the Workingmen's Free Library at 143 Eighth street that night, he lost no time in getting there.

The library room is not a large one. It is perhaps eighteen feet wide and fifty feet long. At one end are the books and papers which form the library; the rest of the place is filled with chairs, and on the present occasion all the chairs were filled with people who had come to hear Mr. Wakeman talk on the necessity to the workingman of education and culture. It was largely a Liberal Club audience.

From behind a table, among the books and papers, the president of the meeting emerged and explained the object of the gathering. It was to call attention to the library, which had just been incorporated, and to take the place of the Liberal Club during the summer months. It would, in fact, be a sort of "annex" to that larger organization.

By the time the chairman had ended his remarks the room was crowded, and the walls were lined with people who preferred standing up to staying away. Mr. Wakeman, being introduced, began his address by saying that the labor army is now standing upon what Homer would call one of the bridges of war. It was a good place to stop and think. There was a growing sentiment that wage slavery had endured long enough. How was industrial liberty to be achieved? Not by violence. All legal power is on the side of the capitalistic class, and by the policeman with his club and the recorder on the bench the law will be wrested, as it has recently been, to work against the so-called socialistic agitator until we shall hav no freedom of speech at all. Laws of the Comstock class can be used to exclude the literature of labor from the mails when the notion strikes some post-office official to so construe them. The use of force can only end in disaster to those who employ it. They will merely be suppressed by force and the question will be adjourned forever. There is no power that can overthrow the present social fabric by force. The only feasible thing is political organization and culture. The working people hav thought it advisable to exclude lawyers from their organizations. No greater mistake could hav been made. The people must make use of the learned professions. Was there an instance in history where the common people, without the learned class to guide and instruct them, had made a successful revolt? From Spartacus to Wat Tyler and down to the present time, Mr. Wakeman could remember none. The lawyer should be especially cultivated by the working class. He is the least trammeled of all men by ulterior interests, and for what little defense we hav against tyranny we are indebted to the legal profession. The learned class stand between labor and capital, with their sympathies on the side of labor. The working people should use them for all they are worth. The key to the solution of the labor problem is to be found first in organization so thorough that a boycott, when it becomes necessary to resort to that measure, will giv to the proscribed place the aspect of a graveyard. Then the ballot should be employed first, last, and all the time. Patience must be cultivated. Learn to labor and to wait. Above all get wisdom. No capitalist can lock you out from that storehouse. Invite the learned professions to speak at labor meetings and to divulge the information they hav gained. The orator who has simply zeal without knowledge is the workingman's enemy. Abjure alcohol, and never allow yourselvs to be made to believe that in any form it can do you the least good. Liv high intellectually and low physically. The plainest food is the best. Find consolation, not in thinking of another world, of which the priests profess to tell you; not in dreaming of the impossible; not in pandering to the appetites, in strong drink, nor in gratifying the passions; but seek relief from temporary troubles in culture, in the study of books, in communion with the great minds of the past and present, and through these become acquainted with the future.

The speaker closed with a quotation from Goethe which he recited in German, in spite, as he remarked, of the fact that it might grate on the ears of some. Whether this apology was intended to appease the Germans present or the English-speaking auditors, Mr. Wakeman did not make entirely clear.

Such was the tenor of Mr. Wakeman's remarks, extending considerably over an hour. His listeners applauded him heartily at the close, but it is safe to say that many of them had never heard anything like it before. The present writer has listened to perhaps a hundred speeches on the labor problem within the past year, including some by Henry George and John Swinton, and he has to agree with Mr. Walford, who followed the speaker, that this address had more common sense in it than any other that he ever heard. And the cause is easy to find. Apart from Mr. Wakeman's ability, he is a Freethinker and does not trim his sails to catch any theological wind.

The lecture was followed by a collection and a discussion, the latter being helped along by Mrs. Leonard, Madam Delescluze, Mr. Walford, and a speaker who was not identified. The collection amounted to $10.20. What the discussion amounted to the reporter did not stay to learn.

On the evening of Friday, the 11th, Miss Gertrude B. Kelly, of Newark, will address the meeting at the same place, and other speakers of ability will follow.

Communications.

Boston Liberals.

On Friday forenoon, May 28th, Mr. Moncure D. Conway made a vigorous attacks on Mr. John Fiske's attempt to get arguments from science for endowing the great unknown cause of all things with moral attributes. This conception is not authorized by Herbert Spencer, and is utterly untenable in view of the amount of moral and natural evil, a result whose cause cannot be good. The speaker pictured the devil as appearing to him and saying: "Do you want to construct a perfect system of scientific theism? To do it, you must hav one thing—me! You know that Jehovah could not stand alone until I came from Persia to help him, and make him the First Person in the Trinity. The Universalists hav tried to get along without me, and you see where they are. You must look at the evil as well as the good; and so you can hav no religion without me." "But who are you?" At this question, the horns and hoofs disappeared; Satan's eyes turned to volcanoes, his hair to the sweeping sands of the desert, his mouth to a marsh breathing out malaria, his limbs to barren rocks. He is inorganic nature, destitute of moral purpose.

This whole address is soon to appear in the Index, and the number for May 27th has published an essay written in a kindred spirit, by Dr. Edmund Montgomery, for the Convention of the 28th. Its length made it more fit for presentation in this form. The subject is "The Scientific Basis of Religious Intuition." Among characteristic sentences are these: "Those of us are innocent of the real ways of nature who, during a civilized walk among flowers and butterflies, giv vent to feelings of veneration for the benignant power that has shaped such beautiful and happy things. These very gauderies of our earth are out-and-out the product of successful cunning and greed." "It is very evidently a misleading illusion to believe that there exists any moral purpose and direction in the universe outside human consciousness." "Morality is a delicate effluence of human reciprocity, existing exclusivly among our own conscious selvs, and nowhere else, as far as our knowledge reaches." "Genuin morality is always of the social kind, being exclusivly of social origin and significance."

Substantially the same ground was taken by Mr. B. F. Underwood, who showed that nature is so plainly unmoral as to giv no basis for scientific theism. Dr. Paul Carus complained of the lack, even in this free land, of really free thought. And this session of the Convention of the Free Religious Association closed by an indignant exposure by a Brahman of "What is wanting in Christianity." Mr. Gopal Vinayak told, amid frequent applause, how the religion of the Americans had proved itself lacking justice in their robbing the Indian of his land and the African of his freedom; lacking humanity, in the cruelty toward the Chinese, as well as in the oppression of the poor; and lacking in honesty of purpose from the day when Jesus worked miracles to make people believe in him, to this time, when missionaries are sent out to open markets for manufactures.

That afternoon the labor problem was taken up by Hon. Carroll D. Wright, who showed how much better off the laborer was now, as a worker for himself, than he was in old times, when he was a serf working for his master. The only trouble is that the interests of laborer and employer often clash. Hence the need that workingmen organize for mutual defense. Best of all would it be for the laborer to be admitted to so full and fair a share in the profits as to bring the interests of labor and capital into perfect harmony.

That evening there was a very pleasant festival in the Meionaon. The chairman, Mr. Moncure D. Conway, of Brooklyn, N. Y., congratulated the association on having planted itself on a purely ethical basis and left all speculations about theology to individual taste. After music by the Weber Quartette, he introduced a representativ of the race whose genius first opened to religion its highest development.

Rabbi Schindler spoke of the reproach cast upon the radicals of tearing down, without building up, and said that it was not a thing to be ashamed of, for it is not our business to build up. The metaphor is a mistake. Religion is not a building which can be constructed by artificial effort. It is a tree that grows, and all we can do is to prune away the dead branches and remove the incumbrances that keep it back from the sunlight and the airs of heaven. We cannot teach religion, whether it is Judaism or orthodoxy or Liberalism. Freethought the community now grows full of. Our largest building, even Boston Common itself, would not now hold those whose faith has grown up from within to this freedom. Their faith was not built up; and we should acknowledge plainly that our mission is to tear away obstructions, and let our tree grow up to shelter the whole community.

Mr. Conway now said that he had found a more cordial welcome in England among the established clergy than among dissenters, though he had not always found it so here. But, Mr. Ward, whom he next introduced, had the English feeling.

Mr. Julius H. Ward said that he had just come from a congress of American churches which met to counteract narrow tendencies and to widen the church. He looked forward to the time when the church would take in all the interests of society, and the place for the Free Religionists would be on the Episcopal platform, working together under God for the life of humanity.

After music, Mrs. Cheney then spoke of the readiness of the Free Religionists to take in what they found good everywhere, either in English Episcopacy or Indian Brahmanism, and paid a tribute to Mrs. Joshee, whose success in her medical studies in Philadelphia was to be crowned with a hospital in her Eastern home.

Mr. Joshee spoke in a very simple and natural way of the novelty of the meeting to him, and described an excursion of his to a farmhouse. The Quaker lady, to whom he had an introduction, peeped out through the blinds and wanted to shut the door in his face. He was tired and sat down on the steps, and she offered him a dollar; but he heard that she was very religious. Then he met her husband, a man with no religion, no ethics, no anything, and he found that he was all right. He was a friend, and Joshee went in and stayed all night.

After more music, Mr. Conway introduced Rev. M. J. Savage, who in his modesty told a story of a circuit-rider who introduced himself as a messenger of the Lord, and was told by his friend, "Well, the Lord must be mighty short on it for hands." He took up the same theme as the earlier speakers, the broadening of faiths, and said that he wanted something broader than Unitarianism, broader than Christianity, and that was humanity. The religion of humanity was moving forward, and going as fast, perhaps, as is healthy. We liv in an age of change. It took centuries to get from paganism to Christianity, centuries more for science to replace credulity, and we must not expect our own movement to triumph at once; and he told the story of the colored preacher who had been struggling with Abbot's "Scientific Theism," and at last gave it up, with the explanation that he could believe in God a good deal easier than he could read that book.

F. M. Holland.

Note.—To these records of how fast thought is moving in Boston, I wish to add an instance of how much freedom of speech is encouraged in Texas. Judge Cook, who, as candidate for governor, is not particularly desirous to make himself unpopular, says in reply to those who thank him for some criticism of the Knights of Labor. "By the help of God and the other gentlemen, I hope to be able to stand the racket."

Mr. Everett in His Own Behalf.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The Truth Seeker of the 29th is at hand, and words fail me to fitly express my views on its "make up;" I only wish that it may continue. Had I wealth I would ask you to strike me off one thousand of these pictures, like those this week, and I would cover every dead wall in this city. Underneath each I would hav added, "Subscribe for The Truth Seeker, 33 Clinton Place, New York, $3 per year." But I write this to ask you to giv me a little space to put my case before Pollock, Severance, W. E. S., et al, as I see your piece, "Knights of Labor Bigotry," has stirred up not a few. Pollock dubs me a crank. To that I say, "Pollock, would to The Truth Seeker thou and many more were as I, save these bonds." I may not use the mildest methods in dealing with superstition; as to that it is but a difference of opinion. O Pollock, I may be cranky; if so, thank The Truth Seeker. I hav no use for Gods, Christs, or any of the tom-foolishness of religion. For this, and daring to publish the same in a town overrun by Christians, am I in the sad plight of to-day. I am a law-abiding citizen; I neither drink liquor (not even beer, though an anti-Prohibitionist) nor use tobacco; in fact, as expressed by one upholding the course taken by the Knights, the only thing they found against me was, "He curses God Almighty in words that would shock a pagan." How?—"calling him the most hogish monopolist of the age?" With this as a prelude I will now briefly state the case as it is, so that every reader of The Truth Seeker may hav a chance to intelligently consider the facts as they are, and what I shall say here I will prove when called on. In the first place, let me state I am not opposed to labor or labor interests, or even the Knights of Labor on its broad basis of its principles; but when the order is used, as it has been in my case, to oppress a man simply because he publishes a Freethought paper, then I will oppose it until justice is done me.

In July, E.M. 285, I commenced the publication of the Labor Advocate in this place, advocating labor and Freethought. As the result of my labors, September 3d an assembly was organized of thirty-seven members. I hav heretofore refrained from claiming any credit for being the instrument by which an assembly was organized here. I wrote for an organizer; I saved all my labor exchanges and scattered them; I from the first issue urged organization; when it came to getting up the names some one wanted me to procure them; the organizer wrote me to that effect. To them both I replied, No, I am known as a rank Infidel, and it may prejudice the order if I get up the names. From the first to the last in the assembly room I said nothing of my views or my paper other than the night of the organization when I took the organizer aside and told him if there was anything to recognize a God or religion I wanted to know it and I would retire. He assured me there was not. I placed myself on record before those assembled as an Infidel, asking if any objected to me to make it known. No objection was made, and I took the obligation, but refused to take it with an uplifted hand, as the A. K. requires, so had to take it alone, the rest waiting. Now, though the order has no chaplain or prayers, why do they require your hand to be uplifted when taking the obligation? Soon after the charter came they found the A. K. required a book on the center table to represent knowledge, so in they toted a gilt-edged, brass-bound Bible. I objected to it on the grounds that the constitution and by-laws said the order paid no regard to creeds, and, therefore, no book representing religion or irreligion was a lawful book to represent knowledge. I called for the dictionary, or even last year's almanac, so that it was not a representativ book of creeds or no creeds. I said I would object, on the same grounds, to hav Paine's "Age of Reason" there, basing my objection on the law laid down in the constitution and by-laws, and the statement made by Powderly himself at the last General Assembly. Below is an extract from the Manchester, N. H., Budget, labor paper, that published what purported to be his words—italics are mine:

At the late General Assembly of the Knights of Labor which convened at Hamilton, Ontario, Oct. 5, 1885, T. V. Powderly said:

"I pledge you in the name of this Order that henceforth we will move onward and forward, knowing no color, no creed, no nationality."

The Master Workman then arose and said that the next night a suitable book would be placed there in its place. Now, notice Christian duplicity—the next night, after the Assembly was called to order, and at a time when I could not withdraw without a great disturbance, they fetched forth the same gilt-edged, brass-bound Bible and laid it reverently on the center-table. I said nothing, but awaited the coming of recess, when I could retire without any scene; but that night, contrary to their usual custom, they had no recess, so I awaited the close, and I never went back, for I referred the matter to the court, and finally it went to the General Master Workman by the lodge under their statement, and he decided against me. Below is the letter. I giv it entire, without any comments, which I would like to make, but want of space forbids:

Office of the General Master Workman,
Scranton, Pa., Oct. 23, 1885.

L. W. Bowers, Wabash, Ind., Dear Sir and Brother: The book on the center-table may be a Bible, a copy of the constitution, or the A. K.

Some men entertain the idea that they should fight God in order to emancipate labor. They become members of the order and at once begin to advance their ideas. Ninety-nine one-hundredths of our order belong to some religion or other and will oppose the introduction of Infidelity as a means of elevating labor, and if our Infidel members will only fight aggregated capital instead of the creator they can accomplish something. Otherwise they will not.

Your Assembly did right. Accept my thanks.

Fraternally yours, T. V. Powderly, G. M. W.

Italics and small capitals are mine. I want you to notice particularly those words in small capitals and couple them with the words in small capitals under the head of "Expulsions" further on. Immediately on the receipt of this letter, I placed a written withdrawal in the hands of the Master Workman. He granted me my request, as my dues were all paid, and I now hav my receipts up to November 1st. The date of my withdrawal was October 26th. I also changed the paper to a distinct and entire Freethought paper, changing the name to Rights of Man. December 1st, I moved my office to Mt. Vernon. The office that did my press-work refused to do my work a little over a month after I commenced there, though I had paid right up, and so I had to suspend. I was aware some force was working against me, but knew not at that time what it was, though the prosecuting attorney told me he had letters from parties in Wabash stating they were not only determined to stop my paper, but run me out of the state. He refused to giv me their names. I came back here the 5th of February, and was handed by a friend a copy of The Journal of United Labor (official organ of the Knights of Labor) of the date of Jan. 25, 1886, and I found this under the head of "Expulsions."

No. 1510. By L. A. No. 4,204, Wabash, Indiana, Arthur C. Everett, for violation of obligation and conduct unbecoming a Knight. Hight, six feet; dark complexion; wears eye-glasses; now editor of a paper in Mount Vernon called The Rights of Man.

These words in small caps are as significant to the members of an order who are constantly advised to "Remember your friends and boycott your enemies," as was the advice given by the Irishman at the fight at Donnybrook Fair: "Whenever you see a head hit it." Now, then, another thing right here: the constitution and by-laws say every member shall hav a fair and impartial trial and be furnished a copy of the charges. Now, I never knew a thing about the trial, never had a copy of the charges; in fact, knew not a thing of it until I saw the above in print. Neither can they get rid of this charge by saying that they sent them by mail, for I was no obscure man; neither was there any other Everett who would be likely to get it. And further, from Oct. 26th to Dec. 8th, they had plenty of time to cife me to trial, and I would hav been only to glad to meet them; but no, like sneaking, cowardly Christians, they waited until I went away, then went through the farce of expelling me; for I can prove that by withdrawing on the 26th of October, having my dues paid ahead, I was legally no longer a member. I then started out to get work, but I found that I was a marked man, for wherever a Knight could discriminate against me, he did it. For a time I was in Toledo, and while there I wrote out in brief my grievances and sent them to T. V. Powderly. Here is his answer:

SCRANTON, March 6, 1886.

ARTHUR C. EVERETT, Esq., 216 Tenth street, Toledo, Ohio, My Dear Sir: If the case stands as reported by you, then a wrong has been done.

I will cause an investigation to be made.

I hav a right to my opinion, as you undoubtedly hav to yours. Whether you are a Christian or a heathen has nothing to do with the question before us.

You will hear from me later on.

Respectfully yours, T. V. POWDERLY, per M.S.F.

Though since then I hav repeatedly written him, yet he remains silent. Why?

I, in all this, and now, only ask to agree to disagree. In the assembly room I said not a word in regard to my paper—the rules exclude politics and religion. Constitution and by-laws, T. V. Powderly says, pay no regard to creeds. Then why this unjust oppression of me? Show me that I hav violated any obligation or done that which is unbecoming a Knight, and I will make amends if it does not require a recognition, even tacitly, of religion. Further, convince me beyond a doubt that the Knights of Labor are entirely free from any religious taint (and by that act you will hav to convict Wabash Valley Local Assembly No. 4,204 of injustice), and they will hav no stronger champion, as far as my ability lies; and I will run my paper, as before, in the interest of the Knights of Labor and Freethought. In the assembly room I never advanced my views. It is not the place for any one to advance their religious views; in there they are assembled to discuss the labor problem and devise means to ameliorate the condition of the wage-worker. Outside they should and must agree to disagree. And, in closing, I am willing and anxious to meet any committee on this. I will meet them half-way; I will concede everything that is fair; but in the Knights of Labor they can't hav me and the Gods and Christs of that Bible which upholds the monopolists and capitalists by teaching us "to be subject to the higher powers," and to "submit yourself to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake." Until the wage-worker is evoluted so far that he is far enough above superstition to trample such damnable teaching and its authors (metaphorically) beneath their feet, they cannot look for much advancement in their condition.

Freethinkers, I don't write this for aid, but I hope that it may bring justice to me; not that I want to come out ahead, but that I can stand a better chance to get employment. Some may yet say that I am not boycotted. Well, let them tell me why it is that when I agree to contract to work for a man three months for four dollars a week, giving him the first week's work, as it was new business to me, the job was given to another. Again, I had a chance to buy a small second-hand press. I had paid all but seven dollars on it, and though out of debt and willing to mortgage my material to secure it, giving one dollar for the use of it two months, I could not hire it and had to giv up the press.

I shall resume the publication of Rights of Man in some locality as soon as I can get a press, for I hav a good many subscribers whose time has not run out, and it is the only way I can pay them, they having paid ahead; and I wish this could be settled before I get out the initial number, for I don't wish to even seem to be working against labor interests. For the destruction of all myths,

An iconoclastic Materialist, ARTHUR C. EVERETT.

Wabash, Ind., Lock box 171.

PERHAPS the most important editorial that has recently appeared in the Baptist Examiner is the following. We get it by way of the Evening Post's "Religious Opinion:" "Biliousness is very prevalent at this season, the symptoms being bitter taste, offensiv breath, coated tongue, sick headaches, drowsiness, dizziness, loss of appetite. If this condition is allowed to continue, serious consequences may result. By promptly taking ——'s sarsaparilla a fever may be avoided, or premature death prevented. It is a positiv cure for biliousness. Sold by all druggists."

SEND to THE TRUTH SEEKER office for a catalog of the books we hav for sale. The catalog is free.

Land Robbery.

If our public domain had been turned over one hundred years ago to the inmates of any insane asylum, they could not hav made a worse disposal of it than Congress has.

If I go out forty rods from where I now sit, I come to a lot of hundreds of acres owned by two men. If I go down this railroad eight miles, I come to a lot of thirty-six thousand acres owned by the heirs of one man. If I go four miles further, I come to a lot of eight thousand owned by two men. If I go east twenty miles, I come to a lot of seventy thousand acres owned by one man. This is what I am told by the oldest inhabitants here. They say much of this land was bought of our government years ago for ten cents an acre.

If the government had given out this land as they should hav done, without money or price, in farm lots, to those who would hav cultivated it, and who had a natural or birthright to it, it would now be under cultivation and furnish revenue for the public expenses; or, if it had been kept in the hands of government, the oak timber on much of it would now be worth several hundred dollars an acre for railroad sleepers. But the young timber on much of it has been cut off once in twenty or thirty years, burnt into charcoal, ground into powder and sent to Philadelphia to filter whisky through, while the railroads are sending to Illinois and other states for sleepers; and the men brought up around these tracts, who would hav been glad to cultivate it, and who had a birthright to it, hav been driven into mines, factories, to the ocean and the ends of the earth to find labor; and thus all the other departments of industry hav, by this wholesale robbery, become overstocked with hands, underbidding each other to get bread.

This land robbery is the sole cause of nine-tenths of all the trouble now existing between capital and labor, the cause of nine-tenths of all the poverty, vice, crime, and misery. Aliens own thirty millions of land here, on which their agents are making slaves of our own countrymen who hav been robbed of their birthright to land.

If our government would restore all the wild land to the people, let all who want it hav a farm lot free, and allow no man to own more than one hundred acres, reserving the balance for future generations, and do it very soon, they will save the nation from Anarchy, and a more destructiv revolution than the world has ever known. J. HACKER.

Berlin, N. J.

Our London Letter.

If there is one thing above another that the Christians of all ages hav claimed as one of their most conspicuous features, it is humility; and probably the reason why this "virtue" is so rarely visible in the believer is because he esteems it as so precious a thing that it should not be used in an everyday, commonplace manner, but should be carefully treasured up like the gilt-edged family Bible, and must not be exposed to the light of day for fear of its becoming tarnished. As, however, the faithful never act for themselvs, but invariably rule their conduct by the example set them by their leaders, and as these latter are not particularly humble-minded, their humility decreasing in proportion as their salaries increase, it may be that the flock does not like to appear wiser than the shepherd, and therefore keeps what are called the Christian virtues in the background. Last Sunday I attended a popular chapel to hear a sermon given by a prominent preacher in the Dissenting interest, being assured that I should hav a great intellectual treat. A doctor of divinity is supposed to possess great learning, and every word he speaks is spoken with authority, and must not be gainsaid; so I prepared myself for a marvelous discourse, and, as might be easily supposed, was considerably disappointed.

This great orator, as he is termed, had his oration already prepared, and so had nothing to do but read it, which occupied him the best part of an hour—and very ill spent time for myself it was; the only thing I gathered was that humility and arrogance appear to be synonymous terms. The "learned" doctor gave it as his ipse dixit that the office of a preacher was the most honorable that any man could possibly engage in, and one that archangels might enjoy, on the principle, I suppose, of "anything for a change." He considered that the singing and prayers were superfluities—in which I entirely agreed—but that preaching was the one thing needful, as the preacher was the person who could inform the laity all about the inmost thoughts of God, and consequently he should be carefully looked after and well paid for such very valuable services. The Protestants are always loud in their denunciations of their Catholic rivals for believing in the infallibility of the pope and that he is in direct communication with the celestial authorities, but to my unenlightened mind I could not see the difference in the two assumptions; they appeared to me to be exactly the same. This very humble discourse was for the purpose of extoling the missionary business, and ended with a collection for some missionary society. No doubt it influenced many of the believers to giv bountifully, and brought much grist to the mill.

These societies hav been doing fairly well of late, notwithstanding the trade depression, and I understand, the church missionary society had the largest haul last year that had ever fallen into their net. How the wire-pullers must chuckle at the simplicity of the contributors! And what high old times they can hav with so much money passing through their hands! But as missionaries are such extremely useful members of society, and produce so much more than they consume, we cannot grudge them what they are able to secure. It is highly necessary that the incomes of the various religious societies should increase every year, as during the months of May and June, when Exeter Hall is in all its glory, all the exhibitions and other places of amusement are open, and as it behooves the country clergy to visit all the sights while they are in London, their expenses are increasing, and therefore must be met by some one if they cannot manage so to do themselvs, and they are not likely to do this while the begging-box goes round so merrily and fills so well. J. D.

London, Eng., May 29, 1886.

Anti-Mongols.

I never knew the cause of the hostil move against the Chinese out here until I became familiar with the locality. One must sympathize with the feeling while here. Eastern people do not see the importance of the common laboring man, but Westerns feel it daily. Loafers, non-improvers, non-producers, are utterly useless to our small, growing communities. Now we face the cold, naked proposition out here: Shall we become a region held by a few landlandlords and merchants, where all the labor is done by Chinese? Shall our social system become Orientalized? Did you ever notice how the English sparrows exterminate all other birds, save the few largest birds of prey? Just so do the Chinese root out, displace, and annihilate all other workers. Every man will tell you here that, were there a conceivable limit to this Mongol immigration, or even to the variety of its occupations, the situation could not be so alarming. But when we know that fifty million Chinese can introduce themselvs here within a few years and never be missed in China, and that they fill every occupation, from law and medicin up to the most necessary daily labor, doing everything deftly, insinuating themselvs everywhere, supplanting all but the great employers, and even them in time, because labor conquers all things, the people of this coast, seeing, feeling this every day, no wonder the phenomenon assumes, to those looking ahead, monstrous proportions. "The fact is, the Chinese beat us on every point where hand labor, perseverance, and tireless industry are required," said a very old resident here to me. But the Westerns would not even object to them for all that, alarming as the future looms up. These Mongols huddle together in their own quarters, liv on ten cents per day, never spend a penny outside of themselvs, never improve. Their labor, though of use, never redistributes one dollar's worth, and is therefore a positiv calamity, like sickness, litigation, etc. The Irishman or Yankee you employ buys of you, builds near you, adds yearly to values here; the Chinese take your cash, but never reciprocate directly or indirectly. All history proves that whenever any sect or people clan together among another, taking from but never reciprocating, they become hated, and exterminators or exterminated. A thousand years B.C. thus did the Jews, and were mobbed out of every city and state in time. Ditto Parsees, Gipsies, Mormons, etc. The humble negro among us buys and sells and finds warm friends in almost every house. Here is the explanation of anti-Mongolism, and did you reside here it would "come home to your business and bosoms." It's a mistake about the Chinese sending out gold, nor would it matter if they did, if they exchanged their imports for our products. "The Chinese will never do." Wisely, the people out here are determined to cease all patronage of John.

Never could I conceive how such monstrous masses of people could occupy the cities and towns so close together as described by Abbé Huc (the best Chinese traveler who ever wrote) until I visited Chinese town, San Francisco. The Chinese in person are very clean and well-dressed, look as just out of the bath, forever dabble in water. This corrects the foulness of their herding somewhat. A room 20x20 will hold as many as can lie down, and some that lie across. Fact. You can see that these large tenement houses are filled from garret to cellar with Johnnies, as so many rats. You are in the cellar, it is just the same; but beneath that lowest deep there is a lower deep, and beneath that another, and all stuffed full of Chinese. By the skies! but 'tis a sight to see.

I therefore believe that there are cities in China not down on the maps, containing from one to ten million people, as Huc says. Their census, he insists, is taken with more accuracy and speed than we dream of, because every nine souls has a head, a tenth, whose report is ever ready for the heads of hundreds and thousands. CLARKE IRVINE.

Portland, Or.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - - JUNE 12, 1886.

The Blood of the Lamb.

By due course of mail the following letter arrived at this office:

"MADISON, OHIO, May 15, 1886.

"TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY: Please take my name off your list, as I don't want the paper. The last picture is too horrid for my Christian friends to look at.

"Respectfully, H. C. GILL."

The picture referred to was in the issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 15th, we take it. The reader will doubtless recollect that the illustration brought not only to the mind's eye but to the physical eye the vicarious atonement scheme in all its hideousness, whereby, through the bleeding of Jesus Christ, man's moral debts are all canceled. There was nothing "horrid" about the illustration except the idea—and for that, Mr. Gill will doubtless readily acknowledge, our artist is not responsible.

Mr. Gill's reason for discontinuing his subscription is that the picture shocks his Christian friends. While we may admire Mr. Gill's consideration for his friends' views, we can but wonder whether his friends are as considerate of his opinions, and whether, in casting out the pictorial mote, as shown them by a Freethought paper, they hav also ejected the verbal bloody beam upon which their religion rests.

That the Christian religion is bestial in its source there is no doubt. It is better fitted for African cannibals than for civilized peoples. But a great many do not realize the brutal character of their superstition, and the picture, "Jesus Paid It All," was designed to open the eyes of such, and reveal to them its horrid absurdity. It appears that Mr. Gill's friends do not wish to be enlightened, and Mr. Gill is complacent enough to stop taking a Freethought paper that they may remain in darkness. Probably it never occurred to Mr. Gill's Christian friends that if they did not like the pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER they need not look at them. If we never printed anything that the Christians could object to, THE TRUTH SEEKER would be an orthodox, not a heterodox, journal. We are not yet quite ready to join the church.

But about this blood. Blood, according to Christian theology, is the sole redeeming element. The blood of Christ is drank at every communion, and his body eaten. The Old and New Testaments are crimson with blood, with which God was pleased. The part blood plays in man's alleged redemption has been the theme of innumerable theologians. Only a few months ago a book on this "root principle" of Christianity was published, and so eminent a Protestant clergyman as Howard Crosby made it the text for stating over again the basis of religion. He said:

"In this book on the use of blood to denote union of life, Dr. Trumbull has brought out into clear light the habits of nations most diverse in character, situation, and age. He shows that the blood was reckoned as the principle of life, and that hence participation in another's blood was the appropriation of his life. The insertion of another's blood into the veins, the drinking of another's blood, the sprinkling with another's blood, are all shown to be in accordance with this root idea. Although this thought is not new, yet Dr. Trumbull has clothed it with new interest and force by the vast number of illustrations which he has laboriously brought forward, and has insisted on a prominence for the thought which heretofore has not been given it. No one can read his attractiv pages without being convinced that his position is just, and that this notion of life union was prominently connected with all blood-ratified treaties and covenants. That this idea is found in the atonement by the blood of the lamb of God is undoubtedly true, and yet we fear Dr. Trumbull has made a mistake in not expressing the other and still higher blood-idea connected with that atonement. In the expiatory offering of the Lamb of God there is not only a union formed, but also sin punished, and, while the drinking Christ's blood (John vi, 54) is certainly union with his life, the shedding Christ's blood is just as certainly the punishment of sin. Here the blood is not life, but death. That is, here is not the *in*fusion of blood, but the *ef*fusion of blood. Life is taken away, and not given. The sacrificial system which God enjoined represented both ideas—the pouring out of the blood for sin, and the participation in the blood for the union of life; and the former was necessary to the latter. Without the shedding of blood there was no remission."

The most noted revivalist of modern times, Dwight L. Moody, has given the world a graphic pen-picture of the estimation in which Christians hold blood. The few extracts from his sermons on another page may be the means of enlightening Mr. Gill's Christian friends as to what their religion really is. If they are as "touchy" on Moody's sermons as upon THE TRUTH SEEKER's picture, we shall look to shortly see them full-fledged Freethinkers. In Mr. Moody's preachment Mr. Gill's Christian friends hav an orthodox sermon. If THE TRUTH SEEKER picture was too horrid for them to look at, what will they say to this? It is a shocking, a disgusting, a bestial sermon. But it is Christianity, and it is upon that Christianity, because we wish to see our race elevated, that we are making war. And upon it we shall continue to make war, striking with pen and pencil the hardest blows possible, until there is no occasion for shocking any mind with a truthful illustration of its root idea.

The "horridness" was not in our cartoon, but in the Christianity of Mr. Gill's Christian friends.

Good Christianity.

The object of the White Cross Army is to promote personal purity among young men. The theory of the army is that men no less than women should abstain from sexual immorality, and that what is sin in the one is sin in the other.

The Young Men's Christian Association, whose object is pretty generally known to be to furnish a living and recreation for a lot of baldheaded old boys, hav been holding an international conference at Harrisburg. One of the resolutions passed was that "it is inadvisable for the associations to engage in any organized efforts for moral reform." The conference further resolved that it "deemed it unwise and contrary to the well-established principles formulated for the guidance of our associations," "to adopt the methods of the White Cross Army and similar societies," though it recognizes the great necessity there is for "persistent effort to promote personal purity among young men."

The Sun, after recounting these facts, becomes indignant at the baldheaded young men who manipulated the conference, and queries: "Are we to infer that the Young Men's Christian Associations are less exacting in their requirements for membership than the White Cross Army is? Are they less intolerant of the seducer and the libertin? Are they afraid to demand 'personal purity among young men' who would come into their ranks or remain there? Will they go on praying with closed eyes while a woman is flung into the gutter and her paramour is allowed to go unreproached and to be rewarded with honor? If they are disposed to so act, let them at once pass another resolution at Harrisburg striking out the word Christian from the title of their organization."

While warmth from the Sun may be natural, we must advise the editor to acquaint himself with the fundamental principles of Christianity, and then instead of counseling the baldheaded young men who compose the association to drop the word Christian, he will see that the right emphasis upon the title of the organization would necessitate its being printed in italics. Christian theology declares humanity to be totally depraved, and it follows, therefore, that every man, woman, and child in the universe is a fearful sinner. But it says, then, throw your sins upon Jesus Christ, the scapegoat; repent, and you will be all right. Young men who corrupt young women usually follow this principle closely. They point, as Adam pointed at Eve, to the young woman, and say, She did it. Then they repent of having been found out—and Christian society, like its Christian deity, forgivs them. But it never forgivs the woman. The doom of Eve is dinned into her ears, and she is forever an outcast. In all this the principles of Christianity and the conduct of God are strictly followed. The backbone of the whole scheme is, Let the other man walk.

The Young Men's Christian Association has been true to its name in negativly admitting that the attitude of society toward a fallen girl and her paramour is righteous. It is an Infidel, and not a Christian, idea that everyone must bear the punishment for his or her own sins.

Prayer.

A Congregational journal of this city devotes considerable space to an editorial on prayer. If the article had been the leader in some obscure religious sheet no one would hav been surprised at it. But the Independent claims to be literary and scientific as well as religious, and that it should publish so foolish an essay is rather remarkable. The meat of it is that prayers are certainly answered in one of four ways. The first proposition and affirmation is so unique in its simple idiocy that we quote it entire:

"First: He answers our general prayer for daily bread and providential care. Our common needs are supplied in answer to prayer. But it is urged that so are the common needs of men supplied who never pray. We will not here discuss that proposition further than to say that there is a difference between eating bread off God's table and being clothed by a Father's hand, and the common method of filching a living from the world merely by the labor of our own hands."

The second affirmation is that God answers prayers directly, as instance Hannah praying for a son, Hezekiah for his life and for the destruction of the armies of Sennacherib, Elijah that no rain should fall in Samaria for forty-two months, and the "church" praying for Peter's release. The third statement is that God answers prayer indirectly. The proof given of this is, that when Paul thrice besought the Lord to take away the thorn, God gave him more grace to bear the pain. Fourthly, God answers prayer by saying No. "What we call unanswered prayers are oftentimes prayers which hav been very decidedly answered. We ask and receive not, because we ask for something that we may consume in our flesh, which if God should giv it us would be for our hurt and eternal damage. A wise and loving heavenly father says 'No,' to such petition. Shall we say that because God says 'No,' he has not answered us?"

This covers the ground pretty well, and maintains the reputation of God among his servants. But skeptics, we fear, will still remain unconvinced. They will deny, first, that God does supply daily bread and providential care. There are a great many who are not supplied. Their common needs are unattended to. They will say, second, that there is no authentic instance of any one in this era having bread laid upon his table who did not work to earn it, or who did not obtain it through human intervention. Those who do not pray get as much bread as those who do, if they work as hard, and the refusal of the writer to consider this is suspicious. The difference between bread obtained by prayer and bread obtained by labor cannot well be discussed until it is shown that bread ever is supplied by superhuman means. We will, however, make the editor of the Independent an offer. He shall agree to eat no food except that supplied in answer to prayer, and we will agree to eat none but that obtained by labor. His food must get to him with absolutely no human effort, and ours shall come with no divine intervention. The test shall be, which of us livs the longer.

That prayer is ever answered directly is a proposition utterly incapable of proof. Occasionally a person desires an object and prays for it. Then he gets up from his knees and works for it. By and by he gets it. Then, if he is a sufficiently credulous Christian, he credits it to God, and says his prayer is answered. But he never would hav got it if he had remained on his knees. Down East a story is told that in a country district the school-house was once destitute of fire-wood. The weather was cold and the teacher and the scholars shivered and suffered. The teacher knelt down, followed by the scholars, and offered up a fervent petition to the air. A few minutes afterward the hearty "whoa" to his oxen of a farmer of the district caused the teacher and scholars to look out the window. There in the school-yard stood a sled load of wood, and the entrance of the farmer brought them all to their feet. "Oh, I am so thankful to God," burst out the teacher. "He has answered our prayer." "Bin prayin' for wood?" inquired the farmer. "Yes, and now you are here, and our prayer is answered," responded the teacher. "When d'ye pray?" asked he. "Just a few minutes ago," she replied. "Wal, I started with this 'ere load two hours ago," he said, "and I reckin if I hadn't ye'd be freezin' still."

It will be noticed that the proofs adduced in support of the direct-answer theory are not contemporaneous. They are not verifiable. In the instance of Hannah, too, it must be recollected that when she prayed for issue there was a man of God sitting by, which circumstance may or may not hav to do with the case. If the Jewish ministers of old were like unto the Christian ministers of to-day, the coincidence could at least be noted. As for Hezekiah, the general opinion of pathologists now is that a boil is not a fatal disease. The historian put it very strong when he said that Hezekiah was in danger. But be that as it may, to Isaiah and his fig poultice is due the credit of Hezekiah's recovery, if holy writ is accurate. The other instances noted are not reliable. The Lord is usually on the side of large armies and strong jail walls, and his angels cannot overcome a king without a larger army than the king possesses, nor break jail without duplicate keys. Our Congregational contemporary should adduce some proof a few thousand years later—if it can find any.

The indirect method of answering prayer is an ingenious apology for no answer. A man is plagued by what he terms a thorn. He prays for its removal, which prayer is not granted. Then he becomes resigned, and his resignation is offered as a proof of prayer-answering! This is certainly remarkable proof, and Christians will do well to treasure it. But if God answers indirectly with No, we fail to see why a direct no is ever necessary to be inferred. An indirect refusal is as effectual as a direct one, and might save the feelings of the petitioners. Summed up, therefore, the whole matter is this way: God has the reputation of being a prayer-answering individual. But no instance of his so doing being known, it is necessary to invent excuses for his remissness. Otherwise the people would doubt his goodness or existence, and would question the utility of maintaining a large number of priests to solicit a divine interference with mundane affairs which never occurs. To support their system of imposture, therefore, the priests say to the people: Do not doubt that God answers your petitions. The fact that you pray and are alive proves it. The other fact that people who do not pray are just as much alive has nothing to do with the case. 1. If you pray for anything, and ever get it, that is indubitable proof that God sent it. 2. If you do not get it it is just as good proof. 3. If you pray for one thing, and do not get it, but do get another, that is proof that God answers you. 4. If your prayer is absolutely and entirely without effect, that, too, is proof that God always replies to the petition of his people. Believe in God, support the preachers, and you will get to heaven.

If we hav not interpreted aright the Christian argument for prayer, we are willing to be corrected.

Editorial Notes.

PRESIDENT PORTER's statement before the Nineteenth Century Club that "Darwin's doctrin is perfectly consistent with Theism" because "Darwin himself asserted his belief in an intelligent creator," is hardly borne out by the facts. Darwin was an Agnostic, and so described himself.

IT is not our fault that the able report of the annual meeting of the Free Religious Association, published in another place, is headed, "Boston Liberals." The responsibility rests with the secretary, Mr. F. M. Holland. We trust that it will stimulate the Free Religionists to become worthy of the new name which is thus semi-officially given them.

A METHODIST paper raps the Episcopalians by saying that "gowns, crosses, ribbons, and genuflexions save nobody." The Church Standard retorts that "neither do camp-meetings, love-feasts, telling your 'experience,' and shouting glory save anybody." No doubt these journals are both right, but will they please enlighten the poor pagan as to what all this chatter about salvation means? Saved from what?

JOHN JASPER, of "the sun do move" notoriety, has a rival in Bishop Turner of the African Methodist church of Georgia, Kentucky, and Tennessee. In a lecture given recently at Shelbyville, Ky., he said: "I admire the great inventions of white men, and especially in controling electricity; but the subjection of God's agent is carried too far in making it light the world. This has already changed the meteorology of our country. Look at the floods, hurricanes, cyclones, and other atmospheric disturbances taking place in the heavens and upon the earth. I predict that the unbalancing of the air currents, which electric lights are causing, will in a few years, if they increase in numbers as fast as in the past five years, cause whole cities to be blown away at a time, and floods unlike any save Noah's." In another lecture he assured his hearers that before the distillation of whisky was invented people were giants, requiring beds fifteen feet long and nine feet wide. Whisky is to blame for the decrease in stature of the human race. The Methodist church should be proud of its bishop.

IN his address to the annual convention of the Episcopal church of the diocese of Long Island, Bishop Littlejohn said that "the subject of greatest importance was the decreasing supply of candidates for the priesthood." Good! The young men of Mr. Littlejohn's neighborhood are getting sensible. May the seven hundred pastorless parishes speedily become seven thousand, if there are so many in the country.

JOHN MOST has been sentenced to one year's imprisonment and to pay a fine of $500, the extreme penalty the law allows. The chairman of the meeting at which Most expressed his alleged incendiary sentiments, who did not say a word, was sentenced to nine months' imprisonment. Another orator, who at a subsequent meeting echoed Most's doctrins, was given nine months' imprisonment, and ordered to pay the state $250. "I hav sworn," said Thomas Jefferson, the Infidel president, "hostility to every form of oppression over the mind of man." It is evident that Recorder Smyth is not a Jeffersonian. Rather is he a Jeffreys. Talk, in this country, is no longer cheap. Very few will be found willing to pay the extravagant price put upon it by our courts.

THE church congress recently held at Cleveland was composed of a bishop of the Roman Catholic church and ministers of all the Protestant denominations—Baptist, Christians, Congregational, Disciples, Evangelical Association, Evangelical Lutheran, Free Baptist, Methodist Episcopal, Methodist Episcopal South, Methodist Protestant, Church of New Jerusalem, Presbyterian, Presbyterian Church South, Protestant Episcopal, Reformed Presbyterian and Roman Catholic, Friends, Unitarians, Moravians, United Brethren in Christ, United Presbyterian and Universalist. As yet, however, we hav heard of no burnings, hangings, burying alive, torturing, or other Christian practices having been perpetrated. Times hav changed since the days of Torquemada, John Calvin, and the rest of the Reformers.

AT the execution of Lee Barnes, at Dover, Ark., week before last, a religious meeting of remarkable fervor was held. The Rev. Mr. Jolly was upon the scaffold, and, together with some thirty more spectators, sang, "What a Friend We Hav in Jesus," Barnes joining fervently in the singing. Afterward Barnes made a speech confessing his crime, and saying he could now meet his God in peace. Then "Jesus Paid It All" was sung, and Barnes went around to each one on the scaffold and embraced them, saying, "Meet me in heaven." Mr. Jolly then prayed, breaking down in the middle of it, and, clapping his hands together, shouted, "Hallelujah! bless the Lord!" Barnes responded with a loud "Amen!" He was then hanged. His crime was the most atrocious murder ever committed in the county.

THE General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church South on the 26th ult. adopted by an overwhelming vote the following:

"To the several overtures on the subject of the evolution of man sent up by the Presbyteries, the General Assembly returns answer as follows:

"The church remains at this time sincerely convinced that the scriptures, as truly and authoritativly expounded in our 'Confession of Faith' and Catechism, teach that Adam and Eve were created body and soul by immediate acts of almighty power, thereby preserving perfect race unity; that Adam's body was directly fashioned by almighty God without any natural animal parentage of any kind, out of matter previously created of nothing, and that any doctrin at variance therewith is dangerous error, insomuch as by methods of interpreting scripture which it must demand, and in the consequences which by fair implication it will involve, it will lead to a denial of doctrins fundamental to the faith."

That is the high-water mark of Presbyterian intelligence at the present time.

BY way of the Grand Rapids Progressive Age, we get from the Chicago Times of the 8th inst. the following account of spirit-photography: "Two brothers named Keeler hired a room, and began a series of so-called spirit seances. The correspondents of various papers were asked to attend, and were unable to detect any evidence of fraud or imposition, although they confess to hav been completely puzzled and mystified. In one room they materialized spirits, and in another they photographed spirits of persons—declared by visitors to be excellent likenesses of some deceased individuals. It is difficult to persuade one's self of the actual truth of such a performance before more is heard in regard to it. Every facility had been given to the visitors to examin the rooms, and the furniture, and the photographing apparatus. The furniture consists of one cambric curtain, shutting off one corner of the room, where the medium sits. The walls are solid. The spirits are photographed in the other room, alongside of the face of a visitor who is seated in an arm-chair opposit a white screen and a common photographing apparatus." The Banner of Light, however, is skeptical in the matter. In the issue of that journal of May 8th, the editor says: "Our Washington correspondent, in alluding to spirit-photography in that city, conveying a doubt of its legitimacy, we fully indorse. Through private sources we hav information to the same effect from there. Our own experience regarding spirit-photography has been in the past of a nature to satisfy us that much fraud has been practiced in this connection, although we hav in our possession indubitable evidence that genuin spirit-pictures hav been made. But we are fully satisfied that nearly, if not quite, all pictures of this description made to-day, of which we hav any knowledge, are fraudulent productions." Mrs. Slenker, too, visited these so-called mediums on her journey in search of ghosts, and obtained a photograph from one of these brothers and a "psychometric reading" from the other. She always maintained that both the picture and reading were a farce and humbug. The Keeler brothers are the gentlemen upon whom Mr. R. M. Robinson, the author of the "spirit-photography challenge," published recently in our columns, depends to produce his proof of a spiritual world. The committee proposed by him has been selected, and is awaiting his action. He is not limited to one medium, but may produce any and all claiming to possess gifts in this line.

A NEW Congregationalist church has been built in Atlanta because one could not hold both white and black Christians. In describing its dedication a writer in the Congregationalist says: "The two races will not unite to any extent in Atlanta, or anywhere else. The experiment has been tried in all faithfulness and Christian love in the First Congregational church in Washington, and it is a conspicuous failure; not from any lack of brotherly or Christian feeling, but in the nature of things." The Hon. Frederick Douglass, colored, who is more a Free Religionist than a Christian, sends to the Independent some stinging comments upon this exhibition of race prejudice. He says: "After reading these lines, I was led to exclaim: 'Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the hearing of Robert G. Ingersoll!' It is the saddest confession of the impotency of Christian faithfulness and Christian love that has lately come to my notice, if, indeed, such faithfulness and such love cannot tolerate the presence of two varieties of the human family to worship God under the same roof. We can sit, side by side, in the public hall with white people to hear Robert G. Ingersoll denounce the mistakes of Moses; we can sit in the same circus, and see men and women play all manner of pranks; we can sit in the same theater with white people, and hear the music and see the players; but the nature of things and the impotency of Christian love make it impossible for colored and white people to worship God in the same temple." Mr. Douglass ought to know by this time that Christian professions hav not the slightest influence upon Christian practices. The French hav a manner of inquiring, when a man gets into trouble, "Who is the woman?" The American query now is, "What Sunday-school was he superintendent of?" Mr. Douglass should not allow himself to be surprised at any action of the churches. They are the devil's unaccountables.

Lectures and Meetings.

MRS. H. S. LAKE speaks for the Independent Church of Alliance, O., through the month of June. She will be at Cassadaga Camp August 7th, 8th, 11th, and 13th; at Mount Pleasant Park Camp (Clinton, Ia.), August 15th to 23d; at Onset Bay Camp, August 28th and 29th. Societies wishing her services for fall and winter will address her at Alliance, O., Box 202.

C. B. REYNOLDS lectures at Williamson, N. Y., June 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th; Pultneyville, the 14th and 15th. He will pitch his Tent at Marion June 16th, going thence to Sodus, Lafayette, and Fabius, all in Onondaga county. Afterward he will visit Ballston Spa, N. Y., and Boonton, N. J. Parties desiring the presence of the Tent in their town may address Mr. Reynolds in care of this office. Contributions to aid him may also be sent in our care.

JOHN E. REMSBURG, the noted lecturer and author on Freethought and cotemporary of Ingersoll, lectured last night at the Turner Hall to a small but appreciativ audience. His theme was "Tom Paine, the Apostle of Liberty," and a glowing tribute in masterly language did he pay that great defender of the rights of man. He did not insist that his hearers should adopt his views on orthodox religion, but only asked consideration for them, and was listened to with marked attention and frequently applauded. The diction and thought of the lecture were elegant and profound.—San Antonio Daily Light.

Invited to Prove His Prayer.

From the Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Old Governor McCreery was not a religious man, and did not hav much respect for religion. He preferred a race horse to a church, and a mint julep to a hymn book. One morning Mr. Sutherland, who was the chaplain of the Senate, had some distinguished divine as a guest and invited him to officiate in his place on that day. The stranger, not having ever enjoyed the honor before, thought he would make the most of the case, and delivered a very fervent prayer, which was intended for the spiritual benefit of the senators. There was more truth than compliment in his utterances, and at the conclusion of his prayer Senator McCreery sent to the clerk's desk a resolution.

Mr. McDonald, who was then the chief clerk of the Senate, took the resolution, read it over, colored up to his ears, and, turning around, held a whispered conversation with Mr. Ferry, who was in the chair.

Mr. Ferry declared at once that the resolution of the senator from Kentucky was not in order. Mr. McCreery demanded that it should be read, and there was a little breeze, in which the chair conquered, as he usually does on such occasions.

Several senators rushed up to the desk to see what the paper was about, and it was afterward passed around quite freely. It was a series of whereases, which set forth that the gentleman who had just occupied the floor did not address his remarks to the president of the Senate, as required by the rules, but to a being not recognized by the Constitution of the United States, and entirely unknown to that body:

Whereas, In the remarks of the gentleman he asserted that the Senate of the United States was composed of men who were weak and sinful, and wanting in Christian grace; and

Whereas, If these remarks were true, the persons so described were unfit to represent the several states or to frame laws for the people; therefore be it

Resolved, That the committee on privileges and elections be instructed to summon before them at once the person who had offered the prayer, and compel him to prove the truth of his assertions or retract them.

Letters from Friends.

ENON VALLEY, PA., May 30, 1886.

MY DEAR MR. MACDONALD: Allow me to express, not only my satisfaction, but admiration, for the tone of your leading editorial in THE TRUTH SEEKER of yesterday. In the name of the future, as well as the present, I thank you for the bold and consistent stand you take in defending the liberty of speech in the case of Herr Most and the rest of the Anarchists; for, although I differ from their un-American notions entirely, I feel and think that they hav a perfect right to discuss the subject, since treason, which forfeits liberty and life, consists, not in threatening, but in the overt act of levying war against the government. It is the glory of Freethought that in all past ages it has been on the side of justice as well as truth, and if at the present crisis it should compromise with wrong, and truckle to wealth and power, for the sake either of peace or "respectability," its righteous doom would be sealed. But there is no danger of this. That monosyllable if is as big as the Himalaya mountains, and as impassable. A. B. BRADFORD.

STANGLE P. O., WASH. TER., May 30, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find 25 cents for "The Holy Bible Abridged." I hav a friend who has just begun to doubt ecclesiasticism. I think that "The Holy Bible Abridged" will change the religious sentiment in his locality. The time has come when Freethought should pervade the entire length and breadth of the land. Religion in eastern Washington has but a small following. Catholicism is paying taxes on her holy frauds. Preachers hav gone to work to some extent. The monastery of Spokane Falls is completed. They had to go to Rome for funds to complete it. I consider that Liberalism has done its work pretty well in Eastern Washington. The Holy Ghost at Vancouver is still at work, and a venerated Catholic has sent his darling girl to that holy sink. Much has been said during the last ten years concerning the crimes and cruelties of Christianity, but little has been said about the imprisoned nuns. I do not think it necessary at this enlightened period of the world to keep a castle filled with girls to pray for the holy church and the sinners of this earth; and if those unworthy homes for girls could cease to exist, it would be one grand step in the line of progression. Young ladies are preferred in the nunneries. Why couldn't young men do as well? Will some priest answer the question? E. WINCHESTER.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 27, 286.

MR. EDITOR: The pernicious and evil influence of Spiritualism has been most vividly brought before me during the past week by the incarceration within an insane asylum of a friend and acquaintance of mine, whose mind has been overturned by an overdose of humbuggery and supernaturalism, brought about by attending Spiritual seances during the last few weeks, claiming that he is dead, and that he is Professor Denton.

With the very many examples where bright intellects hav been beclouded in the attempt to invcstigate and fathom that fanatical humbug, it seems strange that there should be anyone who would waste their time upon either of those twin relics of barbarism, orthodoxy and Spiritualism.

There are in your paper nearly every week one or more items about persons who hav lost their reason through the influence of religion. Should you publish the account of all those who break down from the influence of that other delusion, the number would be appalling.

Renouncing orthodoxy and taking up Spiritualism as a substitute is very much like the old saying, jumping from the frying-pan into the fire. Of what use is it to break away from one delusion only to embrace another?

L. L. NORTHUP, Materialist.

MORELAND, MONT., May 16, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Please find postal-note for $3 to renew subscription to your valuable paper. I cannot do without it. The cartoons are simply immense. I am more than pleased with them. I received my books all right. Miss Gardener's arguments, like Paine's, are unanswerable. I wish there were more such noble men and women in the world than there is. I hav been reading two sermons this morning from the Inter-Ocean of Chicago, one by Professor Swing, and the other by the Rev. Lorimer. The subject is the riot in their city, and they ascribe it all to the lack of religion (they don't specify the kind) and a strict observance of the divine law of God. They say all Anarchists are Atheists, and must of a necessity be disorderly and hav murder at heart. They hold that religion is the author of morality, and morality is the author of all law and order, and God being the creator and maker of all things, his divine law is superior to all other laws. So they exhort their hearers to put their trust in God and make the best of everything, or, in other words, believe in God, trust to luck, and wait for results. It seems strange to me, if religion is so powerful, and God omnipotent, with all the preaching and praying, that such things should happen. And when will they quit exhorting us to liv nearer God, proclaiming loud and dwelling long on the peculiar advantages of the nearness and immediate presence of God?

I presume others as well as myself hav been told of Satan, who was once an angel of light in heaven, the home of God, where nothing of a questionable character can possibly enter, yet pride entered the heart of Satan, and there was war in heaven.

I think it time for them to quit offering their sugar-coated nonsense as a remedy for our ills. Do they forget that we hav tried their remedy for hundreds of years? Can they expect us to never tire? Can they blame us if we look for something better, and when we find something, embrace it because of its reality and effect? If it cures our ills, rights our wrongs, and has the desired effect, making us better men and women, bettering all our conditions in life, then it is the remedy we hav been looking for. But this "hav faith and trust to luck," I am done with. I think it is best to study cause and effect, profit by experience, think of our past follies, and be wise.

Never weary of well-doing. I think more of deeds than creeds; more of works than faith. He that plants a hill of potatoes and cultivates it with care does more for mankind than a preacher with all his prayer. J. O. CLARK.

PAULINÆ, ARK., May 25, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $1, for which send me THE TRUTH SEEKER weekly. I shall no doubt be a regular subscriber hereafter to your paper, as I am well pleased with its tone, and also with the cartoons. I am taking several Freethought papers, but it seems to me I hav fallen in love with THE TRUTH SEEKER most. W. R. BACHELOR.

VAN BUREN, ARK., May 9, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed you will find $3.25 for renewal of subscription and the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886.

The pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER are immense, and I think that those who find them too hard hav too soft shells to get far away from the church; so I vote to continue the pictures as long as you can stand the expense.

JAMES R. NEAL.

PORTVILLE, N. Y., May 22, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed 20 cents, for which please send me "Paine Vindicated," by Robert G. Ingersoll; and "Adami and Heva," by S. P. Putnam.

We read your TRUTH SEEKER with famishing hunger every week, and prize its contents for its honesty and true Liberal sentiments. We appreciate it more especially because we liv in a community that is wealthy and priest-ridden, and consequently has very little feeling in common with us or sympathy with our ideas of life. Still, we are very happy, living our own lives in our own way, and the Liberal reading we get from your office refreshes us like a timely shower.

Yours for truth, C. BROOKS.

LINCOLN, ILL., May 23, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just finished a careful reading of Kersey Graves's "Sixteen Crucified Saviors," and let me say that if there is a single reader of your valuable paper who has yet hanging loose anywhere in his mental composition a tatter or shred of respect or reverence for the Christian system left over from tradition that began at his mother's knee, let him read this book, and he will arise free, peaceful, satisfied, rejoicing that he has "got out" at last. The old owls and bats of mythology will leave their roosts, and the rubbish tanght by preachers will vanish into cerulean ether, while a mental feast will glide in, and sunrise come to the banquet. When the doubts and uncertainties left us by priest-ridden teachers clear away, then, and only then, will the Freethinker rise in his manhood and strike for liberty. A. R. C.

IDAHO CITY, I. T., May 1, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a subscriber for your paper for two years, and like it very much, and more since it has been illustrated. The first copy was shown to me by one of your subscribers. I was shocked at first, but on reading it I found I was shocked, not at the paper, but at its truths. I do hope reason will yet gnide us. I wish I could hear a good Liberal lecture. I never heard one. There are a good many here, I find, that are silent members with you, but are under the fear of the potentates, and don't come forward and investigate. I am not such a one-sided evangelist that I cannot read for myself. I am for liberty of this kind, that I can read for myself, that I am not restricted in my choice of literature. There are three churches here—Catholic, Episcopal, and Methodist, though neither has a local minister. Once in two weeks there is preaching in one or more of the churches—very good speakers, who believe sincerely in the doctrins they preach. I love to read your paper very much, and intend always to take it. I cannot believe in hell, but I believe there is a heaven, and God the creator of the world. I cannot disbelieve in God. If there is no God, what created our thoughts, our spiritual body? Is it God in us? I sometimes think so. Your friend, MRS. CLARA L. REEL.

SIOUX FALLS, D. T., May 17, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I received your favor with request to do something for THE TRUTH SEEKER. I would be too glad to do it if it were possible. I am seventy-four years old, and very deaf, and it is with great difficulty I can see to read with any glasses I can get. I know but few Liberals here. The church has it all her own way here, with ten or twelve churches, and two more building. The children are all corraled. Two men are salaried with Eastern capital, one to build and establish churches, the other to organize Sunday-schools. Our independent press (three of them) dare not say a word that conflicts with religious bigotry. At a Catholic costume performance, the secretary of an insurance company had the priest's robe on. The Argus in (favorably) commenting upon the performance, said the secretary looked as if he could sell indulgences as well as anybody. The next morning the Press had a notice over a Catholic's signature, stating that the Argus's remarks reflected upon both priests and laity. He waited for an explanation. The Argus, like a cringing cur, had to come down and whitewash it over. The glorious TRUTH SEEKER is not afraid of losing subscribers in that way.

My hands are tied financially. I send $1, and will very soon raise the other $2 to prepay up to May, 1887. I fear I will not be able to read THE TRUTH SEEKER much longer. I hav read every number that was ever published.

CALVIN GRISWOLD.

YOUNGSTOWN, O., May 28, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I would like you to solve a mystery, and I believe there are many others who do not understand it. Why are the words on our silver dollar "In God we trust?" Did God ever ask this government for credit? Has the government ever trusted God with any of these dollars? Or is it hogwash and a lie? Now, if the Congress had stamped it "In man we trust," it would hav been a matter of fact; and even if there is a God, what has he got to do with the silver dollar? Why not put a God on the rest of our money, or did God only want the silver dollar? As there is no God in our Constitution, and as it provides that Congress shall make no law to establish or prohibit the God business, what does it mean? A. B. SIMONDS.

[The question propounded by our correspondent is in a measure answered by the letter of Mr. Thomas Rogers, printed below. If "In God we trust" is to be retained, the further provision, "All others cash down," should be added at once.—ED. T. S.]

NEW YORK, N. Y., May 29, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: In one of your most interesting columns I read a letter from C. W. Pratt, re the labor question, which he concludes with a few remarks about that "strange device" that is impressed on our silver dollars, "In God we trust," and he is desirous to know "who is responsible for this falsehood." As I hav looked this "thing" up I should be obliged if you would kindly publish the following:

The motto, "In God we trust," appeared on a colonial battle flag first, and was on the first device offered by the mint for a copper coin, which was accepted. The device was submitted to Congress, which, in passing upon it, rendered the motto a matter of law, which action was, of course, unconstitutional and antagonistic to the glorious Liberals who founded our republic, and it is therefore but another ulcer which "must go." In spite of our glorious Constitution, the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that this country is "essentially, lawfully, and by proclamation Christian." This we can plainly see by the rapid increase of criminals, lunatics, and paupers, which is the natural outcome of a country "essentially, lawfully, and by proclamation Christian." THOMAS ROGERS.

NAPA CITY, CAL., May 20, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: This is a nice town of about five thousand inhabitants in the finest valley and most lovely climate in the state, but also the worst priest and church ridden town in the state. There is a large and respectable minority of Liberals here, but as the church has got the start, many of the Liberals dare not oppose it on account of business relations. We hav no Liberal organization, and some of us hav decided to hav one; we wish to start aright if possible, and ask you to refer me to some one who can set us going on that plain and open road which, when we are once in, we may never be able to lose our way, and journey onward forever in plenty of good company and good fellowship; all free—men, women, and children. We hav concluded, and forever settled to our own perfect satisfaction, that we do not wish to, can not, and will not attempt to travel another step in that crooked, ugly, up-hill orthodox trail overgrown with grass, hedged in with thistles, with its hundreds of forks and branches, with at every fork and branch a priest or devil. According to Christian doctrins, Washington, Jefferson, Paine, Franklin, Darwin, Huxley, Humboldt, Comte, Parker, Emerson, Spencer, Lydia Maria Child, Harriet Martineau, Bennett, Wright, and thousands of others, the benefactors, liberators, lovers, and martyrs for the benefit of mankind, are now in hell; and Robert G. Ingersoll—our brave, outspoken colonel—with the entire host of his friends and all free and independent men and women, will all soon be there too. What a glorious company!

Friends, let us sing, "We Want To Be There Too:"

If our best friends to hell hav gone,
We want to go there too:
They whom we fix our hopes upon—
We want to go there too.

Yours for truth and fair play, R. F. GRIGSBY.

BLOCK CREEK, TEXAS, May 27, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I am always pleased when I see a letter in THE TRUTH SEEKER columns advocating the benefits to be derived by the establishment of Liberal colonies. I doubt if any one individual can realize all the possibilities of such a society, provided all interested were really Liberal and altruistic in thought and act. The recent letters of Dr. Baran and F. M. Borden hav awakened chronic hopes and aspirations that I might some day be one of a colony of stanch, noble-principled men and women all working for the greatest good of human needs, living true and earnest lives, replete with loving deeds and kindly ways, instinct with noble, pure, and lofty aims, proving by word and act some method sure we all possess however low and meanly we are born.

Believing this possibility to be a fact ever since I attained the brain period of reasoning for myself, and per force became a full-fledged latitudinarian, I hav worked to this end, and, am pleased to state, hav made a successful beginning. I hav effected the organization of a stock company for the purpose of buying, raising, and selling all kinds of stock, with various industries for women and children. The enterprise is managed and controled by Liberals.

We hav a fine range of hundreds of acres of well watered and timbered grazing and agricultural land, stock, buildings, corrals, etc., located in one of the most fertil valleys of the state, altitude over two thousand feet, water sweet and delicious. We do not claim having medicinal springs. However, the waters possess virtues, united with the pure and dry air, of curing various complaints, all combined rendering this one of the most salubrious of climates, and not only desirable as a resort for invalids, but also for a permanent home for healthy people. Cereals, fruits, and vegetables all do well here with less labor and expense than is required in the Northern states. As the Liberal papers are head and shoulders above all others in satisfying the demands of our nature, is it not natural to suppose some, at least, of the patrons and admirers are superior to the admirers and patrons of other papers, and would hold the same relation in contributing to our happiness by their presence and influence? Anyone may answer.

There are no rules and obligations by which one is pretty certain of losing all he has contributed, but, instead, we propose making it an object financially for our friends who wish to join us by securing to them free a home for themselvs and families, giving advantages according to investments.

Parties desiring information may address, C. H. REED.

LEAVENWORTH, KAN., May 22, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Mr. Keeler will hav to pick his mediumistic flint and try again. His recent epistolary characterization of D. M. Bennett is, upon its face, a total failure. Much of my life having been spent as a typo, proof-reader, editor, and as a close discerner of individual differences and peculiarities in literary composition, I would hav no hesitation in testifying under oath, as an expert, that D. M. Bennett had nothing to do with the communication published over his name. I hav read nearly every line Mr. Bennett ever wrote. His composition is marked so strongly with his individuality that almost any one line taken from his voluminous writings will betray its authorship. In this squib the selection of words is not D. M. Bennett; the arrangement of words is not Bennett; the sentences are not Bennett; the ideas, or rather the lack of ideas, are not Bennett; and the bombastic declaration that "Ingersoll must stop and all others" is not Bennett.

If Mr. Bennett's step could betray his personality to the ear of a blind man, how infinitly more reliable, as a test of individuality, must be a mental composition to the experienced perception of an expert!

Counterfeit notes go for genuin with the most of people, but here is an imitation too clumsily executed to deceive anybody. It is a photograph of D. M. Bennett from a sitting of Paddy McGuire. It no more bears the intellectual "earmarks" of D. M. Bennett than it does of the man in the moon. S. R. SHEPHERD.

SALINA, KAN., May 19, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Since I came to Kansas I hav been on a farm, and hav been so busy that I do not get time to read much except the news, and I had about made up my mind to pay up and stop THE TRUTH SEEKER, but after the pictures came out I got time to read them, and so will continue a while longer.

Last year I raised about sixteen thousand bushels corn and had hogs enough to eat it, but the cholera took about all of them, and so I had to sell it for eighteen cents per bushel.

Freethinkers are quite numerous here, but are pretty mum, for in this country everyone tries to farm a little more land than can be done easily, and consequently has but little time to discuss religion or anything else.

Yours truly, JAMES H. NEARDISON.

LONG LAKE, MINN., May 18, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed please find $7—$5 to pay for two years' subscription, and $2 to help you in a general way. I like most of the illustrations, though that last one of the recording angel is a little raw—hardly up to the average of the others. However, I don't want to be hypercritical.

I am a little curious to know what percentage of deadbeats you find among your patrons, and also how it would compare with the experience of some of the religious newspapers in that respect. This would probably be hard to arrive at closely, but if it could I hav thought it might afford some interesting statistics. I will say this: I hav more respect for a religious bigot who is honest in his dealings with his fellowmen than for any Freethinker who is not.

Yours respectfully, JOSEPH H. LYDIARD.

SPRINGVILLE, UTAH, April 30, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Your paper keeps me in mind of my friends every day, and is far ahead of any paper I know of. Out of four papers taken by me THE TRUTH SEEKER is read more than any of them. Well, we are looking forward to a joyous meeting when friend Putnam gets here, and that will not be long. I go in for pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER all the while if the company can afford it. Pictures speak for themselvs, and will make a stronger impression on the mind in most cases.

Find inclosed $2.05 which please apply as follows: To aid THE TRUTH SEEKER on picture business, 50 cents; to aid Tent Fund, 50 cents; "Cleansing the Blood," 30 cents; "The Order of Creation," 75 cents. LUKE WM. GALLUP.

HANOVERTON, O., May 25, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: As my time for receiving THE TRUTH SEEKER expired on the 18th, I thought I would make it known to you. I can't afford to boycott THE TRUTH SEEKER, though some of its contents are not interesting to me. There may be argument in the pictures, but it seems to me to be of the cobhouse kind, and adapted to trundle-bed children only. The space occupied to carry on the discussion between Materialist and Spiritualist is thrown away. Neither has ever proved anything nor ever will, there being no handle to the subject. But I will not say any more for fear some of the knowing brothers will create a little hell for me. Please tell them while they are looking for bigots in the church herds to keep an eye on their own flock. Inclosed please find postal note for renewal of paper. J. T. JOHNSON.

[It is proper that warnings should go out occasionally to our friends to bear and forbear. There may be bigotry in the Liberal ranks, but it is the strength of Freethought that where one shows a spirit of intolerance, a hundred rise up to rebuke it. Never forget that.—ED. T. S.].

CASEY, ILL., May 14, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Find inclosed $1 to apply on my subscription; also 10 cents for S. P. Putnam's "Adami and Heva." I will just remark that I agree with Amy Post in regard to J. R. Kelso's article on paupers, and with her rejoice that we hav a Kelso. I had about concluded that all of the brave soldiers were dead, or had lost all of their pluck on Southern battlefields. But there is one left, and I hope he will giv them a few more shots, and that others will fall into line with him. When I go soldiering again I want to go in his regiment, and fight for the kind of liberty and equality that he advocates, not the sham we hav. JOHN MCCRORY.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., May 11, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: A number of letters against protection hav been published in THE TRUTH SEEKER from time to time, but few in favor. Having a constitutional aversion to lopsided discussions of any subject, I will offer a few facts and pertinent suggestions on the other side of the protection question.

The instinct of self-preservation is universally admitted to be common to all animate nature, and being an incentiv to protection and conservation of our rights, interests, and even of our existence, protection cannot be an unjust principle, nor productiv of evil effect. Whatever evil attaches to it is an effect of environments for which the principle is in nowise responsible.

For the few first years of our national existence our ports were free to the commerce of all nations, and we exported two dollars' worth of our own products for every dollar's worth received in exchange. Our intelligent and patriotic statesmen, of whom we had a few, perceived that we were in need of protection—not to protect our home manufactories, for we had none to protect—but to protect our farmers and planters from outrageous fraud and extortion being practiced upon them by foreign capitalists; protection that would enable us to do our manufacturing ourselvs, giv employment to our own people, develop our own skill and resources, aud hav the products of our own country for our own enrichment, instead of sending them abroad for the enrichment of foreigners. They imposed a protectiv tariff on imports. I will note some results.

It is authoritativly reported that the price of cotton cloth, in Manchester, England, is but a quarter of one per cent less than the price of like goods in Lowell, Mass.

That is almost free trade, and it givs the lie direct to the oft-repeated assertion that English manufacturers can afford to sell their goods in our market at half the price that it costs to manufacture like goods ourselvs.

The contract to furnish rails for a road recently constructed in the British Dominion north of us by an English railroad company was awarded to an American iron and steel manufacturing company.

That is absolute free trade, and is the kind of free trade that protectionists desire. It givs employment to our own people, develops our own skill and resources, and puts the profits in our own pocket.

The people of the Southern states are beginning to learn that it pays better to manufacture their cotton into cloth, giv employment to their own people, and hav all the product, than to send their cotton to Europe and not get enough cloth in exchange to cover their nakedness. They hav also learned that wheat will grow on Southern soil, and they can feed and clothe themselvs independent of their neighbors. Protection has given them free trade that makes them a free people.

Protection is building up a monopoly of wealth on our own soil that should amply protect us from monopolies of wealth abroad, which is the ne plus ultra of protection. It is simply the question of whether it were best to build up a monopoly of wealth at home that will make us a free and independent nation, or build up monopolies of wealth abroad that shall make us a nation of slaves to foreign capitalists. Monopoly of wealth gave England supremacy, and should confer a little favor on ourselvs. Monopoly of wealth is a synonym of aggregation of wealth, and involves the principle of community of wealth, from which principle it derives its beneficent potency. Whatever of evil attaches to it is caused by environments for which the principle is not responsible.

Americans who are anxious to realize a benefit from British free trade should import French lace and American tobacco into England; they will probably become aware that British free trade is a legitimate offspring of British protection. Free trade cannot be born to any country of any other parent.

Russia abolished feudalism a few years ago, and divided the land among the ex-slaves on condition that they should pay a price for them by instalments. That act gave a stimulus to Russian product that enabled them to supply the European market with wheat at eighty cents per bushel. The advocates of British free trade insist that such an event could not hav occurred if we had our manufacturing done in Europe instead of doing it ourselvs. They should write a book on political economy, and tell us all about it. I think their book would excel the "Adventures of Baron Munchausen" for ridiculous absurdities, and be highly appreciated by those who hav a penchant for fiction founded on facts not stated.

The English manufacturers sent their agents over here about the close of our late civil war, who were well supplied with British free trade literature for distribution among our people. When they had canvassed the states on the subject they returned and reported that free trade was dead in the United States. But I think the foregoing statement of facts should abundantly prove that their report was somewhat premature, if not absolutely false. If American advocates of foreign interests were all dead, I hardly think intelligent patriotic Americans would be likely to regard the event as reasonable cause for serious regret; though our prospect of burying the last of them in the near future is brightening, for even our Irish adopted citizens are beginning to comprehend the fact that British free trade has been, and is, a greater curse to Ireland than landlordism, Irish whisky, and priestcraft combined. J. A. TUTTLE.

OAKLAND, CAL., May 10, 286.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find the name of a new subscriber to be added to your list on account of the cartoons. Last evening I and wife went to church to hear a Rev. Dr. Sweeny on "Ingersoll." I will giv you one of his arguments to show you how the colonel was handled by his reverence. He said that Ingersoll claimed that man made his own gods. To meet that he told us that at Athens they had some forty thousand gods, but there was one who was unknown, for so said Paul. He lied one hour right straight along on Paine and Ingersoll. A. H. SONOW.

KANKAKEE CITY, ILL., May 17, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Please find post-office order for $3 to pay for one year for THE TRUTH SEEKER.

For my Liberal views I hav been persecuted and had to quit doing business, and lost a great deal. And who do you think are the ones that I hav lost with? Every one of them is a church-member. I am a Freethinking man, and I am not afraid or ashamed to say so. The most dangerous church or belief that we hav in this country, that we call a free country, and which is not in regard to belief, is Catholicism. She is one of the most dangerous enemies that we hav. The priests of each town try to control and keep their subjects in ignorance. I hav been raised in that belief, but got out of it as soon as my parents had no more control over me. To do good is my religion, and my little home that I now only possess is my church. Your TRUTH SEEKER is the only paper that I enjoy to read. It's the paper of light, wisdom, and truth, and sense, and that is what I am seeking.

Yours as a Freethinker, CHAS. A. BRASSEAN.

WALKERVILLE, MON., May 17, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $6, to apply on my subscription for THE TRUTH SEEKER and one copy, cloth bound, of "Men, Women, and Gods."

While my pen is in hand let me just say I hav read "Men, Women, and Gods," and disposed of it; now I want another for the Home Library. It is a book that should be read by every woman in the land, for it can't help but giv a clear idea of the true inwardness of the folly and superstition and oppression they sustain by honoring and revering that myth called the Christian religion.

Another thought, it occurs to me, as a very practical means of disseminating Liberalism was suggested by W. F. Jamieson in your paper of January 9, 1886, under the heading, "Liberal Leaves." I think the plan would prove a grand success. It requires some little means to start it, and when once started would be made self-sustaining by the united efforts of the few Liberals scattered over the land.

Out West here we need some awakening influence to bring the Liberal element together; thereby an interest would be made manifest and their "light shine." A live lecturer occasionally moving among us would inspire to action in concert to spread the light and glad tidings of universal mental liberty. I hav never heard but one Liberal lecturer, Dr. J. L. York, in my life, and I know many others in the same fix who, if woke up, would become activ workers in the field of Freethought. We are anticipating a treat in the presence of S. P. Putnam in this vicinity soon, and I hope he will be followed up by others.

Wishing success to every effort for the "liberty of man, woman, and child," WILLIAM J. WHITE.

ODESSA, MO., May 26, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: It has been quite a while since I wrote to you. I am glad to hav it to say that since I came here, about a year ago, Freethought has been gaining ground in this vicinity. I hav kept my books and papers loaned until they are nearly all worn out. The "Godly Women of the Bible" has converted several. There are thirty or forty confessed Freethinkers around here now, but are very shy of taking any activ steps toward organization. They say, "Wait till times get better and the thing ripens a little more." We hav lately had a terrible hurricane in this part of the country. It demolished five out of nine churches, and blew the roofs off several business houses, doing considerable damage. No lives were lost. You hav learned before this, perhaps, that several were killed in Kansas City. It has had the effect to cause several Christians to conclude that God is no respecter of persons. It has had the effect on me to cause me to indite the following: God is all things and all things are God. All things are natural, therefore God is all nature, or else he must be nothing. And with regard to the doctrin held by our Christian friends—if I may call them such, some of whom I know I can't—that there are both natural and supernatural things—a physical and also a spiritual world; God a spiritual being and monarch of all both natural and spiritual; a being without body or parts—I am made to indite this: If the Christian God or any other God is a reality, he must be a real something, having in his constitution body, figure, substance, extension, tangibility, the essential properties of all things or anything, or else he must be empty space or a mere imaginary nothing; and that to admit that a God or Gods hav these natural essentials is to admit that he is, or they are, natural in every sense of the word. WILLIAM L. WORLEY.

"BLOODWASHED RUBE," of the Schenectady, N. Y., Salvation Army, has been arrested for stealing four carcases of mutton, two of veal, and four sheep pelts.

Children's Corner.

Edited by Miss Susan H. Wixon, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Be Contented.

A man in his carriage was riding along,
A gaily dressed wife by his side;
In satins and laces she looked like a queen,
And he like a king in his pride.

A wood-sawyer stood on the street as they passed,
The carriage and couple he eyed,
And said, as he worked with his saw on a log,
"I wish I was rich and could ride."

The man in the carriage remarked to his wife,
"One thing I would do if I could—
I'd giv my wealth for the strength and the health
Of the man who is sawing the wood."

A pretty young maid with a bundle of work,
Whose face as the morning was fair,
Went tripping along with a smile of delight,
While humming a love-breathing air.

She looked on the carriage, the lady she saw,
Arrayed in apparel so fine,
And said in a whisper, "I wish from my heart
Those satins and laces were mine."

The lady looked out on the maid with her work,
So fair in her calico dress,
And said, "I'd relinquish position and wealth
Her beauty and youth to possess."

Thus it is in the world—whatever our lot,
Our minds and our time we employ
In longing and sighing for what we hav not,
Ungrateful for what we enjoy. —Selected.

Stupid Sam.

A great, awkward, lumbering boy, with a very red face and honest blue eyes, was Sam. In school he did not learn very fast, was not quick at figures, and he soon became known as "Stupid Sam." The other boys plagued him, and the girls laughed at him. By and by, school-days came to an end, and some of the boys went one way and some another. At home, what to do with Sam, stupid Sam, was a question. He had one brother a minister, another a doctor, and another a lawyer, and they all laughed at and looked down upon Sam, stupid Sam.

"I don't suppose he'll ever amount to anything," said his father; and, "I wish he was a little different," thought his mother, wiping a tear from her eye.

Sam did not say much, but read and thought considerable, for him. "I've a great mind to go West," he said to himself. Horace Greeley advised young men to "go West," but then, if they all followed his advice, the West would soon be as overcrowded as the big cities in the East, thought Sam.

But what should he do to earn his living in the East? That was the problem that rolled over in his mind by night and by day. The stores seem to be full of clerks, the pulpits full of ministers, the courts full of lawyers, and the cities and towns full enough of doctors; besides, Sam thought one of a kind is enough in a family, even if he knew sufficient to be one of the three. "I'm altogether too stupid, I s'pose, for any profession like those adopted by my high-backed brothers," said Sam, stupid Sam.

One day he sat reading apparently, but, although his eyes rested on his book, he did not read one word. Presently, whack! and the book came together with a loud bang.

"What's the matter, Sam?" inquired his mother.

"I'm going to be a farmer!" and Sam spoke with emphasis and decision.

Well, they all laughed, and thought it only a boy's whim, a stupid boy's foolish idea.

"Great farmer you'd make!" "What's the price of oats?" "Do you know beans from barley?" and, "It takes some brains to farm it—do you know it, Sam, stupid Sam?"

These and similar expressions did not daunt him in the least, or shake his determination.

One day his father told him that there was his old dead and gone grandfather's little farm at his disposal, if he really wanted to be a farmer on a small scale; he might try it and see what he could do, but he need not expect any help from him.

"All right," said Sam, and his face brightened into a broad smile, as he hastened away to view the old farm.

He saw that it would require some hard work to manage it rightly, but "I guess I can work," said Sam, "if I am stupid!"

When planting time came, Sam planted—potatoes—nothing but potatoes! Acres and acres of potatoes! The people laughed and tickled, but Sam kept on planting potatoes.

"What's the price of taters?" they would sneeringly inquire every once in a while, and the lily-fingered brothers of his, as often as they wrote or came home, would say, "Well, how's the boss farmer?"

But Sam, stupid Sam, hoed away, and fought potato-bugs, and said, in reply to queries, "I'll let you know in harvest time."

He did let them know. When he began to dig his potatoes, there seemed to be no end to them. There were bushels, and bushels, and bushels again; fine, big potatoes, fair and sound as potatoes could be. Many farmers all through the country lost their potatoes on account of the rot, but Sam, stupid Sam, lost not one. He sold them all at a good price, and had money jingling in his pocket all winter. The next year he planted more potatoes, and some other vegetables. He worked hard, and success crowned his efforts. He read books on agriculture, improved his mind, prospered, and, as time went on, became a comfortable, well-to-do farmer and stock-raiser.

His lawyer brother did not hav many clients, and spends a good part of his time on stupid Sam's farm. The doctor struggled along with a small practice, and is glad to receive a lift from stupid Sam occasionally. The minister has the bronchitis and dyspepsia terribly, and, believing country air good for him, has just gone to stay six months on stupid Sam's farm.

But they don't call him stupid Sam in these days—no one does. Sam plods along in blue overalls, and laughs dull care away, as he plows and plants, sows and mows, and declares that some things can be done as well as others, even if a fellow is called stupid.

He rejoices in hard work and plenty of it, which brings him health, vigor, and wealth.

"How did you succeed so well?" he was asked one day.

"By sticking to it when I made up my mind, and not caring when they called me Stupid Sam," said he. S. H. W.

The Deepest Well in the World.

The deepest well in the world is located at Homewood, Pa. It is owned by George Westinghouse, Jr. The average depth of the Homewood wells is about 1,850 feet. In the well now drilling, everything found of the nature of gas or water at a depth of 2,000 feet was cast off as unimportant, and the drill at present is said to be a little over 6,000 feet below the surface, which would make it by all odds the deepest well in the world. A careful record is being kept, and portions of each formation encountered preserved. Since it would necessarily hav to be a very prolific gas vein to justify such deep drilling, it is a difficult matter to conjecture the object that prompts such a work, unless it be purely to satisfy a morbid curiosity. There are in Washington county some wells drilled to a depth of 4,000 feet, and the only other, so far as known, approaching the depth reached by Mr. Westinghouse is an artesian well in France, at which a depth of 5,000 feet was reached.—Oil, Paint, and Drug Reporter.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—PUZZLE.

A bouquet of flowers.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN THE CHILDREN'S CORNER MAY, 29, 1886.

1.–6. 2.–Coleridge—Goldsmith—Taylor—Drake — Browning — Hood — Longfellow — Whittier—Wordsworth—Shakspere—Pope—Burns. 3.–Salt-peter. 4.–Because it needs healing (heeling.) 5.–Oh! Dear! Hey! Alas! La! What! See! Hark! Eigh!

Correspondence.

Ashland, Neb., May 2, 1886.

Dear Miss Wixon: I hav seen so many little girls writing to you I thought I would write too. I am ten years old and I hav three brothers; the oldest one is seventeen years old and the next to the oldest one is sixteen, and the next one to him is fourteen. I hav one sister. I had four brothers, but the one next to me was the baby and he died. I go to school. I hav to go two miles and a half. I hav a nice teacher, whose name is Miss Ella F. Williams. I like her very much. I think I will close for this time, for my letter is getting too long; so good bye.

From Ella F. Smith.

P. S.—If you think this will do to put in the paper I would like to see it in the next paper. I will try to do better next time.

[Ella must try to do better another time, so that the printer can read her letter plainly.—Ed. C. C.]

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN

The Story Hour. For Children and Youth. By Susan H. Wixon. Without Superstition. The Only Illustrated Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page and 25 smaller illustrations; large type, heavy toned paper, broad margins, illuminated covers; 4to. 224 pp., bds., $1.25.

Two Little Red Mittens. A Story of the Rightway Almshouse. By Jennie Butler Browne. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

Apples of Gold. A Story-Book for the Young Folks. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellent work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

The Youth's Liberal Guide. By Prof. H. M. Kottinger, A.M. Price; $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents; twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents per hundred, $1.50.

TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. The Biographies of three hundred of the most distinguished teachers and philosophers (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. By D. M. Bennett. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4,00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. Biographical sketches of prominent Christians. A companion book to "The World's Sages," etc. By D. M. Bennett. 8vo., 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Vol. I. givs a full account of all the gods the nations of the earth hav worshiped, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 835 pages, 8vo. Vol. II. describes fully all the religious systems of the world, including Judaism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity; the latter occupying 372 pages, going fully into its merits. 949 pages. By D. M. Bennett. Written in prison at Albany. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

Supernatural Religion. An inquiry into the reality of divine revelation. Decidedly the most thorough and exhaustiv work on the claims of supernaturalism ever written. By F. W. Newman, Emeritus Professor of the London University. 1,115 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $4.00; leather, $5.00; morocco, gilt edges, $5.50.

The Great Works of Thomas Paine. Including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop of Llandaff, Letters to Mr. Erskine, Essay on Dreams. Letter to Camille Jordan, The Religion of Deism, Common Sense, The Crisis, and The Rights of Man; the whole preceded by the Life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 800 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco; gilt edges, $4.50.

Analysis of Religious Belief. An examination of the Creeds, Rites, and Sacred Writings of the world. By Viscount Amberley, son of the late Lord John Russell, twice Premier of England. Complete from the London edition. 745 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The foregoing volumes are called "The Truth Seeker Library." If all are ordered together and sent by express, one dollar will be deducted from the price of each.

THE HUMBOLDT LIBRARY.

Price 15 cents each number, unless otherwise marked.

1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. A series of familiar essays on astronomical and other natural phenomena. By Richard A. Proctor, F.R.A.S.
2. The Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers. 19 illustrations. By John Tyndall, F.R.S.
3. Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, Author of "The English Constitution."
4. Man's Place in Nature. With numerous illustrations. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
6. Town Geology. With Appendix on Coral and Coral Reefs. By Charles Kingsley.
7. Conservation of Energy. With numerous Illustrations. By Balfour Stewart, LL.D.
8. Study of Languages, brought back to its True principles. By C. Marcel.
9. The Data of Ethics. By Herbert Spencer.
10. Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Numerous illustrations. By By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.
11. 12. The Naturalist on the River Amazon. A record of 11 years' travel. By Henry Walter Bates, F.L.S. Not sold separately.
13. Mind and Body. The theories of their relations. By Alexander Bain, LL.D.
14. The Wonders of the Heavens. 32 illustrations. By Camille Flammarion.
15. Longevity. The means of prolonging life after middle age. By John Gardner, M.D.
16. Origin of Species. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. With other disquisitions. By Herbert Spencer.
18. Lessons in Electricity. 60 illustrations. By John Tyndall, F.R.S.
19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. By Richard A. Proctor.
20. Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kalley Miller, M.A.
21. The Physical Basis of Life, with other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
22. Seeing and Thinking. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.
23. Scientific Sophisms. A review of current theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. By Samuel Wainwright, D.D.
24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Illustrated. By Prof. H. Helmholtz.
25. Origin of Nations. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, Oxford University.
26. The Evolutionist at Large. By Grant Allen.
27. History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.H.S.
28. Fashion in Deformity, as illustrated in the customs of Barbarous and Civilized Races. Numerous illustrations. By William Henry Flower, F.R.S.
29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Numerous illustrations. By Andrew Wilson, Ph. D.
30. 31. Study of Words. By Richard Chenevix Trench.
32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.
33. Vignettes from Nature. By Grant Allen.
34. Philosophy of Style. By Herbert Spencer.
35. Oriental Religions. By John Caird, Pres. Univ. Glasgow, and Others.
36. Lectures on Evolution. Illustrated. By Prof. T. H. Huxley.
37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. By John Tyndall.
38. 39. Geological Sketches. By Archibald Geikie, F.R.S.
40. The Evidence of Organic Evolution. By Geo. J. Romanes, F.R.S.
41. Current Discussions in Science. By W. M. Williams, F.C.S.
42. History of the Science of Politics. By Frederick Pollock.
43. Darwin and Humboldt. By Professor Huxley, Professor Agassiz, and others.
44. 45. Dawn of History. By C. F. Keary, of the British Museum.
46. Diseases of Memory. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald.
47. Childhood of Religions. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S.
48. Life in Nature. Illustrated. By Jas. Hinton.
49. The Sun: its Constitution; its Phenomena; its Condition. By Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.
50. 51. Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. By Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.
52. Diseases of the Will. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald.
53. Animal Automatism, and other Essays. By Prof. T. H. Huxley, F.R.S.
54. Birth and Growth of Myth. By Edward Clodd. F.R.A.S.
55. Scientific Basis of Morals, and other Essays. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.
56. 57. Illusions. By James Sully.
58. 59. The Origin of Species. By Charles Darwin. Two double numbers, 30 cents each.
60. Childhood of the World. By Edward Clodd.
61. Miscellaneous Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.
62. Religions of the Ancient World. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, University of Oxford. Double number, 30 cents.
63. Progressive Morality. By Thomas Fowler, LL.D., president of Corpus Christi College, Oxford.
64. Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russel Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.
65. Conditions of Mental Development; and other Essays. By Wm. Kingdon Clifford.
66. Technical Education; and other Essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
67. The Black Death. An Account of the Great Pestilence of the Fourteenth Century. By J. F. C. Hecker.
68. (Special number, 10 cents.) Three Essays, by Herbert Spencer.
69. (Double Number, 30 cents). Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. By Fritz Schultze, Ph.D. Translated from the German by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.
70. Essays Speculativ and Practical. By Herbert Spencer.
71. Anthropology. By Daniel Wilson, LL.D. With Appendix on Archeology. By E. B. Tylor, F.R.S.
72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. By J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.
73. Evolution in History, Language, and Science. Four Addresses delivered at the London Crystal Palace School of Art, Science, and Literature.
74. The Descent of Man; and selection in relation to Sex. By Charles Darwin. In 4 parts. 15 cents each.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
T. Clappison, Hamilton, Ont.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
E. A. Stevens, 750 West Lake st., Chicago.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 315 North 10th st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

Mottoes for Freethinkers.

We hav received a supply of illuminated motto cards, which we offer for sale. These mottoes are intended to take the place of the "God-bless-our-home" placards which disfigure the walls of so many houses. They are printed on heavy cardboard, 9 inches by 22 1-2. The motto is in black, with colored borders, with an illuminated monogram of U. M. L. The following are the various readings:

THE LIVING HAV A RIGHT TO CONTROL THE WORLD.

FREE THOUGHT WILL GIV US TRUTH.

SUPERSTITION IS THE CHILD OF SLAVERY.

REASON IS THE LAMP OF THE MIND, THE ONLY TORCH OF PROGRESS.

THE SCHOOL-HOUSE IS MY CATHEDRAL.

UNIVERSAL MENTAL LIBERTY.

THE TIME TO BE HAPPY IS NOW, AND THE PLACE TO BE HAPPY IS HERE.

NEVER TROUBLE TROUBLE TILL TROUBLE TROUBLES YOU.

THE WORLD IS MY COUNTRY; TO DO GOOD MY RELIGION.

The price of each of the foregoing is 25 cents.

For Freethought societies there is a large card 22 x 15 inches, printed in colors, with an engraved heading, containing the Nine Demands of Liberalism. Framed it makes a splendid ornament for the lecture-rooms of Liberal societies. Price, 30 cents. Any of these will be sent postpaid, securely wrapped, on receipt of price.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York City.

A NEW PAMPHLET.—JUST OUT.

ADAMI AND HEVA.

BY S. P. PUTMAM.

A poetic version of the Indian Story of the Garden of Eden, in which its superiority to the mutilated copy—the Genesis legend—is shown.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Price, Twenty-Five Cents.

THE

TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL

—AND—

FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC

1886.

(E. M. 286.)

WITH THIRTY PORTRAITS OF DISTINGUISHED EUROPEAN FREETHINKERS, SCIENTISTS, AND PHILOSOPHERS, AND NUMEROUS OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1886,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1885,	17
How the Church Filches from the State,	24
Public Contributions to the Church,	28
The Religion of Crime,	31
Chaplains in our Army and Navy,	32
The Higher Life. By Courtlandt Palmer,	34
My Dream. By Samuel P. Putnam,	37
The American Secular Union,	40
Statistics of our Foreign-born Population,	49
The Curate of Churnside. (Selected Story.) By Jas. Payne,	50
How Voltaire Died. By the Editor,	64
The Iron Virgin,	77
Religious Divisions of the World,	82
Paine Memorial Hall. (Illustrated),	83
The Story of 1385,	84
Immigration to the U. S. 1820–1884,	87
Freethought in Australia,	88
Freethought on the Continent,	92
Subjects of Illustration,	95
Freethought Journals,	100
Religious Denominations,	102
Area and Value of Farms,	103
Population of Large Cities,	103
Liberal Lecturers,	104

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Lick Observatory,
Girard College, Philadelphia,
Freethought Hall, Waco, Texas (Interior view),
Freethought Hall, Waco Texas (Exterior View),
The Tent,
Iron Virgin,
Paine Hall,
Moncure D. Conway,
Saladin,
Annie Besant,
Mary Wollstonecraft,
G. W. Foote,
Austin Holyoake,
J. S. Mill,
George Eliot,
Geo. Standring,
Ernst Haeckel,
Auguste Comte,
Edward Gibbon,
Max Muller,
Thos. Huxley,
Voltaire,
Chas. Darwin,
Rousseau,
Humboldt,
Byron,
Shelley,
David Hume,
Goethe,
Robert Burns,
Richard Carlile,
Herbert Spencer,
Castelar,
Bradlaugh,
Chas. A. Watts,
J. A. Froude,
John Tyndall.

NEW YORK:
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,
33 CLINTON PLACE.

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D
Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

Sabbath-Breaking.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG.
Author of "False Claims," "Bible Morals," Etc.

The best and most thorough work ever written on the Sunday Question from a rational point of view.

Large and Handsome Print.

SINGLE COPIES, - - 25 cents.
SIX COPIES, - - - $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.

BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.

Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st floor shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney.

Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 39 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $6,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION, (Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702,) N. Y.

REPLY
TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S
"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."
By B. W. Lacy

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, auther of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrins. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON.
The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works.

By THOMAS PAINE,

"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."

Price, Single Copies, 25 cents. Six copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.
By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 cents.

S. P. Putnam's Works.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution, with some Criticisms of Universology. Price, 20 cts.

Waifs and Wanderings, a New American Story. Price, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cts. "A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Golden Throne, a Romance. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creativ spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words—the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read Golden Throne.'"—INGERSOLL. $1.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A conversation in rhyme between the Nineteenth Century Infidel and the Galilean Reformer, wherein it is shown there is much in harmony between them. Price, 10 cts.

Prometheus. A poem. "It is crammed with life, thought, and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary beauty."—DR. HENRY W. BELLOWS. $1.

Gottlieb, His Life. A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Price 25 cents.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand, and other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cts.

For all of the above address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Charles Watts's Works.

The History of Freethought. Bound in cloth and lettered. Price, $1.25. CONTENTS: Section I. Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II. What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III. Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV. Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V. Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

The American Secular Union; its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Secularism; Destructiv and Constructiv. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Christian Evidences Criticised A reply to the "Christian Evidence Society." Introduction by Charles Bradlaugh. Contents: The Origin of Christianity; The Historical Value of the New Testament; Miracles; Prophecies; The Practical Value of Christianity; The Progress of Christianity. Price, $1.

Secularism; its Principles and its Duties. Price, 75 cts.

Tracts. The following tracts by Chas. Watts are published at the low price of FIVE CENTS EACH: Defense of Secular Principles; Is the Bible Reliable? The Christian Deity; Moral Value of the Bible: Freethought and Modern Progress; Christianity, its Nature and Influence on Civilization; Philosophy of Secularism; Science and Bible Antagonistic; Christian Scheme of Redemption. For all of the above works address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By Wm. McDonnell, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 90 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By William McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth. $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By Frederika Macdonald. 404 pages. $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By Winwood Reade, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

All in a Lifetime. A Romance. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. "The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks." Price, $1.50. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

AT LAST! we hav a "Secular Funeral and Marriage Hand Book," which can be used in all cases, and is indorsed by all classes of Liberals.

Price (cloth bound) by mail, fifty cents in currency or postage stamps. A liberal discount to agents.

Address Dr. A. R. AYRES, 810 Broadway,
6t19 Hannibal, Mo.

LITHOGRAPHS
OF
CHARLES DARWIN

Admirers of the Great Naturalist, and practically the father of Evolution, will be glad to know that we hav a fine lithograph of him for sale—size 18½x24 inches on heavy plate paper. Framed, the picture will make a splendid ornament for the parlors of Freethinkers. Price, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

The Secret of the East
OR,
The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office

Poetry.

The Knights of Labor.

The workingman is my own kin:
This world is ours to labor in;
We war with wrong and conquer peace,
Make terms to share the "Golden Fleece."
We come from the hamlet, the mountain, and mine.
The gathering thunders we hurl;
Kings tremble and pale at our lances that shine
As we blazon the earth in our whirl.

This friend of mine, the workingman,
From Yeddo to our Yucatan,
In battle harness wrought with chains
Contrived from want and hunger pains.
The wheels of monopoly grinding at will,
No rest hav we but the grave:
Wives, sweethearts, and babes in workshop and mill,
And our homes are the huts of the slave.

O workingman, my early friend!
Two continents their voices lend,
And bulls, and bears, and moneycrats,
Shall heed our music sharps and flats.
Then hasten, bold rider, make ready the steed;
The "bended bow"* waits for your hand;
To poverty scatter the millionaire's greed,
For humanity girdles the land.

I claim you now, O workingman!
The peer of any prince or clan.
The noblest king this world has found
Is he who toils the seasons round.
We are making all the waste places to bloom,
Reclaiming earth's deserts and seas;
Take, kinsmen, oh, take of her air and her room—
She givs you true title to these.

Bear, workingman, the "bended bow,"
And let the money-grabber know
We'll never lay our armor down
Till every human right is won.
The clangor to-day is the tocsin of war—
Hark! hemispheres hearken our clan!
The earthquake is yawning and mutt'ring afar;
We shall govern the world, workingman!

Clearwater, Neb. MARY BAIRD FINCH.

*In the days of ancient Britain, on the approach of war a messenger bearing a "bended bow" was sent through the land to apprize the people. The story was beautifully told in a poem by Mrs. Hemans.

Half a Loaf is Worse Than None.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Enjoying the wit in which your journal abounds, fictitious as it is, permit me to present to you a combination of wit and truth.

One winter afternoon a Russian Jewish pedler, strapped to a heavy pack, was trudging on his weary pilgrimage. Finally he reached a comfortable dwelling. Eutering it he fell exhausted from cold and hunger. The commotion that ensued brought the proprietor of the house, who happened to be a missionary, to the scene. Taking in the situation at a glance, and with an eye to business, he bent over the prostrate form and said that he was willing to revive his benumbed guest providing that he would acknowledge his belief in the following: That Christ was born of the Holy Ghost; that he was crucified and resurrected; that he fed and satisfied the hunger of five thousand with a few loaves of bread and a few fishes.

The Jew, though more dead than alive physically, was in full possession of his meutal faculties. He feebly replied that half of it he believed already. Our host, the missionary, delighted with the result already achieved, trusted to the other half when sufficiently revived. Accordingly, the stiff form of the frozen Jew was tenderly placed before a blazing log fire. After having been sufficiently thawed out, a substantial supper was placed before the famished man. Plate after plate was cleared away by the prospectiv convert. No sooner did the last morsel disappear than our good missionary, with beamiug eyes and all smiles, made his appearance. "Well," said he, "what hav you decitled?"

"I am meditatiug all the time," replied the guest, "but with no success as yet. No doubt a good night's rest will add considerably to solve the problem." The missionary raised no objectiou, aud the best room in the house was assigned to the fatigued pedler.

Unhesitatingly he retired, sandwiching himself between the two feather beds. Hardly had he fiuished his customary night prayer, when he snored away as befits a Russiau Jewish pedler. The host, on the other hand, was restlessly tossing about. With the break of day he arose. Stealthily creeping up to the room of his sleeping guest, he peeped breathlessly through the key-hole, and, behold! to his dismay his guest was devotedly praying while enveloped in fringes and phylacteries (those articles Missionary Freshman offers to parade with at so much a head). The disappointed host soon recovered, consoling himself that the Jew was taking a last farewell of his religion prior to his plunging into the baptismal waters. Prayers over, the missionary, less smiling and more resolute, demanded an explanation. The Jew calmly replied that so far he was not yet ready to answer satisfactorily, but a substantial breakfast might help materially. A meal surpassing in abundance the previous one was ordered; after which, the pedler, harnessing himself in his big pack, began to pour out a shower of thanks for the hospitality received.

"No thanks," thundered the enraged missionary; "I want the other half of your belief in the creeds I propounded."

"I am sorry," pleaded the Jew, "I can only believe in half of it." The missionary reconciled himself to his fate, with the satisfaction that half a Christian is better than none. He roared at the top of his voice, "What half do you believe in?"

"I believe," firmly replied the Jew, "that Christ was born, but not of the Holy Ghost. I believe he was crucified, but not resurrected. I believe he fed five thousand people with seven loaves and a few fishes, but I don't believe they were satisfied."

The result can be better imagined than described. Suffice it to say that the Jew was instantly converted, not to Christianity, but to a champion pedestrian, closely followed by an overabundant supply of shoe leather owned by our good missionary.

New York, May 20, 1886. A. BENJAMIN.

Book Notices.

AMERICAN NEWSPAPER DIRECTORY, containing Accurate Lists of all the Newspapers and Periodicals published in the United States, Territories, Dominion of Canada, and Newfoundland, together with a Description of the Towns and Cities in which they are Published. New York: George P. Rowell & Co., 1886. Price $5.

This is not the sort of book anyone would pick out who desired something exciting, but if it is wished to know all about all the papers in the country, it is the very work that cannot be dispensed with. No one's information on that subject can be complete without it. The directory is to newspapers what an unabridged dictionary is to a language. Besides the lists of newspapers there are also sketches showing the process of getting out our great dailies, illustrated by cuts and other accessories. The book contains over eighteen hundred octavo pages—1,818, to be precise—aud the only error noted is the omission to put THE TRUTH SEEKER among the religious papers. This is an oversight hard to account for.

The Directory for 1886 is accompanied by a Directory for 1776. The latter is about the size of a postage stamp, and consists of some ten or a dozen pages. Nothing better indicates the growth of civilization and education than these two directories. Mr. Rowell's publication for 1886 will be found indispensable to all publishers and advertisers.

An extremely amusing compilation is "Soul Farrago. What is and Where is the Soul?" by "Perseus." The writer does not himself profess to be able to answer the questious which he propounds, but summons to the stand as experts some of the ablest men the world has ever produced. First comes:

1. Pythogoras: "The soul is number aud a harmony."

2. Heraclitus: "The soul is a spark of the stellar essence."

3. Anaximenes: "The soul is air." This witness is corroborated by Diogenes.

4. Anaxagoras: "The soul is an immortal, aërial spirit."

5. Epicurus: "The soul is a bodily substance having a great resemblance to spirit or breath."

6. Origen: "The soul is neither spirit nor matter."

7. Gregory Nazianzen: "Soul, or spirit, is composed of two properties—motion and diffusiou."

At least fifty more witnesses are called to testify as to what the soul is. No two agree. Then the writer turns to the question where the soul resides, quoting as follows:

1. Plato: "The soul is located iu the brain."

2. Aristotle: "The soul is located in the heart."

3. Heraclitus: "The soul is located in the blood."

4. Epicurus: "The soul is located in the chest."

5. Sommering: "The soul is located iu the ventricles."

6. Kant: "The soul is located in the water contained in the ventricles."

7. Ennemoser: "The whole body is the seat of the soul."

8. Fischer: "The soul is located in the nervous system."

9. Descartes: "The soul is located in the pineal gland."

These are not half the witnesses called to testify as to the whereabouts of the soul. It must be confessed that the testimony leaves the soul hunter in some doubt.

This pamphlet was originally published in the Independent Pulpit, and must hav been the result of long and laborious research. Price 5 cents.

Part I. of "Saladin's" "God and His Book" is out. Therein the author, who is editor of the Secular Review, of London, has assaulted the scriptures with all the weapons of ancient and modern warfare. And it is surprising, even to those who know that the Bible has no historical reliability, to note how far the evidence tends to show that it was the work of intentional frauds. Some books, observes Mr. Robert Burns, are lies from end to end. That is what the Bible, broadly speaking, is. "Saladin" points out very plainly that if God dictated any of the book, no one knows what part of it was so dictated. The Bible has many times been dissected. Paine left no man a reasonable excuse for still believing in its authenticity as translated. "Saladin" goes down to the roots of the impostnre and shows that but for the fictitious prominence which belief in the book has given it, it would be condemned as a most unintelligible hotch-potch.

The future historian, in writing of the present era, will remark somewhat as follows: "In spite of the civilization and enlightenment to which the people in the nineteenth century attained, and of which indeed they were themselvs wont to boast, seeing that it was much higher than that of the ages foregone, they nevertheless held as a fetich a book of so-called revelation, to which they ascribed an attribute which they termed 'inspiration,' a word that has long since lost all significance to learned ears. There were, however, in those days persons who saw the light even clearer than those miscalling themselvs the 'children of light.' Among these was one 'Saladin,' otherwise W. Stewart Ross, who, though not dwelling in the country ranked first among the nations of the earth (the same being America, where was published our able contemporary, THE TRUTH SEEKER), but in England, was nevertheless unsurpassed as an iconoclast. A work bearing his signature aud the title, 'God and His Book,' has been preserved to us, and it is strange that upon reading it any could be so blind as to still maintain that the book which he attacked was in any way defensible from either a historical or an ethical point of view." Price 35 cents.

"Moses Before the Court; or, The Forgery of the Old Testament." This pamphlet of 32 pages is dedicated to the clergy by H. J. Seigneuret, M.D. (alias "Secularist"), author of "St. Matthew Before the Court." This case against Moses and the Old Testament is skilfully handled by the author. He proves conclusivly that the Bible is a forgery; that the Pentateuch was not written by Moses, but by the Jewish priest and impostor, Esdras, and shows for what ignoble purposes he committed the forgery. In fact, the author proves beyond a shadow of a doubt that no such man as Moses ever really existed. "Moses Before the Court," if widely circulated, will complete the work begun by Paine's "Age of Reason." Address the Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place, New York. Price 10 cts.—Pittsburgh Truth.

"On the Inequalities of Wealth" is the name of a tract by "An Americau," published by Theo. Berendsohn, 86 Fulton street, New York, price ten cents. The author, iu a future work, hopes to be able to "unfold the subject of reconstructing the present social system, and to set forth principles by which the inequalities of society will be eliminated, and a true and universal brotherhood of man be established in harmony with nature's laws." If "An American" has a scheme in mind which will produce that result, its publica- should be no longer deferred. It will fill a long-felt want.

The appended literary note sent us by the Appletons will be of interest to many: "Hon. David A. Wells's third paper of the series, entitled, 'An Economic Study of Mexico,' now running through the Popular Science Monthly, appears in the June number. The series will close with the fourth paper, and it promises, when completed, to be the fullest as it will unquestionably be the most accurate summary of the real condition of affairs, industrial, commercial, and political, in Mexico, that has appeared since the Mexican War."

"Manual Training in Education," by James Vila Blake, is a useful little book. What Mr. Blake means by manual training it is necessary to read the pamphlet to find out. Price 25 cents. Published by Charles H. Kerr & Co., Chicago.

G. W. Foote's Progress makes its monthly appearance for May. There is something melancholy and sad about the brick-colored covers of this magazine, with Darwin, Voltaire, Shelley, and Mill looking out spiritpicturelike from the four corners of the first page. The contents, however, are interesting, being composed of articles by G. W. Foote, James Thomson, Edward Aveling, J. M. Wheeler, George Standring, and other able writers. Published at 28 Stonecutter street, London. Price 25 cents.

"Two Glaring Abominations and the Remedy" is what Mrs. L. E. R. Lambrigger calls her pamphlet drawing attention to the "inhuman treatment of helpless infaucy and decrepit old age." Price, probably, 10 cents. W. S. Bailey's heirs, printers, Nashville, Tenn.

SELF-CONTRADICTIONS OF THE BIBLE.

A perfectly reliable, accurate pamphlet. Though anonymous, it is now known to be the work of W. H. BURR, one of our ablest correspondents. More than 30,000 copies hav been sold. Price, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY:

OR,

MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who hav helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.

Price, - - - - - - $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

BACON AND SHAKSPERE.

Proof that Wm. Shakspere could not write. The Sonnets written by Francis Bacon to the Earl of Essex and his bride, A.D., 1590. By WM. HENRY BURR. Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

THE CONVENTIONAL LIES OF OUR CIVILIZATION.

From the German of MAX NORDAU.

SEVENTH EDITION.

A most powerfully written book.—Phila. Record. This Book is not a Book! It is a Deed! and those who oppose it will prove that they fear it.—Vienna News. Price, 50 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

MOSES BEFORE THE COURT;

OR,

The Forgery of the Old Testament.

Dedicated to the clergy

BY

H. J. SEIGNEURET,
Secularist.

Price, - - - - - 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ELEMENTS

OF

UNIVERSAL HISTORY

FOR

HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

This book is just what the busy world of to-day needs—a perfect compendium of history from 2.000 years B.C. on up to 1883, all in a nutshell.—Elmina Slenker.

As a text-book in schools, the book would occupy an important place; in the family it would be no less important, as conveying information that all should be acquainted with.—Susan Wixon.

Mr. Cottinger's intentions in writing this book are excellent, and his standpoint admirable. It may be commended as fulfilling its purpose of a concise and interesting historical text-book.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Price, Cloth. $1.50.

For Schools, in Quantities, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.—Zadig; or Fate.—The Sage and the Atheist.—The Princess of Babylon.—The Man of Forty Crowns. The Huron; or, the Pupil of Nature.—Micromegas.—The World as it Goes.—The Black and the White.—Memnom the Philosopher.—Andres Des Touches at Siam.—The Study of Nature.—A Conversation With a Chinese.—Plato's Dream.—A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.—An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, $4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY

John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, $1.
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, 1.25.
Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50cts; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to Be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscan. 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3. Millions of these should be circulated.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill.
Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete.
Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There have been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they have been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, for 50cts, or either one for 15cts.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve the purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitly fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine, and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price, $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should have them.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll.
Superb photographs, 22x28, $5; panel, 10½x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cents; card, 20 cts.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

J. E. Remsburg's Works.

False Claims. Revised and Enlarged.
Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture: Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbatic Idea; The Jewish Sabbath; The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; The Sabbath during the Middle Ages; The Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; six copies, $1.00.

Image Breaker. Six Lectures: Decline of Faith, Protestant Intolerance, Washington an Unbeliver; Jefferson an Unbeliever; Paine and Wesley; Christian Sabbath. Each 5 cents; bound, paper, 25 cents; per doz. 40 cts.

Thomas Paine. The Apostle of Religious and Political Liberty. Tells the story of the Author-Hero's life, delineates the leading traits of his character and genius, and vindicates his name from the aspersions cast upon it. Choice extracts from "Common Sense," "American Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason" are given; also, tributes to Paine's character from more than one hundred noted persons of Europe and America, many of them written expressly for this work. Second edition, 160 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound, and containing a handsome steel portrait of Paine. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Apostle of Liberty. An address delivered in Paine Hall, before the N. E. Freethinkers' Convention, January 29, 1884. Price, 10 cents.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

edge; Knowledge Not a Crime; As Much Inspired as Any of It.
VICARIOUS ATONEMENT: Fear; Beginning to Think; Creeds; Self-Control What We Need; Vicarious Atonement Not a Christian Invention; Twin Monsters from Intellectual Pig-The Church's Money-Box; Shall Progress Stop?
HISTORICAL FACTS AND THEOLOGICAL FICTIONS: Church Fictions; Historical Facts—(Civilization, Comparativ Status, Women as Persons, Education, As Wives, Not Woman's Friend, Morals).

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

Photo-Engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50c.

Ingersoll's Tributes.

REDUCED IN PRICE.

We hav made arrangements whereby we can offer these magnificent prose poems of Mr. Ingersoll's at greatly reduced prices. The Tributes are printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22 inches, illuminated border, large clear type, suitable for framing. The titles are:

The Vision of War,
Tribute to his Brother,
The Grant Banquet Toast,
Address at Harry Miller's Grave.

The price of these heretofore has been $1. We offer them now at FIFTEEN CENTS EACH; THE FOUR FOR FIFTY CENTS. Mailed secure from breakage. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

A SKETCH OF THE LIFE
OF
APOLLONIUS OF TYANA,
OR THE
First Ten Decades of Our Era.
BY
DANIEL M. TREDWELL.

Designed to show upon the authority of History that Apollonius of Tyana performed miracles and spoke wise sayings equal to those attributed to Jesus Christ. 350pp., octavo, best style. Price $2.50.
Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

A STUDY
OF
PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY
BY LEWIS G. JANES.

This book treats of the natural evolution of the Christian religion, its historical antecedents in Palestinian Judaism and Roman Paganism; investigates the history of the founder of Christianity in the light of the latest scientific criticism of the New Testament; shows that the true story of the Man Jesus, and his genuin teachings are separable from the later legendary accretions which hav confounded him with the mythical Christ, and traces the natural development of Christian dogma and ecclesiastical institutions. Complete references and full index. 320pp. 8vo, cloth, gilt top. Price $1.50.
Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

SOCIAL WEALTH.

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

Price, Cloth, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

The Present and the Future Republic of North America.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

Price $1.50
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Bible Inquirer. A Key to Bible Investigation. Revised Edition. This pamphlet refers specifically to 148 Bible propositions, with numerous references and citations, that are contradicted in terms by the same number of other propositions in the same book. Price 25 cents.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

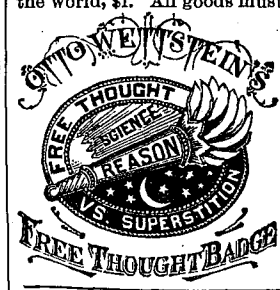
SCIENCE LECTURES.

Liberal friends visiting Philadelphia should attend the Spring Course of Science Lectures, every Sunday evening, at the Hall of Friendship League, Ninth and Girard ave.
Debate at 2:30 (Secular questions).
PROF. ATKINSON, F.R.A.S.



FRIENDSHIP LIBERAL LEAGUE No. 257

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

Otto Wettstein's

Popular Jewelry Store, Rochelle, Ill.

Genuin diamond jewelry; fine gold and silver watches, chains, bracelets, gold and plated jewelry, silver and plated ware, optical, art, and fancy goods. 3 oz., coin silver, Elgin watch, $9; 4 oz., $10.50; 4oz., stem wind, 11 jeweled, $14.50; same, 15 jeweled, $19; same, adjusted, $22. In filled gold cases, warranted 20 years, 7 jeweled, stem wind, $21; 11 jeweled, $23.50; 15 jeweled, $28; adjusted, $31. Best filled cases add $4.50. Ladies' filled, best cases, $20, 7; $22, 11; and $30 for 15 jeweled movements. Ladies' solid gold, 10 k., $22, 7; $24, 11; $32, 15 jewels. For 14 karat cases add $8. Gents equally low. Watches cleaned, $1; springs $1; and returned per registered mail. Best spectacle in the world, $1. All goods must suit or cash back.

And what is a nicer present for either your lady or gentleman friends than one of my latest improved model badges in solid gold, artistically enameled in three colors? Price, $3, $3.50, $4. With genuin diamond in rising sun, $8 and $10.

OTTO WETTSTEIN
Rochelle, Ill.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catch-penny get up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magnetic appliance, but simply a medicin to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

N. B.—Dr. Fellows begs leave to say that he is an Infidel of the most pronounced character. Bro. Liberals, your patronage is solicited.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German A new cheap edition at only $1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable refercnce pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Gencration before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Books on Practical Steps in Present Needs.

History of Woman's Costume Movement; its first 35 years, Events and Persecutions, Supplemented by Modern Martyrdom. 132pp., fine paper, 25c. Progress vs. Fashion. 32pp., paper, 10c. Woman's War Cut. 32pp., paper, 10c. Love and Transition. Poetic, in two parts; an Epic and an Argument. 191pp., in fine cloth and gilt, 75c.
Sent on receipt of price, by the author,
tojn1 M. E. TILLOTSON, Vineland, N. J.

Bible Fabrications Refuted
and
The Errors of the Bible Exposed.

BY O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Price, 15 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

News of the Week.

LAST Saturday afternoon was the first regular half-holiday of the season, and was generally observed.

THE city of Munich is excited over the exhibition of a very effectiv panorama representing "The Crucifixion."

GLADSTONE'S Home Rule bill for Ireland was defeated in the British House of Commons last Monday by a vote of 341 to 311.

FRIENDLY negotiations are being made, it is said, with Canada, concerning the seized fishing schooners. The nature of the negotiations is not made public.

A BRUSSELS author has been sentenced to one year's imprisonment and to pay a fine of $1,500 for writing a "labor catechism" in which it is claimed the king is insulted.

JOHN KELLY, the Tammany sachem, died June 1st, and was buried last Saturday from St. Patrick's cathedral, with all the pomp which that institution is able to display.

THE TRUTH SEEKER chapel has been working smoothly under the nine-hour rule for two months, and its progressiv proprietors find it very satisfactory.—John Swinton's Paper.

BUDDENSIEK, the contractor who used such poor materials that his buildings would not bear their own weight, and fell, killing a workman, has been sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary.

THE Sunday quiet of New York was somewhat disturbed last Sunday by a heavy bombardment in the bay. It was a welcome to a Brazilian warship with the emperor's grandson on board.

A BILL taxing the manufacture of oleomargarine has passed the House of Representativs. We are still to be permitted the free use of bad butter, and to spread it on to any desired thickness.

A WESTERN firm guarantee a wife to every man who purchases of them a suit of clothes. The Macon Telegraph says: "What this country needs is somebody to guarantee a suit of clothes to every man who gets a wife."

HERR MOST, the Anarchist, has been sentenced to one year in the penitentiary and to pay a fine of $500. His offense was exercising the right of free speech, which he misunderstood the Constitution of this country to confer.

A REPORT of the death of Henry Ward Beecher was circulated about this city last Saturday afternoon. It was referred to Mr. Beecher himself for confirmation. Mr. Beecher said it was quite a jolly rumor, but he was glad it wasn't true.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND was duly married on Wednesday, June 2d, to Miss Frances Folsom, and is doing as well as could be expected. The wedding was held in the White House at Washington. The honeymoon is being spent at Deer Park, Md.

ARCHBISHOP FEEHAN, of Chicago, visited the Joliet, Ill., penitentiary last Sunday and confirmed 117 convicts in the holy Catholic faith. The prison at Joliet is provided with a chapel, and differs from a Catholic church only in the facilities for egress. The congregation is of the same character as that found in the average church.

THE Chicago grand jury reported to the judge last Saturday afternoon on the Anarchists' cases. They express a belief that the Haymarket affair was a deeply premeditated plot. The Anarchists and their friends, on the other hand, deny that anyone is implicated in the throwing of the bomb except the crazy wretch who threw it.

THERE was a Catholic-Orange riot at Belfast, Ireland, last week. The Orangemen drove some Catholics into the river and a young man was drowned. At the funeral Sunday another riot occurred. The procession was attacked by the Orangemen, shots were fired, and heads were broken, and there was home rule generally for a short time.

THE Third avenue cardrivers' strike is ended. As a sort of expiring struggle, a tie-up of twenty-four hours was ordered, and went into effect last Saturday. At the end of that time, the Empire Protectiv Association acknowledged defeat, and the strikers must now look out for themselvs. The manager of the local assembly who ordered the tie-up was arrested for "conspiracy" and placed under $1,000 bail. It seems that an employer may lock out his employees without offending the law, but if they fail to go to work when the doors are opened they are guilty of conspiracy.

Odds and Ends.

CUPID, THE BOOK-AGENT.

I will not touch Love's hand (she said),
Nor will I see his pleading eyes;
I know him, for his lips are red;
He shall not take me by surprise.

I know his eyes are blue (she smiled),
I know the sheen of every curl;
Ah, Love (she said), you are a child,
And can't deceive a Vassar girl!

Love spectacled his sapphire eyes,
And dressed himself in sober black;
Ho, ho! (he laughed) in this disguise
I'll hide the arrows on my back!

He started out in early spring,
And in the fields the maiden met,
As she tripped onward, loitering
Among the grasses lush and wet

With cooling moisture of the dew.
He opened wide a musty tome;
I wish (he said) to show to you
A parchment History of Rome.

And here is Bacon bound in calf,
And Browning in a vellum vest;
Here's Emerson in sheep, at half
The usual price—and all the rest.

The maid selected one small book,
And clasped it with a tender touch;
It's T. B. Aldritch that I took,
But, sir, I think you ask too much!

I do love books (she sighed), and, oh!
How few of them I can possess!
Love's heart began to throb and glow;
He felt the hidden arrows press

His tender flesh; he threw aside
The spectacles, his best disguise;
If you will touch my hand (he cried),
And only look within my eyes,

These books are yours, fair Vassar maid!
Oh, do not turn away your head,
And look so cold! Be not afraid,
For I am only Love (he said).

The maiden's cheeks were all aflame;
She coyly pressed his finger-tips,
Then down she bent (and who shall blame?)
And swiftly kissed his rose-red lips!

—Puck.

BRABERY am no sign o' sense. De game-rooster will fight till he dies, but he ain't got ez much sense ez de guinea-chicken dat won't fight nuthin'. —Some preachers puts me in mine o' er tailor dat makes er coat ter suit hisse'f, an' den tries ter make ernuder man w'ar it whuther it fits him or not.—Dar ain't nuthin' filthier den er chicken nur cleaner den er cat; but I ain't gwine ter fling erway de chicken 'ca'se it's filthy, nur eat de cat 'ca'se it's clean.—Wid er woman dar ain't er inch difference 'twixt love and hate.—Er wise man may believe er liar wunst, but he ain't gwine ter do it twice.—Fur years an' years de white man hab been teachin' de nigger how ter die, but mighty few men hab been teachin' him how ter lib.—De fus' man what does er thing, no matter ef some udder man does it better, iz hil' up ez de pusson ter praise. We allus think dat de fust flowers in de spring smell de sweetest.—Arkansaw Traveler.

HENRY BERGH, it is said, is now taking steps to prevent Chicago's horse-railroads running bobtail cars in fly-time.

"DYSPEPSIA," said Carlyle, "kills poetic ambition." The world owes dyspepsia a heavy debt. It is a pity that Tennyson's stomach is not a trifle weaker.—Arkansaw Traveler.

DARLING Mabel's zebra stocking
Gently hangs across the tub;
Brother Tom will find them useful
When he starts his base-ball club.
—Evansville Argus.

WIFE (looking up from the paper): "That's a book I'd like to read—'Old Wells Dug Out,' by Talmage. It must be just splendid." Husband: "No doubt of it, my dear; that's just about what he's fit for."

Paine Vindicated!

—o—

A thorough and overwhelming reply to the New York Observer's slanderous attacks upon the Author-Hero of the American Revolution. Containing both the slanders and their refutation.

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL

—o—

The New York Observer (Presbyterian) having recently reissued its assault upon the memory of Paine, this pamphlet should be circulated everywhere in vindication.

60pp. Price 10 cents; 12 copies, $1.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD.

A Fabricated Account of a Scene at the Death-bed of Thomas Paine.

BY W. H. BURR.

This pamphlet shows that the account of Paine's dying moments attributed to Bishop Fenwick (upon which the Observer relies to prove its principal charges) is a forgery, it being impossible that Fenwick could hav written the alleged account.

18pp. Price 5 cents; 25 for $1.00.

For these two pamphlets address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

Gems of Thought.

GREAT BRITAIN has over thirty thousand priests and to sustain the state religion and the other churches costs the people some hundreds of millions of dollars annually, a burden most unremunerativ and uncompensating.—D. M. Bennett.

CALM soul of all things! make it mine
To feel amid the city's jar
That there abides a peace of thine
Man did not make, and cannot mar.

The will to neither strive nor cry,
The power to feel will others giv!
Calm, calm me more! Nor let me die
Before I hav begun to liv!

—Matthew Arnold.

IF abuses are destroyed, man must destroy them. If slaves are freed, man must free them. If new truths are discovered, man must discover them. If the naked are clothed; if the hungry are fed; if justice is done; if labor is rewarded; if superstition is driven from the mind; if the defenseless are protected, and if the right finally triumphs, all must be the work of man. The grand victories of the future must be won by man, and by man alone.—Ingersoll.

TIS well! From this day forward we shall know
That in ourselvs our safety must be sought;
That by our own right hands it must be wrought.
That we must stand unpropped or be laid low.
O dastard, whom such pretaste doth not cheer,
We shall exult if they who rule the land
Be men who hold its many blessings dear,
Wise, upright, valiant; not a servile band,
Who are to judge of danger which they fear,
And honor which they do not understand.

—Wordsworth.

WE may be certain that very few persons, not seriously impressed by religious convictions, applied for baptism while Diocletian was vexing the church, or joined themselvs to Protestant congregations at the risk of being burnt by Bonner. But when a sect becomes powerful, when its favor is the road to riches and dignities, worldly and ambitious men crowd into it, talk its language, conform strictly to its ritual, mimic its peculiarities, and frequently go beyond its honest members in all the outward indications of zeal.—Macaulay.

OFT as by winding Nith I, musing, wait
The sober eve or hail the cheerful dawn,
I'll miss thee sporting o'er the dewy lawn,
And curse the ruffian's aim and mourn thy hapless fate.

—Burns's Wounded Hare.

THE tendency of orthodox religion to-day is toward mental slavery and barbarism. Not one of the orthodox ministers dare preach what he thinks if he knows that a majority of his congregation think otherwise. He knows that every member of his church stands guard over his brain with a creed, like a club, in his hand. He knows that he is not expected to search after the truth, but that he is employed to defend the creed. Every pulpit is a pillory in which stands a hired culprit, defending the justice of his own imprisonment.—Ingersoll.

THAT a minister should speak with power, it is important that he should speak from his own soul, and not studiously conform himself to modes of speaking which others hav adopted. It is important that he should giv out the truth in the very form in which it presents itself to his mind, in the very words which offer themselvs spontaneously as the clothing of his thoughts. To express our own minds, frankly, directly, fearlessly, is the only way to reach other minds. Now, it is the effect of creeds to check this free utterance of thought. The minister must seek words which will not clash with the consecrated articles of his church. If new ideas spring up in his mind not altogether consonant with what the creedmonger has established he must cover them with misty language. If he happen to doubt the standard of his church, he must strain its phraseology, must force it beyond its obvious import, that he may giv his assent to it without departures from truth. All these processes must hav a blighting effect on the mind and heart. They impair self-respect. They cloud the intellectual eye. They accustom men to tamper with truth.—Dr. Channing.

I BELIEVE that the only way to do the greatest amount of good in the pulpit is for the one who occupies it to be perfectly true to himself. I should say to every preacher: "Satisfy your own reason and conscience, whether you satisfy your people or not. Be absolutely sincere. Do not use words in one sense which you know they use in quite another, and do not pretend to hav a belief in anything which you really hav not." I believe in policy, but I believe that the highest and best policy is to tell the simple, straightforward truth. —S. B. Weston.

I AM aware that self-assumed superiority to opinion may be, and often is, a thing of danger; dangerous in its crudeness and fermentation although in its perfection most blessed.—Self-Formation.

VIA CRUCIS.

The poet dipped his pen, and drew
His vivid pictures, phrase by phrase,
Of skies and misty mountains blue,
Of starry nights and shimmering days.
Men said, "He breedeth fancies pure;
His touch is facil, swift, and sure."

The poet's friend was stricken sore.
In tender tears the pen he dipped,
And breathed his gentle sorrow o'er.
And traced the sympathetic script.
Men said, "His heart is kind and true;
The laurel yet shall be his due."

. . . . . .

The poet's child has waxen hands
That hold Death's heavy-scented rose.
She drifts to the dim shadow-lands,
And draws his wild soul as she goes.

. . . . . .

He dipped his pen in his heart's wound,
And, sobbing, wrote—and thus was crowned!

—Helen T. Clark.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 13. No. 25. PUBLISHED WEEKLY. New York, Saturday, June 19, 1886. 33 CLINTON PLACE. $3.00 per year

WHAT MUST WE BELIEVE TO BE SAVED?

Notes and Clippings.

COL. R. G. INGERSOLL, was on June 10th elected president of the Toledo, Cincinnati, and St. Louis Railroad, and the name of the road was changed into the Toledo, St. Louis, and Kansas City.

A SHORT time ago Mrs. H. M. Rigie, of South Orange, N. J., for four years an invalid, was announced to hav been suddenly restored to perfect health by the power of prayer, and her alleged cure was the sensation of the town. On Thursday of last week Mrs. Rigie died.

FIRE broke out in the top of the Young Men's Christian Association building in this city, one day last week. The fire department overlooked the fact that the million dollar structure had never paid a cent toward the city's expenses, and put the fire out with neatness and dispatch. The damage amounted to $2,000.

JUSTUS SCHWAB, the Socialist, who keeps a quiet saloon on First street, was arrested last week for selling beer without a license, the excise commissioners having refused him that document. Meanwhile, the notorious Billy McGlory runs the worst dive imaginable, and, though unlicensed, sells beer under the very eyes of the police.

A MAN writes to the Philadelphia Press that he saw a remarkable sight in the heavens on Good Friday morning. He says that the clouds in the northern sky were blown by the light breeze into such a form that the blue sky visible between them assumed a semblance of a colossal figure of the savior. Other clouds and streaks of light formed a nimbus and a crown of thorns, and the whole, "so far as color was concerned, resembled a sketch of Payne's gray, with slight roseate indications." What the writer had been drinking the night before we are not informed.

THE British House of Lords has again thrown out the "Deceased Wife's Sister" bill, although it was activly supported by his royal highness the Prince of Wales. It will now be the duty of the English widower in love with his sister-in-law to repudiate the House of Lords as authority on the matter, and go ahead and marry the object of his choice—provided she is willing.

LAST Sunday the Chinamen of New York celebrated the 3,011th birthday of their savior Joss, Kwan Koon. Chinatown, in this city, was crowded all day with Mongolians, who sang songs and feasted in truly oriental style. Joss's temple at 302 Chatham street was thronged by devotees. The attendant of Joss, in order to giv every one a chance to say his prayers and offer birthday gifts, limited each batch of five worshipers to five minutes, with twenty-five cents a minute for overtime.

JOSEPH P. AMES was a wealthy farmer living near Blair, Neb. Four years ago he went to California for his health, and there fell in with a doctor named McLellan, who pretended to be a Spiritual medium. By working on the patient's fears through alleged communication with his (Ames's) dead wife, McLellan extorted from him about $9,000. Payment of the last draft of $1,800 was stopped by Ames's friends, but McLellan had already got it cashed. Judge Brewer, of the United States court, has decided that Ames's belief in the communication of spirits is proof of his insanity, and that the bank must lose the money since the victim was not responsible for his acts.

THE Freiheit is still published, although Herr Most, its editor, is in jail. The present editor is almost equal to his predecessor as a fire-eater, and intimates that Recorder Smythe, the judge, and Colonel Fellows, the prosecutor, deserve to be drowned or strangled. When it is discovered who is responsible for these utterances their author will be indicted. It is thought that by this method the country may yet be saved.

THE Independent blithely proceeds with its articles on "Prayer." In the last issue are quoted these promises said to hav been made by Christ: "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name that will I do;" and, "If ye shall ask me anything in my name that will I do." The task which the editor sets himself about is explaining why these promises are apparently false. The cause, he alleges, is that we do not properly appreciate the significance of the words "in my name." That may be the way out, but it might be suggested that if the editor had said that the author of these promises was a mistaken enthusiast on the subject of prayer, the explanation would hav been somewhat more copious.

HEALTH OFFICER TOWNSHEND, of Washington, has received the following official document:

CERTIFICATE OF MARRIAGE.

To the Health Officer of the District of Columbia:

1. Date of marriage—June 2, 1886.
2. Full name of husband—Grover Cleveland.
3. Age—49 years.
4. Color—White.
5. Place of residence—Executiv Mansion.
6. Occupation—Attorney-at-law.
7. Husband's birthplace—Coldwell, New Jersey.
8. Number of husband's marriage—First.
9. Maiden name of wife—Frances Folsom.
10. Age—21 years.
11. Color—White.
12. Place of residence—Buffalo, New York.
13. —Wife's birthplace—Buffalo, New York.
14. Number of wife's marriage—First.

We, the contracting parties, do certify that the foregoing information is correct.

(Signatures) GROVER CLEVELAND.
FRANCES FOLSOM.

This certifies that on the second day of June, 1886, I joined in holy matrimony the parties above described. B. SUNDERLAND, Pastor First Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C.

THERE is a deep-seated and well-founded reason for the popular prejudice against lawyers, and it lies in the fact that the most revolting atrocities constantly pass unrebuked under the noses of the profession. Take for example the last flagrant outrage, the conviction of Most. This was a blow at the most sacred rights of our citizenship. Not a lawyer in the land but knows that in that case Judge Smythe violated all the traditions of American liberty. Judge Smythe, in the unrestrained and lawless exercise of his power, did that which tended more to Anarchy and the unsettlement of government than any vaporings of Most ever did or could do. Under the pressure of a great and groundless scare pervading the whole community, augmented by all sorts of virulent newspaper articles, with the whole press of the country joining in the cry of "mad dog," it was the solemn duty and the splendid privilege of Judge Smythe to see that all the rights of Most were carefully guarded, a duty in which he was entirely derelict, and a privilege of which he seems to hav had no conception. —Lawyer Ed. W. Chamberlain in John Swinton's Paper.

The Life and Services of Stephen Pearl Andrews.

FUNERAL ORATION BY T. B. WAKEMAN, MAY 23, 1886.

FRIENDS: Before us lies the prostrate, lifeless form of one who in a singular degree, throughout a long life, inspired love, honor, wonder.

Death is nature's way of announcing to us that Stephen Pearl Andrews, the philosopher and friend, teacher and prophet—for a prophet he was to many—has exchanged his mortal career for immortality.

To many emancipated souls who are listening now, this change called death has ceased to be associated with its former terrors. It has come to be regarded often as a blessed relief from pain and anxiety, but in many and higher respects it appears as the harbinger of immortality, the harvester, the grain-gatherer, of the eventful and anxious lives of men on earth.

It would not be appropriate, in view of such sentiments, and of the life-long convictions and affections of this distinguished man, to make any ordinary speech or vain pretense, as though to him death had a sting, or that the grave could hav a victory. He who was a part of the harmony of the universe, he whose faith had already linked himself with the eternal forces of which death is merely a link in a mighty chain, knew nothing of the ordinary fear or terror by which that change is surrounded. Early in life he had been freed from, and had arisen above, the superstitions of our race. Long has he striven in the higher light which looks down on death and the ordinary fatalities of earth as mere temporary transformations, in the immortal process of which his thought and heart had become a part. Therefore let us gladly pass the considerations as to death which often need to be recalled, with the consciousness that we hav upon this occasion in the life past and the life to be, that which far better assuages grief, which brings us closer to the departed as one whom we are enabled to receive into our own hearts. There, as in a living granary, the great results of his life are to be cherished as the seeds of a mightier future, some prelude of the immortality of which his life is a necessary and ineffable prophecy. To do that it is necessary that we should recall by some slight sketch or notice the eventful career of this exceptional man.

And first, we hav all gloried in his strength of body and mind. That strength, in the first instance, was due to nature herself. She gave him a rich dowry of health and physical vigor. A noble form, splendid intellect, great rapidity of thought and action, great versatility, great suavity, gave him a wonderful power of convincing and controling his fellowmen. By happy circumstances that natural dower was developed by a training fitting him for the ever higher duties to which the world continued to call him as a philosopher and a reformer.

Thus in childhood the circumstances of his birth gave him a fair inheritance—the inheritance of a pious ancestry, of a father devoted to the highest interests of mankind, as he and those about him understood it, for his was the ministry and service of what to him was the living God. A New England parentage, the family of a clergyman devoted to the highest interests of his neighborhood and community, such was a fit school for one dowered by nature as a gifted child. Then followed in due course a further beneficent education, through the curriculum of one of our New England colleges—the college at Amherst—suiting him, as far as then could be by disciplin and education, for the higher calling that awaited him. Next came the still further education in the science of practical sociology, known as the science of the law. As a student at law he became prepared, not simply for the practice of the common law of our courts in the Northern States, but from the fact that one of his brothers had already entered upon the practice of the law at New Orleans he was induced to become a student of the law there prevailing, the civil law—the great law system which has descended to French Louisiana from the Roman empire, and which is the greatest code and body of reasoned equity that the human race has ever evolved.

Thus in earlier manhood he received the crowning education of his youth in the professional study of the grand principles, the broad policy, and the deep humanity which pervade that wonderful system of jurisprudence. This system which prevailed in the territory and thence in the state of Louisiana, in which he was to engage in the practice of his profession, determined, unconsciously, much of his future.

No one, I take it, will ever understand this man or his philosophy thoroughly, who does not giv weight to these early incidents of his education. It is, indeed, given to but few to become masters of the great system of equity and imperial command which the world has inherited from the mighty empire of Rome. But no student of history and sociology ever comes into contact with that system who is not more or less influenced by it throughout the remainder of his life. As a sequence of Mr. Andrews's study of the civil law and its history, the philosophical task to which he devoted himself was influenced even to its details. If the church of Rome made possible the Positiv Polity of Auguste Comte, we may say that the civil law of Rome made possible the Pantarchy of Mr. Andrews.

The success of his new undertaking, the practice of the law in New Orleans, whither he removed in 1835, was secured by his ability, by his devotion, by his integrity, but was darkened by one unfortunate circumstance. The great system of reasoned equity to which he was devoted, combined with the education and inspirations of New England puritanism, could never be reconciled to human slavery. Living in a community where that institution had become legalized and largely the basis of its social life, it was scarcely possible but that he should soon come in contact with it and discover a disagreement with its supporters. That result was indeed inevitable, and while esteemed and honored in all other respects his complete dissent from that institution and its consequences rendered his position there in many respects unpleasant and undesirable. He therefore gladly turned his eyes westward. A new country, and then an independent state, had been opened up, now known to us as the state of Texas. He felt that if, while the institutions of that state were being formed, he could throw his influence in favor of freedom there, the great defects which prevailed in the social life by which he was surrounded might be remedied, and the future empire (for that territory was then larger than many of the largest states of Europe) might be saved to Freedom. Thus was early manifested his devotion to duty, a devotion to the furtherance of the higher interests of mankind which enabled and induced him to leave a lucrativ practice of his profession and to engage in a new country upon a new adventure in favor of an idea which might be realized and be made a blessing to millions hereafter.

For four years he lived in the state of Texas and exerted his influence and strenuous efforts in behalf of re-forming the constitution of that state and its institutions in favor of liberty instead of slavery, which had already been impressed upon them. The story of his life there cannot be detailed here at length, but it was most interesting and eventful in its results. The constitution had already had included in it a proslavery clause which he found himself unable to remove. The slaveholding interests of the country redoubled their efforts and influence. They soon brought to bear upon him, as their present and unyielding opponent, a signal exercise of their power. Not by law, but by mob rule, was he made to understand that the cause of liberty could not be secured unless additional resources were brought to bear, by which the antislavery people could be protected, and by which the interests which slavery had already obtained in that country could be removed by consulting the interests of the slaveholders themselvs—that is, by a purchase of the slaves.

In furtherance of this noble purpose of peaceful emancipation which, if it could hav been carried into effect, would in the end hav saved this country millions of lives and millions of treasure, he conceived a plan of applying the project to the slaveholders of Texas. He hoped that they could be induced to abandon the hateful custom, and that the slave laws of the state could be rendered harmless by a direct purchase of their slaves. He appealed quietly and earnestly to the antislavery influence in the North. That, however, was then too weak a party to effectually further his design. He next thought that if he could reach the other side of the Atlantic, the avowedly antislavery sentiment of the people in England would perhaps be sufficient to arouse the English people and their statesmen, so that thus he might be enabled to carry out his designs in the interest of freedom. Therefore he left Texas, and the new practice of the law which he had built up. He left, too, a large fortune which he had accumulated, but which he was willing to lose or to devote to this purpose. He went to England and sought there the aid which would enable him to make Texas, first, a free and independent country, and so finally to prepare it to become a free state of the great free United States of America.

His reception in England was in many respects highly gratifying. The prospects of success were for a time very encouraging. It seemed as if the result he had in view would at last be attained and that the state of Texas would be made a free state by the direct purchase of the slaves that were then within that state.

The failure of the plan probably arose from the unexpected publicity which the scheme attained, contrary to his wish, by which the slaveholders were enabled to bring to bear against it a sentiment that is never appealed to in vain. The people of this country were made apprehensiv that there was being devised a direct interference and protectorate over Texas on the part of the English people and the English government. Would they submit to hav Britain dictate to, or threaten, or control American interests? That national jealousy was appealed to, and was soon aflame. It was fostered by the slaveholding element, and at once throughout the country the word was passed that the state of Texas must never pass under British control, that no British protectorate should be extended over our neighboring state, and that British money should not free her slaves.

The Whig administration of Tyler (elected at least as Whig) was immediately controled by the interest of slavery to prevent such a result. The state of Texas was admitted to the Union under that proslavery influence, and thence came a change in our whole national conduct—thence, as the result of the efforts of this one man, came the first step toward the mightiest changes which hav since occurred in our national history. It was the admission of that state which compelled the Mexican war in the interest of slavery, in the interests of those who wished not only to make Texas a slave state, but to continue to extend the power of slavery until it should become the dominant influence on our continent. Thence came that Mexican war with its incidents of immense territorial conquests at its conclusion. Thence came the abrogation of that compromise line as to slavery between North and South; thence came the election of Lincoln; thence came the rebellion of the slaveholders; thence the great civil war, and, finally, the abolition of slavery not only in Texas but throughout the whole North American continent.

Such results came as the final conclusion of simple steps taken originally by this man, and a few of his compeers, to save the state of Texas to freedom. Great hav been the events from small causes, but let us never, when we look at great events, forget the disinterestedness, the devotion to principle, the burning philanthropy, of him who singlehanded against mobs and obloquy strove to save the great state of Texas to freedom and thereby in his failure ultimately brought about the salvation of the whole continent to liberty. Such was the result and ultimate consequences of his mission to England in 1843 after four years' residence and practice of the law in Texas.

Unable to return to the state which ought to hav honored him, he went back to his ancestral New England; went back there under the influence of and devotion to the same sentiments which had carried him to old England. He determined to devote himself primarily, after gaining his livelihood, to the furthering of the great cause of liberty and the ultimate emancipation of the slave throughout the Union.

He took the practical way of doing that. Instead of appealing merely to sentiment and opinion as many did, he determined that there should be an appeal to politics. A "Liberty party" upon that question was soon organized, and with such men as Elizur Wright, always his friend and compeer, he helped to organize the activ political movement which should make the extension of slavery and finally the existence of slavery a decided issue before our people. He was frequently selected as one of the orators in behalf of liberty. Especially on the memorable occasion when that favorit citizen of Massachusetts, Mr. Hoar, was insulted and rejected from South Carolina, he was called upon to express in Faneuil Hall the sentiments of the liberty-loving people of New England upon this subject. On that occasion he spoke with the eloquence said to rival that of Wendell Phillips, in presenting the only practicable political method by which the slavery issue could be placed before the country, and by which ultimately the victory of freedom might be secured.

He worked upon that task of political organization until the little Liberty party became transformed into the mighty Republican party which ultimately carried on the issue to political success, to a terrible war, and to a final victory.

Such were the practical results of the temporal and philanthropic labors in which this early apostle of liberty and reform was engaged with the noblest spirits of his time. But no sooner did the Republican party take up the subject than his prescient eye at once foretold its victory. He saw that the result could not be avoided, and though he sustained that party throughout the war, sustained it until the final victory had been attained, he felt that he had received even then a higher call in the service of the same great cause of reform, liberty, and philanthropy. It was a call which told him that others might carry on to success the ordinary warfare of politics or even that upon the field of battle, while he should take up the conflict removed to the higher field of ideas where it must ultimately be fought out; where the foundations at least must be laid of a still mightier change in the world's history, a still mightier advance toward liberty, peace, and the welfare, than ever could be realized or attained in the ordinary course of political or military events. In other words, he found that he was called to an entire change of life and purpose in the service of THE HIGHEST, the god that he worshiped.

While in England the early warnings of the necessity of this change of career from the temporal to the mental or spiritual world seem to hav become impressed upon his mind by the utility of the system of phonography which was then being introduced there by Isaac Pitman, a young Swedenborgian, of that country. Mr. Andrews took up the scheme, and perceived its promis of utility; but that to secure its utility it needed a scientific basis. He had been all his life a devoted student of philology. He saw still further that the laws and principles of language as a science could be used to bring this device of phonetic writing to a degree of proficiency that would render it a practical art.

He felt still further that the relations of harmony which prevailed in that system were but analogous renderings of the relations of harmony with which he had brought himself into contact by the study of one of the most remarkable men that had ever influenced the human race, Charles Fourier. This prophet had already risen above his horizon. Fourier's system of harmony, his demonstration that the major ills of the world might be removed if only there was an opportunity afforded to the intelligent and the enlightened part of the human race to expand into healthy action, had early attracted the attention of Mr. Andrews, and rendered him at once one of his most devoted students, and finally one of his disciples.

The system of phonography under Pitman had been justified by the science of language and placed upon a practical basis. The passional and social harmony of Fourier, he saw plainly was opening up a similar but far grander harmony in nature which must also hav its expression. A philosophy which should be able to realize the dreams of Fourier and place them upon an intelligible scientific and practical basis for the future loomed up before him as a necessity. Fourier had placed upon his tombstone two remarkable sentences: (1) That the series should distribute the harmonies. (2) That attractions should be proportional to destinies. These words Mr. Andrews never forgot. They became the foundation stones of all his philosophy and social structure. It was his purpose to see if the prophetic yearning of Fourier might not be realized in a future which even he might hope to see, if not with the eye of sense, at least with the eye of hope and prophecy. Human nature and all of its appetites and passions were essentially good, had their laws of healthy growth and development. Not a prison, but room, was needful for the step forward in social progress and morals. The theory and purpose of his life were enlarged by this view as by a new sun. As a means of business and a benefit to himself and his friends, he improved and introduced Pitman's system of phonography into this country. He transformed it into a system which we know as stenography, and which has become indispensable in the practice of law and the conduct of many of our learned professions, and in much of the business of life. His devotion to this art gathered around him as students such stenographers as Boyle, as our late lamented friend Theron C. Leland, as Parkhurst, Underhill, Burr, and many others; some of whom are present here to bear witness to the debt of gratitude they owe to him professionally. At the last public meeting of the stenographers of this city, they, hearing of his sickness and of the probably near approach of death, passed a resolution expressing their devotion to him as the patron and pioneer of their art in this country; as the one who had placed their practical art upon the permanent basis of science. In that regard our country owes him a debt of gratitude which may now, when too late, be weighed and recognized, but which was never paid.

In the other branch of that harmonious philosophy, the intellectual branch, he had still greater difficulty in obtaining any intelligent recognition. The position was such that few understood it or him. Throughout the larger portion of his life he labored under the difficulty of not having a sufficient force around him to understand the purpose or even the object for which he was striving. To the larger part of our people Mr. Andrews has ever remained a veiled prophet. Finally he came to acquiesce in that position as inevitable, and out of this mystery he derived sometimes no little amusement. The veiled prophet enjoyed his secret. It is proper on this occasion, therefore, to intimate to you in some degree the very great difficulty, and the very great importance, of the problem that he had undertaken, and possibly to add a word as to his solution.

At that time the state of philosophy presented itself to him very much in this wise: Upon the one hand there was Fourier with a sublime prophecy of social regeneration and harmony, and with him, and following him, were a number of philosophies and influences generally Humanitarian, Socialistic, or Communistic in their character, and all dominated by mere sentiment, or by a very partial and incomplete knowledge of science, or of society, or of history, or, indeed, of anything which could form the solid basis of social reconstruction. Their sentiments were their capital, and were in themselvs praiseworthy and philanthropic in the highest degree. Afterwards, on the other hand, there came into view the scientific school, with its foundation composed of a number of special objectiv sciences. That school formulated itself under the command and great organizing power of Auguste Comte into what is called the Positiv Philosophy, having the coördination of the special sciences of physical science as its basis, and having finally imposed upon it by Comte a singularly abortiv attempt to restore the Catholic régime and church as its legitimate social outcome and result. To Mr. Andrews it appeared certain that both of these systems were incomplete, but invaluable as foundations. Upon either side lay powers which he saw were good, and which must inevitably become the foundations of a new and a mighty structure. Both of these were antagonistic to each other, and impossible to be harmonized by direct contact. It was thus impossible for them to become the foundations of a new and a complete social order unless they could be connected by a view of the world which should include them both as the columns of the arch of the future. Thus he sought to bring them both into conjunction, and make them the common support of a new order. Upon the sentimental side Fourier presented a subjectiv view of the world, a grand expression of human aspiration; upon the objectiv side, represented by the Positiv philosophy and Comte, there was a vast body of sciences of nature and of history, which, as objectiv truth, could in no wise be brought into harmony with the emotional human world of Fourier. The actual facts of the world did violence to the nature and heart of man. The necessities of human nature required that man should not only be reconciled with the order of the world as Comte proposed, but also that there should be a reconciliation to sentiment and its highest aspirations. Mr. Andrews therefore said that there must be of necessity between the two, science and emotion, a common world, not objectiv, not subjectiv purely, but containing the elements of both, which should be formed of the laws and analogies which could be applied to both, and which should be in the highest sense the domain of the intellect, the science of sciences, abstracting and combining all the sciences into one ultimate unity and harmony. In other words, on the one side there was the "Naturismus," or the simple and natural order of sensation. On the other side there was an "Artismus," or a sentimental and practical order such as man wanted, and such as Fourier dreamed of. These were the two sides or columns which had been reared by these mighty influences of science and heart, and these mighty men, Comte and Fourier, their representativs. It was necessary that an arch should be thrown over these columns joining them as one completed, solid whole; that a key-stone of pure science and pure intellect should bind the two together into one arch of strength, harmony, and beauty.

In other words neither the mere objectiv sciences of Comte, nor the mere subjectiv imaginings, and fancies, and hopes of Fourier could ever be realized or harmonized unless the Naturismus on the one side, answering to the Artismus on the other, should culminate into the "Scientismus," which should arch-like combine and raise over both common laws of intellect and thus hold together, sustain, complete, and fulfil the special laws of each.

Mr. Andrews's purpose, therefore, was to complete the view of the world which should become the basis of the new social order. The object of his life thenceforward was to accomplish all which that purpose required. He was in the world to rear that mighty arch. To achieve its realization he would sacrifice anything and everything. He would be the great intellect of the age which should solve the great differences which lie between crude nature and angelic man by placing between the two a pure logic of the world, that divine logos, of which man had dreamed of old. He would be the last, because the complete, realist, reconciling the abstract with the nouminal and the phenomenal. Thus would arise an Integral, Universal philosophy upon which the whole advanced human world should stand and be able to grasp nature intelligently on one hand, and to build all needful human institutions and social order on the other. Thus man and the world would be bound together by a mighty logic which should culminate and sustain all as parts of the harmonious universe. That power of unitizing thought he had realized—that was the problem which he felt he saw more clearly than any other thinker had ever done. That scheme he thought he ought to realize in fact as he was the first to realize it in intellect. He was subordinated thenceforth to his "Universology," as at once the highest science and art. He was one of the few Americans who hav made Philosophy a business and lived for it and by it. The practice of his profession was abandoned, and with it the desire for wealth. Since his return from England he had again acquired sufficient property to make him what would be called a rich man in the community in which he lived. That was again freely sacrificed to his ideal. That one thing to him must be realized; this logic, this dream of the community of the world, of nature, and of man. He went on year after year devoting time, talents, life, to this grand purpose through misunderstanding, through good and evil report, through want and humiliations, until finally the dream became a system so clear to him that others began to see it—finally disciples began to gather around him, and then his great works took shape and form. He put out in 1851, in conjuntion with Josiah Warren, his "Science of Society," an epoch-making work which should now be reprinted. Finally, the "Basic Outline of Universology," a large work of 900 pages, became a fact; book after book, pamphlet after pamphlet, tract, essay, article, educated gradually a small circle up to the capacity of having some idea, some apprehension, if not comprehension, of his mighty mind and purpose. He continued at his labor for thirty years—indeed, until the day before his death, for his brain was the last thing of him that died. His last work was to dictate, or rather intimate, to his amanuensis a change of a few words in the title of his Dictionary of Alwato—which one day, let us hope, will see the light. Then his testimony of a life's devotion was complete, and with a smile of recognition to his devoted attendants, as if an expression of the harmony of the world he had always proclaimed, he gladly sank to the rest he had so nobly earned.

What was the value of his life-work? It may take ages to tell. We are in no position now to realize it. Think of it once as the intellectual solution of the world based upon the highest science and emotion.

In the second part of Goethe's "Faust," the master poem of the world, the same difficulty, the same intellectual problem, appeared to its wonderful author. He sought to intimate its solution by poetical artifice and allegory. He makes his hero say that only by going through the forms of things by pure, clear intellect, back to its original forms of thought—back to what he calls "the Mothers" of all conceptions, which are absolute, eternally independent of time and space, back to these idola of things that were, and are, and are to be; back to these inchoate, uncreated forms of Being, absolute and eternal, could there be a true basis of the logic which shall comprehend all nature and all art, and be the ultimate and final solution of all the conceptions and emotions of man, and also of the laws, principles, and analogies of the world about him.

Only through such a first philosophy could there be any final solution of the world around us, and of the high hopes that we indulge. The object of this philosophy was to gather into one conspectus those fundamental truths, those original forms of things and ideas, by which he would hold in his hand the key of the universe itself; by which he would think the thoughts of God as God would think them throughout all time if he were a person; by which he would become in his intellect the divine Logos itself, living with God, a part of the Godhead, without which nothing was made or could be made, which shone through him sometimes as if he were transparent intelligence, through which passed all the great fundamental forms and thoughts of the world itself.

We were accustomed to call our distinguished friend the American Hegel, for that great thinker of the world had preceded him in a similar attempt to construct a logic of pure Being. All great intellects meet with this same problem. The glory of an age or of a civilization is measured by the degree in which they approach its solution. The glory of the world is in proportion to the mind of man that rises to a clearer and clearer harmony with this conception of the divine Logos of the world. That harmony can only arise from the intelligence which can comprehend more and more of that mighty order by which we are surrounded, and which is interpreted in these primal conceptions.

It was the privilege of Mr. Andrews to carry out further than ever had been done before this unity by a logic tested and corrected by science. Hitherto, in the hands of Swedenborg, Fourier, and even Hegel, this logic, after leaving mathematics, had been a matter of vague analogies. His object was to found upon mathematics, then build upon science, and then use analogies as practical means of unity in life. He designed to take this same high conception of analogies, to purify it, to render it clear by bringing to bear on it all of the objectiv results of science, so that even analogies could be tested, and the results for justice and harmony in the art-world—the world of practical and social life—could be increased a hundredfold and more. He knew that the great works which he has left, some of which hav been published, and others of which we may hope soon will see the light, would in that way be sooner or later the greatest blessing he could confer upon his race. For it must be borne in mind that his system and views hav never had a complete or adequate public expression. What will be the result of that mighty effort it is now too soon to predict. It is certain, however, that in the line which he has taken, and probably by his own efforts, the result will be one of incalculable beneficence. The harmony, justice, and welfare which has been predicted will be in some way realized. The flattering promises which hav beguiled the philanthropists of the past will become practical measures realizable in the hands of practical philanthropists and statesmen in the future.

We hav seen, by way of illustration, the great benefit that he conferred on the world in the study of lingual science and the application of its law of harmony to phonography. In another branch of language he carried up the idea of the meaning of the tones of the human voice into a scientific and accurate expression. Thus his philosophy begot a language which should be the common language of our higher thoughts and their finer distinctions. Thus the logical properties of the abstract or metaphysical elements, which hav hitherto been unable to find expression, by reason of the incompleteness of any human mode of expression, come out with marvelous distinctness. That language of pure intelligence he called the Alwato, and of that he has left a dictionary carrying up the conceptions of a pure logic of the mind to a degree of certainty which may be of practical utility should human philosophy ever seriously attempt to clear up the Babel of human speech.

In general science he has also classified all the special sciences in a manner supplementing and completing that of Comte, and has thereby rendered an incalculable service to the orderly conception of the world. In the practical application of laws and analogies in the arts he has applied the laws of harmony, ranging from astronomy to music, so that the special advocates and teachers of those sciences turn to him with the grateful admission that he has thrown light of the greatest value upon their several domains.

Particularly in the science and art of civil and social law, following up the ideas that I hav referred to as coming originally from the Roman civil law, our systems of jurisprudence and republican politics will receive suggestions of the greatest value from his philiosophy of inclusion and harmonizing of hitherto discordant elements. Social order, government, politics, become the ultimate of all modern philosophical efforts. Through multitudes are already running the problems which dwelt years ago in his mind as to the great object of his life, and the importance of which nerved him to his task of harassing toil and self-denial. Our new social sentiments destined to culminate in a new social régime are largely due to the conception which he more than any other philosopher took into his mind and spent years in promulgating. The individuality which was dreamed of by Fourier, and the integral order of all our social elements, which was the dream of Auguste Comte, he at last succeeded in uniting. Between these two he has placed the law of continuous social evolution: the higher the integration, the finer the differentiation. The greater the multiplicity, the higher the unity. Thus he has answered the problems placed upon the tomb of Fourier in the ever memorable words: (1) The series should distribute the harmonies. (2) Destinies and attractions should be proportional. Upon Mr. Andrews's tomb might well be placed his answer to these problems and prophecies of Fourier thus:

(1) The laws of the series are the complements and analogs of each other, and thus unitary.

(2) The destinies are the parts of a higher and ever integrating attraction, and thus integral.

That attractions can be proportional to destinies, and that destinies can be to attractions, results from the higher unity which needs and includes all of the conditions and aspirations of life as one harmonious whole. "It takes all sorts to make a world" is a maxim common enough. But it is the grandest philosophy which can keep one sort or class from ruling out the others. A philosophy grand and broad enough to do that was his Universology; that is, a solution of the whole universe in which each of the sorts are placed where they belong, are shown to hav their rights, their duties, their proper sustaining order, where they belong. In that way the law of evolution receives its final vindication and all our parts become united parts of one great harmonious movement which, when recognized, givs order and peace and progress. Such a philosophy the whole world will in time be able to realize as a blessing in its very conception. Under its inspiration that ideal heaven which we hav all been religiously throwing above us beyond the skies may become a reality.

That theory of unity of diversities you may partially grasp by this illustration. When our country started out we were but thirteen struggling colonies, each quite diverse from the other. By their necessities they were compelled to be united into a confederacy, but further necessity compelled them to become consolidated into a union as a national government. Since then our progress has been comparativly onward, ever broadening and strengthening notwithstanding all the obstacles that hav been thrown around us, but still each state has its diversities respected by all and contributing to an ever stronger federativ unity.

Thus when you take hold of the several sciences, the several departments of art, the several classes or relations of society, each by and for itself can produce anarchy only. The relations of each to all or to each other are at first but slightly comprehended. In his philosophy and view of evolution all of these discordant elements of nature, all of the socially contrasting and conflicting elements, are brought into a harmony in which each will sustain the other necessarily as a condition of its own interest and duty. Its own life and welfare is seen to be involved in so doing. Thus he has called his philosophy Universology in science, or Integralism in social organization. The complete unity in peace and harmony is the result of the philosophical ordering of our ideas, our sentiments, and of our efforts in one great law of social unity.

The law of evolution foretells with certainty the final triumph of these views. All the social and internecine war and slaughter which now exist in embryo can be averted only by reconciliation from a higher point of view. The recognition of each other by contending elements and the resultant justice can never otherwise be attained. A mere scramble of competitiv selfish interests without the control of some paramount idea or motiv will surely make a hell instead of a heaven on earth. Never on any principles of mere selfishness, without any idea of order, or light, or reason, can there be peace or harmony, for there can be no justice among mankind without coördination and consequent coöperation.

He, the prophet of this higher social order, saw all this clearly, and seeing the danger, he spent his life to get views before the world which should base the higher sentiments of man on a solid foundation of science, the solid order of the world around us. He based social order upon the objectiv order of the world by means of the logic of human ideas inevitable in the nature of things and in mankind itself.

Let me read to you a few words from the latter part of his great work, "The Basic Outline of Universology," chiefly because I fear that as this audience departs, no part of the immortality of this man will abide with you unless from this moment you hav some conception of his high purpose in his own words. I read from his "Basic Outline of Universology," §§ 1,111–1,123. "Both of the orders," he says—that is, the order of nature and the logical order of ideas—"are essential to any completeness of theory, first in their oppositness and difference, and finally in their reconciliation, harmony, and coöperation, and thus they are supplementary to each other. To supply the philosophical ground of this complex unity is the office of Integralism." Such was his name for his philosophy upon its practical side.

"This ultimate conciliation of contraries is the universal type of harmony. The diverse views which are entertained, for example, by different minds upon the being and nature of God or the supreme governing potency of creation, and the administration of the universe of being, are destined through Universology to similar adjustment. The devout Catholic, the orthodox Baptist or Quaker, and the conscientious Atheist will shake hands with each other, and find a new and intense bond of unity in their very differences. Each will come to know and will love to recognize that the other has wrought with an echoing fidelity to his own, in another department merely of the grand fabrication of the whole armory of truth. The universe of fact and principle was simply too large, and the aspects of truth too multifarious, to be mastered by the infancy of man. The new catholicity of the adult age of the race can alone compass them. The grand reconciliation, the crowning harmony of humanity, could only be led in by the radical discovery of the unity of all intellectual conceptions."

And he would say that unity of intellectual conceptions could arise only as the result of a logic which can giv unity to those conceptions and the order of them, independent of mere phenomena or mere aspirations. In other words, the pure world of intellect, the pure world of logic, of mathematics, which he made the foundation of his theory and his life scheme, was essential to achieve the results for which the ages hav striven. He proceeds:

"It is this radical revolutionary reconciliation of every question of doctrin, moral, sociological, and theological, to which the world is now summoned by the positiv discovery of a proper science of sciences, the science of the universe itself. The power in the new ideas for ultimate conviction is simply irresistible. The new catholicity will rapidly prevail. Integralism will replace partialism. There remains no question as to it but the question of time."

Notice the sublime faith of this man. "If," he says, "three hundred years hav more than sufficed to reverse or modify the whole current of opinion with intelligent humanity upon the theory of the world's structure, now, with the accelerated progress of events in the mental evolution of the race, three tens of years should more than suffice to accomplish this reversal for all doctrinal beliefs and opinions. Every grand aspect of thought will be scientifically defined, and the sense in which it is tenable will be precisely illustrated in the mental world." In other words, we shall hav a philosophy large enough to include all differences of science and religion as harmonious parts of one whole science and one whole religion or organization of the human race.

"Harmony will thus grow out of dissension and discord; clearness and ineffable beauty out of mystical dogmas and doctrinal confusion. The most stupendous composit variety will be substituted for the central undeveloped unity—as for instance, of the old Catholics on the one hand, and the divergent isolation of individual centers, like that of Protestantism, on the other. Each will surrender the vicious aspiration to be the whole for the better honor of being a constituent entity of the Infinit Republic of Truth and Goodness—organized and orderly operation in all the affairs of mankind." Thus he adds:

"The New Jerusalem, the Holy City, will hav descended. The day of judgment will hav virtually come. For then all shall be justly judged and rewarded, and put in their proper places. The books will hav been opened. The judgment will hav been executed. The final restitution of all things will hav been accomplished. The grand reconciliation will hav been effected." For each will see that their duty consists in taking and filling the places in the order of the world to which, by the nature and logic of the world itself, they are assigned. Such is the highest, the completest, philosophy that mankind has yet achieved.

To carry that ideal out was to him the highest duty and the highest privilege of life. The announcement of this philosophy of reconciliation, not only as science, as Comte put it; not only as sentiment, as Fourier put it, but as the result of a logic which has inclosed the whole world as a part of itself, is the final resultant of the progress of mankind to this hour. Its practical achievement will be the realization of heaven upon earth in a tangible, practical, progressiv form. From his bed of sickness he issued a number of tracts instituting a "Universal Church of the New Order," which should federate and include elements hitherto irreconcilable, as necessary parts of the higher integration working for the welfare of each member and of the race at large. Then the pen fell from his hand and his work was done!

How shall we say, then, that this is an occasion for mere grief? Let us rejoice as upon the eve of a combat which can end in none other than victory. Let those whom he has instructed—let the little band of devoted disciples, far larger than the band that once gathered around him who is said to hav spoken on the mountains of Galilee, inspired with a higher faith than at that age of the world was possible or conceivable, inspired by the higher faith of this age, stand by the memory and the doctrins of him who taught them to think and to aspire; stand by them until they become the seed which shall spread throughout the world and be recognized as the leaven of a new social life. Let them become the harbingers of hope to millions as now to hundreds. It is only the working for such purposes that can make this life a blessing and a glory. Such are the hopes that bring heaven near and make it real. Such are the presagings of immortality which extend the immortality of earth into ages and infinities unknown.

But those who stood near and very dear to him—what is their consolation? Let them continue his life in the glorious hopes and efforts which he developed. Let them be consoled by their faithful service to one worthy of their sleepless toil. Let them not forget that we sympathize with them in their personal loss. To us he was the philosopher; to them, a father and a friend. In domestic circles he was largely the impersonation of love. We knew him in the arena as a gladiator in intellectual contests, as a victor sometimes almost merciless in his excoriation of the time-serving, the mean, the contemptible, the bigoted, the contracted. But let us not forget that there was an inner circle who worshiped him as one who with wisdom had guided their lives, who had understood their sorrows, and turned even into a kind of pleasure the misfortunes of our common fate. Nor let us forget that what was true of him individually is true of his mighty doctrin. It is itself intellectually a logic, cold as steel, merciless as law. It is emotionally tender as a woman or a child, melting over the afflictions and miserics of mankind. Indeed, it was those very miseries of humanity which became the mainspring which moved the intellect to find some relief or consolation against the fatalities of nature, and the miseries man ignorantly inflicts on man. Thus let those around him and nearer to him receive our sympathy as a part of their reward. Let them know of our appreciation for what they hav done for him in his years of illness. To her tenderly nursing him, night and day, let, as some recognition, your gratitude go out freely now.

Thus has been completed a noble life, a life the traces of which we may well say shall not soon vanish in the depths of the ages. For, the effects of it hav become already a part of the great world. Its circles, as time goes on, must enlarge from year to year. Let us be grateful and thankful that this man has been destined to raise the whole community up to a higher life. Let us rise to that life ourselvs, and thus hav, what he could not hav as he deserved, for want of time or means, a foretaste of the immortality that remains on earth as the result of man's beneficence and love. To earth then with the form that belongs to the Mother Earth—to the Immortals with their own—the power which is rational, immortal, and deathless; the power which shall liv forever honored throughout all the spheres. To us belongs the soul, to be garnered now and treasured, and sowed again and again until the harvesters shall reap from this life afar through the depths of time blessings to millions yet to be.

Therefore we say, Farewell! Farewell to earthly life and love, the precursors and the earnest, the first steps, of the life immortal. In that higher life we bid thee Hail! as a star to enlighten, guide, and console evermore.

REMARKS BY DR. GEORGE W. SAMSON,
PRESIDENT OF RUTGERS COLLEGE.

I am here, my friends, from regard to our departed friend and brother, simply to call your attention for two or three moments to some of the last developments of character on the part of our friend.

I am at home with you, gentlemen and ladies, and hav been ever since, in the winters of 1871 and 1872, I met our noble friend in your circle, and immediately it flashed upon me: Here at last is the Grecian Socrates; and now his little tract, No. 2, put in my hand, reveals an added character. He was not understood fully. Read Plato's Dialogs, five volumes in Bohn's Classical Library, and how one feels that he does not fathom the thought of Socrates! And yet that thought was at the foundation of the Roman law, to which my friend, Mr. Wakeman, has referred. He was not appreciated, he was murdered. But it was the doctrins of that man that lived in Aristotle and in the Roman civil law, which Chancellor Kent indicates has been so largely incorporated into New York's commercial statutes. Read Cicero and you will see this fact.

Just one word in reference to the character of Mr. Andrews. He was intellectual; this you feel, but the moment that his eye fell upon you you saw no sarcasm, no bitterness. He listened to every one that spoke, and took in all that was said; it fell into its place in his thought, and when he arose to speak, you saw the master-spirit. The greatness of Washington was, we are told, that he appreciated every one of his men, and their thought culminated in his final decisions.

I can not dwell on all his merits and virtues. Never shall I forget his visits to my house at the time when he organized the "Colloquium," and urged the influence for good which he hoped it would exert. He felt, "Here are the men who are in the Hebrew and the Christian churches. They are ruling to a large extent the population." My friends, you hav a deeper mission. The Christian church is not reaching the thinking, scientific, philosophic element that comes from the old world. The churches cannot reach it. We are reaching the moving mass, but you are reaching the deep thought. How I hav felt it when I hav been talking to that man, and the responsibility that rests upon this band that are with him. You can giv shape to thought, and I pray God that you may do it. I seem when I meet you as if I were sitting at the feet of my grandfather. He preceded Mr. Andrews in his grand crusade. I remember as if it were yesterday, when a little bit of a boy, his taking me upon his knee, talking of his views and hopes, giving me the means which permitted a thorough education at home and abroad, and opened thus the sphere which I hav tried (as a friend before me, Dr. Lambert, well knows) in the city of Washington to fill.

Never shall I forget all the discussions from 1841 after the death of General Harrison, to which my friend, Mr. Wakeman, has referred. Sam Houston sat in my congregation twelve years; and when the break came he stood like a rock. He appreciated the Connecticut men who at Santa Anna's invitation went down and commenced the movement, when Mexico had declared for emancipation, trusting to be sustained by them. These men afterward General Houston appreciated, standing by them to the very last, even up to the war of secession. You don't know his history, but you will find it in the volume of his life now published by Lippincott.

And now, in reference to that other matter, I would that I had time to dwell upon it. Just read these tracts, my friends, and you will see how that mind of Mr. Andrews sought to inspire the Christian church. Don't fling us off. Stand by us; we hav the broader mission. You hav a deeper one. We will reach the mass of the people. There is no question of that; for religion, my dear friends, is reconciled philosophy. It comes out in these tracts of our brother—that great law, "Thy shalt love thy God," not somebody else's God. The divine power you recognize—love him! love him! And then, my dear friends, when that comes to pass, however different our ideas of doctrin and duty, when we love the Lord our God with all our heart and mind, your personal God in the environment with which he is surrounded each of us—then we are sure we shall learn to love our neighbor as ourselvs.

That is the point, and I say it from the very depths of my heart. I look for great things from this man. We are relying on the grand old philosopher whose language and ideas, mingling the thought of Socrates and the spirit of Jesus, will yet enter into a system of law grander than that of Rome.

The Deserving Dead.

E. C. Walker in Lucifer.

Stephen Pearl Andrews has gone out on the sea of silence and of memory. Possessing more and better brains than most other men, he used them in the service of humanity, and to-day his grave should be tear-wet and flower-covered. But he is unknown outside of a small circle of earnest reformers, the American people hav not heard of him and could not appreciate him if they had. He was neither a gold-getter, a military chieftain, nor a rascally politician. Hence they giv monuments and monumental lies to the memory of the Garfields and the Grants, and leave the Wrights and the Andrews to forgetfulness.

The other day I saw a car upon the Northwestern road which was loaded with flowers sent by citizens of California, to deck the grave of General Grant in Riverside Park on Decoration Day. There were said to be twelve hundred calla lilies alone in this floral offering for the tomb of the successful soldier of war. Would one of these hav been laid by its donor upon the bier of the successful soldier of amity, education, and brotherhood, Stephen Pearl Andrews?

O my countrymen! giv Grant the cypress and the weeping willow, for he planted them thickly in the West and in the East, but for Stephen Pearl Andrews bring the roses and the oak leaves, the lilies and the laurels. He merits them all.

Chicago Secular News.

The Secular Union was treated to a highly interesting and instructiv scientific lecture last Sunday evening, by Dr. S. V. Clevenger, on the "Origin of Man," who illustrated his points by diagrams. It is useless to attempt a synopsis, but I would merely say that it was as thorough an exposition of the Darwinian theory as could be crowded into an hour's discourse. Dr. Clevenger is one of our leading physicians, and the author of a work on "Psychology," which, I am informed, is considered an authority by his profession. The doctor was called by the state, last week, to testify, as an expert on mental phenomena, in the Dacey murder trial, who is arraigned for the killing of Alderman Gaynor. The following shows that the church has not lost all its venom, and describes the scene in court on the morning of June 2d:

At the opening of court after recess Dr. S. V. Clevenger was called to the stand and sworn.

"There's a question here," said Judge Murphy, "as to this man's Infidelity. I am told he is an Infidel and has no regard for an oath. I would like to know about it."

To the court and Mr. Mills Dr. Clevenger said he considered an oath binding upon him to tell the truth "under pains and penalties of the penitentiary."

"Yes, so far as the penitentiary is concerned," exclaimed Judge Murphy, addressing the court, "but how is it as to his accountability to God? If he doesn't believe in a God, to whom he is accountable after death, he is not competent as a witness."

"Is that in the Constitution of the United States?" asked Dr. Clevenger.

"I am not talking to you. When I want you to say anything I will notify you," replied Judge Murphy, sharply.

Dr. Clevenger was withdrawn from the stand while authorities could be procured to throw light on the question of his competency as a witness.

In the afternoon, however, Dr. Clevenger was recalled, and the question of his competency was argued. The court finally decided that as the constitution specified that no man should be denied any right, privilege, or capacity by reason of his religious opinions, the doctor might take the stand. Dr. Clevenger then explained that he was neither an Atheist nor an Infidel, but an Agnostic. His testimony covered substantially the same ground as that of other experts, and was equally strong in tending to show that Dacey is sane.

Our ex-secretary, Ella Le Page, has been dangerously ill for two weeks and nothing but the most assiduous and intelligent attention such as her mother, Mrs. Freeman, can giv, has saved her to her family and to us. A pious lady friend told me yesterday, that though I regarded such things with contempt she was going to pray for the recovery of Mrs. Freeman's daughter. I begged her not to attempt it, if she did not wish to make her worse, as I thought Garfield was killed by so much prayer. Whether she prayed or not, the patient was much worse a few hours ago; if good wishes could make her well she would never know a day of sickness.

The grand jury hav indicted most of the Anarchists on several counts, several of them for murder. Capt. W. P. Black has accepted the position of leading counsel, although regretting his inexperience in criminal practice. Captain Black is one of nature's noblemen, and when everyone shrank from the odium which must attach to one who demanded justice for even an Anarchist, he cheerfully and readily accepted. If he wins the case it cannot add to his popularity nor to his practice; but, careless of consequences, he gladly accepts odium in defense of what he deems the right—the noblest trait in humanity. Mr. Black is a brother of Gen. John C. Black, our pension commissioner, serving as captain in the same regiment. He has lectured twice for our League, and under the auspices of the League his last lecture on "Russia and Nihilism" was published. Mr. Black, only a few years ago, was a leading Presbyterian, but left on account of his heretical differences; but we must giv him time to grow, as he is doing rapidly, into the broader field of Liberalism.

We think of continuing our meetings right along, as the interest seems undiminished and the weather thus far has not been oppressiv.

Mr. J. W. Howe is making a splendid record as treasurer, and as an enthusiastic member. As a recording secretary Mrs. Freeman surpasses all her predecessors, and if a person gets in in time to hear the minutes, they get the whole benefit of the preceding night's lecture and debate, reported with a patience and accuracy quite astounding.

I see you are hitting on the bigotry of the order of Knights of Labor. All I can say is that your criticisms are just. Some years ago I was the chairman of its Executiv Board, and at that time it was as near an appendage of the Roman Catholic church as any organization could well be. Certain expressions were inserted in the secret work of the order in conformity with the demands of the priesthood, to my certain knowledge, and because I fought all that sort of thing continually I found it eventually more comfortable to remain out of the order than to mix with such "brothers." Perhaps I was hasty in leaving, as the very next session the order adopted a much more liberal policy. However, I had the pleasure to put in some of its reformatory work. I wrote the resolution which demanded that women be allowed to organize on the same basis as that of men.

Personally, I hav had a good opinion of T. V. Powderly as to his integrity, with whom I was brought into intimate relations, but always deplored his love for the church of oppression. At the convention held in Pittsburgh in 1880, when talking in the hotel, I asked him this pointed question, "If the order [meaning the Knights of Labor] should demand of you to do a certain thing, and the church [meaning the Catholic church] should demand that you do something quite opposit, which would you obey?" Without hesitancy Mr. Powderly answered, "I should obey the church." You can imagin what confidence I could feel in the order after that.

Whenever I find the monopolistic press—the press which livs on political jobbery—praising any man connected with a vital reform movement, I generally conclude that it is high time for that particular reform to drop him. Powderly has been receiving too much praise of late from journals of this class, the avowed enemies of labor and liberty, to seem to be doing his whole duty by them. He may hav done nothing unusual to merit their praise, but it is seldom a true man ever gets it, and their praise will excite a proportionate suspicion, and is unfortunate for him.

CURRENT TOPICS.

A great hubbub has been raised by the G. A. R. against Superintendent Guinea's refusal to allow a post chaplain to perform certain Decoration Day services at the grave of Colonel Mulligan in Calvary cemetery, on the ground that none but Catholic priests are permitted to pray within the premises. The superintendent was doubtless following his instructions, but is likely to be made a scapegoat of by his church for being indiscreet. A priest acknowledges that the church cannot afford the impression to go abroad that it objects to any one praying in Calvary cemetery.

Whether it can afford it or not, those are the rules. Even the Catholic church feels quite uncomfortable when brought face to face with the palpable evidence of its own bigotry. Most of you hav read of the desperation of despair with which the women of Cummings, Ill., fought against the removal of the nails made by non-union men who took the places of of their husbands and fathers. From the lengthy article in last evenings's Mail I make this brief extract:

When the attempt was made to move the cars Captain Hunt's sixty officers experienced greater difficulty with the enemy than if they had been men armed with shot-guns. Women perched upon the cowcatcher of the engin, appealing to the railroad men and begging the police.

"You're taking the bread out of the mouths of my hungry children," said one.

"Strike me with your club! Kill me!" wildly exclaimed another.

"I've only one time to die," said a thin, pale-faced, hollow-chested woman, who, with a baby in her arms, attempted to throw herself on the track before the moving engin.

"What do you mean?" shouted an officer, as he grabbed her just in time.

"I mean that I might as well die that way as starve to death," she screamed. "I'm living on corn meal and water now, and beg that from door to door. Oh, I want to die!" and she struggled to get back to the engin as the policeman pushed her away from the tracks.

"You see how it is," the considerate captain remarked. "If they were men we could club them and giv vent to our feelings by calling them something, but they are women, and what can a man do!"

Is not this a terrible disgrace to a land of plenty? These poor creatures were finally overcome, and the nails moved. Monopoly, as usual, triumphant! In the same paper a lengthy article describes the pomp and magnificence with which the Union League are to formally open their new one-hundred-and-seventy-five-thousand-dollar structure by a banquet. The primary object of the Union League is to encourage and promote by moral, social, and political influence, loyalty to the government, and to defend and protect the integrity and perpetuity of the nation. This is supposed to be a government of free institutions. Freedom without bread is a mere mockery, so that Cummings affair should be a prominent topic for the Union League. I am afraid that the league is more liable to confine its efforts for the perpetuity of free institutions to donations to build more armories or clamors for more police.

The Chicago Herald, in a leading editorial a few days ago, cited the case of United States Senator Van Wyck, of Nebraska, who alone in that body seems to oppose all political jobs to the detriment of the producers of his state; who is a zealous advocate of forfeiting unearned land grants to railroads; who fights subsidies and in his own way creates a vast deal of trouble for the monopolists. Still he is worse abused at home than on Wall street. The principal organs of his own party call him "old crazy horse," an ignoramus, an incompetent old crank. Had he feathered his nest he would hav been heralded as a man of wonderful mental development, but honesty is a fatal path for political distinction. Progress is inevitable, yet little change is found from one generation to another. And it's the same the world over.

More than one hundred years ago Adam Smith wrote of the situation in Great Britain: "The member of Parliament who supports every proposal for strengthening monopoly is sure to acquire great distinction for understanding trade, and also great popularity and influence with an order of men whose numbers and wealth render them of great importance. If he opposes them, on the contrary, and still more, if he hav authority enough to be able to thwart them, neither the most acknowledged probity nor the highest rank, nor the greatest public services can protect him from the most infamous abuse and detraction, from personal insults, nor sometimes from real danger arising from the influence of furious and disappointed monopolists."

There is little change in a hundred years. The majority of the United States Senate are representativs of boodle instead of brains.

In a lecture at the Belgian Academy by M. Willems there is an interesting reference to the elections of Pompeii (pom-pa-ya). Placards are still to be seen painted upon the walls or incrusted in the plaster. According to these ancient posters, the candidates possessed all the gifts and virtues common to the officials of the present day. Their talents and virtues are extolled in tall characters of many colors, and some of them are strongly recommended to the voters of Pompeii by the faithful followers of the church of Venus. The members of other persuasions also appear to hav had their candidates. In fact, the notices all go to show that religion and politics were badly mixed a few years ago in Pompeii.

Those persecuted friends of freedom, the Jesuits, in Rome hav purchased the colossal Constanzi Hotel, the surrounding grounds, the Cuirassier barrack grounds, and are building with all possible speed their new headquarters. The largest building is to be a a college for German clericals. The propaganda has also purchased the vast Plazza Migranelli. The Franciscans are building a convent to eclipse the grandest in Rome. E. A. STEVENS.

Freethought in Texas.

On Tuesday morning, June 1st, I left Fort Worth and went to Bowie, a town with three thousand inhabitants and one church, where I lectured on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday nights. Our audiences were large. Dr. J. F. Elliott, Clark Arnold, and William Sommers arranged for the meetings at this place. Three more enthusiastic workers it would be difficult to find. V. M. Elliott, C. C. Thompson, and many others came from Crafton, sixteen miles south of Bowie.

At Bowie I met one of J. D. Shaw's converts, Mr. M. M. Gaught. Mr. Gaught was a clergyman, but by reading the Shaw-Price discussion which appeared in the Independent Pulpit a year or two ago, he became convinced that Christianity was false, and renounced his faith. He is now following the more honorable profession of a teacher.

On Friday afternoon I returned to Fort Worth, and in the evening took a train on the Texas and Pacific, arriving at Cisco Saturday morning. From Cisco I went to DeLeon, and from there by stage to Comanche. At Comanche I addressed three large audiences, one on Saturday night, one on Sunday afternoon, and one on Sunday night. The meetings were held in the court-house.

The activ workers of Comanche county are S. L. Ewing, C. W. Carnes, I. A. Dingler, T. B. Ewing, E. P. Hardy, and Mr. Robinson. Rev. Van Cleveland, a Universalist minister, a correspondent of the Independent Pulpit, and a very liberal man, attended our meetings.

On Monday I went to Cleburne, where at night I lectured to a large audience in the Court House. Mr. Hazelwood, J. Zimmerman, J. W. Bryant, Oliver Heath, Colonel Morgan, and J. J. Ramsay, of Kimball, are some of the Liberals whom I met here. It was at Cleburne, four years ago, that J. D. Shaw was deposed for heresy.

This ended my work in Texas. From Cleburne I returned to Kansas, reaching home June 10th. I left home April 15th. During this time I delivered fifty-six lectures in the following towns: Denison, Trenton, Sherman, Fort Worth, Dallas, Henrietta, Walnut Springs, Corsicana, Kerens, Waters, Waco, Norse, Clifton, Granbury, Morgan, San Antonio, New Braunfels, Clear Springs, Houston, Livingston, Moscow, Handley's, Henderson, Overton, Longview, Cooper, Bowie, Comanche, Cleburne.

My work has been to a great extent pioneer work. In a majority of the above towns my lectures were the first Freethought lectures ever delivered.

There is sufficient interest manifested in the Liberal cause in Texas to insure constant employment for a lecturer there. Nearly all the towns I visited wished me to return and giv another course of lectures. Belton, Paris, Honey Grove, Victoria, and other places also invited me to come.

As yet Texas is the only Southern state in which the Liberals hav made a vigorous fight against priestcraft. But the Liberals of other states are falling into line, and the time is not far distant when they will be holding Liberal meetings all over the South. While in Texas I received calls for lectures from Arkansas, Tennessee, Mississippi, and Alabama.

J. E. REMSBURG.

Spiritual Photography.

The Committee of Investigation were appointed under an agreement that the results should be published in THE TRUTH SEEKER. The best explanation of the present state of affairs will be found in the following letter to Mr. Keeler, to which as yet no reply has been received:

June 3, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Robinson having left you in the apparent position, now for more than three weeks, of being unwilling to proceed with the investigation which he demanded in your name, making no response to my repeated requests to know whether you would enable him to keep the promises he made, and whether the spirits through you would promis their coöperation, it being time that I should make a public announcement of the result as originally provided for, I write directly to you for information, lest I should do you injustice in my report as secretary of the Committee of Investigation.

Yours truly, HENRY M. PARKHURST.

The Library Club.

Excessivly warm weather conspired with other causes to keep the writer from attending the second meeting of the Library Club at 143 Eighth street. Miss Gertrude B. Kelly, of Newark, spoke on that occasion on "The Necessity for the Social Revolution."

Mrs. Jane Griffin, the elocutionist, presided at the meeting and introduced the speaker in a way that satisfied all the requirements imposed by the most approved methods of expression. Miss Kelly is an engaging speaker, and it is said upon the authority of Mr. Henry Appleton that the features of her face are as agreeable to the eye as her voice is to the ear and her words to the understanding.

Through the kindness of the young lady librarian, THE TRUTH SEEKER has been furnished with the following sentences from Miss Kelly's address:

When we speak of revolution we mean in the first place a revolution in ideas, and, as a result of this, a complete change in the condition of society.

If the Knights of Labor should by any means chance to be successful to-morrow, if they should hav the whole country at their feet, with their present ideas of the production and distribution of wealth, there would be no revolution accomplished; there would be simply a change of dynasty, for in no way are their ideas opposed to those now prevailing in society.

I think that we are beginning to see that no matter what the form of the government may be, or the character of the governors, the evils in society continue to increase—the cry of overproduction, business depression, lack of work, starvation, and misery goes up from all countries alike. Protected America and free-trade England suffer from the same evils. Democratic administration, Republican administration, civil service reform, no civil service reform, protection, and free-trade produce no appreciably different effects, the evils continue to increase and to multiply as they did under Louis XIV., XV., and XVI. We are beginning to see that our salvation, if salvation there be for us, lies outside of all political forms, political methods, and political men.

The government is always the representativ of brute force in society.

However much we may try to disguise the the fact, the whole function of the government is to protect property. At the present moment we need only to look into the daily papers to see on which side the whole weight of the government is thrown. I am not now considering the right or the wrong of these strikes all over the countrv, but I ask you to look into the case honestly, and tell me if you ever knew of the government forces being called out to protect the interests of the laborers.

It is the presence of rent, interest, and profit in society that sets the whole machine out of order, and it is only by their removal that the machine can ever run smoothly. Rent can be abolished by simply removing the protection of the laws from the monopolizers of the soil, by recognizing no title to land but occupation and use. Interest and profit can be abolished by doing away with the monopoly of the banking system, in other words, by putting the banking business up to competition, as all other legitimate businesses are put up to competition, and thus bring down the price of the issue of currency to cost.

Among the speakers who discussed the lecture were Mr. King, who wears a slouch hat and looks like a pocket edition of dynamiter, which he is not by any means; and Mr. McLeod, who makes no bones of declaring himself a Socialist. Mrs. Leonard, one of the library's best friends, also addressed the meeting, and Mrs. Griffin recited a poem said to hav been instigated by the spirit of Wendell Phillips there present. These meetings are to be continued every Friday evening until the Liberal Club meets again, when the day of meeting will hav to be changed, or the Library Club will lose its audience. The next lecture is by Dr. Flag, of South America; subject, "The New Republic."

The library is now tolerably well equipped with books and papers. Visitors there receive courteous attention, and the institution should become one of great benefit to the workingmen of this city.

Lectures and Meetings.

E. C. WALKER is now on a lecturing and canvassing tour through Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, Dakota, and Wisconsin. Those desiring lectures should address him at Valley Falls, Kansas, box 498. This is Mr. Walker's seventh year in the Freethought field work. He thinks that he has become personally acquainted with more Liberals than has any other worker and lecturer who has been in the field for the same length of time.

THE Wisconsin State Association of Spiritualists will hold its next quarterly meeting in Musical Society Hall, 381 Milwaukee street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, June 25, 26, and 27, 1886. The speakers engaged for the occasion are A. B. French, of Clyde, Ohio, and Mrs. S. E. Warner-Bishop, of Wisconsin. The Misses Cora and Vinnie Phillips will furnish the vocal music. Those paying full fare on railroads to the meeting will be returned for one-fifth fare. Board at first-class boarding houses is promised at $1 per day, and all interested in Spiritualism are invited to attend. The meeting will be called to order at ten o'clock A.M., Friday the 25th. Dr. J. C. Phillips, Omro, Wisconsin, is secretary.

A Promising Apparition Knocked Out.

Clergymen still exorcise the devil wherever he shows himself, but when carefully examined into the devil in modern times turns out to be no devil at all, but an innocent creature of some sort, that was never aware of the mischief it created. The suspicion lies near that had the courage of the people been greater, and their knowledge more extensiv, the devil would never hav made his appearance on this cold, sublunar world, but remained in his more genial torrid home.

A report comes from a small village in the Tyrol which is amusing reading. The police sergeant, the only limb of the law stationed there, tells the following story:

"The good, honest peasants reported to me that his satanic majesty had taken up his abode in a neighboring chapel, and performed sundry capers therein; they begged me to chase him away. I laughed, armed myself with sword and gun to exterminate the mischief-maker. On my way to the chapel I met crowds of peasants, and they told me the most blood-curdling stories of the tricks played by the devil; they were especially frightened by the noise, the humming, buzzing, and shrieking against the small windows of the chapel. When I arrived at the place a crowd was assembled in the neighborhood, armed with flails, pitch-forks, fence-rails and the like, but remained at a respectful distance. The door of the chapel was open, and to my surprise I found the priest there, clad in his full canonicals, who was exorcising the devil in regular style. There was nothing further for me to do, and I went to a neighboring inn to take in a supply of courage (strengthening spirits), in case my services should be required later on, after the retirement of the priest from the battle-field. I was not there but a few minutes when the peasants came running with the cry: 'The devil is there yet!' So I proceeded once more to the chapel, the door of which was now closed. I took a lantern from one of the peasants, and boldly stepped in the church, a number of villagers, well armed, with chattering teeth and blanched faces, following me. I threw the light of the lantern in every direction, but could discern nothing. I finally became impatient, and stamping my foot hard upon the floor, I exclaimed, 'Devil, where are you?' when a buzzing noise was heard above our head, which turned out to come from a poor innocent—bat. The holy water had no effect upon it, but a blow from my stick finished the career of that devil."—Jewish Reformer.

The Nine Demands.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

Communications.

A Bill of Indictment Against Religions Per Se.

BY JACOB HENDERSON.

IV.

THE STULTIFICATION OF THE INTELLECT PRODUCED BY RELIGION.

That my ideas of the groveling and debasing character of the feeling called religion, and of its malign influence on the human intellect, are correct, I cite in proof the melancholy instance of Mr. Gladstone, the present Prime Minister of England. Mr. Gladstone is the most conspicuous man in the British empire, as a statesman, a scholar, and a person of irreproachable moral character. He has few equals, and no superiors as a man of intellect and attainments in the various departments of learning. But when, last year, in Scotland, he expressed himself in favor of the disestablishment of the English church at some remote time in the future, after he had left the scene of human affairs, the clergy raised the howl that he was heading the hosts of Infidelity which bid fair to sweep over the land like a destructiv tornado, his religion caused him to become panic-stricken; and to defend himself against this reproach, he wrote an article for an English magazine, entitled, "The Dawn of Creation and of Worship," which, if it had been written by a pulpiteer, would be considered by scientific men as the babblings of a medieval saint. Great as he is on other subjects, when he comes to religion, his intellect, like a beautiful Etruscan vase knocked from its pedestal, goes to pieces, and he becomes a child. The men of science who hav reviewed him, imitating the reverence of Noah's sons, hav treated him with a tenderness due to his character as a statesman, intrusted, at this crisis, with vast responsibilities. In thus resisting the temptation to use the weapons of ridicule and sarcasm, they hav honored themselvs as well as him.

But a more pitiable spectacle still presents itself to the gaze of the world in the case of another great Englishman, Cardinal Newman, whose abilities, learning, and general excellence of character entitle him to the resspect of every one, but whose omnivorous credulity excites the wonder of all the world outside the church. This gentleman began his career as a clergyman of the Church of England, but, by an easy and short step, left that body, and became a Roman Catholic, and a cardinal. Let him speak for himself: "I think it impossible to withstand the evidence which is brought for the liquifaction of the blood of Saint Januarius at Naples, or for the motion of the eyes of the pictures of the Madonna in the Roman states. I see no reason to doubt the material of the Lombard cross at Monza, and I do not see why the holy coat at Treves may not hav been what it professes to be. I firmly believe that portions of the true cross are at Rome, and elsewhere; that the crib of Bethlehem is at Rome, and the bodies of St. Peter and St. Paul. Also, I believe that the relics of the saints are doing innumerable miracles and graces daily. I firmly believe that before now saints hav raised the dead to life, crossed the seas without vessels, multiplied grain and bread, cured incurable diseases, and stopped the operation of the laws of the universe in a multitude of ways." That this instinct of religion is powerful enough, at this time of day, to babyfy the intellect of such a man as Cardinal Newman, should alarm every well-wisher of his race. It shakes, but does not unsettle, our faith in the potency of knowledge as an infallible cure for superstition. If such cases were general, instead of rare, we might as well ground our arms in the war we are waging for the soul's freedom, and giv up our unhappy race to the dominion of the church and priesthood forever.

The subjugation of the intellect by the blind and cruel monster called religion was seen in Kepler, one of the mightiest minds, not only of his century, but of all time. It doomed him to sixteen years of unnecessary but herculean labor in his abortiv effort to reconcile the eternal laws of the universe with the absurd demands of his creed.

In like manner, Hugh Miller, another man of science, was driven to premature death by suicide, because he could not compel geology to verify the absurdities of Genesis and of the Westminster Confession of Faith. His religion was cruel and stupid enough to command him, on pain of hell-fire, as a heretic, to believe, without evidence, what his knowledge knew to be false. The strain upon his feelings was too much for him, and another human sacrifice was laid on the altar of Moloch.

But we need not cross the Atlantic to find illustrations of the blinding and cowardly influence which religion exerts upon the minds of great men. Professor Dana, of Yale College, has lately given the world an example of this in his effort to make science uphold the childish legend in Genesis. I could not be guilty of insulting this distinguished scientist by supposing that he believed the story. His disloyalty to the truth and to his own convictions must be set down to his fear of offending the religious sentiment of his countrymen, as if the end of the world had come, and there were to be no more years than the year 1886. What a rebuke is given to this class of trimmers by those who hav died at the stake rather than obliterate the eternal distinction between truth and falsehood! Servetus, by saying the word "eternal," could hav saved his life. Bruno, by uttering one comprehensiv lie of denial, could hav propitiated the Romish hounds that were thirsting for his blood. But these names are immortal, and will go down to the coming centuries in honor, because those who bore them had such profound reverence for truth that they would rather die than deny it. Truth, conscious of the eternity of her years, is a hard mistress for mortals to serve. Traitors to her holy cause may escape present punishment by a compromise, and because treason may be popular, but she will gibbet them at last. Archbishop Cranmer, by his facil nature and his strong love of life, was induced to recant his convictions and treat them as if they were false. But when he saw that this step could not save him from the flames, he recanted his recantations, and going to the stake thrust his own right hand into the fire to die as a malefactor for signing the first recantation, and gave the rest of his body to die a martyr to the truth of the second.

THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN RELIGION AND THEOLOGY.

The definition of theology is that it is the science or knowledge of God. Mr. Gladstone, in his reply to Huxley, says: "Theology is ordered knowledge," of course about God. But knowledge is the apprehension and attainment of facts and truths. A person cannot know anything that is not true in its sphere, or that is contingent in the sphere of events. A thing or an event must be fixed and certain in the plan of the universe to be the object of either foreknowledge or after-knowledge. If it were not eternally true in geometry that the three angles of every triangle are equal to two right angles, the mind of Euclid could never hav perceived it; and if the birth of the man Euclid had not been as necessary an event in the plan of the universe, it could not hav been foreseen even by an omniscient being as a fact.

Now, what does theology certainly know about a God or the God? The Christian theology all through its history has been divided into two great antagonistic systems, the Augustinian, or, as they say nowadays, the Calvinistic, division on the one hand, and the division which found its chief spokesman in James Arminius, who flourished in the sixteenth century of our era, and who was at swords' points with Calvin on the fundamental points of free will, grace, and predestination. When it is said that "theology is ordered knowledge" about God, I ask which God? The Arminian theologian, on the authority of the Bible, declares the Calvinistic God to be a monster of injustice and unworthy of worship, because he creates millions of human beings and places them by his providence in circumstances where they necessarily sin, and then when they die casts them into eternal hell fire. The Calvinist replies: Your God is both an ignoramus and an imbecil—an ignoramus, because, for fear if he looked into the certain future he would see a sinful event which he ought, as a good God, to hav prevented if he could and now remove if he can, and therefore keeps himself in profound ignorance of; an imbecil, because, if sin be sin eternally, and he regards it as such, his power to prevent or remove it is not equal to his benevolence and sense of justice; and therefore he is limited and not infinit in power, and entirely unfit to be the governor of such a complicated universe as this is.

The same dissimilarity in their conceptions of God characterizes all the subordinate sects of Christendom. The gods in the Christian Pantheon are almost as numerous, and just as diverse in their character, as the gods of the Greek and Roman mythology. Each founder of a new sect and creed begins with his own conception of what God is, or ought to be, and, arguing deductivly from that starting-point, finds plenty of texts in the Bible to satisfy himself and his followers that his theology is true and all others false. Theology "ordered knowledge?" Look at the creeds of Christendom!

If I am right in my theory of the origin of the religious sentiment, religion and theology stand in the relationship of parent and child. That is to say, religion was inoculated into the human character in the period of the race's infancy, millions of years ago, by ignorance and fear. As our ancestors gradually emerged from their mental darkness under the law of progress, they made movements toward a theology. But, as the stream cannot rise higher than the fountain, theology bore the marked features of its mother. It was a natural growth from religion as the root; and as a tree has many branches, upon which may be grafted many different kinds of fruit, so theology is hydra-headed, each head answering to one of the multitudinous sects of Christendom.

So far from being true is Mr. Gladstone's remark that theology is "ordered" knowledge, and so conscious is theology itself that there is no order, but only confusion and antagonism in its doctrins, that it travels up and down, and all over the world, and through all the centuries, asking to be accepted on faith, and not on evidence. It discourages all investigation as to its truthfulness. It asks us to believe its dogmas and its statements implicitly and without questioning; as, for instance, that three churches in Italy hav each a skull of John the Baptist; that over a hundred and fifty other churches, in the late Papal States alone, hav each a quantity of the milk of the Virgin Mary, and that Balaam's ass spoke to his master in the Hebrew language. In all these, and hundreds of other cases like them, theology clearly shows its parentage. Its whole aim is to placate its divinity. God is angry at his child, man. He shrouds himself in impenetrable mystery, never once showing his face, and this intensifies the fear and increases the ignorance of the wretch who stands trembling before his presence. To appease the wrath and secure the approbation of this God, by believing any dogma and doing any thing prescribed by the priest, is, I repeat, the sole object of every doctrin of theology. To this end we must hav a tri-personality in the Godhead, so that the son, of equal age and dignity with the father, may offer himself up as a sacrifice to propitiate the father's anger towards the son's constituents. We must hav a Holy Ghost to apply the redemption thus purchased, and make the atonement effectual, by the miracle of the new birth, creating a clean thing out of an unclean. Then comes the great doctrin of faith in the creed, with the alternativ of damnation. The mass in the Catholic church is the chief feature in her doctrin and worship, and is always called the sacrifice of the mass, wherein the penitent believes, or thinks he believes, that the wafer he takes into his lips, made out of wheaten flour, is transubstantiated by the priest's prayer into the very body, blood, and divinity of Jesus Christ, and that Christ is thus renewedly offered up as a sacrifice for this Catholic sinner in particular, all on the religious principle laid down by the eminent father, Tertullian, of the third century, that the more utterly impossible it is for a thing to be true, the easier and more meritorious it is for true Christian faith to believe it. For this is the virtue of the grace of faith, that it can believe without evidence, that it can remove mountains by its strength, and can swallow down and digest whole camels of absurdity.

The Greek and Roman theology, which the church called "mythology," as if her own religion had not been taken wholesale from it, was not the creation of poets and legislatures, as some superficial thinkers allege. It was the offspring of the religious sentiment, and poets modified it as they could to suit the ignorance and prejudices of the people who believed it. What an insult it would be to the Greek intellect to say that, out of the abundant materials at hand, it could not originate a more rational and less fanciful system than the popular religion was! No. All the theologies in the world are the same—mere systems of expiatory sacrifice, and the offspring of ignorance and fear. The avowed object of the whole of them is to humiliate man, and make him a cowardly beggar for the grace and mercy of an imaginary God! That there is any self-respecting manhood left in his character at all, after these long ages of religious domination, inspires the hope, nay, the belief, that there is enough recuperativ energy in him still, with the assistance of the new knowledge, to throw off the incubus which has degraded him, and to stand up before the universe free.

(TO BE CONCLUDED.)

Ramblings in the Park Region.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: After having met with such hearty receptions as I received at Wentworth and Iroquois, Dak., Alexandria and Elk River, Minn., it is quite natural that I should hav calls to return and deliver other courses of lectures. I find that the more people hear Freethought discussed, the more they want to hear; hence some places ask for as many as fifteen or twenty lectures, and, as I like to place the cost at as low a figure as possible, so that almost any town can afford to hav some other kind of gospel than the "old, old story," what is left after paying the railroad their lion's mouthful is not enough to debar one from reaching heaven by the old Lazarus, grass-grown route.

A Freethought lecturer has the advantage of the church in summer time. The church works best in cold weather. An Infidel (in view of what awaits him hereafter) does not fear heat. In the summer season the church is dormant, and the Infidel is as activ as a lamprey eel, and shocks an ordinary "orthodox" clear to his soles. There is a more cordial feeling growing up toward Freethought all over the West. In some towns which I hav visited, our philosophy becomes so popular in a week that the church preaches Freethought too. Did you ever? The Rev. Jenkins, at Elk River, did that. I heard him. I gave six lectures in Elk River to good houses, and will giv two more next Sunday (May 23d).

The minister's wife, I learned, was in my audience Sunday afternoon, and on her way home pleasantly remarked, "Well, he is a gentleman and a scholar, anyway." Tally one. "De world do move." The following Sunday I went the second time to hear her husband preach. In a flowing, graceful way, he remarked that a polite Infidel owed his courteous bearing and decency to the decency of the community in which he lived—to Christian institutions. In the evening, with the aid of my shorthand "pot-hooks," as Elder Dungan called them last winter, I reviewed the Rev. Jenkins's sermon. That was the finest audience of the six.

Nothing can induce Elder Hill, the would-be Adventist champion, to debate, even when a would-be editor of Delavan backs him with the "vast" influence of the Herald. My visit to Delavan will be postponed until the elder (and the editor) recovers.

We are enjoying a splendid visit with our Liberal friends, Mr. and Mrs. Byers, in their beautiful home at Princeton; also spent a week with our friends, W. F. and Millee Chadbourne, of Elk River. We hav known these good friends for many years.

Soon, and we will be on our way to the land of the Dakotas. Address, at Wentworth, Dakota,

W. F. JAMIESON.

A Greek Catholic Curse.

I am now on a beautiful farm, the Eden of Alameda county, named after a province in southern Russia, where the happy owner was born. I shall not describe this magnificent place. Everybody knows what a fruit farm in California is. The cause of my letter is the fact that Father Agapius Honcharenko—the owner's name—was a Russian priest, and at one time a monk in the Kieff cloister. He was too honest to remain either a monk or a priest, could not stand the crimes committed by the Muscovite government in the name of the holy church, and while at Greece, as one of the Russian missionary staff there, he did some good work for the propagation of the new ideas then so vigorously promulgated by Alexander Hergen, the editor and publisher of Kolokol (the Bell). Some of Father Agapius's communications with the revolutionists were, however, overtaken, and he, therefore, obliged to remain the rest of his years outside the empire of holy Russia. About eighteen years ago he was excommunicated from and anathematized by the czar's church, it being recorded to his name in a document which reads as follows:

By authority of the Almighty God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and of the holy canons; and of the Virgin Mary, mother and nurse of our Savior; and of the celestial virtues, angels, archangels, thrones, dominions, powers, cherubim, and seraphim; and of all the holy patriarchs and prophets; and of all the apostles and evangelists; and of the holy innocents (who, in the sight of the Lamb, are found worthy to sing the new Song); and of the holy martyrs and holy confessors; and of the holy virgins; and of all the saints, together with all the holy and elect of God, we excommunicate and anathematize him, and from the threshold of the holy church of God Almighty we sequester him, that he may be tormented in eternal excruciating sufferings, together with Dathan and Abiram, and those who say to the Lord God, "Depart from us; we desire none of thy ways." And as fire is quenched with water, so let the light of him be put out evermore.

May the Father, who created man, curse him. May the Son, who suffered for us, curse him. May the Holy Ghost, which was given us in our baptism, curse him. May the Holy Cross, which Christ (for our salvation triumphing over his enemies) ascended, curse him. May the Holy and Eternal Virgin Mary, mother of God, curse him. May St. Michael, the advocate of holy souls, curse him. May all the angels and archangels, principalities and powers, and all the heavenly armies, curse him. May St. John the precursor, and St. John the Baptist, and St. Peter, and St. Paul, and St. Andrew, and all other of Christ's apostles, together, curse him. And may the rest of his disciples and four evangelists, who by their preaching converted the universal world, and may the wonderful company of martyrs and confessors, who by their holy works are found pleading to God Almighty, curse him.

May the choir of the Holy Virgins, who for the honor of Christ hav despised the things of the world, damn him; may all the saints, who from the beginning of the world and everlasting ages are found to be beloved of God, damn him; may the heavens and the earth, and all the holy things remaining therein, damn him.

May he be damned wherever he be; whether in the house or in the field, whether in the highway or the by-way, whether in the wood or the water, or whether in the church. May he be cursed in living and in dying, in eating and drinking, in fasting and thirsting, in slumbering and sleeping, in watching or walking, in standing or sitting, in lying down or working, mingendo, cacando, and blood-letting.

May he be cursed in all the faculties of the body. May he be cursed inwardly and outwardly. May he be cursed in his hair. May he be cursed in his brains. May he be cursed in the crown of his head and in his temples. In his forehead and in his ears. In his eyebrows and in his cheeks. In his jaw-bones and in his nostrils. In his foreteeth and in his grinders. In his lips and in his throat. In his shoulders and in his wrists. In his arms, his hands, and in his fingers.

May he be damned in his mouth, in his breast, in his heart, and in all the viscera of his body; may he be damned in his veins and in his groin, in the thighs and genital organs, in his lips and in his knees; in his legs, feet, and toe-nails!

May he be cursed in all the joints and articulation of his members. From the top of his head to the sole of his foot may there be no soundness in him.

May the Son of the living God, with all the glory of his majesty, curse him, and may heaven, with all the powers that move therein, rise up against him, curse and damn him!

Amen! So be it. Amen!

And after such a list of curses and damnations, a beautiful fruit farm in California is the result. Just think of it!

I am one of those who say to the Lord God, "Depart from us; we desire none of thy ways," and there will be no wonder if I become a possessor of a farm like that of Father Agapius. Come the time!

Uxaina, Cal. M. S. WAHRHAFTIG.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

Vice-Presidents:

CHARLES WATTS, JOHN E. REMSBURG, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, MATTIE P. KREKEL, JAMES PARTON, HORACE SEAVER, WILLIAM ALGIE, ROBERT C. ADAMS, TITUS L. BROWN, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York.

COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com.

E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

News and Notes.

On Saturday evening, May 29th, I lectured again at Murray, Utah, to a good house, and was pleased once more to meet those who seem like old friends in their cordial greeting. As I was obliged to be in Salt Lake City at five o'clock on Sunday morning, I had the pleasure of a midnight ride with Bishop Cahoon. I call him "bishop," for I think he will make a good one in the ranks of Freethought. The ride up the valley, with the shadowy splendor of the mountains on every side, and the rich green fields and gardens, and cosy dwellings along the way, was delightful. It seemed something like passing through fairyland, there was such a strange mixture of human life in the world about, such conflicting and tumultuous forces, the old and the new mingling as in no other country, and the wisest head not knowing how the marvelous wealth of these hills and vales was yet to be placed on the side of liberty and progress. The political pedlers at Washington hav very little idea of the mighty problem that is confronting them, how deep and high it goes into the principles of American democracy.

On Sunday morning at six o'clock, with my excellent friends, Mr. and Mrs. Mason and Mrs. Godbe, of Salt Lake City, I started out for a long, delicious carriage ride up the valley, and along the lake to Haight's Grove. It was a cloudy morning, and the sun just glinted on the distant hill-tops. The air was cool, and the horses dashed along with heterodox speed, and that was just what suited my pilgrim spirit. The only trouble was that we had a Presbyterian carriage, evidently, for it was very stiff and unyielding, and didn't seem to giv way very gracefully to the ups and downs of the road; and so, near the end of the journey, it dogmatically broke in two on one side, and on the return it did the same thing on the other; but, with "saints' perseverance," we made a raid upon the trees, and braced up the "sinners," and went triumphantly forward, and if Macbeth had met us he might hav thought that "Birnam Wood" was come again. No orthodox depravity can get the better of the strong arm of Secularism.

The grove meeting was delightful. Liberals were present from all parts of Utah—George C. Viele, of Fillmore; Andrew Larson, of Box Elder; Wm. Reynolds, of Wanship; Philip Schwartz, of Park City; Mr. Jost and Robert Wilson, of Ogden; Mr. Edholm and Dan Williams, of Morgan; Mr. Jones and Mr. Bowman, of South Weber; Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Mason and Mrs. Godbe, of Salt Lake City; Mr. Munn, of Hooper; Dr. Ingram, of Kaysville; Mr. Wallack, of Salt Lake, formerly of California, and a Liberal worker in that field, and many others.

Letters were also received from Dr. Greer, H. S. Brooks, Charles Long, Wm. Dawson, E. Sorensen, and others, pledging their best efforts for the success of the territorial organization. The meeting was thus a representativ one, and its action will be indorsed by all the Liberals of Utah. Several speeches were made; we had a band of music, and everything went off in splendid fashion. The Secular Union of Utah was formed. Mr. Wm. Reynolds was chosen secretary of the preliminary organization, and committees were appointed for the purpose of making arrangements for a grand convention of all the Freethinkers of the territory, at Salt Lake City, next winter, Feb. 20th, 21st, and 22d, for the purpose of perfecting and making permanent the organization, and electing a corps of officers that will make success undoubted. Mr. Reynolds will giv a report in detail of what was done at Haight's grove. Its significance in the future work of Liberalism here is very great. It is carrying forward the interest and enthusiasm created by the efforts of the American Secular Union. The campaign for the last six weeks has been all that I could expect. I hav delivered about forty lectures. The audiences hav averaged about three and four hundred, so that I hav personally addressed from twelve to fifteen thousand of the people of this territory—the best minds in every community—and I know that the results, if the work is continued, will be incalculable. There has been discussion and agitation in every place, and thousands hav begun to think where before there was a sluggishness. The issue in Utah is direct, more so than in any other part of the country, and hence there is a magnificent opportunity for the development of Secular principles. I hav the highest hopes of Utah—of the organization that will be formed, of the work that will be done. I like the friends here. They are strong, enthusiastic, and brave. They take hold with a will. They cannot, however, fight the battle alone. The present campaign could not hav gone on so successfully had it not been for the American Secular Union. National coöperation is indeed a mighty help to Liberals in every community. It givs them power which they could not otherwise possess. In this case, in Utah it has brought forth an immense amount of latent Liberalism. I am sure that every Liberal in America will be interested in the advance of our cause in this territory and will watch with keen interest its triumphs, and will realize more than ever the vast importance of a united movement.

On Decoration Day, for the sake of variety, I went to the "Pen," where about fifty of the Mormon saints are suffering "persecution." They take it rather easy, although, of course, their position is a very uncomfortable one, for they hav to mingle with criminals of all sorts, hav to wear the striped suit, and liv on poor fare and do their own washing. No matter if they are worth a hundred thousand dollars, and some of them are, they must do their own menial work. They can't hire even a fellow-prisoner to do it for them. They hav books and papers to read and writing materials, and they sport one or two opera-glasses, and had the advantage of us and a better chance to see what kind of folks we were than we to study them. Well, it was grotesque and is tragical too, and it does seem that in this civilized age there might be a better solution of the problem than this; for these men are not criminals in the ordinary sense of the term, and should not be made to suffer this degradation. They are really political prisoners, and not criminals, and should receive that treatment which belongs to prisoners of this class. I understand that one of the Mormons was put into the "sweat-box" for refusing to attend the gentile divine services. If this is so, then the United States government has been guilty of a hideous injustice, and has placed itself beneath the level of its unfortunate victims. With all one's detestation of Mormon polygamy, which is indeed a "relic of barbarism," and a degradation both for man and woman, yet these "criminals" do suffer a species of martyrdom which appeals strongly to one's sympathies; and the method of punishment is almost as barbaric as the evil that is to be eradicated. That the right way of treating Mormonism has not been reached is plainly evident. So far there is savagery on both sides, and not enlightened politics. I hope hereafter to treat this question from the standpoint of Secularism, which alone, by its radical principles, can settle this vast difficulty. The present "Christian" legislation is an absolute failure, and cannot be justified at the tribunal of universal justice.

I am now at Bingham, where I hav lectured to full houses for the last two evenings, June 1st and 2d. Bingham is the longest town of its size that I know of. It stretches up the gulch, winding about like a snake, for five miles, while it does not seem to be more than two or three rods wide, street and all. The houses are perched on the hill-sides like so many nests built there by the birds, and they are not much larger than nests either. Yesterday I took a tramp of several miles over the town and mining camp, and the views are delightful, especially from the crown of the ridge, where I could see for fifty miles away. On one side sparkled the Utah Lake and on the other Salt Lake, while the busy valleys stretched between, and the mighty and snow-glistening mountains encircled all, and the dazzling sky spread its canopy above. The wealth of nature outside surpassed, indeed, the wealth that was within these rock-ribbed canyons. Still I did wish I had a ton or so of the gleaming silver.

I had the pleasure of meeting here Mr. John Strickley, Mr. Frank Silsby, Mr. C. H. Osman, and other good friends, and I hope to come again to Bingham, for I hav received a very pleasant welcome.

I am now to go to Idaho and Montana, Hailey, Bellevue, Ketchum, Eagle Rock, etc. I hav had to change my dates for Eagle Rock; shall be there, if at all, on June 17th and 18th; at Butte City, June 20th; at Helena, June 27th, and at Bozeman, July 4th and 11th.

I see the great philosopher has gone—Stephen Pearl Andrews. Upon his ample brow rests the white crown of death. He has passed into the ideal world—a noble spirit. I must express gratitude for the aid he has been to me in my intellectual struggles, for the insight he has given, for the solution of many a problem. His mind was of the first order, richly laden with knowledge. As a metaphysician he had no superior. His power of analysis was wonderful. No man ever made subtler distinctions. With crystal clearness he marked almost every shade of thought. He has been, in his intellectual integrity, a benefactor, indeed, of the race. He has been a pioneer in his own way; he has stood firmly for justice and liberty. He was a regal soul, lofty, aspiring, ideal; divinely audacious in many of his theories. He had the poet's gift also. His mind was stored with analogies, many of them most beautiful, and illustrativ of great truths. All honor to him whose thoughts are immortal, and who, in the onward stream of human life, will still be a glorious influence.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. Macdonald, - - - Editor.
C. P. Somerby, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - - JUNE 19, 1886.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

The New York Freethinkers' Meeting.

The summer is coming rapidly along, and the time and place for holding the annual Convention of the New York State Freethinkers' Association must soon be decided. When and where shall it be held? The duty of deciding this, as, indeed, all other executiv duties, falls upon the Executiv Committee of the Association. But the people who will attend ought also to hav a voice in the selection of the place, and we should like to hear from them upon the subject.

The officers of the American Secular Union hav decided to hold the annual congress late in the fall in New York city. Their reasons for this are, in view of past financial experiences, very sound. Some of the officers of the New York State Freethinkers' Association are strongly in favor of holding the annual State Convention in connection with the Union's annual Congress. Less expense would in this way be incurred, they say, and the two Conventions would make more noise than either one held separately. The metropolitan press would probably giv more attention to the meeting if held here than if convened in a distant place. The plan has its advantages, without doubt.

Other officers of the State Association favor a ten-days' campmeeting during the latter part of August or the first of September. Fillmore Park, a few miles from Buffalo, has been suggested as one place; White Sulphur Springs, near Saratoga, as another; Watkins Glen, as a third. In Fillmore Park arrangements would hav to be made with the Buffalo railroad managers to run excursion trains, and the population would hav to hire tents in which to liv. At White Sulphur Springs there are hotels within easy reach, and the service on the lake to Saratoga is already at hand. Pavilions for speaking are also on the ground. Buffalo is at the western end of the state, White Sulphur Springs nearly at the Eastern side.

Open-air meetings on the borders of a lake are exceedingly pleasant, and a great deal more sociable than gatherings in halls in large cities. Especially is this the case in August or September. The main question is, Will the number of people who can attend be great enough to pay the cost of speakers, advertising, and the thousand and one expenses necessarily connected with a great convention? If the meeting is held in New York in connection with the Congress of the American Secular Union, it is urged by those favoring this plan to be almost certain that the admission fee will cover cost of Congress. Those favoring the semi-campmeeting are equally convincing in their statements.

The Executiv Committee of the State Association are in a quandary. Of its eight members, four are in favor of separate meetings, three in favor of a joint convention, and one not heard from—making a sort of tie. The other officers are partial to the joint convention idea. As one of the officers, and as a believer in government of and by the people, we appeal the case to the higher tribunal—the members of the Association.

We should like to hear from them all, and not only those in New York state, but from every one whose purpose it is to attend the Convention. The decision must be made directly, and responses must be prompt.

Sunday-School Stories.

About two years ago last February, immediately after the Paine celebrations had taken place, a tale was published in the daily papers calculated to strike terror to the hearts of skeptics and bring comfort to the true believer. It was to the effect that at Jenkintown, Pa., a carpenter and several friends were making merry at a hotel, when a religious discussion sprang up, during which the carpenter proposed that they partake of the "Lord's supper," using beer instead of wine. The story ran that during this sacrilegious performance of the rite the carpenter was struck dead by the Lord for his blashemy. This blood-curdling tale was published all over the country, and we repeatedly received copies of papers containing it, some sent by friends with the request to investigate, and some sent by Christians to warn us of our almost certain fate if we persisted in writing and working against the Christian religion. One of the papers that printed the story was the Independent, but it had occasion to repent its credulity, for the next week it was obliged to say, what everyone of common sense would know, that the whole occurrence was an invention, and had no foundation in fact.

This year, under date of February 7th, also immediately following the Paine celebration, another horrible tale came over the telegraph wires. Like the former, it was located in Pennsylvania, and in general details closely followed the original. The version published by the World of this city had it that a patent-medicin pedler entered a hotel at Millersburg, Pa., where a jovial crowd had assembled. A religious discussion came up, during which the medicin pedler proposed that the "Lord's supper" be eaten. The crowd agreed to hav it with beer and bread, and when they had knelt in mock humility, the pedler went among them distributing a mouthful of bread and a sup of beer to each. The dispatch concluded:

"Suddenly, when he was about half through, a strange noise was heard, and looking up the men saw a sight that 'made their blood run cold and froze the marrow in their bones.' As near as the scared men could describe it, they declared it was an immense, ill-formed, and foul beast with great cloven feet, pointed horns, and eyes that flashed fire. With wild yells the men rushed out into the open air and scattered in every direction. Finally, all of them reached their homes except Motter, who was away for a long time, and at last he arrived, a maniac. He was put to bed and physicians summoned, but they could do nothing for him. He raved, howled, and prayed, declaring that he had seen the evil one and that he was lost. His torture was terrible, but nothing could be done to relieve him, and he died in the wildest agony. The death-bed scene is said to hav been full of horrors that can hardly be described."

When the first tale was published, we endeavored to get to the bottom of the lie, but all our letters to the alleged scene of the occurrence remained unanswered. When the Independent printed its apology for repeating the story, investigation was needless. When this second story was circulated, we at once recognized it as the first revamped, with ingenious variations, but still the same old lie; and though scores of papers containing it were received, we paid no attention to them. But it seems that the Christians though it too good a point to be lost, if it were only true, and from every state in the Union, and from Canada, they sought to get the stamp of authenticity put upon it by the chief official organ of the Methodist church. The editor of the Christian Advocate, however, is a shrewd old gentleman who does not often get beyond his depth. Moreover, he is not entirely unacquainted with his Christian brethren, and naturally he was suspicious of the yarn. With him, the age of miracles ended some eighteen hundred years ago. Belief in the ancient tales is all right, he holds, but even they must not be argued; while all nineteenth-century supernaturalism he sets down at once as imposture. Standing on the common platform of Christianity, and taking the scriptures as the court of last appeal, we will back the Rev. J. M. Buckley against any preacher in the country. But when it comes to arguing with Infidelity Mr. Buckley is not there. Allow the scriptures to be questioned, he tells his readers, and the Infidel has the Christian on the hip, and can throw him easily. It will be seen from this that the Advocate's editor understands himself and the nature of his religion.

When, therefore, Mr. Buckley was applied to to stamp this tale as genuin, he was cautious, and wrote to the Rev. E. C. Yerkes, Methodist preacher, of Millersburg, asking him if there was any foundation for the story, what the barkeeper said, how drunk the men were, what happened to the rest of them, whether their stories of the occurrence agreed, who was with the man when he died, and what his physician said. To all these questions the Rev. Mr. Yerkes replied:

"Millersburg, Pa.

"Dear Dr. Buckley: There was a mock service of some kind. It is impossible to tell how drunk the men were. The barkeeper denies the whole affair—says it did not occur. There were no spectators not participants so far as I can learn. J. F. Bowman, M.D., of this place, a member of our church, attended Motter [the patent-medicin pedler] in his last sickness. Motter did not absent himself from home, did not die a maniac, and showed only such a fear of death as is common to unsaved men. There was no appearance of any supernatural object in the bar-room so far as I can learn, but Motter stated and afterward denied that he saw such a monster, something like a huge bat, on his way home; and that it entered the house with him; he said he did not think the devil looked like that. Fraternally, E. C. Yerkes."

It will be noticed that the minister says some such service did take place, but that the barkeeper denies it; that the pedler did not absent himself from home, and did not die a maniac. It appears also that he was not an Infidel, but only a Christian who did not work at the business. He had distinct ideas of what the devil is like. First he said he saw a monster, something like a bat; then he retracted and said he did not. He seems to hav been a "low-down," drunken Christian, upon whose word no reliance could be placed.

Notwithstanding the minister's statement that some service took place, the probability is that he is mistaken. The barkeeper was there, and the minister was not. A further probability is that the medicin-pedler and his companions got drunk. Possibly they discussed their religion. Then they separated, and the pedler went home and died. Some imaginativ reporter got hold of the story and of the one published two years before, fitted them together, and sent his version out. The similarity between the two tales is too close to leave a reasonable doubt that they are one. Very likely the same Associated Press reporter sent both dispatches. The Paine celebrations occurring the last of January would suggest the religious coloring necessary; and what to a good Christian is a lie if the glory of God can thereby more abound?

But the most surprising fact in the whole matter is that there are any considerable number of people in this country who could for a moment think that such supernatural occurrences are possible! To an African savage the tale might appear possible. That it can be seriously discussed by Americans shows to what depth Christianity has degraded some of them.

Ulster's Experiment in Home Rule.

In connection with his defeat on the Home Rule bill, Mr. Gladstone may draw some consolation from the recent demonstrations at Belfast and Lurgan, Ireland. These two cities were on Wednesday and other days of last week the scenes of a religious demonstration in which the Protestants and Catholics took part. Windows were smashed, the police were clubbed and stoned, hotels were burnt and sacked, and under the influence of the liquor thus obtained persons of Protestant proclivities wandered through the streets shouting, "To hell with the pope!" utterly indifferent to the fact that "sheol" is now considered the better form. Several persons were killed—by the police—among them a widowed mother of two children, and a barmaid who chanced to be looking from the window of a tavern. The cause of the disturbance was the difference of opinion upon religious subjects which existed between the citizens participating. By the action of the police order was restored after several days' reign of terror.

The ill-success, generally speaking, of this brief season of practical Home Rule in Ireland must, as remarked at the outset, afford some consolation to Mr. Gladstone and his partisans in this defeat. While England's rule in Ireland is such that nothing can be said in its defense, it is of a much more desirable nature than that which the Irish people, under the influence of religious fanaticism, seem able to furnish themselvs.

The Museums.

To those who remember that they once signed a petition asking for the Sunday opening of the museums in Central Park, the following correspondence will be interesting:

"NEW YORK, June 4, 1886.

"GEN. L. P. DI CESNOLA, Secretary of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Dear Sir: Will you kindly inform me what progress the joint committee of your institution and the American Museum of Natural History has made in considering the petition presented by the American Secular Union for the opening of the museums on Sundays? If a decision has been arrived at, please inform me of its nature.

"Now that from twenty-five to forty thousand people visit the Park on Sunday to listen to the music, I beg leave to suggest that it is a splendid opportunity to introduce them to the treasures in the museums under your charge.

"Very truly yours, E. M. MACDONALD,
"Chair. Fin. Com. Am. Sec. Union."

"METROPOLITAN MUSEUM OF ART,
"OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
"NEW YORK, June 8, 1886.

"E. M. MACDONALD, ESQ., Chair. Fin. Com. Am. Sec. Union, Dear Sir: Your favor of the 4th inst. has been duly received. The joint committee to which was referred the petition for the opening of the two museums on Sundays, presented by the secretary of the American Secular Union, hav the matter still under consideration, and hav not yet arrived at any decision.

"Very truly yours, L. P. DI CESNOLA,
"Sec. Joint Com. on Conference."

The Spread of the Gospel.

Good work for Christ is going on in that portion of God's vinyard circumscribed by the boundary lines of Illinois. The precise locality where the spirit superabounds is a well-known penal institution at Joliet. The love of Christ has constrained one hundred and seventeen persons to giv their hearts to him, and the surrender was marked to the world by the service known in the technique of Catholic theology as confirmation. Most of the confirmees are gentlemen eminent in their walks of life, and all hav achieved distinction. Dr. Thomas M. Cream is widely known as the Belvidere poisoner; Mr. John Gales's reputation rests upon the substantial basis of having killed "old man Hessel;" Mr. Daniel Carpenter, a race brother of Frederick Douglass, engaged the attention of the citizens and judges of Will county for several days, and will during the rest of his life be rewarded by the care of distinguished state officers. This trinity of kindred spirits were followed to the altar by gentlemen almost as worthy as they. Mr. John Stauners reformed a fallen girl by dispatching her; Mr. James Siez removed temptation from the path of depraved equine confiscators by removing the quadrupeds; Mr. John Larney opposed the monopolists of Galesburg by taking upon himself the distribution of the accumulated wealth in the bank. Altogether the one hundred and seventeen gathered to God by Archbishop Feehan, of Chicago, were gentlemen who had made a mark in the world, and excited public attention.

The sacred rites by which they bound themselves o heaven were, we are informed, remarkably impressiv. A number of distinguished visitors were present, among them Judge Prendergast, of Chicago, who had journeyed to Joliet to renew his acquaintance with the converts, and note what effect his numerous charges to juries in their behalf had had upon them. For a month preparation has been made for the sacred event, and the day before the ceremony four priests worked hard all day hearing the sinful confessions of the heart-touched one hundred and seventeen. The chapel was beautifully decorated with flowers, and mottoes appropriate to the occasion hung upon the walls. As Archbishop Feehan and his assistants entered the chapel the convert orchestra played a solemn march in an artistic manner. The candidates for confirmation were all ranged in rows on the front seats and wore buttonhole bouquets. They were confirmed in groups of eight. One group would advance and kneel in front of the archbishop, and after the confirmation rites were gone through they would retire and another group advance, till all were confirmed. As the convicts advanced to the altar they handed their names to the archbishop. Pronouncing their Christian names, the Archbishop dipped his finger in a chalice of oil held by an attendant, and, making a cross on the foreheads of the kneeling Christian, said: "I sign thee with the sign of the cross, and I confirm thee with the chrism of salvation, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." He then gave them a slight slap on the cheek as a token that by confirmation they are strengthened to suffer with patience, and even to die for Christ.

This octahedral coming to Christ, if we may apply a geometrical term to a theological subject, cannot but be gratifying to all good Christians, and a source of pride at the manifest power of the gospel. That so many distinguished gentlemen should with so much unanimity desire to testify to the uprightness of their past lives, and consequent worthiness to become Christians, is another and most convincing argument for the fitness of the one true religion for all ranks of life, no matter how elevated. And it is a crown of ineffable glory upon the thorn-pierced brow of the Galilean that, regardless of greatness and worth, one man makes just as good a Christian as another, and is just as sure of inheriting eternal bliss. The piety of these noted converts is very touching, and does credit alike to their famous careers and to the beneficent system of religion which has taken them into its fold. They ornament the religion and the religion becomes them.

Editorial Notes.

LOST, STRAYED, OR CONVERTED—Our Canadian correspondent, "Kanuck." Any information leading to the discovery of the above will dispel in this office a large and deepening shade of gloom.

H. P. AND GEORGIA REPLOGLE hav begun at Liberal, Mo., the publication of a wee paper called Equity. The intention is to print it fortnightly, at 50 cents per annum. Labor interests receive the larger portion of its attention.

REMLY S. SIDELINGER, known somewhat to Freethinkers through correspondence in Freethought papers, has become the editor of the Boston Knight, a journal devoted to labor interests. Mr. James Livingston is his partner. The price of the paper is 50 cents per year; published at 71 Oliver street. The first issue is bright and well filled with trade news.

THE marble statue of Harriet Martineau recently unveiled in the Old South church of Boston is soon to go to Wellesley College for Women at Needham, Mass. It is a fine piece of sculpture. The young ladies of Wellesley are to be congratulated upon their acquisition. We recommend them to also study Miss Martineau's works as well as her features, that the generation for which they may become responsible shall be free from superstition and devoted to the improvement of this world.

THE Congregationalists and Baptists of London recently held what they termed a grand union demonstration. The London press almost ignored the meeting, the Times reporting it in one short sentence, and the Daily News giving only four inches of space to it, and that after several days had elapsed. Religious circles of London are therefore very angry, and say naughty things about the papers. They hav forgotten that true Christians do their work where not seen of men, and pray in a closet.

IT now turns out that the alleged poem by Miss Rose Elizabeth Cleveland, advance proofs of which the Christian at Work palmed off upon the daily press as copies of an original contribution to that paper, is an old performance to which the Christian at Work had no more claim than any other journal. It was an unmitigated swindle and a fraud upon the public. Some papers are giving expression to their astonishment that the editor of a religious paper should be guilty of the meanness involved in this transaction. But it should cause no surprise. Of all editors, those who run religious papers are least troubled with a redundancy of the moral sense.

THE mistake which the Knights of Labor hav made in excluding lawyers from their organization, and to which Mr. T. B. Wakeman called attention in a recent lecture, has been made more apparent during the late cardrivers' strike in this city. No sooner did legal complications arise than the Knights engaged as counsel one of the most expensiv lawyers in the city. Mr. Powderly's famous travesty, "In the hands of a man entirely mouth the gun is harmless as his word," is true enough in a general way, though not after all a very brilliant remark. It is an error to suppose that the mouth is a useless factor in the labor movement. No cause is well equipped that has not its advocates and orators. Mr. Powderly needs a few lessons in the doctrins of Integralism, for these would teach him that he must look in all directions for aid, and he is likely to find some of his most judicious friends among the members of the legal profession. However, the organization does not, we believe, claim infallibility, and it is to be expected that mistakes will now and then occur.

H. O. WILLS is the name of a semi-crazy evangelist who is going through the West "answering" Colonel Ingersoll's question, "Which Way?" Mr. Wills proves the truth of the Bible in a remarkably unique way. He said to his meager audience at Detroit: "I can prove to you in a few words that the Bible is true, for does it not say a prophet is not without honor save in his own country? Look at the empty seats here to-night, and see if it is not so. Christ said that. If I go over in Canada a few miles, the churches will not hold the crowds that come to hear me, but here few come. That proves the Bible is true. Why, if Ingersoll was to lecture here to-night, every seat would be filled." Mr. Wills was filled with the spirit of God in this wise: He had lain down on his bed, "and a bright spot, about the size of a bean, of awful power, had appeared upon the wall three times, and at each time he had shaken so that six men could not hav held him, while the perspiration had poured off from him in streams. It was the glory of God. It had saved him." Mr. Wills is very accurately described in 1 Cor. iv, 10.

THE death of John Kelly, the Tammany chieftain, has called forth from the New York press, which has a Catholic element to cater to, a large amount of labored exordium. This notwithstanding that there hav probably been few greater rascals in politics than the same John Kelly. He held immense power under his control, and used it where it would do him the most good. It is therefore gratifying to find this just estimate of Kelly's character in the columns of Puck:

"There is but one reflection suggested by the death of Mr. John Kelly, which occurred in this city last week—what a pity and shame it is that the vast talents of this man, his energy, intelligence, and courage, were not employed for the furtherance of honest government, instead of being used for the profit and benefit of conscienceless spoilsmen!"

Mr. Kelly was a Catholic, a relativ of Cardinal McClosky, and where he had influence in city affairs the church had its own way. In consideration of that service, and in spite of his known corrupt political life, all the resources of the great cathedral on Fifth avenue were exhausted to mark his funeral with pomp and splendor. A man, it seems, may be a rascal and also a good Catholic, but in order to be both he must hav more faith in the efficacy of the church than in the final justice of "God."

Solid Christian Doctrin.

From the New York Evening Post, May 29th.

It seems almost a waste of judicial proceedings to try an Anarchist. An Anarchist is a man who openly announces his hostility to human society, and his determination not to liv in it, or be of it, if he can help it. More than this, he declares his desire and intention if he gets the opportunity to destroy it, with all its belongings, by any weapon within his reach—that is, to kill all persons in authority, and all owners of property who resist attempts to divide it made by mobs. Nor does he propose to set up anything else in the place of society as now organized. In fact, the Anarchists everywhere repudiate all constructiv theories. They say they want to try Anarchy—that is, the plan of leaving every man to do what is right in his own eyes—for awhile, before even considering whether some plan of order is not desirable. They desire no country or government, no property, no law, no marriage, no family. The world, if they had their way, would for a year or two be a world in which great numbers of human beings would be found wandering around, very dirty and ragged, armed with guns, knives, or big sticks, killing cattle for food, and killing anybody who had something which another man wanted, with a considerable number of dead bodies scattered along the roads, streets, and fields, a great many wrecked houses, churches, and public buildings, and a great many cities reduced to ruin, or deserted by the inhabitants, as Rome was once after the irruption of the barbarians, and a great many starving women, hiding in woods and cellars.

Of course, order would at last come out of this chaos. Some Anarchist abler or bigger than the rest would thrash or cow a few others into submission to him, and compel them to act under his orders. He would then kill those who opposed him, and gradually make a little army which would enforce his will as law over a small extent of territory. He would take up his abode in a house in some ruined town, gather together a few fugitiv women for a harem, and make his men bring in victuals and provide himself and one or two trusted followers with horses, and live like a fighting cock for the remainder of his days, or until one of his wives conspired with a lover to murder him in his sleep. But out of his rule something larger and better would grow. In other words, the race would begin over again the weary work of civilization.

Now, a man who deliberately proposes to try this experiment is no whit better than a wild beast. This is somewhat the state of things the tigers in India would bring about if they had a chance. In fact, to something very like this condition they had reduced whole districts before the arrival of the English. But when a tiger is caught sight of or trapped, no one thinks of ascertaining whether he has done any damage or not by a judicial inquiry. He is executed peremptorily on his own admissions—that is, on view of his form and color and the expression of his countenance. His social views, in other words, are known to be such as to justify treating him at once as an enemy of the human race.

Most and his kind stand in just the same attitude toward society as the tiger, and really deserve no better treatment. He is not in strict justice entitled to a trial at all. We try him with all the forms of law and shut him up for a short period, instead of killing him on the spot with one of his own guns, simply because any other course would be brutalizing and demoralizing to the rest of the community. It is because it would injure good citizens to see a human being slaughtered without judicial inquiry and lawful condemnation, and not because Anarchists deserve anything better, that we put judges and juries to sit on them. And this consideration ought to be urged upon the Anarchists by all rational persons to whom they giv ear. They ought to be made to understand that they are, in the eyes of the community, feræ naturæ, on whom arrest, indictment, trial, condemnation, and caging are expended simply by way of sparing the feelings of the other members of the human species.

SINCE the beginning of the lecture season last fall, J. E. Remsburg has traveled eighteen thousand miles and delivered two hundred and five lectures.

Letters from Friends.

BRIGHTON, N. Y., June 5, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: So long a time has passed since I hav held any correspondence with the readers of your paper that they, with yourself, may hav forgotten me; but my silence has not been because of indifference to the cause of Freethought, always so ably advocated in THE TRUTH SEEKER, but because of circumstances which rendered writing, if not an impossibility, a labor not to be thought of, because not imperativ. The long and tedious sickness of my sister, Mrs. Raymond, ending in death on the 26th of March, seemed to hav almost paralyzed me, so that anything requiring thought or effort I put far from me. In the mean time how much has happened, and is still happening, to rouse us all who are not wholly dead! So many of our long-time friends are "over the river" that I am beginning to feel almost alone, wondering within myself if my destiny is to liv while most of my generation hav already "paid the debt" demanded of all by universal nature.

Of all the deaths of which the more recent TRUTH SEEKERS make mention, that of Stephen Pearl Andrews is the most notable. It was my fortune to hav known him well. Long will the world wait for another intellect like his.

The death of Mrs. Moore, the wife of your correspondent of Adrian, Mich., carries me back to the days of long ago, when she kindly entertained me, though I was speaking as best I could for the despised and downtrodden negro.

I do not forget that in the death of Elizur Wright Liberalism has lost a friend the loss of whom will be felt for many, many years. How grandly good, as well as great, was the dear old man! Whom will, or has, his mantle fallen upon?

And writing of these among the members who the past year hav thinned our ranks by their lamented deaths, I am reminded of the vituperativ speech which George Chainey made at Cassadaga at the time of his conversion to Spiritualism. Poor man! it seems that even the belief in communion with the spirits from the world beyond has not been able to keep him in the path which some of us calling ourselvs Materialists think a very good path to walk in. 'Twas bad enough to read of the annulling of a marriage by a "Harmonial Philosopher," the marriage of nearly twenty years' standing, leaving the wife broken-hearted; but leaving a wife with three sons, all young enough to imperativly demand a father's care—seems to me such an act shows a nature so far from spiritual that Mr. Chainey will hav to be converted to some other religion before he shall find his level. What shall be the cure for all this commotion in the marriage relation? Wife-murder has become very common, and even the murder of a husband by a wife has becomc quite frequcnt. There must be a cure, if only we were wise enough to discover such remedy.

I wonder if the labor trouble is to be adjusted in this century. I would like to liv to see all people honestly employed; everyone with a home—not a shelter merely, but with the comforts which humanity requires and deserves. In a world so productiv, with people so inventiv, how much longer must we see the many without the necessaries of life? The time is approaching for our anniversarics. I trust some of our wise men and women will be ready to teach us the right and the true.

I am just now visiting at the home of your subscriber, Miss E. E. Curtis, than whom no truer Liberal livs, and so shall mail my letter from her post-office, Brighton, N. Y.

LUOY N. COLMAN.

WANSHIP, UTAH, June 2, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: About seventy-five Liberals from different parts of the territory met at Haight's Grove, Farmington, Utah, where Mr. Putnam organized temporarily the Utah Secular Union, the final organization to take place at a convention to be held in Salt Lake City on February 20, 21, and 22, 1887, to end with a "grand social."

William Reynolds was elected secretary and treasurer, and a long list were elected members of an executiv committee, who will be duly notified, to arrange for aforesaid convention and to procure the names of all Liberals in their several precincts. It was also elected that we become members of the Utah Secular Union by subscribing our names and paying an initiatory fee of 25 cents.

Mrs. Mason, Mrs. Godbe, Mrs. Ashman, and Mrs. Haight were appointed a committee for procuring music, etc., for the coming convention.

Sparkling speeches were made by Messrs. Veile, Larsen, Munn, Wilson, and others. Several cordial letters were received from friends who said they were with us in spirit, and regretted being absent.

The brass band discoursed some inspiring music. We could catch glimpses of the great Salt Lake glimmering through the trees, and altogether it was an enjoyable affair, and a grand finale to Mr. Putnam's labors in Utah.

Yours truly, WM. REYNOLDS.

MANKATO, MINN., May 16, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: It would be of great social and material interest to every subscriber of the model Freethought paper, THE TRUTH SEEKER, especially here in the West, or in places and districts where Freethinkers are very "thinly sown," and where there is no Secular League, if we should hav a better chance to know each other. How many dull evenings a Freethinker has to spend in the company of "darkness in brain," when he has to stay in a strange place, while he would find the very best society and companionship, may be, in the next house, where a Freethinker lived. This would be of social and also commercial and business advantage, too. I am willing to pay you for the trouble, if you will send me the list of your subscribers in Minnesota.

We hav men of the very best intelligence all over the country in our ranks and no doubt a great many activ business men also. Would it not be advisable to establish a Freethinkers' life-insurance, according to the system of the Ancient Order of United Workmen? Start it first for all the United States, and when we grow stronger in each state, I think with the list of TRUTH SEEKER subscribers in hand, a dozen or two of agents or Liberal lecturers could make up a good, living insurance company. Those insured could, or would, make a good nucleus for the future institution of a Secular League in districts where there are none. Of course, the agents and examining physicians had to be very cautious and severe in the selection of men and women to be insured, to make it a strong, living insurance. V. T.

PINAL, ARIZ., May 31, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I herewith send you $4, to apply as follows: $3 for THE TRUTH SEEKER for 1886, 75 cents for "Order of Creation," 25 cents for TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886.

I feel strongly inclined to giv you and Lucifer both a severe castigation for your hasty, and, as I think, unjustifiable, condemnation of the Chicago Socialists for having the manhood to defend with their life-blood the dearest right of every true American citizen, the freedom of speech and of the press. All the information I hav with regard to that bloody tragedy I glean from the enemies of, not only the Socialists, but the laboring class generally, viz., the Associated Press, which I know, and you ought to know, is nothing but the echo of the capitalistic sentiment, and not likely to publish facts, but rather conceal them, when such facts tend to jeopardize the interest of their masters. Yet the testimony from this source is abundantly sufficient warrant for saying that the action of that legally organized banditti, the police, was an unwarranted, unjustifiable, premeditated assault on the liberty of speech—nothing more nor less. Whether they, the police, are sustained by individuals, municipalities, the state, the nation, and all the powers of the earth makes no difference; the fact remains the same. I would like to follow this subject further in reply to your comments in your issue of May 15th, but time forbids, and I will only say to Freethinkers: Take care how you cheer when your neighbor's ox is gored. The same bull has the same right and the same power to gore yours also. Your principles, your conventions, and your publications are as offensiv in his sight as are those of the Socialists; and I warn you now, unless you wake up and muzzle him, his next attack will be in your direction. His eye is upon you. So beware how you encourage him. Composed as he is of state, church, and capital, he presents a formidable front, and is getting ready for his last grand push, and down comes the fabric that we in our ignorance call a great republic.

Yours for underground facts, JOHN A. BROADBECK.

BALLSTON SPA, N. Y., June 5, E.M. 286.

MR. EDITOR: Seeing the question of our next Convention is spoken of in THE TRUTH SEEKER, let me say a word. While I think that Brother Reynolds's idea is a grand one, and the Tent would make a first-class hall, yet, why would it not be a good idea to hold the Convention at the White Sulphur Springs? It is a first-class hotel, situated on Saratoga Lake about twelve miles from Saratoga Springs. It is a very delightful ride (by boat) to Saratoga, costing only twenty-five cents from grounds and return. In connection with the hotel is a very fine and large grove, with rostrum and seats for several hundred people, and plenty of room to spare. It will not cost one cent for grounds, and only one dollar per day for board. There are three hotels within easy distance. Those who wish to trip the light fantastic toe can do so, as there is a fine pavilion for the purpose. It would giv a great many people an opportunity of visiting the great watering-place of this country. Brother J. V. Arnold suggested this idea to me, so I thought I would see what you and the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER think about it. I would like to hear from some of the members of the church of humanity and mental freedom.

Inclosed please find Uncle Sam's currency for following mottoes: "Free thought will giv us truth," "Superstition is the child of slavery," "Universal mental liberty," and, "The world is my country," etc.; also, 50 cents for one copy of "Order of Creation," which I sold yesterday. Long life to the TRUTH SEEKER family, and THE TRUTH SEEKER, and cartoons, and Brother Heston, is the prayer of this old Infidel.

WM. THORPE.

LINCOLN, ILL., June 6, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I read your letters from correspondents with avidity. It is a great pleasure to know who some, at least, of the brethren are, and where they are, and what they think. I hav no doubt that most of us hav worried in days past with various emotional thoughts and intellectual deductions, inspired by what is "left over" from early mythological education. Careful reading with reflection has eliminated or set free all hereditary tradition, so to speak. I would like to say to the corresponding friends of your paper that the most thorough uprooting of all and each of the preposterous claims to the divine authenticity of the "holy scriptures" that I hav found is in Kersey Graves's "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." To summarize, you will find these facts eminently worthy of thought: (1.) That mankind, dating as far back as history goes, hav had a religion or form of worship of an unknown power or God. This is owing to man's sense of his own ignorance and weakness. (2.) Their gods were always of their own creation, hence they are always vengeful, cruel, and destructiv. (3.) That sacrifices were from the first tribes offered to appease the vengeful deities. (4.) That paganism furnished various saviors who died as sacrifices to bring forgivness to men. (5.) That the religion now afflicting mortals with fear and trembling is a copy from paganism in its essential features. (6.) That it is a poor copy for the age; no improvement upon the ancients. When you see these points verified one cannot but realize that the whole church is unworthy, unreliable, a myth, a fraud, a slander on a God who could make a universe. Yours truly, A. R. CRIHFIELD.

ST. PAUL, MINN., June 7, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I am quite interested in the discussion going on in your paper of "Free-trade vs. Protection." It has always puzzled me that if free-trade is such a priceless boon in England why so many of her subjects take up their abode where protection is in vogue, and especially from the fact, according to Mr. Thomas Rayner, that the workingmen are in that happy condition that they can say, "This is my castle, this roof shelters none but me and my family; I stand at my own door, I join with no one," which the American workingmen cannot say. There must be some attraction here; what is it? It must be remembered that this is a young country compared to what England is, and whether free trade is or is not beneficial there, is no criterion for the United States to go by. England has had the advantage of centuries and centuries to build up her manufacturing and commercial interests, while we hav had but a short time.

Self-preservation is the first law of nature. No nation can be great and powerful that devotes itself exclusivly to one branch of business, whether of agriculture, manufacturing, or any other particular thing. It must combine them all so far as practicable. How shall it be done? By going to other countries to get everything we want? Certainly not. The Republican party saw the way to do it by protecting and developing our home industries. Would we now be looking in nearly every part of the globe for a market for our manufacturing products if, at the close of the war, we had taken the advise of Messrs. Cobden, Bright & Co.?

"Sambo," said the lady of the house, "there is some nice gravy to put on your pancakes." "Butter is good enough for niggers," replied the sable gentleman, at the same time putting on a liberal supply. So we would say to our free-trade friends from the other side of the water, Protection is good enough for Americans, at least for the time being. This may look hoggish to the Englishmen, but hav they not protected their industries in the past, and are they not doing it still in a small way? Why do we hav duties levied on goods we send to Canada, and why is it that they seize United States fishing schooners for going in their waters to get a little bait?

Free-trade indeed; what country would not be in favor of it if they had a monopoly on nearly everything that is made? I should like to notice one or two other points in Mr. Rayner's letter, but fear it will make my communication too long.

Yours respectfully, J. C. ROE.

COLUMBUS, KAN., June 1, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to pay a brief tribute to Stephen Pearl Andrews. I am bowed and stricken with inexpressible grief and emotion, which copiously flowing tears kindly come to relieve. I must now cap my living monument "in the book and volume of my brain" to the greatest thinker and humanitarian of the age. For forty-five years I hav been the votary and satellite of this great, self-luminous, self-poised, all-sided, all-extended, cynosure of the mental world.

I came into happy rapport with him forty years ago through his phonographic publications, and his spirit and purpose therein expressed. In 1851 I read, digested, and assimilated his thoughts on "Individual Sovereignty," "Cost the Limit of Price," and "The Science of Society." Here I was deeply impressed with the great altitude, scope, and comprehensivness of his far-reaching, penetrating, and liberty-loving mind. Thirty-seven years ago, when a practical phrenologist in Fowler & Wells's office on Nassau street, I first saw, with great admiration, without knowing who he was, his massiv and magnificent upper and frontal head, and mentally exclaimed, "That is no ordinary man." In the summer of 1854 I met with him several times at Modern Times (near Brentwood, L. I.) and feasted my mind with his analytical, searching, brilliant, and charming parlor lectures and conversations, in which every sentence he uttered was a literary gem fit for the press. In 1867 I last saw and was with him and a group of radical friends at Rye Beach, on Long Island Sound, where we spent the Fourth of July and several subsequent days in physical, mental, and social recreation, and bade him good-bye at his residence in Brooklyn.

I responded most heartily to his masterly logic and defense of individual liberty in his discussion with Horace Greeley through the Tribune, on the question how far the state can rightly interfere with the social and sexual relations. In this discussion he said: "A liberty which some one else must define for me is no liberty at all." Here Horace Greeley found a foeman more than "worthy of his steel."

I do not remember that in all his conversation I heard, and in all his published writings and discussions I ever read, anything I could deny, question, or criticise. I ever drank with avidity and keen relish from his great and exhaustless fountain of wisdom, altruism, and humanity.

Few minds could comprehend or appreciate his all-sided and full-orbed philosophy, science, and universology, either through ignorance and prejudice or from lack of brain capacity, impressibilty, mental scope, and altitude.

I hav been somewhat baffled to explain how an organism so top heavy and with so little base, physically, could run so long and do such a vast amount of brain work. His brain was well balanced, his whole organism firm and complex, his organs all acted in harmonious concert; he was calm and complacent, temperate in all things, had great mental tenacity of life, and was "a law unto himself."

Nature can produce but one S. P. Andrews. What an irreparable blank he has left! The Sirius, the Excelsior of the mental heavens, has set, but its light and effulgence can never be extinguished.

S. P. Andrews, my dear, noble, cherished friend, the highest type of manhood, the best exponent of human thought and life, the broadest humanitarian, the great peace-maker, the reconciler of all human differences and opinions, hail and farewell. I, too, seven years younger, a poor, suffering soldier, a lesser light, must soon follow my lamented friend. J. H. Cook.

Stamford, Conn., June 5, 1886.

Mr. Editor: You hav struck the right note. There is more force in one of your illustrations than in pages of printed matter or in thousands of speeches from the pulpit and platform. Many are with you who do not stand by.

Subscriber.

Detroit, Mich., June 5, 1886.

Dear Friends: The time for which I hav paid for The Truth Seeker has expired, and I inclose one dollar to keep it ahead. I hav had so much thinking to do in the labor causc this spring that I forgot to look so closely at other accounts as usual, but I intend always to be in advance with all papers that I read, especially so with those fighting for liberty. J. H. Wood.

White Church, Kan., May 4, e.m. 286.

Mr. Editor: Inclosed please find $5, and please apply as follows, $3 being for one year's subscription to The Truth Seeker in advance from April 7th last; $1 to the Liberal League fund, and $1 to the Tent organization. Oh that I could send three times as much more. With my best wishes for your prosperity, and all your worthy correspondents, I am, Sincerely yours, I. P. Martin.

P.S.—I am decidedly in favor of the illustrations.

I. P. M.

Philadelphia, June 6, 1886.

Mr. Editor: In The Truth Seeker of June 5th was an article in the Children's Corner entitled, "A Word from Candy-Land," by S. H. W. I wish to make a reply through your paper. I should say that the lady is perfectly wrong in so speaking upon a subject in which she admits she is not an expert. There are drug stores where using terra alba is common. But I do not call them candy stores. As for the colors, I deny that they are poisonous. I am of the trade, and a Freethinker. D. Bretignieres.

Galesburg, Ill., April 25, 1886.

Mr. Editor: I was amused the other day on receiving the following letter from an orthodox friend (what his object was is more than I know, but he opened the door and I walked in):

"My Old and Respected Friend: I hav been studying astronomy, and hav come to the conclusion there is neither side, end, middle, nor diameter to space; but boundless in extent yet full of countless worlds and planets; and to think they are inhabited the same as ours. Why not? Is it not reasonable they are? At this point their religious condition came up before me, and I asked myself has God, our good father, sent or will he send his only son in like manner as he did to our world to redeem and save the inhabitants of each world, or did he watch over them and thereby prevent their fall? While under these serious reflections I met an orthodox theologian; to him I opened my cogitations, and received this answer, 'It is none of your business.' I was surprised at such a short, unqualified answer. What say you, my friend, was he right?"

The following was my answer: Respected friend, yours is received. I admit the correctness of your conclusion as to space, also as to worlds and planets in space and the reasonableness of their being inhabited similar to our world, and that your question as to their religious condition under the theological claims was fair and reasonable, and was worthy of a more civil and instructiv answer. But, my dear friend, do you not know the very essence of orthodox doctrin is the bigger a fool a man is, and the less he knows, the surer he is of salvation? Do they not tell you idiots and infants are all saved, and the intelligent class, such as Colonel Ingersoll, are all damned; and do you not hear the curses pronounced upon Mother Eve for prying into the knowledge of good and evil so she could know the difference between right and wrong?

"What would a man be without this knowledge?" Answer: He would be an out-and-out orthodox, know but little, and what he does know is a damage to him from the fact that knowledge of good and evil was the cause of sorrow in this life and endless damnation in the next. This is orthodox teaching, and the clergyman's answer was in perfect keeping with the orthodox theory that our first parents by prying into the knowledge of right and wrong were guilty of the greatest sin ever committed by man. If the knowledge we hav of our moral condition caused death and damnation, what would be the result of the same knowledge of all worlds? Knowledge is dangerous under orthodox theory.

Isaac Paden.

Seattle, W. T., June 2, 1886.

Mr. Editor: Having on sevcral previous occasions had the indulgence of the publication of letters in your widely-read paper, I make bold to address you again.

The labor question is not one which alone agitates the mind of the public in the Eastern states, but we of the far Northwest feel the wave of thought vibrating and revibrating through every chord of our political system, and the education of the masses goes speedily on. Persons who never thought before are thinking now, and it is encouraging to note the advancement of mental growth in our people within the past few months. Every paper which givs news of the passing events is gathered and read with interest, and new lessons are being rapidly learned.

We are fast learning that "evolution, not revolution," is the way out of the difficulties surrounding us. We hav seen what capital can do, and what it is every day doing. We believe that, if it were turned into channels in our favor, we too might liv and prosper; we hav learned that the competitiv system will not bring us success as it is at present conducted. We must, then, from sheer necessity, if from no higher cause, coöperate, pool our resources, and thus not only be able to compete with capital, meet it on its own ground, but also to assist each other.

"'Tis hard to toil when toil is almost vain,
In barren ways;
'Tis hard to sow and never garner grain
In harvest days.

'Tis hard to plant in spring and never reap
The autumn yield;
'Tis hard to till, and when 'tis tilled to weep
O'er fruitless field."

An association known as the Puget Sound Coöperativ Colony has been formed, the central office of which is at present at Seattle, W. T., into which we hope to incorporate earnest, industrious, and responsible men and women, organized for the mutual protection of its members and to advance the purposes desired against antagonistic bodies.

This colony is projected on a plan where the manufacturer, the artist, the engineer, the contraotor, merchant, laborer, fisherman, farmer, dairyman, fruit-raiser, florist, and others may unite their industry and means in a coöperativ corporation, by which, under a thorough system of mutual exchanges and products, they may hav all the profits of their own labor and the economical advantages of their own coöperation.

But I must not trespass further upon you, or I fear you will consign this letter to the waste-basket. Among your exchanges you will find a paper, the Model Commonwealth, published semi-monthly in the interest of the above-mentioned colony, of which we trust, in the interest of humanity, you will kindly make a notice, and greatly oblige

Yours for the cause of progression, Laura E. Hall.

Centerville, Utah, June 1, 1886.

Mr. Editor: My heart feels too full to write and say all I would like to say to you from this grand and sublime territory, and especially at this time, when all nature is looking divine and supreme, out of the power of mortals to describe—the snow-clad mountains and their mighty inland, strong, briny sea. The great Salt Lake is at this time grand and sublime to behold, especially from the mountain ridges and their lofty peaks. And now we hav that intelligent man, Mr. S. P. Putnam, here, attempting to break the barriers of priestcraft, and he is making many friends among the people, and he is getting the right view of the workings of this infernal outfit here. I expect Mr. Putnam thinks this grand territory is worthy of a far better class of beings than a lot of polygamous traitors. Last Sunday, May 30th, Mr. Stephen Hales came to Centerville with his good little wife and carriage, and he invited me to step in and go with them to Mr. Haight's grove, to the Freethinkers' meeting. Well, I went, and a mighty fine time we had of it.

An excellent band of music graced the assembly, and so did Mr. Putnam and other speakers, and the audience. We worshiped God in his temple that is not made with hands. What with the ripple of the delightful waters of the Salt Lake before us, and the lofty, majestic, snow-capped mountains towering behind us, and beneath the shade trees, with the divine orb of day giving light and life over us, I tell you, we had a famous time, and we ate our picnic on the green beneath the shade. But I must leave this for Mr. Putnam to tell you more of, for his mission here is no small one.

Well, Mr. Editor, I see some of your readers feel a little dissatisfied with the pictures, and some ask you to stop the paper. Well, now, let me here say a word to those that feel that way, by asking this question: Do not we one and all of us readers of The Truth Seeker get the full worth of our money, independent of the pictures? I, for one, say we certainly do. So I say, never stop your paper while you can pay for it, but just reflect a little. My fcelings are, let us hav the pictures, for they portray volumes. I received my last paper this morning, informing me of the death of another famous man, Mr. Stephen Pearl Andrews. It seems he has left his mark, and filled a good measure of days, seventy-four years of a useful, eventful life.

Mr. Stephen Hales has told you of the first Freethinkers' meeting in his hall, at Bountiful, and I hope it will not be the last. The city of Bountiful is quite a large place, with many good, well-meaning people, but they are bound with this infernal outfit calling itself the kingdom of God.

I must tell you there is a book coming out here shortly, whose title is, "Mormon Portraits; or, The Truth About the Mormon Leaders from 1830 to 1886," and I think it will be a clincher, for the Mountain Meadow massacre is reëxamined; a thousand fresh facts and documents, gathered personally in Utah from living witnesses, by Dr. W. Wyl, a German author. Maybe some time I shall hav a little to say on that subject, as I saw the Mountain Meadow people before they were murdered. William Williams.

Industry, Kan., May 31, 1886.

Mr. Editor: I would say that I am very much pleased with The Truth Seeker. It is truly worth its weight in gold. I take half a dozen different papers, a religious paper included, but The Truth Seeker takes the precedence every time, as it is a paper you can rely on for truth and honesty. I hav been taking it since last February, and would not do without it for four times what it costs a year. The information that a person receives in that time is worth many dollars to him. The cartoons are good in every respect, for they teach us a lesson more impressiv than anything else. I do not see why anyone should object to the pictures. Their lesson we shall never forget. Even children can comprehend it at once, whereas it would take three times that amount of reading to get them to understand the foolish and silly and unreasonable things in that book we call the word of God. There are much worse illustrations in what the church-members call the good book, or Bible, than ever Watson Heston has drawn.

It makes me feel rich toward my fellow-man to know that we hav such eminent men out in the field lecturing on Freethought as Samuel P. Putnam, C. B. Reynolds, J. E. Remsburg, and others. May they distribute their papers and tracts wherever they go, for I tell you it has a wonderful effect on the community for good.

I notice my brother, George B. Petrie, of Rapid City, Dakota, had something to say in last week's issue about Rev. George Oliver Fisher, of Abilene, Kansas—that he was up (that is, Fisher) at Industry, Kansas, and heard my friend and brother, L. W. Rogers, telling the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, to the people of Industry about the churches and preachers. Friend L. W. Rogers is a very intelligent and deep-thinking young man, twenty-six years of age, a school-teacher by profession, and when this man, Rev. Mr. Boles, an evangelist (as he calls himself), pitched his big tent near where Mr. Rogers was teaching school and commenced dishing out his slush and preaching hell and damnation straight to the people, my lit le friend Rogers (a second David), with a stone and sling of reason and common sense, threw it and killed the giant evangelist and so knocked his devil and hell on the head that they could not survive any longer, and for that reason the revivalist could not gather a single sheep, let alone a lamb, into his sheep-fold. There is no doubt whatever that he went away cursing the very ground that Brother Rogers walked upon. I would further state that L. W. Rogers delivered three very interesting lectures at Industry last winter, and was highly complimented by those who heard him, as the last night he lectured there was a crowded house.

Industry is a town of about four or five hundred inhabitants, with the prospect of a railroad running through the town in the near future, and I am happy to say there is not a church in the place. I hope every man, woman, and reader of The Truth Seeker will do all that is in their power to distribute papers, tracts, and books throughout their community, as it will certainly hav its effect for good. The best books I know of to convince people what is in the Bible are "Bible Morals," by J. E. Remsburg; "Mistakes of Moses," by Col. R. G. Ingersoll; "Short History of the Bible," by Bronson C. Keeler; and "Age of Reason," by Thomas Paine. Also "Men, Women, and Gods," by Miss Helen H. Gardener, and "Order of Creation." If a person reads the above books carefully, he can tackle any preacher or church-member without fear and trembling, for then he has a good shield and armor to defend himself in a discussion.

J. Beetem Wise.

Vineland, N. J., June 3, 1886.

Mr. Editor: The courage and conscience prompting that great tribute to truth and human welfare which made clear the doings concerning the U. S. Grant family are worthy of high commendation. I lacked time to speak of the matter immediately, wondered that no comments appeared, and only now see remarks by a woman's courageous pen. With "opinions unspoken" by the many on such and similar things, is it strange that our liberties are usurped?

A "board of missions," to gather names of students and distribute to them truths pointing to real philosophy and better lines of life, as suggested by "J. D. C.," is a worthy idea, and if formed for that single object might be useful. But if such board or bureau were able to add a traveling speaker's mission, it could educate so rapidly and efficiently as to be of great service in these times of strenuous efforts to call attention away from truth and the mighty importance of its practicalization.

Such speakers could establish local societies, rally thinkers, start inquiries, and the investigation of causes of present troubles, of the basis of old evils working through false institutions, and in deceiving ways coercing adherence and tolerance. Knowledge of the real conditions that exist would induce the study of a course to reverse influences, to set the faces of people toward light and liberty. A club for this purpose should be in every school district, exposing sophistries that hav long woven webs of destruction round youth and age. The measure might combine physical, mental, and ethical culture, and growing soundness of functions would soon promis capacity to purge the state of corruptions, and close its doors against church interference. Postponement of these measurcs will, if they hav not now, let an appalling period of darkness and cruelty glide upon our country, loved for the light and joy of freedom.

Yes; a Liberal woman who has labored long for the culture of character that can cleanse our legislation and create an unlimited democracy has an earnest approval to offer T. M. Horne's proposed party and platform, uniting on a common basis the many factions founded in justice, and demanding equable dealing and democratic legislating. The party appears necessary, and timely announcement requisit to ally and cement forces, and measures widespread and activ are in demand to produce understandings, friendly coherence, and many conditions for successful results. Increasing indications of serious movements at home and abroad imply that a central bureau of ways and means cannot be too soon instituted, for preparatory culture should spread through all the ranks of opposing sentiment, and by agents, societies, speakers to agitate, correspond, and regulate, draw those who would be with us if a standpoint of sympathy were made for them. By tenacious persistence, tyrannic environments confuse and betray thousands who would accept consistency if it offered them and their doubts half-grown conclusions and real convictions, a society standard of support. The Constitution and Declaration are forgotten. Liberals must needs declare a present standard and vouch for its defence. Oral agitation is negativ till doings are in progress. Who else will speak? M. E. Tillotson.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

"I Meant To."

"I did not rise at the breakfast-bell,
But was so sleepy, I can't tell—
I meant to.

"The wood's not carried in, I know,
But there's the school-bell, I must go—
I meant to.

"My lesson I forgot to write,
But nuts and apples were so nice—
I meant to.

"I forgot to walk in on tiptoe;
Oh, how the baby cries, oh, oh!—
I meant to.

"There, I forgot to shut the gate
And put away my book and slate—
I meant to.

"The cattle trampled down the corn;
My slate is broken, book is torn—
I meant to."

Thus drawls poor idle Jimmie Hite,
From mourn till noon, from noon till night—
"I meant to."

And when he grows to be a man,
He'll heedlessly mar every plan
With that poor plea, "I meant to."
—Selected.

Peppercorn Stories.

Polly Peppercorn had been real sick, and having recovered sent for all the children to come to a lawn party. They had all missed their nice little talks during her illness, and were glad enough to hav Polly signify a wish to resume them.

"We will hav a short mental exercise before proceeding with our games," said she, "and what shall we speak about?"

As nobody indicated any particular subject, and Molly Mullinleaf went head over heels over the wall and came up with a thumped head, Polly declared the mishap just gave them a theme to talk upon.

"Inside that head of yours, Molly," said Polly, "there's a brain. I think some time since we told about the formation of the skull, how hard it is and covered with thick hair to protect the delicate and wonderful machinery of the brain. Do any of you know the use of the brain?"

"We think with it," quickly responded Grasshopper Sammy and Daisy Dewdrop.

"Right. But it is not all in one piece or lump, the brain isn't. It has two parts or sections. The larger one is in the front and upper part of the head, and is in two sections. It is a queer-looking mass of whitish fibers, with little cells of gray stuff scattered thickly all on the outer portion of it. Thought, motiv, intelligence, seem to be somehow mysteriously centered in this gray mass which is called the cerebrum. I suppose you hav all seen the inside of an English walnut—well, the brain is all ridged and dented like the meat of the walnut. This is done by the process of thinking, and the more thinking that is donc the more ridgy or corrugated, as it is called, is the surface of the brain. Now, you are all thinking of that which I am telling, and your little brains are getting little twists and turns in them. When you were all bits of babies your brains were all plain and smooth, but as you slowly learned to think and reason they grew wrinkled and ridgy, and the gray matter began to expand or grow. Understand?"

"Course we do," answered Harry Coalskuttle. "You make it as plain as can be, Pelly."

"Thank you," replied Polly, very much pleased—and it was fortunate she did not hear Johnny Gotobed's remark, "She's a brick," or she would hav reproved him severely for using slang. "All intelligent creatures," continued Polly, "hav the gray matter in the brain. It predominates——"

"That'th a big word!" exclaimed Peggy Primrose.

"Yes; it means there is more of it than of other kinds, and I was going to say it predominates in the brain of the little birds. You see, their brains are very small, but most all gray, and that accounts for their perception, quickness, and intelligence.

"Then there is the back brain or cerebellum, as it is called, in man, which does not hav convolutions or twists in it as the other part of the brain, but instead has ridges running all the same way. The grayish matter runs deep down into the white substance, and they branch out in an even and lovely manner, just like a tree, and indeed the cerebellum is sometimes very appropriately called "the tree of life." This part controls the muscles, and if it is diseased it may be noticed in the walk, or motions of the arms. I once was acquainted with a person who was affected in this way, and he walked very unsteadily, and would throw up one arm involuntarily."

"Mith Polly, pleath ith the brain vewy hard?" asked Peggy Primrose.

"Oh, no; it is soft and doughy, all cells and fibers."

"What is in the cells?—the thinks?" inquired Little Thimbleweed.

They all laughed, and Polly made answer: "Oh, there is a liquid, and they are all bathed with the blood in the mass of blood-vessels that run criss-cross and every way among them. It seems to be afloat on top of a water-sac that is closed, and one-fifth of all the blood in the body is called for in this part of the frame. It is all very wonderful, and I only throw out these little hints so that you can follow them up and learn more. We should try very hard to keep our thoughts pure and sweet and honest, and not soil our minds with impure thoughts or weaken the brain by careless use of it. We should let it grow strong by earnest study, by contemplation of all that is good, true, and worthy.

Sammy Stripedgrass announced that the strawberries and cream were ready, and, after the feast was over they played "Puss in the Corner," "Catch, catch who can," and other games.

Presently Pussy Whitefoot came scampering around the corner with a live mouse in her mouth.

"I guess she does not belong to a Band of Mercy," said Frankie Muttonchops. "Scat there!"

Whitefoot ran for the house, still holding the mouse firmly in her mouth. S. H. W.

Two in a Quarrel.

There's a knowing little proverb,
From the sunny land of Spain:
But in Northland, and in Southland,
Is its meaning clear and plain.
Lock it up within your heart;
Neither lose nor lend it—
Two it takes to make a quarrel,
One can always end it.

Try it well in every way,
Still you find it true,
In a fight without a foe,
Pray, what could you do?
If the wrath is yours alone,
Soon you will expend it.
Two it takes to make a quarrel,
One can always end it.

Let's suppose that both are wroth,
And the strife begun,
If one voice shall cry for "Peace,"
Soon it will be done.
If but one shall span the breach,
He will quickly mend it.
Two it takes to make a quarrel,
One can always end it.
—Mary E. Vandyke.

Something About Chinese.

Chinese is a queer language. All its words are only one syllable long. But the sounds in the Chinese language are not very many, some four hundred and sixty-five at most, and their written language contains about eighty thousand pictures, each picture representing a thing or idea. And these pictures must be committed to memory. This is hard work, and not even the wisest Chinese professor can learn them all. But now comes a difficulty. For, of course, where there are so many words and so few sounds, many different words hav to be called by the same sound. How then are they to tell, when several different things hav exactly the same name, which of them is meant?

We hav such words. For instance, there is Bill, the name of a boy; and bill the beak of a bird; there is bill, an old weapon, and bill, a piece of money; there is bill, an article over which legislatures debate, and bill, a claim for payment of money; besides bills of exchange, bills of lading, and so forth. But Chinese is full of such words of a single syllable, yen, for instance, which, like bill, means many very different things. So they chose a number of little pictures, and agreed that these should be used as "keys." Each "key" meant that the sign or signs near which it stood belonged to some large general set of things, like things of the vegetable, mineral, or animal kingdom, forests, mines, or seas, air, or water, or of persons, like gods or men. It was like the game called Throwing Light, in which you guess the article by narrowing down the field until certain what it is.

But there Chinese writing stopped short, thousands of years ago. There it is to-day. There are now two hundred and fourteen of these "keys," and, by intense application, Chinamen learn to use their method with surprising quickness and success.—St. Nicholas.

Juvenile Wit.

"Is your father at home, bubby?" "Yeth, thir." "Can I see him?" "No, thir." "Why not?" "'Cauth he'th locked up, and mother's gone shopping with the key of the room in her pocket."

Two children were extolling the qualities of their respectiv papas. "Mine is as tall as the garden wall," said one. "My papa can see over the wall!" "And mine, too, when he has his hat on!"

The curiosity of a child of five had been aroused by seeing a magnifying glass. "How many times does it magnify?" asked a gentleman, thinking to puzzle him. "As many times as you look through it," was the quick reply.

Little Nell: "Why are lightning bugs called 'blessings,' mamma?" Mamma: "'Blessings,'" I never heard them called 'blessings.'" Little Nell: "But they are in this book." Mamma: "Are you sure?" Little Nell: "Oh, yes. Here it is, 'Blessings brighten as they take their flight.'"

Our Puzzle Box.

1—CONUNDRUM.

What is the difference between the little girl and the collar on the dog's neck?

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN THE CHILDREN'S CORNER JUNE 5, 1886.

1.—"One hundred and eighty-four,"
Has letters just a score.
2. In twenty only six we see,
3. And six has letters only three.
4. In nine are four, but (5) twenty-seven,
5. As printed just requires eleven.
6. In "Baker's dozen"—that's thirteen—
Are only seven letters seen;
7. While twenty-six, as verbal sign
To count the letters, just takes nine.

2.—A quarter to three. 3.—Bill, wing, tale (tail), I (eye), clause (claws), foul (fowl), tow (toe), board, crack.

4.—Since the slight accident has come to pass,
Each one is like the other—a cut-lass.

Correspondence.

BINBROOK, ONT., June 6, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I thought I would write a few lines to the Children's Corner.

Papa has taken THE TRUTH SEEKER for four years. I never took any interest in the paper until the Children's Corner was published, and I think it is very nice. I go to school now and study the Third Reader. I am afraid I am getting my letter too long, so I will draw to a close. ANNIE YOUNG.

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

The Story Hour. For Children and Youth. By Susan H. Wixon. Without Superstition. The Only Illustrated Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page and 25 smaller illustrations; large type, heavy toned paper, broad margins, illuminated covers; 4to. 224 pp., bds., $1.25.

Two Little Red Mittens. A Story of the Rightway Almshouse. By Jennie Butler Browne. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

Apples of Gold. A Story-Book for the Young Folks. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellent work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

The Youth's Liberal Guide. By Prof. H. M. Kottinger, A.M. Price; $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

BACON AND SHAKSPERE.

Proof that Wm. Shakspere could not write. The Sonnets written by Francis Bacon to the Earl of Essex and his bride, A.D., 1590. By WM. HENRY BURR. Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

SELF-CONTRADICTIONS OF THE BIBLE.

A perfectly reliable, accurate pamphlet. Though anonymous, it is now known to be the work of W. H. BURR, one of our ablest correspondents. More than 30,000 copies hav been sold. Price, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY:

OR,

MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who hav helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.

Price, - - - - - - $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE CONVENTIONAL LIES OF OUR CIVILIZATION.

From the German of MAX NORDAU.

SEVENTH EDITION.

A most powerfully written book.—Phila. Record. This Book is not a Book! It is a Deed! and those who oppose it will prove that they fear it.—Vienna News. Price, 50 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

MOSES BEFORE THE COURT;

OR,

The Forgery of the Old Testament.

Dedicated to the clergy

BY

H. J. SEIGNEURET,
Secularist.

Price, - - - - - 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

ELEMENTS OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY

FOR

HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

This book is just what the busy world of to-day needs—a perfect compendium of history from 2,000 years B.C. on up to 1883, all in a nutshell.—Elmina Slenker.

As a text-book in schools, the book would occupy an important place; in the family it would be no less important, as conveying information that all should be acquainted with.—Susan Wixon.

Mr. Cottinger's intentions in writing this book are excellent, and his standpoint admirable. It may be commended as fulfilling its purpose of a concise and interesting historical text-book.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.

For Schools, in Quantities, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.—Zadig; or Fate.—The Sage and the Atheist.—The Princess of Babylon.—The Man of Forty Crowns. The Huron; or, the Pupil of Nature.—Micromegas.—The World as it Goes.—The Black and the White.—Memnom the Philosopher.—Andres Des Touches at Siam.—The Study of Nature.—A Conversation With a Chinese.—Plato's Dream.—A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.—An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, $4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY

John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 333 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

Bible Fabrications Refuted

and

The Errors of the Bible Exposed.

BY O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Price, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents; twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents per hundred, $1.50.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
T. Clappison, Hamilton, Ont.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
E. A. Stevens, 750 West Lake st., Chicago.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 315 North 10th st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

Mottoes for Freethinkers.

We hav received a supply of illuminated motto cards, which we offer for sale. These mottoes are intended to take the place of the "God-bless-our-home" placards which disfigure the walls of so many houses. They are printed on heavy cardboard, 9 inches by 22 1-2. The motto is in black, with colored borders, with an illuminated monogram of U. M. L. The following are the various readings:

THE LIVING HAV A RIGHT TO CONTROL THE WORLD.

FREE THOUGHT WILL GIV US TRUTH.

SUPERSTITION IS THE CHILD OF SLAVERY.

REASON IS THE LAMP OF THE MIND, THE ONLY TORCH OF PROGRESS.

THE SCHOOL-HOUSE IS MY CATHEDRAL.

UNIVERSAL MENTAL LIBERTY.

THE TIME TO BE HAPPY IS NOW, AND THE PLACE TO BE HAPPY IS HERE.

NEVER TROUBLE TROUBLE TILL TROUBLE TROUBLES YOU.

THE WORLD IS MY COUNTRY; TO DO GOOD MY RELIGION.

The price of each of the foregoing is 25 cents.

For Freethought societies there is a large card 22 x 15 inches, printed in colors, with an engraved heading, containing the Nine Demands of Liberalism. Framed it makes a splendid ornament for the lecture-rooms of Liberal societies. Price, 30 cents. Any of these will be sent postpaid, securely wrapped, on receipt of price.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York City.

A NEW PAMPHLET.—JUST OUT.

ADAMI AND HEVA.

BY S. P. PUTMAM.

A poetic version of the Indian Story of the Garden of Eden, in which its superiority to the mutilated copy—the Genesis legend—is shown.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Price, Twenty-Five Cents.

THE

TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL

—AND—

FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC

1886.

(E. M. 286.)

WITH THIRTY PORTRAITS OF DISTINGUISHED EUROPEAN FREETHINKERS, SCIENTISTS, AND PHILOSOPHERS, AND NUMEROUS OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1886,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1885,	17
How the Church Filches from the State,	24
Public Contributions to the Church,	28
The Religion of Crime,	31
Chaplains in our Army and Navy,	32
The Higher Life. By Courtlandt Palmer,	34
My Dream. By Samuel P. Putnam,	37
The American Secular Union,	40
Statistics of our Foreign-born Population,	49
The Curate of Churnside. (Selected Story.) By Jas. Payne,	50
How Voltaire Died. By the Editor,	64
The Iron Virgin,	77
Religious Divisions of the World,	82
Paine Memorial Hall. (Illustrated),	83
The Story of 1885,	84
Immigration to the U. S. 1820–1884,	87
Freethought in Australia,	88
Freethought on the Continent,	92
Subjects of Illustration,	95
Freethought Journals,	100
Religious Denominations,	102
Area and Value of Farms,	103
Population of Large Cities,	103
Liberal Lecturers,	104

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Lick Observatory,
Girard College, Philadelphia,
Freethought Hall, Waco, Texas (Interior view),
Freethought Hall, Waco Texas (Exterior View),
The Tent,
Iron Virgin,
Paine Hall,
Moncure D. Conway,
Saladin,
Annie Besant,
Mary Wollstonecraft,
G. W. Foote,
Austin Holyoake,
J. S. Mill,
George Eliot,
Geo. Standring,
Ernst Haeckel,
Auguste Comte,
Edward Gibbon,
Max Muller,
Thos. Huxley,
Voltaire,
Chas. Darwin,
Rousseau,
Humboldt,
Byron,
Shelley,
David Hume,
Goethe,
Robert Burns,
Richard Carlile,
Herbert Spencer,
Castelar,
Bradlaugh,
Chas. A. Watts,
J. A. Froude,
John Tyndall.

NEW YORK:
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,
33 CLINTON PLACE.

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D
Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

Sabbath-Breaking.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG,
Author of "False Claims," "Bible Morals," Etc.

The best and most thorough work ever written on the Sunday Question from a rational point of view.

Large and Handsome Print.

SINGLE COPIES, - - 25 cents.
SIX COPIES, - - - $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.

BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.
Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st floor shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney. Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 39 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $5,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION, (Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702,) N. Y.

REPLY
TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S
"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."
By B. W. Lacy.

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, auther of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrins. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON.
The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works.

By THOMAS PAINE,
"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."
Price, Single Copies, 25 cents. Six copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.
By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 cents.

S. P. Putnam's Works.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution, with some Criticisms of Universology. Price, 20 cts.

Waifs and Wanderings, a New American Story. Price, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cts. "A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Golden Throne, a Romance. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creativ spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words—the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read Golden Throne.'"—INGERSOLL. $1.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A conversation in rhyme between the Nineteenth Century Infidel and the Galilean Reformer, wherein it is shown there is much in harmony between them. Price, 10 cts.

Prometheus. A poem. "It is crammed with life, thought, and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary beauty."—DR. HENRY W. BELLOWS. $1.

Gottlieb, His Life. A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Price 25 cents.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand, and other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cts.

For all of the above address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Charles Watts's Works.

The History of Freethought. Bound in cloth and lettered. Price, $1.25. CONTENTS: Section I. Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II. What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III. Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV. Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V. Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

The American Secular Union; its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Secularism; Destructiv and Constructiv. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Christian Evidences Criticised A reply to the "Christian Evidence Society." Introduction by Charles Bradlaugh. Contents: The Origin of Christianity; The Historical Value of the New Testament; Miracles; Prophecies; The Practical Value of Christianity; The Progress of Christianity. Price, $1.

Secularism; its Principles and its Duties. Price, 75 cts.

Tracts. The following tracts by Chas. Watts are published at the low price of FIVE CENTS EACH: Defense of Secular Principles; Is the Bible Reliable? The Christian Deity; Moral Value of the Bible; Freethought and Modern Progress; Christianity, its Nature and Influence on Civilization; Philosophy of Secularism; Science and Bible Antagonistic; Christian Scheme of Redemption. For all of the above works address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

Resurrection of Jesus. Showing the contradictions and doubts in which the subject is involved. By W. S. BELL. Revised edition. 25 cents.

Revelations of Antichrist. An exhaustiv work proving conclusivly that no such person as Jesus Christ existed in the reign of Tiberius, but that a Jesus, the son of Mary, was stoned and hanged about a century before, and that his disciples, Simon Kepha, alias Peter, and the apostle Paul, both lived and died before the Christian era. 446 pages and full index. Price, $2.

The Anonymous Hypothesis of Creation. A Brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account. By JAMES F. FURNISS. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Brain and the Bible. By EDGAR C. BEALL. With a Preface by ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, who says of it: "This book, written by a brave and honest man, is filled with brave and honest thoughts. The arguments it presents cannot be answered by all the theologians in the world." Price reduced to $1.

The Creed of Christendom. Its foundation contrasted with its superstructure. By W. RATHBONE GREG. One of the clearest and ablest works ever written. $1.50.

The Essence of Religion. From the German of L. FEUERBACH. Author of th Essence of Christianity, etc. In cloth, reduced to 50 cents.

The Godly Women of the Bible. A History of all the women who figure in the Bible. Sharp and telling in style. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Holy Bible Abridged. Containing the choice passages and lovely morceaus particularly pleasing to COMSTOCK. 169 pages. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

The Jamieson-Ditzler Debate. A nine-days' debate on God, the Bible, Christianity, and Liberalism. Between W. F. JAMIESON and Rev. JACOB DITZLER, D.D. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Book Notices.

INGERSOLL'S "PROSE POEMS."

Some of Robert G. Ingersoll's strongest supporters and warmest admirers are numbered among the men and women of the dramatic profession. The fervid eloquence, the brilliant wit, the rich poetical fancy, and the broad philanthropy of this great orator and thinker appeal with irresistible force to actors, whose keen sympathies and responsiv mentality render them singularly and happily appreciativ of the golden words dropped from the lips of such a man. They cannot fail, therefore, to be grateful that the brightest jewels of Ingersoll's thought hav been gathered and published in appropriately beautiful form. And these "Prose Poems and Selections" are a veritable treasure-house to the reader.

Ingersoll is not "understanded of the people." He is falsely called "the great iconoclast;" he is looked upon by thousands—to whom his name is the synonym of iniquitous disbelief, and who for the most part hav formed their estimate of his views not from personal knowledge, but by evil report and irresponsible hearsay—as a blatant blasphemer; he is denounced from the pulpit and execrated in the pew; he is ignorantly misconstrued, misquoted, and misunderstood. This is the inevitable penalty of upholding liberty of thought, action, and speech. Those who dare not slip the leash of prejudice find agreeable occupation in vilifying those who do. To differ in one's opinions from the opinions of others is little less than a crime even in these enlightened days.

While we do not mean to indorse or oppose Ingersoll's theological beliefs and disbeliefs, we do not like to see them grossly distorted nor the remarkable purity and integrity of the man impugned. And we think that the volume to which this article is devoted will do much to set the author in a just light before his countrymen, as well as furnish pleasure to those who share his ideas. We are certain that no man or woman, Christian or Infidel, can peruse these "Prose Poems" without feeling respect for the sincerity and admiration for the genius of the massiv mind that conceived them. The fragments cover a great variety of topics, and they furnish some striking examples of the virility of his arguments, his classic simplicity and purity of expression, and the surpassing beauty of his style. The thoughts are those of one who truly loves his fellow-men; who hates sham, falsehood, and superstition; who sturdily advocates principles that concern the best interests of humanity; who takes a cheery, healthy, hopeful view of life and vigorously resents the popular impression that this is but a vale of tears. There are gleams of sunshine in every page, glittering gems of epigram, tender sympathy with the frailties of mankind, rare insights into the beauties of nature, and passages of eloquent English that thrill the soul and stir the blood.

We hav space for but a few quotations—yet these will serve as an index to the contents of this work:

The peroration of an address delivered in this city before the Grand Army of the Republic: "But what of those who fell? There is no language to express the debt we owe, the love we bear, to all the dead who died for us. Words are but barren sounds. We can but stand beside their graves and in the hush and silence feel what speech has never told. They fought, they died; and for the first time since man has kept a record of events, the heavens bent above and domed a land without a serf, a servant, or a slave."

From a tribute to his dead brother. "He believed that happiness is the only good, reason the only torch, justice the only worship, humanity the only religion, and love the only priest. He added to the sum of human joy, and were everyone to whom he did some loving service to bring a blossom to his grave, he would sleep to-night beneath a wilderness of flowers. Life is a narrow vale between the cold and barren peaks of two eternities. We strive in vain to look beyond the hights. We cry aloud, and the only answer is the echo of our wailing cry. From the voiceless lips of the unreplying dead there comes no word; but in the night of death hope sees a star, and listening love can hear the rustle of a wing."

At a child's grave: "Every cradle asks us 'Whence?' and every coffin 'Whither?' The poor barbarian, weeping above his dead, can answer these questions just as well as the robed priest of the most authentic creed. No man, standing where the horizon of a life has touched a grave, has any right to prophesy a future filled with pain and tears."

Of freedom: "Is it a small thing to quench the flames of hell with the holy tears of pity; to unbind the martyr from the stake; break all the chains; put out the fires of civil war; stay the sword of the fanatic, and tear the bloody hands of the church from the white throat of science? Is it a small thing to make men truly pure—to destroy the dogmas of ignorance, prejudice, and power—the poisoned fables of superstition, and drive from the beautiful face of earth the fiend of fear?"

Of originality: "An argument is new until it has been answered. An argument is absolutely fresh and has upon its leaves the dew of the morning, until it has been refuted. . . . Substance is eternal; forms are new. So in the human mind certain ideas, or in the human heart certain passions, are forever old; but genius forever givs them new forms, new meanings; and this is the perpetual originality of genius."

Of Voltaire: "Voltaire was the intellectual autocrat of his time. From his throne at the foot of the Alps he pointed the finger of scorn at every hypocrit in Europe. He was the pioneer of his century. He was the assassin of superstition. Through the shadows of faith and fable, through the darkness of myth and miracle, through the midnight of Christianity, through the blackness of bigotry, past cathedral and dungeon, past rack and stake, part altar and throne, he carried, with chivalric hands, the sacred torch of reason."

The Infidel: "In looking at the cathedral he remembered the dungeon. The music of the organ was not loud enough to drown the clank of fetters. He could not forget that the taper had lighted the fagot. He knew that the cross adorned the hilt of the sword, and so where others worshiped, he wept."

At the tomb of Napoleon: "I thought of the orphans and widows he had made—of the tears that had been shed for his glory, and of the only woman who ever loved him, pushed from his heart by the cold hand of ambition. And I said I would rather hav been a French peasant and worn wooden shoes. I would rather hav lived in a hut with a vine growing over the door and the grapes growing purple in the amorous kisses of the Autumn sun. . . . I would rather hav been that man, and gone down to the tongueless silence of the dreamless dust, than to hav been that imperial impersonation of force and murder known as Napoleon the Great."

Of free will: "Is it not possible that each brain is a field, where all the senses sow the seeds of thought? Some of these fields are mostly barren, poor, and hard, producing only worthless seeds; and some grow sturdy oaks and stately palms; and some are like the tropic world, where plants and trees and vines seem royal children of the soil and sun."

Of love: "Love is the magician, the enchanter, that changes worthless things to joy and makes right royal kings and queens of common clay It is the perfume of that wondrous flower, the heart, and without that sacred passion, that divine swoon, we are less than beasts; but with it earth is heaven and we are gods."

Beethoven's Sixth symphony: "This soundwrought picture of the fields and woods, of flowering hedge and happy home, where thrushes build and swallows fly, and mothers sing to babes; this echo of the babbled lullaby of brooks that, dallying, wind and fall where meadows bare their daisied bosoms to the sun; this joyous mimicry of summer rain, the laugh of children, and the rhythmic rustle of the whispering leaves; this strophe of peasant life; this perfect poem of content and love."—Dramatic Mirror.

PROHIBITION.

DEAR TRUTH SEEKER: It is not my intention, on the present occasion, to write an article on the above important subject. On a future occasion I shall probably write such an article. I wish now simply to call the attention of your readers to the recent lecture of Prof. W. S. Bell, of Chicago, on "Anti-Prohibition." This is a remarkably able lecture, now in pamphlet form, and it should be read by every American citizen. Those Liberals especially who, lured by the specious bait of a pretended temperance movement, are about to be caught on the church hook, should giv this lecture a careful reading. It may be the means of their salvation. With the sledgehammer of logic, Professor Bell knocks every prop from under the prohibition platform. The advocates of prohibition, therefore, would do well to heed his advice, and desist from an undertaking which is bound to end in failure, and which, could it end otherwise, would simply reverse the motion of the wheels of progress and carry us back to the dark and bloody days of the Inquisition. If we can be successfully robbed of our liberty to use our own judgment in regard to what we shall drink, we can, with equal success, and with equal propriety, be also robbed of our liberty to use our own judgment in regard to what we shall eat, wear, read, believe, speak, worship, etc. Indeed the successful prohibition of our liberty in regard to any one of these things is the doom of our liberty in regard to them all. Let us, then, take warning and act before it is too late.

Our Prohibition friends correctly contend that, so long as ardent spirits of any kind are imported into the United States, or manufactured and sold therein, certain persons will be injured by the excessiv use of them. All of this, however, is equally true of money and of many other things. Indeed, far more evil results from love of money than from love of drink. Why not, then, prohibit the use of money as well as of drink? So of women. Why not prohibit them? So long as they be permitted to remain among us will not many men be injured by the excessiv use of them? If prohibition be good in one of these cases, why is it not equally good in the others? Let us be consistent!

If our Prohibition friends would succeed in their unwise undertaking, they must begin at the root of the evil. This they are not doing. The root of the evil lies, not in the manufacture and the sale of intoxicating drinks, but in the appetite, generally hereditary, that calls for the manufacture and the sale of these drinks. So long as this appetite exists, so long as it calls, with money, for intoxicating drinks, and so long as the love of money exists, these drinks will be manufactured and sold in spite of any and of all Prohibitory legislation. This appetite, then, and this love of money, must be prohibited. This appetite, however, and this love of money, depend, to a great extent, upon certain cranial developments, certain phrenological "bumps." These "bumps," then, must be prohibited. In them we hav the root of the evil. Let stringent laws, then, be enacted against being born with these "bumps." Let Carrion Comstock, Senator Edmunds, or some other proper person, under the direction of some good phrenologist, hav his head whittled down to just the size and shape required by temperance and virtue; let plaster models of this head be made and placed, at the public expense, in every house; and then let it be made a capital offense to be born with a head differing ever so little in shape from this model. When our Prohibitionist friends go thus to the root of the evil, they may reasonably hope for success. Having myself long fought under the Prohibition banner, and having been uniformly and gloriously beaten in every battle, I set to work to learn the causes of our many defeats. I hav found them in the fact that we were trying to do a wrong thing, in a wrong way. My advice, then, ought to hav some weight with Prohibition soldiers of less experience.

JOHN R. KELSO.

Longmont, Col., June 2, 286.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. By Helen H. Gardener. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. New York: The Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place.

Nearly all men are agreed that women ought to hav a religion. In Christian countries by "religion" is generally meant the old orthodox belief that the world was made in six days, that God rested on the seventh, that in process of time men were so wicked that he sent his only son, Jesus Christ, to die for them, and that without justification by faith no man can be saved. This is the kind of religion which many men, even the most advanced and learned, would like their wives to hav. They think it is good for the nursery, the Sunday-school, the church, and the fireside, especially when the children of the family are in their early years. There is, indeed, another kind of religion, which Miss Gardener preaches, at which we shall arrive in a moment, and which takes no account at all of the points to which we hav been referring. It is the religion of disbelief in every creed excepting that of right-doing, recognizing what it calls the inconceivability of God, the impossibility of immortality, and the imperativness of duty. Miss Helen H. Gardener, who was introduced to her first audience in New York by Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, is an Infidel of this description. She has written a volume of one hundred and seventy pages, which has been brought out by the Truth Seeker Company, of this city, none of our noted publishers caring to tackle a work of this character. The contents are three lectures or essays, entitled "Men, Women, and Gods," "Vicarious Atonement," "Historical Facts and Theological Fictions," together with an appendix. We hav no disposition to do injustice to Miss Gardener. If she is wrong in her convictions, as well as in her way of expressing them, and continues to the end to be and do both, she is, according to the doctrins she denounces, in an infinitly worse condition than we could possibly wish her to be, and needs the infinit pity of her worst theological enemies. Her mind is very bright, her convictions very sincere, and her intentions deeply earnest. Such hatred of ignorance and prejudice, such reverence for the good and the beautiful, such courage in carrying out to its utmost reaches the logic she has espoused, are not often seen in a woman. What a pity that these qualities should be a trifle marred by a tone of jesting which is utterly inconsistent with the inconceivable importance of her themes. In that respect she is only too good a pupil of the famous "Bob" Ingersoll. But to return to Miss Gardener her book is well worth reading, despite the defects to which we hav referred.—New York Evening Telegram.

Come or Go.

"Come to Christ!" the parson cried.
"I'd like to see him," answered I,
"I've read that he was crucified,
But never heard exactly why
From source that I could credit.
I've read that some great God had planned
The way his only son should die,
To save mankind whom he had damned,
But I believed it all a lie
The first time that I read it."
"Go to hell!" the parson cried;
"You're past redemption, and 'twere well
That you had in your childhood died,
And left more vacant room in hell.
You're lost, and don't forget it!"

Socorro, N. M. D. W. WALCOTT.

A Freethought Missionary Gone.

MR. EDITOR: After a long and painfu illness, my dear mother, Sarah C. Hilton, sank into that last solemn sleep which, in my opinion, knows no awakening. We grieve at our loss, but we feel assured it is her gain. The jars and frets and cankering cares of this life will never more disturb her. Purity, sincerity, and charity were the activ living principles that guided her. The aim of her life was the elevation of humanity physically, mentally, and morally. She will long liv in the hearts of all who knew her.

She was born in Embden, Somerset county, Maine, June 11, 1818. She was the youngest child of Timothy and Jane (McFadden) Cleveland; married McKinney Hilton, July 9, 1840; died at the home of her only daughter, May 19, 1886, making her 67 years 11 months 8 days. The last eighteen years she had been a resident of Illinois. She was baptized by Elder Stillson, and was a member of the Freewill Baptist church twenty-five years. Her religious views gradually underwent a change till she identified herself with the Liberals by joining the New York Freethinkers' Association and was a charter member of the Illinois state Liberal League. She embraced the grand idea of universal mental liberty that Liberalism teaches, and became an enthusiastic worker. Her last time out was the middle of February, to hear Professor Remsburg's lectures. She made every arrangement in detail for a Freethought burial to take place from our home. Professor Bell, of Chicago, formerly a Methodist miuister, then a Universalist, and lastly a Liberal, delivered the funeral discourse from the "Truth Seeker Collection," Form 3, with Bryant's "Thanatopsis" added. Dr. Braffat, her first attending physician (we had five in all), pronounced a beautiful eulogy. A choir that had a Freethinker for a leader sang three pieces and played a dirge while the procession viewed the remains. The bearers selected were Freethinkers, making it the first Freethought funeral that ever occurred in our midst. The following lines from A. R. Ayer's hand-book were uttered by Mr. Bell as the parting words:

Peaceful and fair is the smiling repose
That the breast-cradled slumber of infancy knows;
Sound is the rest of the weary and worn,
Whose feet hav been galled with the dust and the thorn;
Sweet is the sleep on the eyelids of youth,
When they dream of the world as all pleasure and truth.
Child, pilgrim, and youth shall awaken again
To journeys of toil and trial and pain.
But oh! there's a sweet and visionless sleep,
The calm and the stirless, the long and the deep.
'Tis the sleep that is soundest and sweetest of all,
When our couch is the bier and our night-robe the pall.
No voice then of foe or friend can impart
The proud flush to the cheek or warm throb to the heart.
The lips of the dearest may seek for the breath,
But their kiss cannot rouse the calm stillness of death.
'Tis a long, 'tis a last, 'tis a beautiful rest,
When all sorrow has passed from the brow and the breast.

She was taken to New Lenox, Will county, for interment, and laid to rest in the presence of all the nearest and dearest relativs, besides distant ones. We left her with all the sweet and thrilling influences of fragrant fields, of flowering plants, of bursting buds and blossoming vines, of silvery streams and genial summer showers, of jeweled nights and dawning days, melodious with the songs of birds.

MRS. SARAH J. PAINE.

Earlville, Ill., June 1, 1886.

Books on Practical Steps in Present Needs.

History of Woman's Costume Movement; its first 35 years, Events and Persecutions, Supplemented by Modern Martyrdom. 132pp., fine paper, 25c. Progress vs. Fashion. 32pp., paper, 10c. Woman's Way Out. 32pp., paper, 10c. Love and Transition. Poetic, in two parts; an Epic and an Argument. 191pp., in fine cloth and gilt, 75c.
Sent on receipt of price, by the author,
tojn1 M. E. TILLOTSON, Vineland, N. J.

THE RISE OF
INTELLECTUAL LIBERTY
From Thales to Copernicus.
By FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND, Author of "The Reign of the Stoics."

"This is a book not only to be read once, but to be kept and referred to, and pondered over from year to year. It is a guide-book of Liberalism through the past centuries prior to 1600, the era of Copernicus and Bruno. It does not take the place of other histories like Gibbon, Hallam, or Lecky, but it makes them intelligible by pointing out the white light that has been cast upon the lurid clouds of ignorance, superstition, and cruelty, from the little stream of Freethought that has flowed in its ragged, broken, and obstructed course down through the ages which now liv only as our realm of Memory and Admonition."

Octavo, 458 pp. PRICE, $3.50.
Address THE TRUHT SEEKER.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL,
Price, 25 cents,

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, $1.
In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, 1.25.
Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50cts; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to Be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents, $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscan. 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3. Millions of these should be circulated.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill.
Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete.
Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, for 50cts, or either one for 15cts.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk cloth, beveled edges, gilt, back and side, $2.50; in half calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitly fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine, and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price, $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should hav them.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll.
Superb photographs, 22x28, $5; panel, 10½x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cents; card, 20 cts.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

J. E. Remsburg's Works.

False Claims. Revised and Enlarged. Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church aud Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture: Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbatic Idea; The Jewish Sabbath; The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; The Sabbath during the Middle Ages; The Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; six copies, $1.00.

Image Breaker. Six Lectures: Decline of Faith, Protestant Intolerance, Washington an Unbeliver; Jefferson an Unbeliever; Paine and Wesley; Christian Sabbath. Each 5 cents; bound, paper, 25 cents; per doz. 40 cts.

Thomas Paine. The Apostle of Religious and Political Liberty. Tells the story of the Author-Hero's life, delineates the leading traits of his character and genius, and vindicates his name from the aspersions cast upon it. Choice extracts from "Common Sense," "American Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason" are given; also, tributes to Paine's character from more than one hundred noted persons of Europe and America, many of them written expressly for this work. Second edition, 160 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound, and containing a handsome steel portrait of Paine. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Apostle of Liberty. An address delivered in Paine Hall, before the N. E. Freethinkers' Convention, January 29, 1884. Price, 10 cents.
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Women Support It; What It Teaches; From Moses to Paul; The Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge; Knowledge Not a Crime; As Much Inspired as Any of It.
VICARIOUS ATONEMENT: Fear; Beginning to Think; Creeds; Self-Control What We Need; Vicarious Atonement Not a Christian Invention; Twin Monsters from Intellectual Pig-May Think; Intellectual Gag-Law; The Vicarious Theory the Cause of Crime; Revision; The Church's Money-Box; Shall Progress Stop?
HISTORICAL FACTS AND THEOLOGICAL FICTIONS: Church Fictions; Historical Facts—(Civilization, Comparativ Status, Women as Persons, Education, As Wives, Not Woman's Friend, Morals).

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

Photo-Engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50c.

Ingersoll's Tributes.

REDUCED IN PRICE.

We hav made arrangements whereby we can offer these magnificent prose poems of Mr. Ingersoll's at greatly reduced prices. The Tributes are printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22 inches, illuminated border, large clear type, suitable for framing. The titles are:

The Vision of War,
Tribute to his Brother,
The Grant Banquet Toast,
Address at Harry Miller's Grave.

The price of these heretofore has been $1. We offer them now at FIFTEEN CENTS EACH; THE FOUR FOR FIFTY CENTS. Mailed secure from breakage. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

A SKETCH OF THE LIFE
OF
APOLLONIUS OF TYANA,
OR THE
First Ten Decades of Our Era.
BY
DANIEL M. TREDWELL.

Designed to show upon the authority of History that Apollonius of Tyana performed miracles and spoke wise sayings equal to those attributed to Jesus Christ. 350pp., octavo, best style. Price $2.50.
Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

A STUDY
OF
PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY
BY LEWIS C. JANES.

This book treats of the natural evolution of the Christian religion, its historical antecedents in Palestinian Judaism and Roman Paganism; investigates the history of the founder of Christianity in the light of the latest scientific criticism of the New Testament; shows that the true story of the Man Jesus, and his genuin teachings are separable from the later legendary accretions which hav confounded him with the mythical Christ, and traces the natural development of Christian dogma and ecclesiastical institutions. Complete references and full index. 320pp. 8vo, cloth, gilt top. Price $1.50.
Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

SOCIAL WEALTH.

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

Price, Cloth, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
Clinton Place, New York.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

The Present and the Future Republic of North America.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

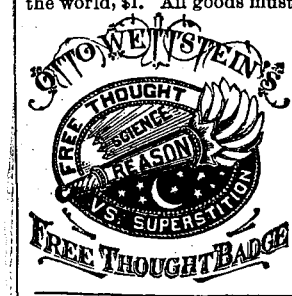
Price $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Bible Inquirer. A Key to Bible Investigation. Revised Edition. This pamphlet refers specifically to 148 Bible propositions, with numerous references and citations, that are contradicted in terms by the same number of other propositions in the same book. Price 25 cents.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

SCIENCE LECTURES.

Liberal friends visiting Philadelphia should attend the Spring Course of Science Lectures every Sunday evening, at the Hall of Friendship League, Ninth and Girard ave.
Debate at 2:30 (Secular questions).
PROF. ATKINSON, F.R.A.S.



FRIENDSHIP LIBERAL LEAGUE No. 257

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

Otto Wettstein's

Popular Jewelry Store, Rochelle, Ill.

Genuin diamond jewelry; fine gold and silver watches, chains, bracelets, gold and plated jewelry, silver and plated ware, optical, art, and fancy goods. 3 oz., coin silver, Elgin watch, $9; 4 oz., $10.50; 4oz., stem wind, 11 jeweled, $14.50; same, 15 jeweled, $19; same, adjusted, $22. In filled gold cases, warranted 20 years, 7 jeweled, stem wind, $21; 11 jeweled, $23.50; 15 jeweled, $28; adjusted, $31. Best filled cases add $4.50. Ladies' filled, best cases, $20, 7; $22, 11; and $30 for 15 jeweled movements. Ladies' solid gold, 10 k., $22, 7; $24, 11; $32, 15 jewels. For 14 karat cases add $8. Gents equally low. Watches cleaned, $1; springs $1; and returned per registered mail. Best spectacle in the world, $1. All goods must suit or cash back.

And what is a nicer present for either your lady or gentleman friends than one of my latest improved model badges in solid gold, artistically enameled in three colors? Price, $3, $3.50, $4. With genuin diamond in rising sun, $8 and $10.

OTTO WETTSTEIN
Rochelle, Ill.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catch-penny get up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magnetic appliance, but simply a medicin to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

N. B.—Dr. Fellows begs leave to say that he is an Infidel of the most pronounced character. Bro. Liberals, your patronage is solicited.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German A new cheap edition at only $1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

The Secret of the Last,

OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office

News of the Week.

THE president and his bride attended church last Sunday and drew a large congregation.

MRS. ERMINNIE A. SMITH, president of the Jersey City Esthetic Society, died last week.

THE New York Custom House clerks are being gradually changed, the Republicans giving place to Democrats.

AN "earthquake" was reported along the Jersey coast last Saturday. It was caused by the United States sloop-of-war Juniata firing broadsides for practice.

THE Lewiston Mills, at Lewiston, Me., hav suspended. The company hav liabilities to the amount of over a million and a half. Its assets are less than a million.

THE story that Sam Jones has by the blessing of God been enabled to giv up the habit of smoking tobacco is untrue. He denies that he has ever stopped smoking.

NEARLY 10,000 persons, mostly Germans, assembled at Ridgewood Park on the 13th to celebrate Pfingst Sunday. They were entertained by bands of music and singing.

LOUIS II., the recently deposed king of Bavaria, committed suicide last Monday by throwing himself into Starnberg Lake. His physician, in attempting to rescue him, was also drowned. The king was insane.

GLADSTONE has issued a manifesto asking the electors of Midlothian to again return him to Parliament. He very appropriately warns the people against the introduction of religious bigotry in the contest for Home Rule in Ireland.

IN Belfast, Ireland, the Protestants were last week on the war-path against the Catholics, and mobbed them in a brutal manner. At Dublin and Sligo the Catholics mobbed the Protestants and wrecked and burnt their houses.

AN attempt to strictly enforce the Sunday law in Portland, Me., has ended in a dismal failure. Newspapers are sold on the streets, barber shops are still kept open, and, according to the reports, the liquor stores do a rushing Sunday business.

Two men who advocated the boycotting of the New Haven Journal and Courier, printed by "rats," hav been arrested for conspiracy to ruin the business of the paper. One of the arrested men is J. Frederick Busch, editor of the Workingmen's Advocate.

GEORGE W. CHILDS, of Philadelphia, and his partner Mr. Drexel, hav given the Printers' International Union $10,000. It is contemplated adding to the fund and erecting in Philadelphia a beautiful hall which shall be known as the home of the craft.

AT a conference of 500 Socialist delegates at Brussels last Sunday, it was resolved to continue the agitation in favor of universal suffrage, and to commence a general strike when workingmen hav gained sufficient strength. Resolutions were passed expressing sympathy with the Socialists of Chicago.

THE Third avenue strike is now admitted to be a practical failure so far as the object sought by the strikers is concerned. The men are losing their wages and the company is losing largely the patronage of the traveling public. It is estimated that in one way and another the strike has cost a million dollars.

J. S. MCCUE, editor of the Valley Democrat of Los Angeles, Cal., last Saturday night attempted to make an outdoor speech on the labor question at Washington, but was prevented by the police, who informed him that only the gospel could be preached on the streets. He then announced that he would preach a sermon at the same place the next night. A large and enthusiastic crowd of workingmen assembled to hear him. The police did not put in an appearance, and he delivered a stirring labor speech.

JOHN DALEY, who recently abjured Catholicism, attempted to preach in River Park, Wilkesbarre, Pa., last Sunday afternoon, but was prevented by a mob of fully three thousand people, including some of the roughest element of the mining region, who assailed him with a view of throwing him into the Susquehanna river. Had it not been for the interposition of the police, who were present in strong force, Daley would doubtless hav been seriously injured, if not killed. He was finally escorted home by officers, followed by an infuriated crowd, who made violent efforts to lay hands upon him, but were beaten off by the police. Daley attempted to preach at the same place on the previous Sunday, but was prevented by a similar demonstration.

Odds and Ends.

THE boys always take the girls out; the girls take them in. Such is life.

A WOMAN refused to shoo her hens because her husband, a shoemaker, was on strike.

SPEAKING of Switzerland, its scenery is remarkably fine, but its climb-it is very rough.

WE do not see why people should be surprised at ladies' corsets being tight—they are always on a bust.

TENNYSON is extending honor and hospitality to Dr. Holmes. Tennyson may not be able to write poetry himself, but he appreciates a man who can.

ACCORDING to a neighbor, Mrs. Jones, wife of the evangelist, on the day she first displayed her new carriage, drove by one house thirteen times.

"PANTS for two dollars," is the inscription on a sign in front of one of the clothing stores. "So do I," remarked a hungry-looking tramp, who was rummaging through his pockets for a nickel.

THE Newtonville (Kan.) News notices that "the attendance at all the Sunday-schools last Sunday morning was about two hundred and fifty. The attendance at the scrap game of base-ball in the afternoon was about six hundred."

DEACON BUCRAG had been invited to address the Sunday-school, and as he was a poor talker, plunged at once into the story of Johah and the whale. "Now, dear children," he concluded, "is not that a nice story?" "Yessir," replied one of the smallest of the dear children, "it's a nice story, but it's a chestnut."

MISS FOLSOM should hav thought twice before marrying the president once. She is twenty-eight years younger than Cleveland, and perhaps it has never occurred to her that when she reaches the age of seventy-two, her husband will be one hundred, and indulging in the usual centenarian pastime of sawing a cord of wood before breakfast, or plowing a ten-acre field, in order to sharpen his appetite.

You may sing of your dog, your bottom dog,
  Or of any dog that you please;
I go for the dog, the nice old dog,
  That knowingly takes his ease.
And, wagging his tail outside the ring,
  Keeping always his bone in sight,
Cares not a pin in his sound old head
  For either dog in the fight,

Not his is the bone they are fighting for,
  And why should my dog sail in,
With nothing to gain but a certain chance
  To lose his own precious skin?
There may be a few, perhaps, who fail
  To see it quite in this light;
But when the fur flies I had rather be
  The outside dog in the fight.

I know there are dogs, injudicious dogs,
  That think it is quite the thing
To take the part of one of the dogs,
  And go yelping into the ring.
But I care not a pin what all may say
  In regard to the wrong or the right,
My money goes, as well as my song,
  For the dog that keeps out of the fight.

—Philadelphia Call.

THE magazines are killing the books, and Sunday newspapers are killing the magazines, and the ministers are trying to kill the Sunday newspapers. Now who will kill the ministers?—Puck. Who? Why, THE TRUTH SEEKER, of course.

IN case police patrol-wagons are introduced in New York, it has been asked what rank will they hav in the matter of precedence of street vehicles. This, of course, will depend chiefly on circumstances. When on duty, they are likely to hav the same rights as mail-wagons or fire-engins; when used to convey Police Commissioners to base-ball grounds, their rights will be the same as any other private vehicle.

"WHAT is that kerflumidoodle that you hav on your hat, Mary Ann?" said a father to his would-be fashionable daughter. "Oh, that is an imitation of a strawberry, father." "The divil take the styles," said the old man, "you'll be wearing imitation cabbages yet." "We hav nearly arrived at the cabbage point already," replied the miss. "And how near hav you got?" "We wear a little turn-up on the side, now."

Paine Vindicated!

—o—

A thorough and overwhelming reply to the New York Observer's slanderous attacks upon the Author-Hero of the American Revolution. Containing both the slanders and their refutation.

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

—o—

The New York Observer (Presbyterian) having recently reissued its assault upon the memory of Paine, this pamphlet should be circulated everywhere in vindication.

60pp. Price 10 cents; 12 copies, $1.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD

A Fabricated Account of a Scene at the Death-bed of Thomas Paine.

BY W. H. BURR.

This pamphlet shows that the account of Paine's dying moments attributed to Bishop Fenwick (upon which the Observer relies to prove its principal charges) is a forgery, it being impossible that Fenwick could hav written the alleged account.

18pp. Price 5 cents; 25 for $1.00.

For these two pamphlets address

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

Gems of Thought.

DESPISE the hypocrit, the liar, the defamer, and the man who attempts to do a deep wrong to a brother, in the name of purity, of higher morality, and of superior virtue. Worse than all other mean acts are those performed by hypocrits under the cloak of purity and virtue.—D. M. Bennett.

THE principle of the modern improvement in morals and politics, is that conduct, and conduct alone, entitles to respect; that not what men are, but what they do, constitutes their claim to deference; that, above all, merit, and not birth, is the only rightful claim to power and authority. If no authority, not in its nature temporary, were allowed to one human being over another, society would not be employed in building up propensities with one hand which it has to curb with the other. —J. S. Mill.

IN the days when criticism was yet in its infancy, and discussions undetected which are now familiar, the Bible was either received as a whole, or rejected as a whole, and Locke was of those who received it.—Dr. Hedge.

REASON, observation, and experience—the Holy Trinity of science—hav taught us that happiness is the only good; that the time to be happy is now, and the way to be happy is to make others so. This is enough for us. In this belief we are content to liv and die. If by any possibility the existence of a power superior to and independent of nature shall be demonstrated, there will then be time enough to kneel. Until then, let us stand erect.—Ingersoll.

IN the present age, when the rapid communication, and the universal diffusion of knowledge, by means of the press, render the situation of political societies essentially different from what it ever was formerly, and secure infallibly, against every accident, the progress of human reason, we may venture to predict that they are to be the most successful statesmen who, paying all due regard to past experience, search for the rules of their conduct chiefly in the peculiar circumstances of their own times, and in an enlightened anticipation of the future history of mankind—Dugald Stewart.

DEATH is the sphinx of the universe. No question can open its lips; no prayer can move it to speech. The thought of death is a cold thought. But we should not be afraid to think upon this subject. We should familiarize ourselvs with this circumstance, and bring our minds to a wise contemplation of it. There is about death somewhat that repels. It is a sad mystery, but it cannot be an evil since everything is subject to it. It often comes as a blessing, and is welcomed with a smile. Peace, that boon we often vainly crave in life, is found in death.—L. K. Washburn.

WHETHER the soul be air or fire I know not, nor am I unwilling, like so many who call themselvs philosophers, in cases when I am ignorant, to own that I am so.—Cicero.

A FRIEND of mine, recently (1873) returned from England, said that among intelligent, cultivated men whom he met there, he found that religion was utterly given up, "but," added he, "they are men who hold fast, with true loyalty, to moral principle." "Then," I said, "that is their religion." And that is the religion of multitudes who, either from want of an original constitution of sentiment, or disgusted by the false exhibitions of devout sentiment, turn away from the whole emotional side of religion, and place their feet firm on the rock of righteousness, right-doing, obeying the divine law, a sacred principle itself, consecration itself, therefore, a religion itself.—Sam. Longfellow.

EVEN on this continent the distant rumblings of an earthquake are audible to the attentiv ear, and the rich had better not set their hearts or ground their hopes of happiness too much on the security of riches. But in Europe there does seem to be reason for thinking that social revolution is at hand. This is an age, as was the sixteenth century, and even more than was the sixteenth century, of change in fundamental beliefs. It is an age of vastly increased knowledge, activity of mind, and combination among the working classes, or such of them as are congregated in cities. Poverty has begun to scrutinize with a keen eye the justice of its lot. Religion has lost much both of its restraining and of its reconciling power. The difference of conditions is no longer accepted as the ordinance of God; suffering no longer looks on the present state as a probation to be undergone in the sure hope of compensation in another world. The most famous men of science, and philosophers, teach that this life is all. If they are right, a man must hav his share of pleasure now or never, and to giv all men their share of pleasure now is the aim of the new social philosophy which finds favor in the factory.—Toronto Bystander.

IF any man love acorns since corn is invented, let him eat acorns; but it is very unreasonable he should forbid others the use of wheat.—An Oxford Tract of 1662.

IF a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself.—St. Paul.

THE CHURCH OF HUMANITY.

We cannot build it of the crumbling bones
  Quarried from the grim sepulchers of yore;
Nor of the hollow mythologic stones
  That shone so gaudily in classic lore.

We cannot fashion it of heads or creeds
  That parcel out our God before our face;
But rather build it of the thoughts and deeds
  That purify and elevate our race.

Set its foundations deep in every zone;
  Its ritual, on every shining page,
Is love to god and love to man alone,
  And pity for the errors of the age.

Let its proud dome fill all the azure steep,
  And its vast chancels stretch from pole to pole;
So that its mighty and majestic sweep
  Giv ample space to every human soul.

—James McCarroll.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 13. No. 26. } PUBLISHED WEEKLY. } New York, Saturday, June 26, 1886. { 33 CLINTON PLACE. } $3.00 per year.

OBEYING THE COMMANDMENTS OF CHRIST, AND THE RESULT.

Notes and Clippings.

THE sultan of Turkey wishes to giv Mrs. Cleveland a wedding present, but the president has telegraphed a reply that the gift could not be accepted without violating the Constitution.

A COMMISSION is inquiring into the life, character, and works of the late Bishop Neuman, of the Philadelphia diocese, with a view to canonizing that defunct gentleman. If the scheme works, this will be the first North American saint.

THE hopeful six-year old son of one of Waterbury's best-known lawyers walked into the district court room the other morning, and, presenting a black kitten with a string about its neck, said: "Papa, will you take care of my cat until school is out?"—Hartford Times.

T. MCCAUTS STEWART, the colored lawyer of this city, bought a ticket for Albany by a People's Line boat, securing a state-room at the same time. When he boarded the boat the captain refused to let him occupy a room. He has brought suit against the company, and retained prominent lawyers to aid him in recovering damages.

M. YVES GUYOT has introduced a bill in the French Chamber for the complete separation of church and state. He proposes to retain the best churches as "historic monuments," and the money voted to maintain them would come under the head of "fine arts." English liberationism, says the London Echo, is inspired by Nonconformity; French liberationism by Freethought.

THAT was rather a close question which Mr. Cable asked his Concord audience: "How many Protestant churches are there between Boston and Denver in which the colored man and his family can enjoy freedom of worship?" There are some, but they are not, as a rule, the richest and strongest ones.—Boston Herald.

A VIRGINIA CITY saloon-keeper, who was making arrangements for a slugging match in that city, knocked out one of the clergymen of the place in one round by calling on him and asking the loan of a lot of chairs from the chapel on which to seat the spectators at the fight. He offered the preacher a free ticket for the use of the chairs.

MATSADA SORAKICHI, the Japanese wrestler, has just broken up a match in Minnesota on Sunday, having learned that the laws of the state do not favor athletic exercises on that day. This law-abiding disposition is of course commendable, but somebody should hav informed Matsada that the laws of most states also frown upon conjugal cruelty, for which he was not long ago under arrest.

SAM JONES, the revivalist, seems to hav fallen a victim to cupidity. He is now high-priced as well as sensational and proposes to make the people he saves pay for their salvation:

"Salvation's free
For you and me"

has no longer a place in his repertoire. He is greedy for money, and apparently he is not overparticular as to the kind of show of which he is the attraction, He offers, for instance, to go to Omaha for $3,000, although it is confessed that his presence is desired for the purpose of giving the town a boom. It is said that he received $3,000 in Chicago, and that his regular price is $1,000 a week. This is very high—too high for the kind of stuff which Sam Jones pours out.—Star.

THE Rev. Rufus S. Green, D.D., of Buffalo, in a sermon on Sunday newspapers, is reported to hav said that actual experience had demonstrated the possibility of issuing a Monday morning newspaper by work performed wholly in secular hours, and in support of this he instanced the New York Tribune, the Philadelphia Ledger, the London Times, and London Telegraph. The Sun remarks that Brother Green seems to be all that his name implies."

THE Churchman comments severely on what it calls the "blasphemous parody of religion" that was recently exhibited in the Church of St. Eugene in Paris. "Two priests of that church," it says, "in the Lenten season, in presence of a large audience, played the parts of God and the devil, and carried on an animated dialog as to which paid best, good or evil. From all accounts, the 'devil's advocate' had by far the best of it, and so upheld the cause of his client that, supposing it possible, he went a long way toward extending the sway of the author of evil where his reign is already not far from being all-powerful."

A WRITER in the Indiana Baptist says, speaking of "faith" works: "There is no more extensivly advertised institution in England than Muller's Orphan Asylum. His circulars are found everywhere; the work of the institution and the needs of the institution are brought home to almost every family in England. And yet it is said he 'never solicits a penny.' Never solicits a penny! It is only a play on the meaning of a word. The deacons who pass up and down the aisles on Sunday never 'solicit.' They only stretch forth the pole with a bag on the end, but they come back well supplied with dimes. You who sit there know what they want, and so do the English people who see Mr. Muller's collection-bag in the form of a circular know what he wants. Merchants who hav goods to sell do not always 'solicit,' but they send out circulars and customers come in. And so, too, does Hudson Taylor, and so do all 'faith missions,' and so they will continue to do."

THE Baptist Weekly says: "In ecclesiastical circles there is not always the truthfulness that is desirable. How often there are utterances in prayer-meetings addressed both to God and man which are unmeant, and in many cases utterly false, who would dare to compute? Congregations are magnified in numbers, and pastors often get very exaggerated notions of the seating capacity of churches, and hav a strange disinclination to verify their statements by actual count. Even the reports published in religious journals are discounted. We were asked about a resignation of a pastor on account of ill-health the other day. 'Was that really the cause?' And the inquirer was surprised when we insisted that it was. In fact, so often some plausible pretext is given for pastoral changes that people become suspicious of every statement that is made. That was a rough way of explaining a resignation in one of our papers lately that the Rev. Mr. Blank had resigned because he was 'through,' but it was a good deal better than assigning some cause which, if it were truth, would not be the whole truth."

Communications.

The Coming Danger.

The numerous changes through which political and religious beliefs hav passed within the last half-century, and the numberless excesses to which men hav been driven by the most unreasonable impulses, will prepare those who carefully observe the tendency of human events to witness the advocacy of any theory, however absurd and impracticable, without surprise. The absurdity of many proposed measures of reform arises not simply from the endless complexity of social phenomena, but from the confusion of reason and feeling, of prejudice and purpose, and from a very superficial knowledge of those latent forces which determin both the character and the tendency of human life. Very often the more uncultured and immature consider that they alone hav discovered the true, practical solution of the numberless difficulties which incessantly beset the social existence of mankind. Where the wisest statesmanship has often staggered in its attempts to preserve order and harmony in the regulation of the civil affairs of men, the class to which reference is here made, conscious of an infallibility that has never been superseded, even by Rome itself, very complacently sneer at the issue and its results, and become more confirmed in the absolute necessity of their pet theory. With a blindness that is characteristic of combined ignorance and conceit, they consider that the efforts continually made to adjust social wrongs will always be a failure so long as their cherished theory is repudiated. If you ask what method could be safely adopted for the rectification of those wrongs which universally afflict mankind, you are seriously informed that it consists in the absolute, unconditional abrogation of all authoritativ interference with individual action. Nothing less than the absolute, unrestricted freedom of the individual will remedy those evils concerning which there is perpetual complaint. Contrariwise, those who see the principles and motivs on which men act; how under varying circumstances there is an unvarying principle; who see how strong are the conservativ attachments of men to mere institutions, and the consequent danger arising from a rash interference with them, are very reluctant to advocate measures which, however right they may be in the abstract, would cause only mischief and ruin.

Whatever advantages may accrue from freedom of thought and speech, where every theory, irrespectiv of its merit, may find an expression, nothing but the wildest fanaticism would seriously advocate the adoption of measures which originate either in disordered brains or in uncultivated minds. It is at least interesting to observe what vagaries hav been and are supported by a senseless religious or political clamor. Measures born of a diseased nervous system, or of a morbid imagination, or of more impulse than judgment; schemes for the religious conversion of the world, or for the rectification of social and civil wrongs—such things without end are being paraded before the world, each infatuated with the error that every man's right to think carries with it the equal utility of what he does think.

Nothing is more proverbial than that the true beliefs of men are not simply correct disclosures of their real selvs, but that they in turn influence the conduct. So while we may regard mere theories as being perfectly harmless, whenever they become changed into a fixed belief, and that belief relates directly to the constitution of society and its relation to the individual, or when it militates against those relations, we cannot be right in refusing to deal with the principles involved.

Undoubtedly the great danger which threatens the future of civilization will not come so much from foreign aggression of national rights as from internal dissensions. When in this country, Mr. Spencer remarked that its prospectiv danger consists in the tyranny of domestic institutions. As an individualist he could hardly recognize any other danger. But to those who hav had a more or less prolonged acquaintance with American life, and who believe in the mutual existence of liberty and law, of the individual and society, the chief danger consists in the lack of public moral support of those laws established by society for its own protection. An insidious, rebellious discontent with all authoritativ restraint of personal liberty is the danger which has threatened, and which continues to threaten, the moral and constitutional stability of the republic. We need not think that the greatest possible danger to the Union consisted in the late war; for while the whole country was distracted with the convulsions of a civil war, there was sufficient patriotism to defend the federal government. Although a civil war, it was a war with as rigidly defined geographical limits as a war between any two European nations would be. Many years ago, Lord Macaulay considered that the efficiency of democracy would be tested when every available piece of land would be owned and cultivated; when American cities would be large and numerous; and when the density of the population would prevent immigration from state to state. "As to America," he says, "we appeal to the twentieth century," when discontent will affect all classes of labor; when in the distinct classification of society, riches and poverty, with their resulting evils, will stand in a menacing attitude toward each other; when the struggle for existence will become more intense than at present; and when unprincipled politicians in both municipal and state governments will seek the support of ignorant or unprincipled voters. Then, not simply will republican institutions, but national identity, be most severely tested. To bespeak for this country an exemption from those evils which hav caused the degeneracy and extinction of the nations of antiquity is not warranted by the spirit of true philosophy.

There is no immediate danger of this or any other country being dissevered by Anarchy. And if it were in a state of Anarchy, whoever would disregard the injunctions of Anarchists would be considered worthy of death. The recent uprising of the Anarchists in Chicago fully testifies what would result from constitutional Anarchy. There are, doubtless, many who consider themselvs Anarchists who deprecate the use of violence; who discountenance such wretches as Parsons, Fielding, Spies, and Most; but once admit the equity of Anarchy and it is logically impossible to blame those traitors to the public welfare. The Chicago episode furnishes the strongest practical argument against Anarchy.

It is not probable that any community will ever be so infatuated with the mere idea of personal liberty that it will overlook the necessity of some authoritativ restraint of that liberty by which its just limits may be specified. But no one can doubt that to the extent that Anarchy is considered just, and all imposed restraint of personal freedom coming from the body politic unjust and tyrannical, to that extent is it an unmitigated evil. Under no possible condition of life is Anarchy just. And all violent revolts against civil authority are less just in this country than in the oppressed nations of continental Europe. There are means of redress here that in some of those nations do not exist.

There is no neutral position possible in relation to this question. Either civil government is necessary or it is not. Either it is right or wrong. The Anarchist claims that it is not necessary—that it is wrong, being an infringement of individual rights. It is worthy of note that "the apostle of Anarchy" was one who, whatever were his abilities, was a peculiar product of the most tyrannical government in Europe. The real, consistent Anarchists in this country are from the most despicable elements of society in Europe. And if such are the people (which I am loth to believe) who are the especial objects of imprisonment and exile in middle and eastern Europe, I cannot see any reason for censuring those governments. With a new kind of logic they assert that disbelief in a personal God ultimately results in the dissevering of those relations of society and individual, of employer and laborer, and of capital and labor, which hav been contemporaneous with civilization. It is only another manner of expressing the unscientific affirmation of the Christian moralist, who says that if there be no God there is neither right nor wrong. I cannot see what vital connection there is between the two. The fundamental basis of social and civil authority, as of individual rights, cannot be affected by either the presence or the absence of God. The both rights are inherent, constitutional.

The logical tendency of Anarchy is to destroy all ethical distinctions, and to reduce all morality to a mere figment. No denial of this can affect its truthfulness. A mere statement of its principles will support the charge without any discussion. It considers that all civil authority is tyranny; that all restriction of personal freedom is unjust; that in the contest for supremacy it belongs to the individual and not to society. It denies the right of society to punish crime, or in any way interfere with individual liberty. If Anarchists are better than their principles it is not due to their theory, but to that peculiar combination of influences which hav made society what it is. The attempt to abrogate the authority of society or of civil government, permitting each man to be a law unto himself, is to practically destroy all moral distinctions in conduct. It meets with a protest so deep and so universal that its rational spontaneity can be regarded, not as a mere fanaticism, but as an expression of the highest authority—the combined intelligence and honor of the enlightened world.

All proposed measures of reform are to be judged, not by their mere abstract equity, but by their inevitable consequences on human life and character. The Anarchist does not deny that evils do exist in social life, but he attributes those evils to the corruption and tyranny of government. Those who consider government a necessity in view of these evils, regard government as the best means to deal with them, and to prevent, as far as possible, their increase and recurrence. That those means are more or less ineffectiv is true, but it is occasioned by the nature of the evils to contend with, and by the proneness in men to do wrong. No one claims that it lies within the proper sphere of government to change vicious men into virtuous, but when a criminal act has been committed it then becomes the duty of society to deal with the criminal in a manner that will most effectivly deter others from being criminal. Those who are disposed to censure governments because crime is committed in spite of its injunctions, prohibitions, and penalties, must prove that crime exists as a consequence of such an institution. They should also lay down a plan by which all crime can be better dealt with than by the present one. A radically false estimate of human nature lies at the base of Anarchy. It assumes the general goodness of human nature if it were not for the meddling interference of civil authority. It certainly is a narrow and short-sighted philosophy which considers the mere authority of society as the principal cause of those evils which justify the existence of that authority. It requires no great political genius to ascertain the natural results on society if Anarchy were to be generally adopted. All aggressions on personal rights could not be resented by the force and authority of the social organism, and it seems extremely inconsistent if an Anarchist were to even defend his own rights. What would be considered moral in both public and private capacity by an Anarchist is very hard to ascertain. Waging a war against even the the basic principles of social existence, he must be driven to the necessity of repudiating those fundamental ideas of morality which constitute the very substance of the highest civilization.

The one solitary string on this radical harp is the "sovereignty of the individual;" and as any and all authority destroys that authority, it is wrong. This sovereignty must first exist as a fact before it is admissible as the premis of moral philosophy. Is the individual really sovereign, supreme, either in fact or by common consent? In the first place, whatever is produced by the coöperation of multitudinous causes, as every person is, can never rise superior in rank or authority to those causes. Those delicate ties which bind us all together, and which, by a universal aggregation, constitute what we call mankind, disprove the actual sovereignty of the individual. It has never been called in question by any representativ philosopher that those measures are right that aim to confer the greatest good on the greatest number. The sovereignty of the individual is utterly irreconcilable with the supremacy of society and with the authority of right. Since it is true that conduct produces consequences, and since we must judge conduct by its consequences, it follows that, ethically, neither of the individual nor of society may absolute sovereignty be predicated. The jurisdiction of the authority of the one and the liberty of the other must be limited by the general good. Authority without reason, that is, without justice, is tyranny; liberty without reason or justice is license. And the same reason which condemns the one prohibits the other.

The ostensible object of all government is the protection of individual and social rights. The rights of society are but the aggregation of the rights of individuals. But we hear so much concerning abstract individual rights that one would think that rights are mere abstractions. The philosophy of moral abstractions is a pure a priori method of speculation, and is radically wrong. All rights are concrete, and are defensible on practical grounds, and never by mere abstractions. It is the vicious principle of establishing abstractions as premises, and then reasoning from those abstractions, that vitiates our ideas of right and wrong.

The philosophy of Individualism is irreconcilable with the fact that society is an organism, as real and as compact as any physical body. As it is admitted on all hands that the preservation of the body is the prime object of its existence, and that no essential wrong is committed by destroying the dangerous members of that body, so it is equally true that whatever supremacy or sovereignty exists belongs, not to the individual, but to society. To ascertain the mutual rights of the individual and the state, one must first know what is their actual relationship. Absolute rights can be predicated only of an absolute being. Consequently it cannot be predicated of either the individual or of society. The individual is but an atom amid an aggregation of atoms, every atom of which aggregation possesses equal fundamental rights. As society is composed of numberless individuals, it has no right to disregard these rights and natural claims of the individual. As before stated, the one is license and the other is tyranny. Undoubtedly this is the basis of obligation and responsibility.

Morality underlies the great principle of government. It is the creation of a function which finds its primal element in the individual. Judged by the standard of perfect justice, it is wrong; but by the actual conditions and necessities of mankind it is right. Were there no crime, if there was no possibility that the property and commercial interests of individuals and of corporations would be endangered by unjust aggression, or from other causes, government would be synonymous with injustice. Every law is but the emphatic protest of human intelligence against wrong. It is the complement of crime. If a man is unwilling to act with a due regard for others' rights, if he persists in doing wrong, society has a right to restrict his liberties. We are told that laws cannot make bad men good, and consequently governments are unnecessary. Even if it were true, that would not impeach the authority of society to establish means for the prevention and punishment of crime. But the statement is not literally true. While it is true that crime does exist in spite of laws and penalties, it is also true that many are deterred from committing crime because of its consequences if the crime is discovered. Of course, this is not the highest motiv of conduct, but it is the only one that successfully deters many from the most violent acts. A would-be criminal is not actuated by the most benevolent motivs.

But if men are not changed from bad to good by law, neither can they be by the removal of other restraints. And the evils which occasioned the existence of law in the first place would exist when the authority of law and the law of authority were removed. We must take the world as we find it, and men as they are. Ordinary intelligence tells every man to deal with mankind, not as they should be in an ideal state, but as they are in actual life. Now the Anarchist is requested to answer the question, What would you do with crime in the absence of government? Only two positions are possible for him to choose from. Either crime must go unpunished, or it must be dealt with as the majority sees fit. The first would in itself be criminal, and the other would be governmental. It is impossible for any community to exist if it does not deal with criminal aggressions on its inherent rights. Even among savage tribes and thieves there is demanded a patriotic consideration of the welfare of the tribe or gang. Anarchy in either case would be suicidal to its interests as a body. Prolonged experience would, at last, necessitate the formulated expression of justice against injustice, of right against wrong. Government would by common acclamation be considered necessary—a necessary evil.

Another view of this political combination—for government is a combination for certain purposes—is that necessary improvements cannot be successfully accomplished by mere individual effort. Besides, if those improvements were optional with the individual, in many cases they never would be made. In cities there is the need for street repairs; for sewerage facilities; for water works; for fire departments; for police supervision and protection. There are general needs for education, for the preservation of order and the suppression of disorder. How is such a complex system, with so many wants, to be supported? There is but one answer, and that is by taxation. Of course, Anarchists denounce taxation as robbery. But it is certainly a perverted conception of things that makes such a monstrous comparison. If rights and possessions were absolute, all taxation would be wrong. But as they are not, society has the right to impose taxation for the support of those institutions that are necessary to good government.

The objection to the principle of taxation is based on the misconception of regarding the authority of society as being conditional by circumstances similar to the authority of secret organizations over their members. But such an analogy is not applicable to the question. The objects of secret societies are not, in all cases, identical with the purposes of civil government. They are not, and cannot be, as comprehensiv as society itself. They are composed of select individuals for select purposes. They are not necessary to the well-being of society. The admission to them, as well as disclaiming their authority by disclaiming responsibility to them, is optional with the individual. But our relation to society is altogether different. Without our consent we are born, and grow to be responsible members of society. The fact of our existence creates our responsibility to society. We can no more escape from it than we can from existence itself.

If one felt disposed to criticise the assertions of Anarchists about "individual rights," he would undoubtedly cause them much confusion. The difficulty seems to come from their confounding "right" with liberty, with opportunity. To assert that a man may do as he pleases, and that he has a right to do so, is to destroy all distinctions of right and wrong. Where is the logical accuracy of speaking of personal rights in such loose terms? It may be farther than many would be willing to go when we assert no right can exist that is not justified by moral considerations. I do not mean to say that it is the duty of society to limit by law every person's right by those considerations, but that every claim made in reference to personal rights, in order to be valid, must be in accordance with reason. No man can be blamed for doing that which he has has a right to do, whether the act refers to himself or to others. Vice is no more excusable than crime. And the same principle which condemns the one condemns the other.

To what extent governmental authority should be carried cannot be discussed in this article. That must be determined by circumstances. No fixed rule, except the general good, can be successfully applied. Circumstances alone can justify measures and laws. The change of circumstances will necessitate changes of law. And here lies the peculiar principle of right and wrong as applied to the true reformer and to legislation. The reformer judges laws from an abstract moral view. Legislation punishes the radical reformer because of his rash interference with existing institutions. To suppose that either party is absolutely right or wrong is prepostерous. Both are right, and both are wrong. Justifiable reasons could be given by each party for the course pursued.

The assertion that governments afford no protection, and laws no justice, is untrue; and if true would not be sufficient to warrant the universal abrogation of civil authority. If government were an entity outside of scciety, a power foreign to mankind, then the objection would hav some force. But, without exception, the laws of a people and the efficiency of their administration cannot be much better or much worse than the people themselvs. This principle holds good in an absolute monarchy no less than in a democracy. In order to prove the necessity of government we do not hav to prove the absolute efficiency of its laws. But if it deals with crime in a manner that is justified by the moral status of society, there is not much reason for complaint. If it attempts the reconciliation of difficulties arising from the commerce of individuals and states, it is right. To judge all ranks and conditions of men by a fixed rule is absolute nonsense.

Those who enter a plea in behalf of government are not under the necessity of definitly stating the exact limits of its jurisdiction. The question will be settled best by experience. The difficulty of marking a line where liberty and authority must meet arises from two sources: First, the incessant changeability of society—a diversity of age and condition which defies the rigid application of fixed rules to all alike. The next is the fact that the imperceptible differences and distinctions which exist between the two extremes of conduct—conduct which affects ourselvs alone and society at large—make it hardly possible to minutely draw the line which makes an act recognizable by civil authority, and the other that is beyond its recognition. No consistent advocate of civil authority is logically compelled to defend an absolute authority, because he of all others discerns the end for which authority exists. He sees that liberty is safe only where there is authority and law, and that laws can be just only where there is an unpolluted love of liberty and justice. To dispense with either liberty or law would be disastrous to society.

The assertion frequently made, not by Anarchists alone, that government is based on force and fraud, is absurdly false. The growth of tribes and families into nations is simply one of the numberless forms of social evolution. And to assert that the great structure of society and government is but the legitimate offspring of force and fraud is the most foolish idea of its origin and nature.

No expression in this article can be adduced to support the authority of mere force. Its whole tendency is a plea for the continuation of the only possible method by which individual rights may be protected against the mutual aggressions of common life. Civilization will undoubtedly cause the repeal of many offensiv measures. Laws that are just will be established. Partisan and partial laws will be duly censured and finally repealed. But the more complex our mode of living becomes, the more intricate our industrial and commercial interests, the denser population becomes, and the greater the demands on individual conduct for the preservation of national order and public good, the greater will be the necessity for a definit embodiment of rules and regulations for individual life. The visionary ideas of abstract right may be the warp and woof of poetry, and believers in millennial days may revel in dreams of absolute peace and love among mankind. But the future statesman will find that life is not ideal; that realities are not dreams; that what seems right in poetry is wrong in politics; and that the universal propensity among men to be actuated by motivs of self-interest will necessitate the continuance of a power and authority which giv protection to the oppressed and justice to all.

Ft. Scott. J. L. ANDREW.

Babyism of Liberalism.

Samuel P. Putnam, secretary of the American Secular Union (and its paid traveling lecturer), in THE TRUTH SEEKER (Nov. 21, 1885) says: "The authority of science, as a dictum to take the place of one's free reason, is as much to be revolted against as the authority of faith. The individual must be supreme, and there must be no authority."

According to this sort of "dictum," neither truth nor law nor science has any significance or meaning, and therefore has no existence or reality, and so there is no such thing as the truth or a truth, or laws, and therefore, of course, no science. And so it has not been proved, nor can it be, that it is true that the earth revolves around the sun, nor that there is a law of gravitation, nor that there is a science of astronomy at all; nor that the three angles of a triangle are equal to two right angles, nor that two and two are four. And "the authority of science" as to the motions of the earth "is as much to be revolted against" "as the authority of faith" when it declares (through the mouth of the colored brother) that "the sun do move." (And it goes without saying which of the two brethren is the less inconsistent.) In the absence of "the authority of science" we would all hold with the colored preacher. Without it we would not know that the earth moves or that there is a law of gravitation.

But what in the world can Mr. Putnam mean, anyway, by "the authority of science, as a dictum to take the place of one's free reason?" Science and reason are not each other's antitheses; they cannot be contemplated as standing over against each other; they are rather one, or parts of each other. Reason is a factor, and the highest factor, of and in science. And, then, "free reason"—free reason! what can that mean?

And Mr. Putnam says, "This is the American idea, the absolute supremacy of the individual." Then, poor America! Supremacy of the individual to what? To what? to reason, to truth, to law, to science? In what a chaotic condition must be the mind that would attempt to set off the individual over and against these—to place them in contrast at all! Or would he say, supremacy to all other individuals combined? Surely not. Or to the whole universe? More surely not. What "on earth," or in heaven, or "what in hell," can he mean?

Liberalism, liberty to talk of these "this time o' day," is baby talk. Liberty! why, of course, who questions it? Who disputes it? As well talk of the necessity of sunlight to vegetation. But to act without regard to facts, to natural laws, to truths, to science, in short, without regard to our environments, is not only absurd but actually impossible—to any considerable extent. And, in fact, it would be attempting to act contrary to the way in which it is our nature to act, which is both absurd and impossible.

Liberty in a sense (and this is one of the senses in which Mr. Putnam evidently uses it) is, or rather should be, anarchy; and a kind of anarchy of which even the Anarchists themselvs hav never even dreamed. No; what the hour demands is not a screech for liberty, but a cry for truth! And thus let us all be followers of the noble example of the founder of this journal, and be "truth seekers."

VOX SCIENCIÆ.

John Calvin and Michael Servetus.

Of all these contests, however, the most memorable is that with Servetus. A melancholy interest encircles the name of this great heretic, which the criminal tragedy of his death keeps always fresh and vivid in the minds of all those who hate intolerance, and who love truth rather than dogmatism. The character of Servetus himself has little to do with this interest. He seems to hav been more of a vain, restless, and enthusiastic dreamer than a calm and patient inquirer. In his very dreams, however, and the vague audacities of his speculations, there is a kind of simplicity and unconscious earnestness that wins sympathy.

He had entered into various connections with Calvin, even from the time of his early residence in Paris; particularly he had sent him various documents containing the views fully developed in his work subsequently published under the title of Restitutio Christianismi. Calvin never concealed his abhorrence of these views, and in a letter to Farel as early as 1546, he threatens that if Servetus should come to Geneva he would do what he could to bring him to condign punishment: "Nam si venerit; modo valeat mea authoritas, vivum exire nunquam patiar." The history of his seizure and condemnation at Vienne by the Catholic authorities, and especially of Calvin's share in the correspondence which led to his seizure, is very complicated and obscure.

It has been maintained that Calvin was the instigator, through a creature of his own, of the name of Trie, of the whole transaction. It is certain that he forwarded to the authorities, through Trie, private documents which Servetus had entrusted to him, with a view to the heretic's identification, and as materials for his condemnation. Servetus was condemned to be burned, but effected his escape, and, after several months' wandering, he was found at Geneva.

It was his intention to proceed to Italy, where he hoped his opinions might meet with some degree of toleration, and he arrived at Geneva on his way. This is the explanation of an event otherwise unaccountable. Having ventured to church, according to the common account, he was recognized, apprehended, and conveyed to prison by Calvin's order, just as he was about to leave the city. The particulars of his trial are full of interest, but too lengthened to be detailed here. It lasted, with various interruptions, for two months. He attacked Calvin with the most foul epithets, and Calvin retorted with a virulence and foulness quite equal to his own. At length, on the 26th of October, 1553, sentence was passed upon Servetus, condemning him to death by fire. Calvin used his influence to hav the mode of death alleviated, but without success. On the very next morning the sentence was put into execution. On an extended eminence at some distance from the city, Servetus was fastened to a stake surrounded by heaps of oak wood and leaves, with his condemned book and the MS. he had sent to Calvin attached to his girdle; and, amid his agonizing cries, the fire was kindled, and the wretched man expiated his heresy amidst the flames. Whatever apologies may be urged for this memorable crime, it must remain a mournful and scandalous blot on the history of the Reformation.

The disgrace of it has particularly attached to Calvin, and with some justice, from the special and unhappy relation which he bore to the whole transaction; but most of the Reformers are no less implicated in it. The wise Bullinger defended it, and even the gentle Melancthon could only see cause for gratitude in the hideous tragedy.—Chambers's Encyclopedia.

Chicago Secular News.

THE TRUTH SEEKER of the 19th is before me, in which I gave the impression that we should possibly continue our meetings through the summer, but the torrid heat and small attendance of last Sunday night proved too much for our endurance, and it was the generally-expressed desire that we discontinue the meetings till September.

Last Sunday Mr. W. F. Fury delivered one of his trenchant, scholarly, and humorous lectures on the "Fallacies of Christianity." The criticism included some brilliant polemics by General Trumbull, Professor Orchardson, Mrs. Freeman, L. H. Sawyer, and others. Prof. E. R. Paige has kindly volunteered to giv the opening lecture in September. It is the intention of the members who reside near enough to make it practical, to hav picnics in the parks on Sundays, and thus increase the social features so essential to the welfare of the Union.

I am happy to say that though Mrs. Le Page is still very feeble, she is now considered out of danger. In this connection let me remark that, so far are informed, not a solitary member of the Liberal League or the Secular Union has yet "shuffled off this mortal coil." Mr. Frankel's father died, and, though not a member, his funeral exercises were conducted by the League. Many old members hav left the city, and therefore we can't say whether all hav survived or not.

Mr. J. W. Howe, our treasurer, was one of the victims who walked the political plank, despite the civil service rules, from our post-office department. He informs me that every appointee of the new superintendent Donovan has thus far happened to be an Irishman and a Catholic. The Roman church is not aggressiv, oh, no!

I called on Samuel Fielden the other day at county bastile. He does not seem disheartened nor suffering so much from his wounded leg. I had been informed that his wounds had been neglected, and that the physicians would not attend to him nor allow others. To get at the truth of the matter I called, determined that if they would not permit him proper attention there would be a little newspaper war inaugurated.

Captain Black appears to feel confident of their acquittal. He has already associated with him Mr. W. H. Foster, late of Iowa, who has had a remarkably successful career as a criminal lawyer. It is the unanimous desire of his friends that Gen. M. M. Trumbull be retained to look after Mr. Fielden's case. General Trumbull will not hesitate on the question of fees; with him that will cut no figure. The Anarchist cases will come up for trial next Monday.

Mr. Powderly is just now prolific in "secret" circulars, which, however, are always published in full. The literal interpretation of the last one would be: "Put none but Powderly men on guard." Mr. Powderly is much afraid of politicians now, but methinks I remember him as secretary of a great political convention. There never was a time in the history of that order when politicians are so little likely to do it harm as now.

CURRENT TOPICS.

Another startling circumstance has occurred to substantiate my criticism of Alexander Sullivan's assertion in reference to the law and order propensities of the Irish people, and also a vindication. My claim, on the same evening, is that Ireland has suffered more from the thraldom of church—either Catholic or Protestant—than by British misrule, bad as it is. Ireland is preëminently a Christian country, and consequently notoriously ignorant and brutal, as is seen in the bitter war waged by the two contending Christian sects who hold dominion there. As an illustration of how those lovers of God can successfully raise hell on earth, I refer you to the scenes of murder, arson, and plunder committed by the rioting Orangemen in Belfast last week. All this was done to maintain the glory and supremacy of the Protestant religion. What beautiful moral precepts are those which inspire its adherents to such brutality! This time the Protestants are the aggressors, but we would not hav to search far to find similiar cruelties on the part of the Catholics. This is the kind of religion we are continually asked what we are going to substitute for. Just as we don't need a substitute for a plague, we don't need a substitute for such religion.

The thirty-sixth annual convention of the National Grand Lodge of the American Protestant Association convened in Cincinnati last week. This is the American branch of Orangemen who would like to enact the scenes in Belfast here if they were only strong enough. The chances are, the Catholics will be the first aggressors in this country to attempt to down their religious opponents, long before the Orangemen hav made a foothold.

That truckling sheet, the News, strongly urges Sunday closing of theaters on the plea, as it coolly expresses it, "that there was a large class of people who say they found no other time to attend theaters except Sunday night, but all such may be answered as Carlyle once replied to a man who excused himself for stealing by saying he must liv, that he could not see the necessity for such a thing." That is, if you can't go except on Sunday, there is no particular necessity of your going at all. It claims their opening on Sunday is an insult to the religious element who occasionally used to patronize theaters, but do not since they hav had Sunday amusements, but covertly adds, while the patronage of this class is not large, their moral support is something very much to be desired. We anticipate the managers will soon be paying off the profession by drafts on their moral supporters. We hav as much right to object to the churches being open Sunday as an insult to disbelievers, as they hav to object to the theaters.

"John the Baptist" was found dead in Davenport the other day with a bottle of whisky in his pocket.

An article in Nature says: "M. Joly found in the cave of Nabrigas, in France, the fragment of a large vessel in contact with the skull of a large fossil bear. M. Mariel is strongly persuaded that fossil man of the paleolithic age was acquainted with the potter's art."

Henry Watterson is in Europe, and, writing of prominent men, tells this story: "Labouchere, witty and blasphemous, said at a dinner table, 'It is absurd—positivly absurd—to sit down to a game with Gladstone. He always has three aces up his sleeve, and the worst of it is he actually believes the Holy Ghost put them there.'"

The General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church held recently at Hamilton, O., adopted the following resolution in relation to the Knights of Labor:

Resolved, That we enjoin upon all our members to abstain from connection with any association which might lead to acts of violence, or to the invasion of the right of property, or interfere with the liberty of men to engage in honest labor when, and where, and for whomsoever they may choose.

To further illustrate that the church is always on the side of oppression, Geo. A. Schilling stated in the Trade's Assembly here last Sunday that it seemed impossible to organize the sewing girls—the most wretchedly paid of any industry—as they were mostly pious Swedish girls who dare not organize a union for fear of their pastor, who had threatened them with expulsion did they dare to do so. Still Mr. Schilling says he has "got through fighting God."

During a terrific thunderstorm in Washington an eight-year old boy called his mother up stairs. She sat with him awhile, and told him not to fear. God took care of little boys, and wouldn't let the lightning hurt him.

"But God is away up in heaven," said the child.

"Yes," replied the mother, "but he is here, too. He is staying right in the room with you. He can protect you; I cannot. A long as God is here, you need not be afraid."

The child was quieted, and the mother left him, and went back to the drawing-room. Pretty soon there came another deafening clap of thunder, when the boy, crawling out of bed, came to the head of the stairs and called again!

"What do you want, George?" asked his mother.

"You come up here and stay with God awhile, and let me go down stairs," was the reply.

Chicago, June 1, 1886. E. A. STEVENS.

Reynolds in Wayne Co., New York.

Through the exertions of Dr. A. G. Austin, engagements were made for me to deliver a course of five lectures at Williamson, June 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th. Quite a furor of excitement has resulted from the lectures, and the Baptist minister, named Boyce, has challenged me to a discussion. His proposition is "That the Teachings of the New Testament are Superior and more Conduciv to Human Happiness than the Teachings of Secularism." He insists on three nights' debate, half hour speeches, two hours each night. There will be immense attendance from far and near. The discussion is appointed for the 21st, 22d, and 23d inst.

Monday and Tuesday, 14th and 15th inst., I lectured at Putneyville, and was the guest of those brave and loyal young Liberals, Mr. and Mrs. Byron Gazley, whose influence tends to upbuild the cause, and insured me large and appreciativ audiences.

To-night, Wednesday, 16th, I lecture under the direction of Dr. Austin, of Williamson, at Sodus. He has engaged the Opera House, and assumed all expenses. It is intimated that the Methodist minister at Sodus will meet us on that occasion, and comply with 1 Peter iii, 15. We are not sanguin of his doing so, for while ministers exhaust their whole vocabulary of vituperation and Billingsgate on us because we do not believe and obey the requirements of the New Testament, yet they themselvs ignore its plainest teachings. On Thursday, June 17th, at the request of Dr. Austin, we pitch the Tent at Marion, and there is every indication of a more than warm reception. I really think the temperature of sheol would be chilling in comparison. The rage and fierce indignation is wonderful. They hav never had a Liberal lecturer there, but Dr. Austin has forced them to know something of the aims and objects of Secularism, and that, at least, it will not be apt to build up the churches; consequently all five church are a unit in bitter opposition, and they hav been for some days drilling and marshalling their forces. But one man in the whole village dared brave their power and rent a lot on which to pitch the Tent. It would be impossible to rent hall or room at any price, or to induce the people, under ordinary circumstances, to attend a Liberal lecture, or read a Liberal publication. But the Tent provides us with hall, and the novelty and excitement insure a very large attendance.

I much deplore the alarming apathy of Liberals throughout the state of New York, but instead of giving up all endeavor, this most lamentable state of things proves the need of more determined effort. Something must be done to awake them to renewed activity and zeal.

I expected to hav done much Tent work in the state this season, but lack of financial ability will prevent. At those places I shall visit in the state, in order to avoid debt I shall be obliged to dispense with the services of Tent-master. I realize this will entail on me a very heavy burden alike of labor and anxiety. But so long as strength and any degree of health remain to me, the Tent will be kept in the field. Better wear out than rust out. We hav the evidence of last year's Tent work that it is the most efficacious and economical means to popularize Secularism, and our gratitude to those who so generously provided us with the Tent demands we should keep it in the field.

I much rejoice at the publication by the Canadian Secular Union of the Liberal Leaflets. They will prove of immense service in preparing the way for the living exponent of our principles. Furnished at the remarkably low rate of five hundred for $1, they are within the reach of all, and should be scattered like autumn leaves. Those engaging Tent should write W. M. Scott, agent of Canadian Secular Union, Science Hall, Adelaide street, East, Toronto, Ont., secure a supply of the leaflets, and carefully distribute them in their neighborhood. It will insure large attendance and hearty coöperation, making Tent effort more easy and sure success. Applications for Tent or contributions should be sent to me in care of THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

NEW YORK FREETHINKERS' ASSOCIATION CONVENTION.

The aims and objects of the annual Convention of the New York Freethinkers' Association are to popularize Secularism, call together large numbers of intelligent and influential people, and by lectures and the circulation of Liberal literature awake a spirit of investigation, and disabuse the minds of the people of prejudice born of misrepresentation and calumny; by the interest of the lectures and importance of the meeting secure full reports in the press; at the same time affording all who attend opportunities for sociability, interchange of views, comparing modes of work, and establishing friendships that shall create more genuin interest in the progress of our cause in all parts of our state and vicinity.

Our conventions of the past hav done much good, spite of mistakes that hav been made. Mistakes are excusable if never repeated. An extra effort and special inducements are needed. Let us hold a tendays' camp-meeting and picnic. Held under proper regulations, and conducted as it should be, it can be a source of great encouragement to all, of help to the cause, and a means to replenish the exhausted exchequer. Such a meeting, held in suitable grove or park, in vicinity to some city like Buffalo, would giv us an attendance each Sunday of from three to ten thousand people. A silver collection at the gate would relieve us of all anxiety as to finances. And what a source of joy, help, and encouragement it would be to all who could attend!

We need to lay aside the monotonous, dull routine of daily care and toil, and take our family to the sylvan grove decided on, pitch our tent, throw care to the winds, and hav a full week's jolly holiday, and while being rested and refreshed alike in mind and body by recreation and change of scene, enjoy social visits, form friendships, interchange views, and compare modes of work to advance our cause.

We do not want too many speeches. Let us hav one, and only one, good lecture each afternoon and evening. Let the mornings be devoted to enjoyment, rest, and recreation—except Sundays, when morning lecture would be necessary for the masses who would attend.

Would not such a meeting do a world of good? Returning to our homes invigorated and improved in mind and body, we should be better qualified to discharge all duties devolving on us, and take hold of propaganda work with undaunted hope and new courage.

As Secularists we boast of seeking our happiness by promoting that of others. Let us giv a real holiday, rest, change of scene, to our loved ones. Let us endeavor to combine pleasure to ourselvs while conferring benefit on our friends and neighbors.

Some "little hopers" are afraid. It may rain! May not prove a success! Pshaw! Let all do all the little they can, and it will be the grandest success Liberals ever achieved.

Others think they cannot spare time. Suppose you so decide, and next day sprain your ankle, and are laid up, unable to attend to business or do a day's work for twenty weeks.

You may not liv to enjoy such an opportunity another year. Get all the joy you can of life as it passes. Do all the good you can each day, and don't lay up a store of bitter regrets for lost opportunities to tantalize you in decrepit old age or when the fiat of death is in execution.

Let us enjoy a holiday; and help the cause.

Sit right down and write to THE TRUTH SEEKER that you hav decided in favor of camp-meeting and picnic extending over two Sundays, and that you and all your family will be there. C. B. REYNOLDS.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, Prcsident.

Vice-Presidents:

CHARLES WATTS, JOHN E. REMSBURG, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, MATTIE P. KREKEL, JAMES PARTON, HORACE SEAVER, WILLIAM ALGIE, ROBERT C. ADAMS, TITUS L. BROWN, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York.

COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com.

E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged	$2,410.66
Hailey (per C. V. Haupt, Charles Ahlstrom, W. C. Tatro, and others)	25.00
Bellevue (per James S. Whiton, James Carothers, Dan Mead, J. L. Hogan, L. H. McIrwin, Ben Davis, and others)	29.10
Silas Ralls	3.50
Ketchum (per P. B. Baxter, Asa L. Abbott, and others)	3.50
Bingham (per Frank Silsby, $8.50; and C. H. Asman, $7.60)	16.11
N. S. Fowler	1.00
J. P. Martin	1.00
Total	$2,489.87

News and Notes.

On Friday morning, June 4th, I left Salt Lake City for Idaho. Again I passed up the broad, beautiful Cache Valley, by the gleaming temple at Logan, and into the shining hills and plains of Idaho. At sunset I arrived at Pocatello. Here I changed cars for Shoshone. The moon was just rising as I sped over the American Falls—and they presented a lovely picture of foaming and leaping cataracts. These falls are not near so vast and lofty as the Shoshone Falls—which surpass Niagara in hight—but in contrast with the quiet lakes of Utah I enjoyed the fresh glory of these tumbling waters that made such musical thunder along with the whistle of the engin. At midnight I arrived at Shoshone. I found all the beds occupied, and was obliged to take my night's rest in the parlor. I slept well, however, for my bones were weary. In the morning I was the happy recipient of a good hand-shake from my old friend A. S. Senter, who used to be with me on the Nebraska plains a dozen years ago. He is now one of the thriving business kings of this part of the country—coming here when all the land was covered with sage-brush and not a house was to be seen. There was, however, an encampment of two thousand men, in tents consisting mostly of wagon-covers, within whose motley metropolis could be witnessed all the varieties of frontier life. These men were building the railroad, which has since wonderfully developed the country. Shoshone is now a pretty and thriving village with some really elegant residences, and, like all Western towns, it looks forward to a magnificent future.

I used to go hunting with my friend Senter over the bluffs of the North Platte. I am a good hunter. I can hunt all day long and not hit a bit of game, but for all that I enjoy the fun of dashing over the enormous wastes and catching glimpses now and then of the jack-rabbits and deer, and perhaps a buffalo rolling off in a cloud of dust, and the luxury of coming home tired and hungry, so that a cabin seems a palace, and bacon and eggs a royal feast. There is nothing like these Western lands for downright pleasure of existence. Every care seems to be blown to the winds, and one is happy as the reckless sunshine itself.

I was pleased also to meet Mrs. Senter, another friend of happy Nebraska days, and when I saw the bright children I could but wonder at the miracle of life, with its ever-new revealings of grace and hope.

On Saturday morning I took the train for Hailey, going up the Wood River valley a couple of thousand feet into the heart of the mountains. The valley was pleasant indeed, and in spite of sage-brush and lava rocks gave signs of wealth and promis, and there were gleams here and there of fruitful farms. This is the best grazing country in the world, for there are summer and winter ranges of vast extent. In the winter the herds float southward of Shoshone, and in the summer they leave the dry regions for the mountain pastures. Over the fringe of hills, fifty miles away, is the Kamas prairie, smooth as a table, well watered with plenty of rains, and a noble soil, and almost as large as some of the states. Toward this is trending the mighty tide of immigration.

The most important station between Shoshone and Bellevue is Tikura. The station-house, express office, the telegraph and telephone, and the post-office and all the rest of the village are included in two rooms six by nine. On some railroad maps this station occupies almost as prominent a position as Chicago. That is the accidental way of doing things. I shouldn't wonder if Tikura already had a mayor and aldermen and a "ring."

Hailey is prettily situated among the emerald hills that tower around it like a hundred pyramids, as smooth as marble, and glistening in the splendor of the sunlight, and especially beautiful do they look when the golden streams of sunset flow over them with magical softness, so that they appear almost like mountains of gold in the entrancing radiance. Here and there a few spangles of trees can be seen, seeming like tiny bushes on the massiv pinnacles.

Hailey is a "big boy for its size" indeed. It is only five years old, but it has a palatial hotel, fine business block and residences, an imposing court-house, almost as many stages as Broadway, and plenty of go-ahead. It is the county seat of Alturas county, and this county is as large as the states of Vermont, New Hampshire, and Rhode Island put together. They hav a big country out here, and cut their counties according to their cloth, and go in for immensity. Hailey expects to hav one of the biggest Fourth of July celebrations on record, and I suppose that Gotham must pale its ineffectual fires before this Western star.

I lectured on Saturday and Sunday evenings at Hailey Theater to good audiences. There are many Liberals in this place, and I am in hopes that a Secular Union will be established. I was pleased to meet with Charles Haupt, Herman Krause, Professor Delius, Charles Ahlstrom, Messrs. Richards, of the News-Miner, and Mr. Clay, of the Idaho Register, and others, all good Liberals. The majority of the people in Hailey are really Freethinkers, but many don't care to say so publicly, so potent is the tyranny of the churches.

On Monday and Tuesday evenings I lectured at Bellevue, another flourishing city, about five miles from Hailey, in the midst of a mining country that has more wealth than will perhaps be ever discovered. Even the boys take up claims and get rich. Within the radius of twenty miles or so are from five to ten thousand workingmen. From thirty to fifty thousand dollars are distributed every month, and this keeps things pretty lively.

Bellevue is quaintly built up with log-houses, neat and comfortable, with one or two rooms, and it looked as if people enjoyed themselvs in their tiny dwelling-places. They seem to hav all the room they want.

I had full houses at Bellevue, although there was nothing but rude benches without backs for seats. I liked my reception well. I was especially delighted to meet Silas Ralls, a subscriber of THE TRUTH SEEKER, who generously made all the arrangements for the lectures, and to his efforts much of the success of the meetings is owing. He has all the pluck of Western folk, has seen many ups and downs, yet has not lost one whit of courage or devotion to Freethought. I also enjoyed the acquaintance of James S. Whiton, a veteran Liberal, and formerly mayor of Bellevue; J. L. Hogan, L. H. McIrwin, James Carothers, Charles Carothers, Dan Mead, Ben Davis, Charles Beerman, George Wells, and others. There is material for a flourishing Union at Bellevue when the times are ripe.

On Wednesday evening I returned to Hailey, and at the request of many citizens delivered my lecture on "The Glory of Infidelity." The theater was well filled with very attentiv listeners, among them a minister or two. I tried to get a reply to my lecture, but all was still, so I guess the clergymen hav some faith in the power of Infidelity.

Thursday evening I went still further into the mountains, twelve miles, to Ketchum, at the end of the railroad. I seemed to be passing through a vast corridor. I went up the winding road amid the glistening hills that shot up in every variety of form, shapen into curious statuary by the thousand billowy hands of the sea that once swept these verdant expanses. Amid the broad spaces of green were glorious ranks of blue, yellow, and crimson flowers, and one might say that from pit to dome of this natural theater all was a brilliant array, as if the fashionable attire of Dame Nature was put on in honor of the opening season.

I had a sort of extemporaneous meeting at Ketchum, as it was not known beforehand that I would come. It was held in an unoccupied store, and seats and lights were put in for the occasion. Having no other way to advertise, a small boy was put in requisition. As no other bell could be procured, he was armed with a string of sleigh-bells with which he attracted attention, and announced from street to street that there would be a "free lecture" at "Coffin's store." Mr. Baxter, the amiable and generous landlord of Baxter's Hotel, set the ball in motion. In about half an hour the hall was filled to overflowing. It is necessary, as the saying is in this country, to "rustle" in order to accomplish anything, and one must resort to all sorts of inventions to make the elastic Westerner know that his presence is desired. I gave my lecture, "Universal Mental Liberty." It was a cold blanket to some of my listeners, and, like the Arab, they "silently stole away," but with a few new thoughts, I hope. The most remained, and evidently enjoyed the novelty. It does indeed repay one for much weariness of the flesh and sinking of the heart to hav the thanks of those who hav lived in this country for years, and not heard a Freethought lecture which expresses what they themselvs hav long believed, almost in utter isolation.

I enjoy much the hospitality of my Liberal friend, P. P. Baxter, of Baxter's Hotel. He is a typical frontiersman. He came to this country in its infancy with his own team, and he says his horses were so lean when he got here that he had to tie knots in their tails to keep their collars on. For eighteen months he kept hotel in a tent. Ketchum now, however, is very handsomely built up, and has a future of much promis as the wealth of the country is developed.

Near by, in a pretty wooded defile, are the Hot Springs. I took a walk there this morning, and the scenery is indeed delightful. Against the sky is the Sawtooth Range, glittering with snow and rolling clouds, and between are grassy hills and mounds and huge rocks, and alongside the path is the brawling creek. One might almost imagin he was at the founts of Helicon, for these springs burst forth from a dozen places in the midst of trees which run clear to the summit of the hills. At any rate, that poetic fancy haunted me as I roamed along the embowered banks, and dashed into the warm and sparking tides.

Next week I expect to lecture at Broadford and Shoshone, and then I am off for Montana. I expect to lecture at Salt Lake City on my return trip, July 25th. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Ketchum, June 11, 1886.

The Chicago Riot.

Fearing that, under present excitement and prejudice against Socialists, Spies, Fielding, etc., will hav but a poor show to prove themselvs not to be responsible for the bomb throwing, a committee has been formed to raise a Fair Trial Fund in order that the indicted men may hav some chance to defray the expenses of calling witnesses and making a fair defense. On the side of the prosecution are the wealth of the "best citizens," the influence of the press, and the power of the whole police force. On the other hand the Socialists stand almost without friends or money. Seeing this, the Fair Trial Committee, none of whom are connected or hav any sympathy with the aim and methods of the I. W. P. A., feel justified in appealing to the sense of fair play of Liberals, and to ask them to send some pecuniary assistance to the defense fund. Money will be received by the attorney for defense, Wm. P. Black, room 50, 115 Dearborn street, Chicago. A. H. SIMPSON.

Spiritual Photography.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I desire to let the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know that Mr. Parkhurst's letter to Mr. Keeler of June 3d, which appeared in the issue of the 19th inst., did not reach its intended destination until the 16th inst., having been improperly directed. To this fact may be attributed much of the delay. A meeting has been held, the results of which Mr. Parkhurst will report next week. Yours truly, R. M. ROBINSON.

June 20, 1886.

To Support Mr. Reynolds's Tent Effort.

Mrs. Zadia Bennett	5.00
I. McCoy	1.00
J. S. Martin	1.00
J. C. McDonald	.50
R. W. Moline	1.25
N. S. Johnson	1.00
Hiram Wixson	.60
Laroy W. Cushing	2.75
Total	$13.10

Some of the above were received last fall, after the close of the Tent work, and were then handed to Mr. Reynolds. The others hav been received during the past two weeks. While Mr. Reynolds is moving around, contributions sent to this office will be surer to reach him.

Communications.

A Bill of Indictment Against Religions Per Se.

BY JACOB HENDERSON.

V.

INSTEAD OF A HELP, RELIGION IS A HINDRANCE TO THE FORMATION OF A GOOD CHARACTER.

Let me remind the reader once more that this thing called religion is not a natural instinct in man. It was superinduced; and all superinduced habits and notions are more difficult to break up than those which are entirely natural. It was grafted upon his character, as a scion is grafted on a stock, when the race was just beginning its human existence, and has been cherished as an exotic for countless ages, and all over the world, by the priesthood of every faith, who hav juggled with it to their own advantage of honor, wealth, and power. It is not at all necessary to the formation of a good moral character. On the contrary, it is a blemish, since it plays upon, and develops, the most ignoble of all our passions—fear; the fear of God, the fear of the devil, the fear of death, and the fear of hell. A child properly educated would never evince this spirit of a convicted felon suing for mercy, which religion injects into the character; but would, when grown up, proudly stand forth without fear and without reproach. But expose the same person, during the susceptible period of childhood, to the insidious influence of the church, and the old inherited weakness would show itself; just as a predisposition to stealing, or drinking intoxicating liquors, which one might hav inherited from some of his innumerable ancestors, would, by associating with theives, and being exposed to the smell and taste of liquor in a bar-room, develop the latent propensity, and make him a thief or a drunkard.

IS THIS CENSURE OF RELIGION TOO SEVERE?

It may be said that my condemnation of the religious sentiment is too sweeping. I am referred to the fact that among all the various sects of religionists there are, and hav been, those who were just in their dealings, benevolent in their dispositions, considerate to the rights of others, and free from all cruelty, hypocrisy, or cant; that in hundreds of instances they hav built and endowed hospitals of all kinds for the unfortunate, and founded institutions for the spread of knowledge. I cheerfully admit the facts. But these excellent traits of character ought not to be attributed to their religion. Such people are naturally good. They are good in defiance of their religion, and would be better still if entirely destitute of it. If religion is entitled to the credit of producing all this benevolence and amiableness of character, how came it to pass that the very same principle prompted the Catholic to burn the Protestant, and the Protestant to burn the Catholic, not for any crimes they had committed against society respectivly, but merely for their opinions? Can the same fountain send forth bitter waters and sweet at the same time? No. Free from the perverting influence of religion, all men are naturally kind and good. They understand the laws of natural morality, and would do to others as they would be done by, unless they were overruled by some other authority. Stephen Girard had not one spark of religion in his character. Yet, in the natural benevolence of his heart, he gave millions to found an educational institution for youth which should diffuse its blessings through all future generations, without any admixture of religious teaching. No testator ever guarded a trust more carefully than he did his. But it is the religion of the authorities of Philadelphia which, in defiance of the most solemn guarantees and pledges, has exhibited its uniform character for unscrupulousness, by perverting those sacred funds, and unblushingly making his great charity an auxiliary to the popular superstition.

To-day it would be impossible for the Catholics to burn another Bruno at Rome; or the Presbyterians another Servetus at Geneva; or an Episcopal bishop to slit the nose, brand the cheek, and cut off the ears of another Leighton, or Pyrnne, in London. Why? Only because the nineteenth-century knowledge has so far undermined the faith of Christendom that the laws of civilized nations forbid such a cruel exhibition of the religious sentiment. But if the clergy and their people all believed their own creeds now as sincerely as they did three hundred years ago, they could at least bring themselvs up to the sticking point of believing that such things ought to be done. Why does every patriot tremble at the idea of the Catholics outnumbering all the other voters of this country? Because, while there are thousands of Catholics who are amiable and good citizens, the irreligion, unalterable in its character, if awakened from the slumber of circumstances by the priesthood, would do again what it has always done before, and what it is its nature to do—persecute to the death all heretics, introduce here the reign of ignorance and crime which hav always prevailed in every Catholic country, and make the government a faithful servant to the pope of Rome. Giv any other sect the same power, and its religion would carry out its behests in like manner, and both because they believe that it would be well-pleasing in the sight of God. The reason why Buddhism, although classed among the so-called "religions" of the world, has never persecuted, is because it is not a religion, but a system of philosophy. It has no creed of dogmas to believe; no angry personal God to placate by servil acts of sacrifice and devotion; no future hell-fire for cowards to escape from; but it teaches that at death the dreamless sleep of Nirvana awaits the whole human family.

In regard to that large class of church people who are amiable and indisposed to persecute, the fact may be accounted for in two ways. On close inspection it might be found that such persons, while they may consider themselvs as religious, and others regard them so too, yet, by the visitations of knowledge, they hav, perhaps imperceptibly to themselvs, given up the word "credo," and sneer, privately it may be, at the idea of a person being punished in eternal hell fire for opinions which he is forced by proof to accept as true. Such are unconsciously, but nevertheless really, Infidels. For the doctrin of eternal punishment is the basis of the whole scheme of salvation, and of the church as the means thereto, and a conviction, or even a strong suspicion, of its falseness shakes the doubter's faith in all the rest of the doctrins that are built upon it as a foundation. There are many such doubters in the church in this age of reason who are mere prisoners to their circumstances, and the church complains of their indifference, their lack of zeal in her service, and their general absence from "the stated means of grace," but little suspect the cause. These persons do not avow their doubts or their convictions to the world, for, although the church cannot now burn heretics by law, her tyranny is as cruel and relentless as ever, and such persons feel that they would be discriminated against and damaged politically, socially, and in business. Hence their indifferentism.

Then, again, there are others whose environments may be such that the tiger instinct in their character is not roused, and may never show itself through life for want of provocation. History givs many examples of persons, as in the case of Nero, Robespierre, and others who were apparently meek and amiable in temper, and inoffensiv as lambs in their youth, but who, when invested with power, and their religion provoked, became as ravenous and bloodthirsty as wolves. In the character of the "good Aurelius" there was a whole constellation of virtues, and but one known defect. His religion, which was pagan, in perfect keeping with its universal character as a blind and unscrupulous force, made him a persecutor of the Christians.

THE SUMMING UP AND CONCLUSION.

In reviewing the counts in the Bill of Indictment I hav drawn up against religion per se, I find that, for want of space, I hav not adduced the hundredth part of the evidence at my command. In showing up its natural workings in the human heart and life, and its uniform character as a moral force, I hav called into our court of inquiry, as sworn witnesses, the pagan, the Jew, the Moslem, the Catholic Christian, the Episcopalian Christian, the Presbyterian Christian, the Puritan Christian, and the "orthodox" or Greek Christian. Beginning with the dawn of history, and coming down chronologically to our own times, I could hav given hundreds of cases instead of a few selected here and there, all going to substantiate the charge I make, that, if we may trust to the inductiv mode of reasoning, which bases its conclusions on facts; if we may judge of a tree from the fruit it bears, then the religious sentiment in man is the worst and most dangerous feature in his character. In our day that condition of excitement known as "revivals of religion" is considered by the credulous church people as giving to those engaged in them a foretaste of the holiness as well as the happiness of heaven. Yet everyone who has studied the phenomenon of religion, not only in the light of history, but from actual observation, knows that the most intense piety and zeal exhibited on such occasions are entirely consistent with the most abominable and shameless lives of the persons engaged in them. The gullible class, who compose so large a part of the public, think that a tearful professor of religion, constant in his private devotions, always at church and Sunday-school, and a stickler for the observance of the Sabbath, is entirely too good and heavenly-minded to rob a savings bank of trust funds belonging to helpless widows and orphans, to speculate in stocks with other people's money, and to perpetrate other crimes as bad. But the proof is overwhelming, and constantly appearing, that murder and all its cognate offenses hav been known to flourish for years among the most zealous and, apparently, the most holy evangelists who were converting "sinners," and adding them to the church by the hundreds.

Religion in man is the sleeping tiger whose appetite for blood is ever latent. It is the very mother of cruelty, taking delight in originating all the various forms of agony whereby it has put its victims to death during the long centuries of its power. It has either caused, or occasioned, nearly all the wars that hav desolated the earth, and hung mill-stones of debt round necks of nations. It is the terrible demoniac which early took possession of our unhappy race, and has kept possession ever since, because Science, the only exorcist that could cast it out, was herself under cow to its power. History shows that it has been more relentless in its havoc upon human happiness under the auspices of the Christian theology than under those of all the other theologies of the world combined. It has destroyed the beautiful system of natural morality by setting different and arbitrary standards of right and wrong, thus filling the world with intellectual confusion on a subject where all mankind should be, and would hav been, agreed. It is the only fiend in the universe which is wicked enough to burn a man to death by slow fire for merely holding an opinion.

Although the iron pen of history has written down as indubitably true that, all over the world and in every age, this instinct has transformed mankind into incarnate devils, we hav a school of dilettante idealists who are wasting their time in attempting to giv a conception of what might be a good-natured kind of religion, without any creed, or positiv characteristics, belonging entirely to the neuter gender, and the like of which has never yet been seen on the face of the earth. But if they succeeded in their incubation, it would be a mere production of the fancy, unreal, intangible, incomprehensible, and of no more practical account in life than Herbert Spencer's nebulous notion of an unknowable God

Therefore, in calmly contemplating the past and present history of the religious instinct, I am forced to take the ground that its complete extirpation from the human character, the destruction of its priestly vocation by a universal demand for real knowledge, and the conversion of its churches into Halls of Science and Art, would be the greatest blessing that could be conferred on our suffering world; and I shall die in the confident expectation that when Science, the daughter of Light, shall execute her holy mission, Religion, that child of darkness, having no cloak of ignorance to hide itself under, will perish from the carth.

Darwinism.

His soul was like a star and dwelt apart.

At all times foremost and resplendent in the gleam of his genius, leading the forces of humanity's approved redeemers, will be seen the great law-giver, Darwin.

In the panorama of the modern campaign against the hitherto victorious legions of superstition, armies to whose ranks, through all the centuries, recruits hav been enlisted having the skill of drilled veterans, the author of "The Descent of Man" must stand the observed of all observers.

Beginning his career on an old wooden ship of the navy of a people inhabiting a mere geographical speck on the surface of our globe, he pondered plans and marshaled facts preparing for after action by which he not only took the big world captiv but the illimitable realms of space as well; and his name now stands as the synonym for autocrat in the domain of science.

In the limits of natural history his chief achievements are to be found. His "Origin of Species" was the oriflamme first raised in his own war against the great foe of the years—a banner on which was inscribed a word which has since become the battle-cry of the age, Evolution; a word of lofty significance, soaring infinitly above the distinction between one science and another.

The great doctrin of natural selection has in a quarter of a century passed all points of opposition save that of Rome. It has not yet passed the Rubicon. But there are now among us eyes that will see even that ancient historical barrier passed by Darwinism.

> Why should we place beyond the pale of hope
> An emptied Vatican, a tramping pope?

The truth inherent in the principles of Darwin has quietly brushed aside the opposition of the Church of England, and, greater conquest still, the objections of the sectaries.

Who could hav anticipated the enormous change in educated opinion which a single quarter of a century has disclosed? Still less likely would it hav seemed that the whole nation should uncap with so much of unanimity to a theory so completely at variance with all accepted teaching as to with one accord consent that his remains should find sepulture in the mausoleum set apart for the cherished teachers of the nation.

No doubt but continued research will yet accomplish the task of securing all needed testimony to solve the great Darwinian problem, drawing from the jumbled litter of the past, biological as well as geological, well ascertained data, giving a panorama majestic and satisfactory of the cosmos, blotting out and forever the pueril tableau of the Mosaic record.

Says the astronomer royal of Ireland, in a lecture, "Darwin has worked out one of the most splendid details in the history of the universe."

I propose to sketch the position which the Darwinian theory occupies with reference to a celebrated branch of astronomical speculation.

The sun is hot and the sun is pouring forth heat. Now heat, we know, is capable of measurement; quantities of heat can be measured as accurately as tons of coal. The daily outflow of heat from the sun is as measurable a quantity as the daily outflow of gas from the gas-works. The total amount of heat which the sun pours forth cannot, it is true, be very accurately estimated by our present knowledge. All that we are here concerned to know is that it is of the most stupendous magnitude. Even the daily consumption of the sun's heat by the earth is enormous, but that is only a minute fraction, less, indeed, than the two-thousand-millionth part of the total torrent which pours from the sun.

It is a momentous question to inquire what replenishes the heat of the sun, or whether the sun's heat is ever replenished at all. If the sun be not replenished, then its heat must gradually wane. Various sources of replenishment hav been suggested. Everyone is acquainted with the pleasing phenomenon of shooting stars which dash into our air with a train of light and sparks. Every shooting star is thus a source of heat. The shooting stars fall on the earth's atmosphere by thousands and by millions. It is believed that they fall into the sun in vastly greater numbers. They must rain on the sun with a profusion corresponding to his vast surface, and with a velocity corresponding to his intense power of attraction. Each shooting star develops vastly more heat at its plunge into the sun than it would hav done had it fallen upon the earth. The heat derived from all the shooting stars which fall upon the earth is utterly insignificant, but it may be that the heat from the torrent of shooting stars which rain in upon the sun is not insignificant.

If the sun were merely like a vast, incandescent mass of stone or of metal, it would cool at the rate of 5 or 10 degrees a year. A few thousand years would reduce it to such a degree that it would no longer be the source of light and heat which it certainly has been for thousands of years. It may be well here to state generally that the sun is really parting with its heat. It would not, perhaps, be true to say that the sun is actually failing in temperature. If the sun be actually gaseous, it may strangely enough be getting hotter instead of colder, so long as it remains gaseous; but, however we look at the question, there is one statement which admits of no doubtful interpretation: As the heat is radiated away, so the particles which form the sun's mass are drawn more and more closely together (and so by friction producing heat?). The total mass of the sun—its weight as placed in a scale—cannot decrease, but the bulk which the sun occupies must decrease, and is at this moment decreasing, and, so far as we know, will continue to decrease until the sun is one hard mass of matter benumbed with the cold of space.

At the present moment the sun has a diameter of 860,000 miles. Each year this diameter decreases by about 220 feet. This decrease is always taking place; the process is never reversed; it is not periodic, like so many phenomena of nature; in time the result must become of overwhelming importance. The sun's career as a source of light and heat is ultimately doomed to extinction. It has been calculated that the sun cannot radiate enough heat to maintain life on the earth for a period of 10,000,000 years more.

One hundred years ago the diameter of the sun was four miles greater than it is at present. One thousand years ago the diameter of the sun was forty miles greater than it is at present. Ten thousand years ago the diameter of the sun was four hundred miles greater than it is now. The advent of man upon the earth took place, no doubt, a long time ago, but in the history of the earth the advent of man is a comparativly recent phenomenon. Yet it seems certain that when man first trod our planet, the diameter of the sun must hav been many hundreds, perhaps many thousands, of miles greater than it is at present. We must not, however, overestimate the significance of this statement. The world on which the primitiv man trod was certainly illuminated by a larger sun than that which now shines upon us.

But we must not stop in our retrospect at the epoch of primeval man. We must go back earlier and earlier through the long ages of the geologists, and back again still farther to the earliest epochs when life first began to dawn on the earth. Still we find no reason that the law of the sun's decreasing heat is not still maintained, and thus, so far as our present knowledge goes, we are bound to suppose that the sun must hav been larger and larger the further our retrospect extends. It is not contended that the rate at which the sun changes its diameter was the same as the four miles per century, which is an approximation to its present ratio. It is sufficient for our purpose that the sun is larger and larger the farther we peer back into the remote abyss of the past. There was a time when the sun must hav been twice as large as it is at present; it must once hav been three times as large; it must once hav been ten times as large. How long ago that was no one can venture to say. It would be rash to attempt any estimate; but we cannot stop at the stage when the sun was even ten times as large as it is at present; the arguments we hav used will still apply with equal if not greater force. And, looking back earlier still, there was a time when the sun must hav been so swollen that the mighty orbit of Neptune would be merely a girdle around the stupendous globe. At that time the sun must hav been a mass of almost inconceivable tenuity. We are not to suppose that the earth and the other planets were solid bodies deeply buried in the vast bulk of the sun. It seems evident that the planets were gaseous masses in those ancient days, and undistinguishable from the sun which gave them existence.

We are now able to make an attempt to trace the history of the solar system, and to indicate the share which Darwin had in the solution of the noble problem.

And if in the further efforts at discussion of the great theme we may be made to see a pronounced misnomer in calling the sun he—the gorgeous luminary proving itself to be of the other gender by giving birth by parturition to the entire solar planetary family—why, we must just accept the fact, adapting speech to the correction or not, just as we see fit. As for me and my house, the sun shall be spoken of hereafter as feminin, and be regarded as one of the celestial harem of the Godhead. M.

Le Roy, N. Y.

The Horse Claims a Soul.

And now the horse, the ego in his nature cropping out as in man's, claims to possess a soul immortal, and declines to be "left."

A white horse. A magnificent animal truly; his carriage superb, his hight grand, and his form perfection; with a wealth of mane and tail that must hav been the envy of his congeners in the paddock of the millionaire horse fancier where he proudly stood with head erect and neck arching.

This proudest of white horses and whitest of proud horses stood motionless, save that now and then he would slightly toss or shake his magnificent head, as if to emphasize a conclusion arrived at, giving a looker-on the idea that he was debating with himself some question of importance; and his lips would twitch and open at times, like those of a man talking to himself. At length, with a mighty stamp of his near fore foot, he broke forth in speech—horse-talk, of course, interpreted by the writer:

"I am a horse; only a horse, as the two-legged animal with whom my lot is cast would say with more or less contempt, in his egotism and self-conceit. Yes, that is so; only a horse; but what is he? Only a man; a two-legged animal like an ape, from whom he evoluted. But this highly conceited product of nature claims to possess a soul which is immortal; which will liv on and liv ever after his body has become dust of the earth. This seems to be a ridiculous and, at the same time, an astounding belief. I don't understand at all what a soul is—I wonder if he really does? But I believe that, if the two-legged man-animal has a soul, I hav likewise a soul. Why not?

"Yes, it must be so. If the man-animal has a soul that will liv forever, so then hav I. Why not, indeed? Am I not, as a production of nature, his peer in beauty of form? (The writer begs to say that he was the handsomest animal he [the writer] ever saw, no animal man excepted.) Am I not more than his peer—his superior—in physical power and swiftness of motion? And morally am I not his superior? To these queries the man-animal must answer Yes, if not loud, then deep; but say it he must.

"But the egotistical man-animal prides himself on being the animal par eminence and par excellence of creation. He argues that he is the only animal gifted with reason, and therefore the superior of all. The animal man is a fool to argue thus. Why, I can reason for myself as well as he for himself. That I was not a man, and he was not a horse, is owing to the chapter of accident only. I fill my place, he fills his—that is to say, now and then he does. The way I should put it is, I do fill my place, he should but not always does.

"It was my lot to be an animal for his service and gratification. It was his lot to be an animal to serve and gratify others of his race. We both hav duties to perform. Which of us performs his duty best I will leave to him, even, to answer. He can giv but one answer, the other will stick in his throat and strangle him. Yet he claims for himself alone, of all the other animals, an immortal soul! If he has one, I hav one. I am convinced of that.

"It is true, I now and then bite and balk, kick the dashboard in and run away with the carriage, and show other vicious qualities. But where I kill one of his race, he kills thousands. Where I injure one, he injures thousands, and this, too, with his much-vaunted superior intelligence and with a soul immortal, which he denies to me! This superior animal man lies, cheats, robs, kills, and commits every known crime, and by repenting, as he calls it, is saved. I do none of these things, maliciously, as he does, and I am to be lost, am I? Neigh! neigh! neigh! I respond for myself, the egotistical animal man to the contrary notwithstanding.

"Yes, I am to be saved, if man is. If there is a heaven hereafter for him he will find that I will be there with him; that there is a heaven for 'me too.' Why, one of the egotistical animals, whose name is Talmage, and who prates and prances in a spacious stable—I believe they call it a tabernacle—admits that I will be there, telling his hearers that they will all, meaning a countless host of earth-exported angels, ride through the avenues of heaven on white horses—white horses, mind that—and that they, the angels, will all be dressed in white gowns. Where this animal preacher got the tip from is more than I know; but being of the race of superior intelligence, I judge it must be a straight tip, as they say on the track.

"While this is cheering for my race, assuring us, as it does, of a comfortable paddock for eternity in the domain of heaven, I can't help thinking that a countless troop of white horses, their riders all in white gowns, will go to make a most monotonous procession, and one which the heavenly spectators would tire of before seeing a mile of it. I am a white horse myself, and white horses, well provided for and taken care of, are pleasant to look upon. I know that I am admired by the animal man with whom my lot is cast, and by all his family and friends—but in a big cavalcade of white horses solely, there is too much of a muchness, as it were. I hope the preaching man-animal is mistaken in this. I hope to see some bays and blacks and browns, some grays and sorrels and piebalds, even, sprinkled liberally in among the whites, to relieve the otherwise monotonous appearance of the procession. But if white they are to be, why, I am as white as any of the whitest, and as grand; and who knows but that I shall lead the heavenly cavalcade, bearing the chief trumpeter of heaven—who knows?

"I wonder if the white horses only are to be entered for heaven—how lucky am I, if that is so—or whether those of other colors are to be born again in white, as the man-animal has got to be, as is said. Well, it doesn't matter, as I am safe anyhow; and perhaps in heaven monotony, as understood on earth, will not tire the eye as here, but prove a pleasurable sensation.

"But this is a side issue, as it were. It is enough that I am satisfied that I hav a soul! Yes, Mr. Animal, called man, I hav a soul, immortality, and a heaven in store for me, as hav you; so seek not to exalt your proud soul above mine, for mine has the best show, as being the less sinful; that is, in a thousand souls of my race and a thousand of yours, many more of mine will be taken!

"For further particulars, inquire of the preaching animal of your race, Talmage, who seems to hav a more intimate knowledge in regard to heaven and the performances to come off there than any other of your preaching animals. But whatever else you do, settle down to the square conclusion that, if you go to heaven, I am not going to be left!"

This is a free interpretation, reader, of what the proud white horse said in my hearing in the paddock; and I firmly believe that if the animal of the genus homo goes to a heaven the animal of the genus equus will likewise go there! Why not, eh? SI SLOKUM.

POLYCARP.—Polycarp is believed to hav suffered martyrdom about A.D. 167, at the age of eighty-six. This would hav put his birth about A.D. 81. Ireneus, who must hav been born before A.D. 140, claimed in his early youth to hav seen Polycarp, who, he says, was appointed bishop of Smyrna by the apostles. What apostles? Nobody claims that any but John was living when Polycarp was born. Well, then, just think of John in the last year of his life, A.D. 99, ordaining Polycarp, aged eighteen.

PAPIAS.—Papias, bishop of Hieropolis, in Phrygia, is said to hav suffered martyrdom about A.D. 164–7. He wrote five books, entitled, "Exposition of the Lord's Oracles," from which Eusebius could extract but little worthy of transmission. . . . Most critics admit that Papias could not hav known the Apostle John. Indeed, how could he, when John's death is fixed at least sixty-five years before that of Papias?

Ireneus says that Papias heard John say that Jesus said that:

> The days will come in which vines will grow, each having 10,000 branches, and in each branch 10,000 twigs, and in each twig 10,000 shoots, and in each one of the shoots 10,000 clusters, and in every one of the clusters 10,000 grapes, and every grape when pressed will giv 25 metretes of wine (Agt. Heresies, v, 33).

Now, taking Smith's Bible Dictionary as authority for the value of a metrete, to wit, 8 2–3 gallons, it follows that the product of one millennial grape-vine will make a quantity of wine equal in bulk to the planet Mercury; and allowing to the thousand million of earth's inhabitants enough to keep them constantly intoxicated, say two gallons of wine a day to each one, it would keep them all dead drunk for the space of thirty thousand million years.—Antichrist.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - - JUNE 26, 1886.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

Priest-Ridden Canada.

Just now there seems to be a revolt in Toronto which, if continued, may awaken some of the Canadian people to the fact that they are living under a Roman Catholic despotism. A writer in the Toronto Mail makes serious charges against that church, which are without doubt true, and which should stimulate the Secularists to renewed exertions, or they may be compelled to emigrate before many years.

The local government is entirely in the hands of Archbishop Lynch, who appoints to office, through the legal officers, Roman Catholics who are incapable of fulfilling their duties, and are further obnoxious to the citizens because of moral obliquity. Mr. Lynch has largely obtained control of the public institutions of Ontario province, the better to carry on the work of conversion. Toronto has a public school system, and the Catholics maintain, besides, separate or parochial schools. For the support of the public schools, of course, all citizens are taxed. Mr. Lynch has obtained the passage by the local assembly of the government of an act compelling all Catholics to pay taxes to the separate schools. He has, in addition, induced the school authorities to adopt for school reading a version of the Bible specially prepared by himself. The so-called charitable institutions supported by the state are likewise under Mr. Lynch's almost direct supervision. Of thirty-two hospitals, asylums, and refuges, twenty-four are managed entirely by Roman Catholics, and two of the remaining eight are chiefly conducted by Roman Catholic sisterhoods. Of the money distributed to sectarian institutions the Catholics manage to secure about sixty per cent, although they comprise only about sixteen per cent of the population. As the money is distributed on the per capita basis, it follows that with sixteen per cent of the population, Catholicism furnishes sixty per cent of the wretchedness cared for outside of the strictly public institutions, or else the money is dishonestly applied elsewhere. The prisons, too, are fast falling into Roman Catholic hands. Mr. Lynch is in complete possession of one or two of the smaller ones, and is fighting for the control of the Central Prison, at Toronto, which is the chief place for incarcerating malefactors for the whole province. The archbishop endeavored to hav his own choice of warden for that institution, but failing secured the appointment of a "bookkeeper" who is not permitted to touch the books, and whose only duties are to "make it warm" for the warden to the end that he may resign, or be removed, and a creature of the church be appointed in his stead. In legislating, no measure passes without the archbishop's approval, and it is charged that many bills are passed for his especial benefit. The Toronto Mail says that he is virtually a member without portfolio of the present administration, and considers it a duty to get all he can in return for his political influence. In other words, the archbishop trades off his Catholic voters for cash and laws. The exchange seems to be very favorable for his church, and no doubt the chief at Rome is well pleased.

The eastern Canadian province has long been a Catholic possession, as complete as though the church held all the land in fee simple, and if appearances are not deceptiv, the western province will soon be in the archbishop's pocket. The people then will hav only one cheering fact to sustain them, which is that Canada is contiguous to the United States, and in summer the walking is good.

Distinctions and Differences.

Among the correspondence from our friends published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 12th was a letter from Mr. John A. Broadbeck, who confessed that it was only by the exercise of the sternest self-control that he could refrain from castigating the editor of this paper for his condemnation of the acts of the Milwaukee and Chicago rioters. Two weeks before, we printed a note from Mr. C. L. James, of Eau Claire, Wis., also warning us to flee from the wrath to come. In this issue will be found a communication from a friend who has not restrained himself. But Mr. A. S. Bleyer's indignation is excited, not because we rebuked the acts of any rioters, but because we failed to applaud the conviction of Mr. John Most, alleged Anarchist. While Mr. Broadbeck seems to consider murderous acts defensible, Mr. Bleyer would punish foolish speeches with imprisonment.

Everybody has the right to think just as he pleases about every and any thing on earth, or anywhere else, but that is not saying that his thought will necessarily be the right thought; and it does seem to us that both Mr. Broadbeck and Mr. Bleyer are thinking wrongly. There was no defense of manhood in throwing that bomb in Chicago nor in attempting to destroy that manufactory at Milwaukee. Neither was there anything deserving of imprisonment in any of John Most's harangs. Because the police wrongfully, illegally, and outrageously abused their offices, the thrower of the dynamite bomb is not absolved from responsibility for the murders he committed. Because the militia at Milwaukee shot innocent persons, the real rioters who started to raze a factory are not exempt from the liability all invaders of other people's rights must incur. On the other hand, the character of John Most has nothing to do with his conviction for using "incendiary" language. He was not tried for what he did in Austria, but for what he may hav done in New York. Our Constitution guarantees freedom of speech, but it does not and should not guarantee freedom of action when that action attacks the rights of others.

The Chicago and Milwaukee people committed overt acts, deeds of violence, which we think merit condemnation. Mr. John Most has neither committed a crime himself nor induced anyone else to commit a crime. There hav been no overt acts nor deeds of violence by New York Anarchists brought within the purview of the law. Therefore, when Most and his confreres were convicted we protested, and see no reason to change our opinion. We hold that under American government law can take no cognizance of any speech which does not induce some one to actually commit a crime. The tendency of a speech must be judged by its results. When Judge Benedict defined obscenity as anything having a tendency to corrupt, Mr. Bennett's lawyers took exceptions. We take exceptions to a court trying an orator for the tendency of his remarks. When Anarchists commit crimes, or induce others to do so, then punish them as anyone else would be punished for the same acts, but, under all other circumstances, let their talk go free as the idle wind.

The End Does Not Justify the Means.

The New York Sun is making vigorous war upon the decolleté pictures exhibited in the windows of cigar-stores in this city. The pictures are advertised as the portraits of the girls engaged in manufacturing cigarets, but are really pictures of women hired for the purpose, and are a slander upon the thousands of virtuous and modest young women who earn a living in the cigaret factories.

While the Sun is right enough in advising that these shameless photographs be withdrawn from public gaze, it commits a gross error and shows much ignorance of the true spirit of American government by calling upon the Society for the Suppression of Vice to prosecute the cigar-store proprietors who hang the photographs in their windows. Whereabouts in the New York constitution is anything said about a theological society performing the duties of the public prosecutor? When Randolph B. Martine took the oath of office, he swore to uphold the laws of the state, and prosecute the persons breaking them. Calling upon Anthony Comstock is an insinuation that our district-attorney is either incapable or unfaithful.

Another thing the Sun overlooks. Why protest against these uncoverings on paper, and say nothing about the habit which swell society ladies hav of wearing decolleté dresses at every reception and ball of the season? If a painted portrait is demoralizing to the virtue of the people, how much more vicious must be these exhibitions of life! Perhaps, however, Mr. Dana is solicitous only for the virtue of the common people, knowing that those who constitute "society" are sufficiently blasé to look without winking at what would make the hair stand on end upon the heads of ordinary everyday folks.

But in any crusade upon vice and evil-doing, the Sun should stand upon constitutional ground. Theological societies hav no business meddling with our laws or their enforcement.

Book Fetichism.

A New Jersey woman, in a recent case before the Court of Chancery of that state, when sworn, laid her hand upon the Bible, but refused to conclude the idle ceremony by kissing it. Her testimony was allowed by the master of the court, but the opposing attorney subsequently moved to strike out her testimony. The court has just rendered the opinion that her manner of taking the oath was perfectly legal. Vice-Chancellor Bird handed down the opinion as follows:

"Almighty God, or the Ever Living God, or the life, is called upon by the witness to witness that he will speak the truth. The rest is form. The solemn invocation, affirmation, or declaration is the substance. All else is shadow. The witness in this case was sworn with her hand upon the book. There can be no doubt but that if she made a false statement wilfully she is liable to indictment for perjury. But it is said that this may be true and yet the conscience of the witness not be bound, which is the object of the oath. There is great force in this. How did the witness herself regard it? She is presumably a witness, for nothing to the contrary appears. She accepted the form of the oath as usually administered, without objections, except kissing the Bible. By this act on her part the court is justified in presuming, without further inquiry, that the witness intended that her conscience should be bound. Speaking from the forum of her conscience, she declared that it was not essential to kiss the book in order to impose upon herself all the obligations of an oath."

What kind of a jurist must a judge be who imagins that a witness is less liable to swear falsely because his hand rests upon a book? The experience of every court is that it is the fear of the pains and penalties of perjury, and not the ceremony of book-lifting and kissing, that constrains dishonest men to tell what truth there may be in them. An honest man needs no oath. The Bible-kissing of our courts is as childishly superstitious and barbaric as the Chinese practice of cutting off a chicken's head.

Several Things of Interest.

UNION, Mo., June 12, 1886.

TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY: I see in your last paper that Mr. H. C. Gill asks you to take his name off from your list, on account of your pictures. Some time ago I wrote you my opinion about them, and stated that I believed they would do more harm than good. I hoped that the majority of your readers would demand more refined and less insulting pictures, but they hav not done so.

It seems that we hav a great many Atheists, Infidels, and a good many fanatics in our ranks, but not a great many Liberals. In your answer to Mr. Gill you say, "We shall continue to make war, striking with pen and pencil." Well, that won't hurt Christians, because they never read a Radical paper like yours, and making war with our hopeless minority is absurd. If we can not convince our Christian friends with kind and liberal arguments that they are wrong in their belief, it is folly to make war with pen or with absurd and insulting pictures to convince them of their errors.

I believe you hav a right to make war and print absurd and silly pictures, although a great many of your Liberal (not fanatical) friends detest them.

The only right I claim is to ask you to stop my paper until you print pictures that are not so immense, as some of your friends (?) call them. CHAS. REINHARD.

JOLIET, ILL., June 14, 1886.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: Inclosed find name and remittance of one new subscriber, to take the place of H. C. Gill, who ordered his paper stopped because of the burlesque picture on the Blood Atonement doctrin. Strange to say, the picture so repulsiv to Mr. Gill was the very one that induced my friend to subscribe for the paper. I do not think either of these parties should be blamed or praised for acting so divergently, as both act out their inherent natures, modified by their environments.

Mr. Gill is more sensitiv over his friends' feelings, they being "old-fashioned Methodists," than they would be in return of his. They never fail to flaunt their most "repulsiv doctrins" in the face of Liberals when they can catch them at funcrals, where they hav no chance to reply. Mr. Gill must hav experienced this, as he has been a so-called Infidel for years. But these two examples of human nature teach the fallacy of an all-wise God requiring all mankind to believe one and the same thing in order to salvation. To do it, all would hav to receive the same mental organization, and be surrounded by the same influences, which can never be.

If friend Gill wants to learn more of the ridiculousness and "horridness" of the doctrin of "blood atonement," let him read Moody's sermon in last TRUTH SEEKER. It is horrid. No sensible audience could hav indorsed it. I hav no use for any book that teaches such degrading doctrin. Keep up the pictures; hold them high.

A friend said to me after seeing them: "I never realized so fully the utter absurdity of the bear story or fish story. The illustration is not so ridiculous as the story itself."

The Samson, kerosene, and foxes make a good trinity in unity. How absurd! Yours truly, I. B. CURTIS.

In connection with the foregoing we wish to extend cordial thanks to the following friends who hav sent in the number of new subscribers set opposit their names. The time extends from the 1st of May to the 15th of June:

C B Reynolds 14	Chas A Wood 1	Wm C Howard 1
W O Davies 1	John Tallman 1	H S Votaw 1
H B Milks 1	J L Andrew 2	J N Secvers 1
D Luttman 1	A H Schow 1	Jas H Chapman 1
Sam Brown 1	Jas Barnsfather 1	P Valleau 1
Isaac Rains 4	Jno P Flick 1	W H Devoe 1
MrsACMacdonald 1	J F Beck 1	Major Landis 2
M Heighton 2	C L Ridings 1	Sam R Wetherill 1
Philip Imig 3	H Gilmore 2	Jos B Johnsou 1
E A Garlick 1	Mrs A H Colby 1	D A Dodson 1
L E Huggins 1	D Cummins 1	I B Curtis 1
J Priestman 1	Jos Fitzpatrick 1	J E Clarke 1
Frank I Jones 1	Wm Redfield 1	Wm P Rogers 2
A F Neunert 1	F Dronsutowicz 1	E O Marsh 1
H & L Vincent 1	Philip Pressler 1	F D Rexford 1
Geo Chamberlain 1	James Cosad 1	L G Barnes 1
Alb't Chavannes 1	S P Putnam 5	S M Kelso 2
O Jeldness 1	H J Wilsdorf 1	J D Shaw 1
F Krajewski 1

Audacious Historical Discoverers.

The editor of the New York Sun, June 13th, says:

"The most audacious claim of literary discovery ever put forward by any human being is contained in the Hon. Ignatius Donnelly's announcement to the world that he will soon publish the key to a cipher narrativ hidden in the first folio edition of Shakspere's plays. This narrativ conveys not only Francis Bacon's assertion of his authorship of the plays, but also an explanation of his motivs, an account of his relations with Shakspere, and an elaborate history of the secret intrigues affecting Bacon's fortunes during the latter part of the reign of Elizabeth."

The learned editor of the Sun either ignores or is not aware of the fact that a more "audacious claim of literary discovery" than this one by Mr. Donnelly has been made for the past eight years by one of the ablest contributors to THE TRUTH SEEKER. Mr. Donnelly promises to prove beyond all cavil that Bacon wrote the plays of Shakspere. Our contributor, "Antichrist," claims to hav discovered and proved that Jesus and his apostles all lived a hundred years before Pontius Pilate became procurator of Judea.

Mr. Donnelly's discovery, if true, deposes the idol Shakspere. "Antichrist's" discovery, if true, knocks the bottom out of historical Christianity.

A Story About Stephen Pearl Andrews.

The following was contributed to a New York daily:

"When I was a member of the Boston bar Stephen Pearl Andrews (who has recently died) came there to practice law. He had a logical mind, though it was rather too metaphysical for ordinary use. He was learned in some rare departments of the law, had carefully studied the United States Constitution, was a cool and lucid speaker, but he did not succeed in his profession in Massachusetts. This was in the growing days of the Liberty party, in the years 1843 and 1844. Andrews held that slavery was repugnant to a fair construction of the Federal Constitution. He supported this view by powerful arguments. The executiv committee of the Liberty party was in the habit of sending agents through the state in couples to hold meetings. It employed Mr. Andrews and the Rev. Frederick P. Tracy, a young Methodist preacher, whose oratory was more glowing and declamatory than learned and logical. Andrews had prepared and committed to memory a long speech in defense of his constitutional opinions on the question of slavery, which he used to deliver very deliberately, and then Tracy would close with one of his thundering Methodistical performances. He had heard Andrews's speech so often that he knew it by heart. One evening, at a large meeting in the western part of the state, Tracy proposed that he lead off and that Andrews follow with his constitutional argument. Tracy then arose, delivered Andrews's speech word for word, and sat down. It would be difficult to determin whether Andrews was the more amazed to see the wind taken out of his sails in this way, or the audience at hearing such an address from the lips of a shouting young Methodist preacher. H. B. S."

It has been suggested that "H. B. S." is Henry B. Stanton, the husband of Elizabeth Cady Stanton. The story is slightly romantic on the face of it, but the closing sentence shows that "H. B. S." is not acquainted with the resources of Mr. Andrews. He rarely delivered "set" speeches, never said the same thing twice, and nothing would gratify him more than for some one else to relieve him of the burden of iteration so that he might proceed to new fields. We hav heard him speak a hundred times. He was never at a loss for a word, his words were always rich in ideas, and his impromptu speeches were the best.

Editorial Notes.

"CANADIENNE" will please take notice that we do not publish anonymous communications.

THE cardinal archbishop and the bishop of the province of Quebec hav issued a joint pastoral letter denouncing the order of the Knights of Labor, and warning all Catholics against joining any protectiv societies except such as hav a priest at their head. The Catholic members of the order will of course resign. There is not a Catholic in the world who dares to say that his soul is his own.

SPEAKING of the pleasant weather we hav been favored with this spring, the Advocate says: "Sordid, indeed, and utterly wrapped in selfishness is that soul which can go through such days as these without being awakened to emotions of adoration, of gratitude, and of love to the wise and loving maker of us all." This will do very well on a fair day in the East, but it is inadequate in the presence of a Western cyclone.

THE Freethinkers of Hempstead, L. I., hav organized, and are conducting a reading-room at 24 Main street. The room for the present is open every Tuesday and Thursday evening, and on Sundays from half-past one. Tuesday and Thursday evenings free instruction in stenography is given. Sunday afternoons a lecture or reading is given at three o'clock. The Library contains a large selection of scientific and Freethought works, which are at the service of the public free of charge.

A FRIEND sends us a copy of the Boston Globe, containing a dirty article from the dirty pen of the dirty George Alfred Townsend upon Stephen Pearl Andrews, with the request that we "go for Townsend" and "giv it to him." The request is idle. In the first place, Townsend is not worth the ink it would take; like Eli Perkins, he livs by lying, and forty men would hav difficulty in running all his lies to earth, though they wrote from early morning until late at night. Townsend is the recognized jackal of the press, and is hired to pander to that reading element which gloats over literary garbage, and follows with the keenest interest the doings of the human sewer rats. Naturally Townsend writes "shop" whenever he puts pen to paper, and no matter what his subject, the burden of his song is the same. The purest rose that ever perfumed air would to him be a text for a discourse upon a manure heap. The seal of his condemnation is the sign of worth; only when he praises is his pen to be feared. We cannot conceive the depth of degradation to which a man must sink to win from "Gath" a complimentary notice. What he writes of Mr. Andrews, therefore, is not worthy of consideration.

MR. PECOI, of Rome, Italy, has given Mr. Gibbons, of Baltimore, Maryland, U. S. A., a red hat, and deputed an ablegate to bring it over. Last Sunday some half dozen Roman Catholic gentlemen were lying in wait for the papal ablegate, and using a government tug, burning government coal, with officers and crew paid from government funds, to run around the lower harbor, seeking the Servia, which did not arrive. The ablegate is an eminent churchman with the beretta in his pocket, and is accompanied by another eminent Italian civilian with the zucchetta somewhere about his clothes. Ablegate is an obsolete word derived from the Latin, meaning to send abroad; berreta is a square cap; zucchetta is a skull cap. These two last articles are in this case cardinal red in color. They could just as well be manufactured in this country, instead of being imported, but Mr. Gibbons, we understand, values the Vatican brand of headwear. But it is no better than can be bought on Broadway in this city, if as good. When the ablegate arrived there was much fuss among the superstitious, and a childish ceremony was gone through with in putting the caps upon Mr. Gibbons's head. Which reminds us that Mr. Shakspere or Mr. Bacon once remarked, with a great deal of appositness, "What fools these mortals be!"

IF any pastor was ever without a pulpit, that man is certainly the Rev. Kristofer Janson, of Minneapolis. The elements seem to hav conspired to throw him out of a situation. He had a little church in Brown county, where he preached a rational sort of religion to his countrymen, the Norwegians. But a cyclone came along, the church injudiciously got in its way, and was demolished. The structure was rebuilt, but the Rev. Mr. Janson went to Minneapolis. Here he built another church, and here again the cyclone appeared, and his church went down. Unity, a Unitarian journal, published in Chicago, prints a picture to show how the church building looked after its brief bout with the elements. The cut represents a scene of total wreck. The steeple lies prone upon the ground, and a young man with his hands in his pockets is standing upon it. Rafters, and beams, and plates, and joists are mixed in inextricable confusion, while, gazing upon the ruins, is a small child wearing that expression of hilarious glee which only infantil depravity knows how to assume in the presence of disaster. Janson being a Unitarian, orthodox Christians regard the action of the cyclone as an expression of divine dissent, but the afflicted pastor declines to accredit the Creator with such meanness, and is hopefully rebuilding. He is working against large odds, and deserves success. To him belongs the honor of being the only minister in the country, that we hav heard of, to say a good word in his pulpit for Colonel Ingersoll.

THE most famous pulpit-orator in Philadelphia is the Rev. Waldo Messaros, pastor of the Northwestern Independent Presbyterian church. He is nevertheless just at present under two thousand dollars bail for attempting to assault Mrs. Coulston, the wife of one of his congregation. In court the aggrieved lady told the following story:

"He came to the house this morning. I was in consultation with Dr. Thomas S. Butcher of Nineteenth and Parrish streets. Remembering that he intended to call to-day, I purposely had Dr. Butcher and David Turpit, a member of my Sunday-school class, at my house. Messaros's repeated annoyance made me nervous, and I was afraid of him. My husband also stayed at home. At 10 o'clock Messaros called, in accordance with his promis. I went down to see him, and he walked into the parlor, using endearing language to me and calling me pet names. My husband and the others remained at the head of the stairs. I reproached Mr. Messaros indignantly for using such language, telling him that it illbecame a minister of the gospel. He coolly sat down on the sofa, and, holding his arms toward me, asked me to sit down beside him. I went over and stood beside the piano. He then came over and sat on the stool, and clasping his arms around my waist, drew me over on his lap. He held me so firmly that I could hardly command my voice, but his conduct was so deliberate that I screamed 'Charley, calling for my husband. My husband jumped down stairs, and as he rushed into the parlor Messaros released me, and jumped up without waiting to arrange his clothing and struck my husband in the mouth. They clinched and fell on the floor, and in the struggle my husband bit Messaros's thumb. Dr. Butcher ran in and endeavored to separate them, telling my husband to let go of Messaros and he would go and get a policeman."

Other witnesses corroborated this testimony. The Rev. Mr. Messaros confronts it all with the claim that he is the victim of a conspiracy. No one will probably ever know which is the more to blame for this sad state of affairs, the woman or the pastor, but all will be willing to admit that the pastoral system that givs a minister privileges which no other man enjoys is at the root of the mischief.

IT may be too much to expect of the average editor of Christian proclivities that he will see that there is a difference between talking and doing, or actually inciting or inducing others to do, but really we did think that Brick Pomeroy was too acute to be guilty of writing the subjoined:

"'Herr Most, the Anarchist, has been sentenced to one year in the penitentiary and to pay a fine of $500. His offense was exercising the right of free speech, which he misunderstood the Constitution of this country to confer.'—TRUTH SEEKER.

"Hardly so, good Mr. TRUTH SEEKER. He was sent to prison for inciting men to Anarchy. For urging ignorant and excitable persons to arm and kill all who stood in their way. He was sent to prison for disturbing the public in its right to peace, and for urging servants to poison their employers in order to 'get even.' We do not understand that free speech means a right for us to organize a gang of Anarchists to enter the office of THE TRUTH SEEKER and pound the editor to death, destroy his property, burn his home, and then burn and kill policemen sent to protect a very useful citizen whose person and property are unlawfully and unjustifiably assailed. Are we correct in this view of the case, or not?"

Well, what if Most did incite to Anarchy? What is Anarchy? Mr. Henry Appleton says it is the universal panacea for all human, political, and social evils, and he propagates it with vigor. He has not been arrested. But probably Mr. Pomeroy meant inciting to riot. Again, what of it? There was no riot, and no crime committed. If these "ignorant and excitable persons" had armed and killed all who stood in their way, then they and Most would be amenable to the law. Otherwise not. There is no objection to Mr. Pomeroy saying he would like to organize a gang to enter the TRUTH SEEKER office and pound the editor to death, but there would be strong objections to the gang doing it. The gang and Mr. Pomeroy would hav to suffer the consequences, and their subsequent imprisonment would be righteous. It would not be free speech that should be restrained in such event, but free action, or the invasion of other people's rights. Most hurt no one by his talk, and the editor of Pomeroy's Democrat takes a very erroneous view of the matter.

Lectures and Meetings.

THE Freethinkers of Western New York will celebrate on Sunday, the Fourth of July, at Yorkville, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y. H. L. Green and Lyman C. Howe will address the people in the grove near that town. A general attendance is requested.

WE hav just heard from Mr. Charles Watts, and are glad to learn that he had a safe and pleasant voyage from New York to Liverpool. He is in excellent health, and busily engaged in fortifying his physical and mental powers for the coming lecturing season. On arriving at Liverpool, Mr. Watts was met at the steamer by the secretary of the Liverpool Secular Society, who at once arranged for our friend to speak in that town, which he did three times on Sunday, May 30th. According to the National Reformer the speaker "displayed his critical and logical abilities to great effect, supplementing the same with a fervor of sentiment that thrilled the audience to great applause." Mr. Watts will reach New York the last week in August, and will at once commence fulfilling his lecturing engagements. The following dates are filled: Sundays, September 12th and 19th, Philadelphia; Sept. 23d and 24th, Waynesburg; Sunday, Sept. 26th, Pittsburgh; Sept. 29th and 30th and Sunday, Oct. 3d, Grand Rapids; Sunday, Oct. 10th, Chicago; Sept. 11th and 12th, Wyoming, Ill. Societies requiring lectures from Mr. Watts may address him at this office till August 27th, as all correspondence will be handed to him on his reaching this city from England.

Letters from Friends.

LEAVENWORTH, KAN., June 1, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: As renewal is obligatory to patronize so invaluable a paper as THE TRUTH SEEKER, find inclosed $5.50 to be applied as follows: $2.75 for self, for paper and ALMANAC of 1886, and $2.75 likewise for new subscribers. Though behind in reading some eight paper, except the weekly news of the same, for want of time, I feel it a duty to help you in so grand an undertaking as yours. Watson Heston is truly a genius. His pictured contributions, to my mind, should aid immensely the circulation of your paper. By the way, what has become of Brother Roberts, of Mind and Matter fame? His was the only Spiritual paper I patronized, but it ceased some time ago coming to me. I wrote him twice and Alfred James once to know what was the matter, but got no word from either of them. Roberts had in view to publish a book of messages I was anxious to get.

Yours truly, I. N. SEEVERS.

[We are unable to say where Brother Roberts is at present. If this meets his eye, he will please allow himself to be heard from.—ED T. S.]

NEWPORT, ME., June 10, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: THE TRUTH SEEKER forever! When I opened the issue for June 5th, and saw that telling picture, "Our Janus-Faced Religion," I felt that it ought to be seen and read by every man, and especially every woman in the world. Smiles and a wreath for a thousand-wifed adulterer, but a frown, a club, and law for the little adulterer with less than a dozen wives. That picture to me is the best yet. How can a Liberalist hav anything but praise for such a grand showing up of the fraud of all other frauds, Christianity? What hav not Christian priests done to blacken the characters of Infidels? About forty years ago, passing up Bowdoin street in Boston, on a Sunday afternoon, I stepped into the Rev. Hubbard Winslow's church. Near the close of his sermon he said: "When Tom Paine was dying he cried out in fearful agony, 'Oh, the pains of hell and damnation!'" To-day if I heard a man use such words I would say to him, "You are a liar!"

I think THE TRUTH SEEKER never was doing a grander work than now, and I am surprised that any friend of the cause of mental freedom has aught to say against its true showing up of the abominable, corrupt characters in the book of all others, the Bible, that has been and is demoralizing the people. Here is my ☞ to the man who holds the pencil that brings out in such life-like manner "Our Janus-Faced Religion." SEWARD MITCHELL.

SNOWVILLE, VA., June 8, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of June 5th Mr. Dearth asks of Elmina "What is mind? Is it superior to matter?" Suppose I ask him what matter is, or what light is, or what color is? When we talk or write we use words as they are generally defined instead of going back to bed-rock beginnings. Mind is the accumulated experience of our past, and includes all the knowledge we hav gained from all sources. It is built up of impressions received through our five senses. You may call it something or nothing, still we realize a mind or mental difference between the insane and the sane, the idiot and the scholar, the scientist and the boor. Heredity education and surroundings all influence the development of mind. It is matter in motion, just as light is, just as color is, and just as heat is. We call it, by a figure of speech, superior to matter because the man of giant intellect is superior to the simpleton and idiot. One man or woman of brains will rule, control, or govern a horde of weaklings, though they outweigh him thousands of pounds in mere ponderosity of matter. When an Ingersoll with his towering intellect sways a theater full of listeners, moving them to smiles, tears, indignation, or deep thought, as he pleases, this is what we call "mind moving matter." That is, the mind of Ingersoll moves the matter of his body so it voices his thoughts, and these in turn move the minds of his hearers and cause the matter of their bodies to show by the expression of face and body that "mind rules matter." If this is not clear, I hope an abler pen will make it so. ELMINA.

FRESNO CITY, CAL., June 2, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: You hav not heard from this part of God's moral vinyard for some time, but as this town, only twelve years old, has eight churches, don't blame me for not sending you new subscribers. But I hav hope. I hav found a bookstore and news-stand. Please send sample copies and subscription rates. I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER from the first. It has greatly improved. I hav shown the pictures to quite a number, and all are pleased, and declare them a great improvement. If the type was large, I should be better pleased, for I cannot see to read small print. I hav seen eighty-four Aprils and Mays, and now peep into June. There is a saying, "Once a man, twice a child." I am a child again, but not childish enough to stop my paper because there may be a little defect in it. I do not expect to see a perfect newspaper. I think the pictures will do good.

John R. Kelso on "Paupers" was good and timely—Mrs. Grant, a rich lady, receiving a great sum of money, while some poor soldier gets nothing, as in my own case. I was at Vicksburg with Sherman and with Grant. I hav suffered more than twenty years, and shall continue to suffer as long as I liv. I get nothing.

In THE TRUTH SEEKER of May 22d, T. M. Horne advocates a new party. I say Yes. Let us hav one with these principles:

1. Americans to rule America. No foreigner to be naturalized until he has been twenty years in the country and can read the Constitution of the United States. He must hav a character free from all villainy, proved by ten witnesses.

2. The workingmen of all kinds must know their rights and hav them established by law.

3. Let the government make the money and loan it to the states, to the counties, and to the people in small sums to help them.

4. The government to be secular, according to the Demands of the Secular Union. Justice to all, privilege to none.

Why not begin at once, and be ready for '88. Let each party hav equal rights and opportunity to put candidates in the field for president and vice-president—all parties to be represented in the National Convention, candidates not elected to get cabinet positions. Will some one put this motion and make a beginning? G. PADDINGTON.

PALO, IA., June 10, E.M. 286.

MR. EDITOR: With your permission, I wish to say a few words to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER.

I am at home once again. I left Palo on the 11th of August last on a visit to Ohio, Michigan, and then in northwestern Iowa, and I learnt something by my intercourse with the people I met with. One thing I discovered is the want of more men and money to help on our cause. In all the places I was in priestcraft ruled. I met with many friends, but the best were those who were the most liberal in their views. I had to be more quiet and still with my song sometimes than suited me, but when I saw and heard so much superstition I could not "hold in," but had to speak my sentiments, even if it did hurt some, for I found many who did not care for others' feelings. I will not try to injure them, but when it is time for me to speak I will be honest and tell the truth as far as I hav learned it. Some whom I talked with on my long visit would ask where I had learned so much. I told them I had been reading THE TRUTH SEEKER the last five years, and other good works. I told them, too, where to send to for them.

Well, friends, in all my travels I did not see another badge-pin but my own, which I wore in plain view most of the time. I close, hoping this will be the best year for our cause that we hav had. JOHN STRATFORD.

HARTINGTON, NEB., June 6, 1886.

FRIEND E. MACDONALD, true and able representativ of our noble D. M. Bennett: I do not know what our grand old TRUTH SEEKER would hav been without you. I am glad to see that you are exposing that inhuman, but truly Christian, New York Observer in its Christianlike attack on Thomas Paine. I love the old flag, and I love Thomas Paine, the author and hero of the principle which the Stars and Stripes represent. It ought to bring the blush of shame to the face of all true American citizens to hear these slanders of the old hero, even though they may differ with him about religion.

Oh, be not the first to discover
A blot in the fame of that hero,
A flaw in the life of Thomas Paine,
Whose heart has proved true to the end

* * * * * * * *

Leave base minds to harbor suspicion,
And small ones to trace out defects,
Let ours be a noble ambition,
For base is the mind that suspects.

* * * * * * *

Then let us speak well of our hero,
Or speak not about him at all.

I find that that my old stock of the "Thomas Paine Vindicated" pamphlets is out, and I must hav some more of them. Please send me Ingersoll's "Four Tributes," the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL, one of W. H. Burr's pamphlets, and two of "Paine Vindicated." T. L. CURAS.

ST CLAIRSVILLE, O., June 10, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: With a profound sense of respect for the memory of the talented and noble Mr. Andrews, I, in common with a very large number of the intelligent and patriotic American people, disagree with Mr. Appleton's sentiments in regard to Grant and Garfield. He charges the former with "brutality and vulgarity," and the latter with "low cunning!"

He thus manifests, in an indirect manner, his political prejudice. Grant and Garfield enjoyed when living the affection and respect of their countrymen, irrespectiv of political or religious beliefs, and it is rather late in the day to question the integrity or manhood of either of those noble representativs of our republican institutions. The memories of the nation's illustrious and honored dead need no defense from me, but I simply desire to enter a protest against such reckless and unfounded charges, and against the introduction of politics into the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER, which is not supposed to be a political "organ," but the propagator of mental liberty. If Mr. Appleton will read what Colonel Ingersoll has said about Grant and Garfield, he will find himself somewhat at variance with our eloquent and popular leader in the army of progress. Said the gallant colonel: "Garfield is rich in honor; in integrity he is wealthy, and in brains he is a millionaire. He is a scholar, he is a statesman, he was a soldier, he is a patriot, and, above all, he is a magnificent man." Of Grant he said: "From civil life a man, silent, thoughtful, poised, and calm, stepped forth, and with the lips of victory voiced the nation's first and last demand. That utterance was the real declaration of real war, and in accordance with the dramatic unities of mighty events, the great soldier who made it received the final sword of the Rebellion."

In regard to the cartoons, I vote for their continuance. Many a person lukewarm in the "faith," and too careless to read weighty and irrefutable logic, will be awakened at once by a glance at the pictures to the folly of his or her position, and if those who hav not yet discarded theological follies and fables, and who still "cling to the credulity of the cradle," happen to receive a shock occasionally through the artistic skill of Mr. Heston, perhaps it will start the rusty machinery of their reason, and cause it to assert itself.

This is an orthodox community among the beautiful hills of Western Ohio, and the average follower of the lamb hereabouts sincerely believes that Infidelity is a true synonym of iniquity. Yours fraternally, J. H. BELL.

CENTAL CITY, NEB., June 7, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I hav read the article headed "The Prison for Anarchists on General Principles," of June 5th, in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and I regret to say that the writer of the same is not too well informed in Herr Most's doctrin of Anarchism. If he were, he would hav not allowed himself to compare our late friend, D. M. Bennett, with John Most, a fugitiv and criminal of the lowest rank. This is comparing the hero of a noble cause with an advocate of dynamite and murder. What good has John Most done to himself, to his country, to this country, or to his fellow-men?

R. G. Ingersoll says, "The man who makes somebody else happy is a happy man." Whom did Herr Most ever make happy? Most taught his countrymen how to use bombshells, dynamite, vitriol (Schwefelsäure), etc. The seed which Most brought to this country we hav seen the fruits of on the 4th day of May in the city of Chicago.

It is not so very long ago since Most was before a criminal court at Vienna, Austria, on the charge of treason, for which crime he was expelled from Austria and Germany, and may hav been from other countries. Judge Smythe, of your city, was bound by the welfare of the country and community to giv John Most the full penalty of the law, and his act ought to be indorsed by every law-abiding citizen in the land.

The doors of America are open to all nations, but not to rioters who hav been expelled from other countries for the crime of treason. If Most expected to gain popularity in America, why did not he imitate Carl Schurz or other German statesmen and public benefactors?

Dynamite and bombshells do not elevate the human race nor raise the wages of the laborer. Not much! They bring distress to honest German laborers, make widows and orphans, and rob them of that little love which some Americans hav for Germans. Herr Most, Spies, Parsons, or Guiteau do not deserve your sympathy. You can always judge the character of a man by the places he frequents, the company and literature he supports. Most's hiding-place when arrested was under a bedstead in the room of a "single lady" (which he denies); the saloon was his workshop, and many of his companions and admirers are a set of discontented idlers; the literature he supports is the Arbeiter-Zeitung, and other rebellious papers and pamphlets, to keep his fellow-men from work and encourage them to idleness and riot.

Hoping that I hav not imposed upon space of your valuable paper, I remain, Yours very respectfully, A. S. B.

HELENA, NEB., May 25, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of May 22d Octavius J. Brosius, in an article advocating a high protectiv tariff, says, "Surely he cannot be a manufacturer, mechanic, farmer, or producer of any kind, or else he certainly would see the blessings of certain embargoes." He certainly would if a manufacturer, but otherwise he cannot. Now, friend Brosius, this you should know if you do not, that all tariff legislations are special acts, giving special privileges to only those for whom said legislation applies, and I hav yet to learn of one single instance where it will apply to the laborers, nor hav I ever heard or known of an act being passed called protectiv that was passed through the influence or solicitation of the laborers. But this is a notable fact: when the capitalists hav desired that kind of legislation, they hav invariably besieged Congress, and expended thousands of dollars to secure that legislation. Do these men buy legislation to benefit the laborer? The producing classes of the country are compelled to pay on an average of thirty per cent for that kind of legislation. This is protection with a vengeance. Now who gets this extra per cent? The men for whom this legislation was made; the workingman never received a nickel of it. Again, when legislation protects any special productiv interest, it places all other industries at a disadvantage. And why? Because it puts a power into the hands of that special thing or product to set its own price, not only on the thing it itself produces, but also all products it uses produced by all those that do not hav protection. It simply says you must buy of us, and pay the price that we name, and for what you hav to sell to us you must take what we choose to giv, for you can not deal with anyone else unless you pay a heavy tariff tax. And this is protection. It is strange, indeed, that any man who labors will be, or can be, so blind to his own interest as to advocate a protectiv tariff. How in the name of sense is the laborer protected in buying a suit of clothes by paying forty-five per cent tariff on them? and why is the manufacturer so anxious to hav his goods protected? Does he hand over that forty-five per cent to the man that does the work? Not much. If the workingman intimates such an absurd idea he is given to understand very soon that his place will be filled by imported cheap laborers—that is how he is protected. There is, there can be, no such thing as protection. It is nothing more nor less than a system of legalized robbery—a system that allows a few industries to prey upon all others. There could be no fair shake unless all production received the same per cent protection, and that would be of no advantage to anyone; it would only raise the price without adding any value to the thing produced. No people ever did or ever can become wealthy trading among themselvs, no matter however much they may add to the price of their wares every day. They must, to become wealthy, produce more than they consume, and, by exchanging the surplus of their products with other people's, add to their wealth. The old man said his boys made five dollars apiece, one rainy day, trading jacknives among themselvs, and when night came each had the knife he started with in the morning. I can see just as much sense in the old man's statement as I can in the argument of the protectionist. A bushel of wheat possesses no more value, nor will it continue life one moment longer, though the price be ten dollars instead of one, nor will its high price add one whit to the real wealth of the nation. So raising the price of a product by a protectiv tariff law adds nothing to the wealth of a people, but only aids those who are protected in absorbing the wealth produced by those who are not protected. One who can see only the evils, misery, and starvation in other countries must be blinded by prejudice or false teachings in regard to our own. A nation possessing all the advantages of this country, and no more densely populated, ought not to hav one pauper in all its broad domain; but, with the blessing (?) of a protectiv tariff, the history of no country will show that, in as short a period, as many paupers hav been made as hav been made here in the last twenty years. Why this? Surely if protection was so good a thing, and such a blessing to the workingman, we would not hav this condition of things—the millionaires that hav been made in these few years, and the masses who hav not the necessities of life at hand. People are starving to death in this country on starvation wages; what more can they do in European countries? W. P. Brooks, M.D.

Boulder, Col., June 7, 1886.

Mr. Editor: I see the subject of cartoons in The Truth Seeker is agitating the minds of some of your subscribers. At first I did not deem them of material importance, and as they depicted subjects that many of us used to think too sacred for criticism, I, no doubt in common with many others, was at times rather rasped by some of them.

Upon thinking the subject over, I hav come to the conclusion that the "shocking" part was caused by artistic defects that you can gradually improve, for no real truth seeker can object to a subject being put before the reader in its most effectiv form, and certainly a picture is the most effectiv of all forms that the mind can conceive of. The whole excellence of the kindergarten system is summed up in its object-lessons; they appeal to the eye and can be taken in at once, by the most uneducated mind, even of a juvenil.

What the kindergarten is to the child, cartoons are to the adult, and especially those adults who hav not trained their minds or hav not the time at their command to follow a printed sentence to its logical conclusion.

The trouble is with most of us that we skim over a printed page and do not realize what the words mean, and in that way so many outrageous paragraphs in the Bible pass unnoticed—that is, until one reads the book out aloud; then we are caught hesitating and glancing at our audience to see whether the words are appropriate to the listeners.

For the above reasons, I would say, Continue the cartoons, only please improve (as fast as the funds admit of) the artistic part of the work.

Another reason for the pictures, as I will call them now, is that our opponents use the same methods. The Sunday-school papers are full of illustrations—better style, of course, but still illustrations. And we all know how a picture takes the eye, and the effectivness of cartoons in politics, and how the different bureaus of the government use the "graphic" style of illustrating their conclusions. It is getting so that all trades and professions appeal more to the eye by illustration than mere printed pages. Even the Agricultural Department at Washington gets up "graphic diagrams" to show our farmer friends how much grain was "exported during the last decade." Surely in such important matters as our present and future existence, diagrams and cartoons can be utilized when speaking to these same friends whom the Washington officials think require such illustrations in order that they may realize as simple a subject as how many bushels of wheat we eat and export.

No, do not discontinue the illustrations. For everyone that shouts, "Stop my paper," you will gain a new subscriber, who rather likes to see the "other fellow's" mistakes shown up. C. Ambrook, M.D.

Crittenden, Ariz., June 7, 1886.

Mr. Editor: Were you ever besieged? That is not my condition exactly, because if I knew the Indians were here I should try and get in my tunnel (I am a miner); but there is that uneasy feeling that one experiences when he knows he is liable to be shot down at any moment. The hostil Apaches are out in all directions apparently. Murder and rapine mark their path. Occasionally a captiv maiden adorns their victory. General Miles is new to this department, but seems to hav taken hold with great vigor. The troops are raced up and down in the most harassing kind of warfare. The Indians, when cornered, scatter like a flock of quail to meet at a place agreed upon or by signal fires or smoke. They liv off the country. If their stock is captured, they get a mount wherever they can find it.

Well, it is terrible. The poor settlers hav to abandon homes in haste and fly to some point for protection. They must abandon their gardens and turn the calves out with the cows. One raid means maybe the loss of the year to a settler, so he stays until the last moment, perhaps, and is scooped in by the Indians. If he leaves, they come down on his place and destroy what is left. It seems plain that great distress must visit many people here unless these Indians are speedily put down. Who are these Apaches? They are the hyenas of the human family. It is known that some of them are ex-scouts, who hav become learned in the white man's method of warfare in addition to their own cunning and sagacity, which I believe to be unequaled by any other tribe. They hav a choice reservation in the heart of the country, where they could all liv in comfort supplied by government. The mass of them do liv on the reservation, but it is only a breeding-den and recruiting-station—their base of operations. Many years ago, an aged mountaineer told me there were three great tribes of the Apaches, and as long as he could remember one or two tribes had been at war and one or two at peace, those at peace supplying those at war.

There is an old scoundrel, Es-kim-in-zin, living down near the mouth of the San Pedro, who has been known to go into Tucson and buy large quantities of ammunition.

We will never hav peace, permanent peace, until these Indians are removed. Why not take them to the Indian territory, or put them on an island off the Pacific coast?

It is not the mission of the government to propagate religion of any kind, but if they were placed at any place mentioned, they could be easily reached by Christian teachers. As it is, they look upon the blue mountains from whose fastnesses their fathers swept down upon the paleface, and they think and talk the matter over around their camp-fire until their feelings are worked up for the war-path.

If they could only make one raid through the New England and Atlantic states, then their fate would be settled. Then people would know what an Apache raid meant; sentiment would be flung to the winds and practical measures adopted.

F. A. Lamont.

Loup City, Neb., May 27, 1886.

Mr. Editor: There are very few people to-day in the Eastern states who for a moment realize to what extent the laws governing our public domain are being trampled upon; and many being rather unsophisticated in the matter, they don't realize the enormity of the crime. Rich men are becoming richer. Corporations are piling up great wealth by perjury and congressional authority, whichever is needed. They manage to procure either without trouble, or hav heretofore; and the poor man sits by with his eyes open and allows it to go on when he has the means to stop it at his disposal if he would but exert them. The "great West" is just beginning to be developed; in ten years more its wealth will be enormous, and those land-sharks are far-seeing and know well they must grasp now or never, for in a few years the opportunity will hav gone from their reach never to return. We who settled upon the Western plains some years ago and hav seen these frauds worked out right under our eyes are better calculated for witnesses against them than the person who has never crossed the Mississippi, and has, therefore, had only the stories second-hand and, as is natural, giv room for prevarication.

Though I hav been a life-long Republican, I must testify that President Cleveland and Land Commissioner Sparks hav given us land reforms that we never dared to hope for under a Republican administration, at least not till public sentiment forced them through. The Brighton Ranch company, one of those pervertres of the people's rights, are a body doing business in Custer county, Neb., as stock raisers. This company has come under the vision of our Democratic administration, and it is well for the people in that county that it has. They hav many thousand acres (fifty thousand, I believe) of public land fenced in with a barbed-wire fence, and no settler dare stick his stakes inside of their inclosures and call his life worth a penny. About a year ago a man was shot down for the crime of locating a homestead inside of this dead line of wire. The assassin was sent to the penitentiary for five years, which was a grand victory for the homesteaders, for, a few years ago, no officers would hav dared to venture into the country to make the arrest. Things are changing, but, alas! when change comes these fellows will possess the fairest part of the country, and the land that should still be vacant for our children to claim will be open only for them to rent and become subjects of title masters, as are our brothers from across the ocean. The tactics generally employed by these robbers of the people to get a title from Uncle Sam are like this: They select their location a considerable distance from any settlement; erect their buildings for a ranch, and hire a number of men, each one a tool of the firm. Each of these men files on one hundred and sixty acres of land as a preëmption, and in six months proves up by paying $1.25 per acre, the money being furnished by the firm or company, and a small stipend to the man for his part in procuring the land, which is agreed upon when the man is hired, and often in this way one man takes several pieces of land under assumed names—any way to get the land—each man swearing for the other in turn. When the "cowboy" is through, the company employing him has the land, and he goes on and hires to some other. In this wise companies own large bodies of land. When civilization crowds their herds farther back they take up a new site and begin business over in the same manner. Their herds bring them in a large profit, and their ill-gotten lands a larger one. One way the railroad companies had, up to a short time ago, of evading the taxes on the land granted them was not to take out a patent on the lands till they sold them, and then only on the portion sold; but if some poor homesteader would happen to file on one of their unpatented pieces they would very suddenly discover that he was on their lands, and, no matter what were his improvements, he would hav to surrender them to the usurper. Never was there a more righteous act in the country than when President Cleveland sent forth his proclamation driving the cattle men from the Indian Territory. They had been there so long that they began to believe themselvs masters of the situation, but that proclamation dropped among them like a firebrand, and the howl that went up would hav put to shame a drove of coyotes; but they moved! Cleveland would admit of no foolishness, and their going was heralded with great joy by every settler along the line of the territory, I believe. We hope the new administration will keep right on its good work and tear down every fence on the public domain, and rend every unearned acre of land from the railroads, and put it where it belongs, on the list for actual settlers.

Your cartoons are far beyond our fondest hopes in the way of object lessons, and I think Brother Heston should be styled the Nast of The Truth Seeker. Every subscriber should use his best endeavors at least to induce a friend to subscribe with him so as to insure the continuation of those illustrations. I hav my extra subscriber ready to send in with my renewal. Long liv The Truth Seeker! Frontier.

Brooklyn, N. Y., June 5, 1886.

Mr. Editor: On renewing my subscription I will take occasion to acknowledge Mr. D. Higbee's favor in The Truth Seeker of May 8th, and invite attention to the absence of proper vouchers for the reliability of some of his statements. The computations that make the minimum distance of our planet 93,000,000, the maximum 98,000,000, the mean 95,000,000 miles from the center of its orbit, and the mean diameter of its orbit 190,000,000 miles, was taught in the schools when I was a small boy, and accredited to Sir Isaac Newton. But I am inclined to question the reliability of those computations, and of Newton's entire theory of cause and effect, and all the modern improvements.

Astronomers inform us that, when on the line of the equator, the sun is level with the horizon of both poles, but when on either side of the equator it is in view of but one pole, which indicates that, if the earth was nearer than it is to the center of its orbit, the sun should not be in view from either pole when on the line of the equator. Now, draw a circle two inches in diameter, and a perpendicular line through the center, extending it a sufficient distance to meet the center of the earth's orbit, and draw a right-angle base line from the center to the circumference of the circle. My circle will represent the earth, with the equator for my perpendicular, and the earth's axis for my base line. An angle that will intersect my circle at the point of intersection by my base line should be level with the polar horizon, and will cross my perpendicular line 62½ inches beyond my circle. My scale being 4,000 miles to the inch, I should multiply 4,000 by 62½ which will giv 250,000 miles as the distance of earth from the center of its orbit. If I extend my angle 50,000 miles further, it will cross the tropics far enough to indicate that, if earth was 300,000 miles from the center, the sun should never go below the horizon of either pole.

I hav always supposed that the mathematical precision of planetary and lunar motion should enable astronomers to compute eclipses, rising and setting of sun and moon, etc., regardless of distance. The north Polar Star being sufficient for my purpose, I shall giv myself no concern about the probability of there being a south Polar Star. Unless the north star is always on a line with the earth's axis, it should not always be at the same angle to the same parallel of latitude all around the globe, nor could it be always on a line with the earth's axis unless it revolves in unison with the earth. If the seven stars are beyond the limits of our "solar system," they should not possibly revolve in unison with our planet, and they and our planet should, at times, be on opposit sides of the sun; they should not then be in view for the simple reason that they could not be above our horizon except in daytime.

If the Milky Way is a belt of suns, worlds, and nebulæ, girding our little family of worlds like a vast ring, we should be revolving around inside the ring, and get a view of its entire circumference, and find that it presents a remarkable sameness at all points. Apropos, a few years ago, astronomers gravely informed the public that meteoric showers are caused by the proximity of our planet to that same Milky Way. Whew! what a discrepancy! My congratulations, being evidently somewhat premature, are not fairly entitled to thanks. The center being equidistant from all opposit points, a true ellipsis should hav a true center. I shall freely admit the need of more luminous "gas" than astronomers hav furnished, on the question of sun-spots, or any other of cause and effect. Astronomers assert that masses of dense vapor become detached, fall into the openings in the sun, and disappear from view. Having observed that heated vapor is more or less opaque, and mounts upward, and becomes transparent when cooled, and falls to the earth, I am not surprised that the return vapor from sun-spots should be colorless. And being informed that distance lends enchantment to the view, even though the distance be imaginary, I am not surprised that the distance to which the returning vapor is computed to be hurled should be somewhat exaggerated. Astronomers assert, and present facts to prove, that our vision does not extend to the luminous bodies, but their light comes to us; why should our view of the sun be an exception to that rule? Why assert that the sun is 95,000,000 miles distant and their vision extends to it with such clearness that they can detect the presence of transparent vapor on its surface? That is an inconsistency of greater magnitude than my credulity can take in. Mr. Higbee is evidently aware that there is a subtil fluid, supposed to be, and probably is, devitalized electricity, continually flowing through earth and atmosphere from the equator to the poles of our planet. Whence comes this fluid, and whither does it go, unless it comes from, and returns to, the center of our planetary system: causing light and heat by collision with our lower atmosphere, by which collision it becomes devitalized, and instead of radiating from, it gravitates to, the center, passing off our planet at the poles, causing aurora borealis in its passage through polar atmosphere? There appears to be no scientific reason for supposing the center of our planetary system to be composed of anything else than components of this fluid, which is neither light nor heat, nor capable of producing either except by collision with the lower atmospheres of illuminated bodies.

Being in doubt of the feasibility of friend Higbee's transportation arrangements, I shall respectfully decline his friendly invitation to join in his contemplated pleasure trip to the solar and planetary worlds and other points of interest. The idea of a "spiritual form, or body," is so far beyond the domain of my comprehension that I shall not attempt to grasp it. I perceive spirit to be the vital, activ principle or property in matter, capable of adapting itself to all the varied and varying conditions of matter, and never leaves it. Matter would be incapable of any action, even of decomposition, without the spirit. J. A. Tuttle.

Children's Corner.

Edited by Miss Susan H. Wixon, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Bee Rocked in a Rose.

Who says a bee has never sat
In the cup of a wild red rose?
Mistaken soul—this very morn
A wild bee came and drank her fill
Of the mists that blew from over the hill.
The mist that a new rose garnered up
To the scalloped rim of its ruby cup;
For roses creep to the open doors,
Coming from fields of checkered corn
And under the homestead window-sill
Where the milk-weed spreads her ragged mat,
And into the north where the tempest roars
And the farmers' trees are a thousand rows.

The flower withheld no charm of red,
And was never injured a whit,
That a golden bee had drank of it;
But calmly held her modest head
And pretty checks aflame,
Saying, in softened tones, 'twas shame
Refusing one's nectar and dumbly sit
When weary travelers begged for it,
As others she might name.

Nodding across where the blue bells bloom,
She said she ever made welcome room
When tired pilgrims came her way;
Clearing the space in her crimson walls
She gave the wine in her banquet halls,
And craved no creature's doom;
And come or go, or go or stay,
Her spicy breath and dewy lips,
Pink as a lady's finger-tips,
Are free to the world on a holiday;
And sweet to strew on a loved one's grave,
The rich or poor, the weak or brave,
And to crown a bride on her wedding day.

Clearwater, Neb. Mary Baird Finch.

What Made Her So Extravagant?

OR, THE GIRL WITH THE CANDY TOOTH.

"I don't see what makes Etta so extravagant and wastcful! She has not the least idea of prudence or economy. I'm sure she doesn't take after me!" and Mr. Parker sighed as he watched his slatternly, extravagant daughter.

Now, what was the reason of Etta's lack of thoughtfulness and prudence? I'll just tell you. When Etta was a dear, little, winsome girl she had a candy tooth—that is, she was excessivly fond of candy, a failing belonging to most boys and girls. The failing began by her papa bringing her home occasionally bits of sugar candy. She liked it, and soon began teasing for it when he did not bring it of his own accord.

When she began to run about, she would tease for pennies, for she learnt that pennies were exchanged for candies.

"Giv me a penny, papa, plcase!" she would say, and invariably out came the penny, and away went Etta to invest it in candy. By and by it began to be two or three pennies, for the candy tooth grew larger and demanded more and more. The father was a man in only moderate circumstances, but he wanted to be indulgent and generous, and so he never refused the gift of nickels to his little daughter. Etta never once realized that pennies came to her father by hard work, for no one had ever told her, and she supposed innocently enough that they came as easily as the candy.

Time went on, and Ella grew to young girlhood, and the candy tooth grew also. It was candy, candy, candy, chocolates and caramels, all the time.

By and by, other wants came also—ribbons, jewelry, gloves, and trinkets. Wasteful and spendthrift habits were formed, and became so firmly fixed that now they cannot be eradicated. She had never been taught the value of a penny; she only knew how to dispose of it, and hence, to-day, her parents mourn after her very thoughtless and extravagant ways.

Had she been taught that her father earned the pennies by hard and constant work, and that it was wrong to use them for candies to minister to that never-satisfied candy tooth of hers; that it was better to acquire habits of prudence, thrift, industry; better to do some little bits of work and earn the pennies before she spent them, she would be much better off to-day, much less a source of trouble and vexation to parents and friends, and her candy tooth would never hav grown so ravenous as to eat away all her other teeth, besides quite a little fortune in dollars and cents.

Her parents should hav instructed her as to the value and use of money, and shown her the folly of catering to a candy tooth.

S. H. W.

Sam Simons's Ideas.

"How be you, Sam?" inquired the old farmer of Beacon Hill.

"Very well, sir. How are you?"

"Waal, 'bout the same as ever. I come over ter speak a little to you 'bout that religion we was talking of yestiddy."

The reader must pardon mistakes in Farmer Jones's language, he being a rather uneducated farmer.

Now, perhaps, reader, you wish to know who Sam Simons is. Well, if you must know, he was the only Liberal in the town where he lived.

Now to proceed with our story.

"Tell me truly, Sam, do you believe there is a Supreme Being?"

"No, I don't," said Sam.

"Why?" asked Mr. Jones.

"Because," replied Sam, "just this: Because, if there is a God, who made him? Then, who made the one who made him? You might go back like that and you couldn't stop."

"Why, yes, yer could stop. God was the first one who came into the world," said Jones.

"Yes, but how did he get into the world?" inquired Simons.

"Waal, I dunno as I can answer that question, after all. I guess you got the best of me on that point. Suppose there was a God, do you think that Jesus is the son of God?"

"No. The Bible says Jesus was the son of Joseph and Mary, and if Joseph is his father, God can't be his father too; he may be his grandfather, for all I know," answered the good Liberal.

"Well," exploded John Jones, "you're a pretty smart man, at any thinking. Come to look into the things, what you say don't look very unreasonable. Guess I won't hav any more prayers at my table."

"I must go now," said Sam. "Good-by."

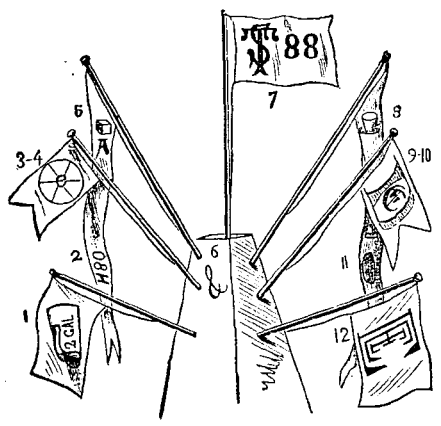
"Good-by," called out Jones.

And John Jones didn't hav any more prayers at his table.

Hurrah for Sam Simons! I say, and perhaps others will agree with me.

Milford, Mass. Gracie Fairbanks.

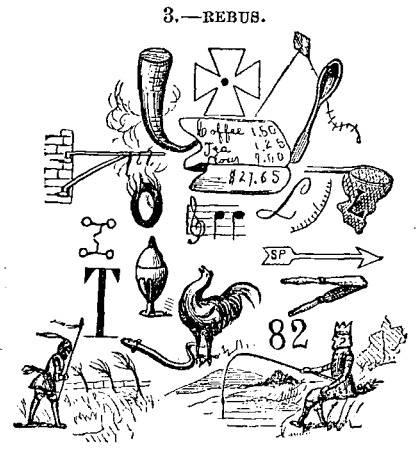
Our Puzzle Box.



1.—REBUS.

91.

Add two figures to the above, and make it less than ten. Conrad Rooker.



Lyons, N. Y.

2.—FLAGS OF TWELVE NATIONS.

Find the names of the countries.

3.—REBUS.

A flock of birds, seventeen in number.

ANSWER TO PUZZLE IN THE CHILDREN'S CORNER, JUNE 12. 1886.

Balsam, foxglove, box, pansy, sweet pea, bleeding hearts, cockscomb, japonica, dandelion.

Solvers.—Katie Pease, H. J. Messenger.

A Sweet Dispostiion.

People who are disposed to complain of the hardships of life may learn a lesson from an incident which fell under the writer's notice: Two little girls, Lily and Violet, were playing in a yard, where they had strung some twine for a clothes-line, and were washing their dolls' garments in a diminutiv tub, and hanging them out to dry. Along came Lily's brother, Master Sack, a juvenil tease, and with one sweep of his hand jerked the whole day's washing from the line and scattered it on the grass. Lily bubbled over with tears at once. Violet was saddened, too, but the necessity of playing peace-maker in the impending family quarrel was the first thought of her mind; so she said, soothingly, "Never mind, Lily; let's play Jack was a high wind."

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

The Story Hour. For Children and Youth. By Susan H. Wixon. Without Superstition. The Only Illustrated Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page and 25 smaller illustrations; large type, heavy toned paper, broad margins, illuminated covers; 4to. 224 pp., bds., $1.25.

Two Little Red Mittens. A Story of the Rightway Almshouse. By Jennie Butler Browne. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

Apples of Gold. A Story-Book for the Young Folks. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellent work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

The Youth's Liberal Guide. By Prof. H. M. Kottinger, A.M. Price; $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

BACON AND SHAKSPERE.

Proof that Wm. Shakspere could not write. The Sonnets written by Francis Bacon to the Earl of Essex and his bride, A.D., 1590. By Wm. Henry Burr. Price. 25 cents. For sale at this office.

Bible Fabrications Refuted
and
The Errors of the Bible Exposed.

BY O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Price, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Books on Practical Steps in Present Needs.

History of Woman's Costume Movement; its first 35 years, Events and Persecutions, Supplemented by Modern Martyrdom. 132pp., fine paper, 25c. Progress vs. Fashion. 32pp., paper, 10c. Woman's Way Out. 32pp., paper, 10c. Love and Transition. Poetic, in two parts; an Epic and an Argument. 191pp., in fine cloth and gilt, 75c.
Sent on receipt of price, by the author,
tojn1 M. E. TILLOTSON, Vineland, N. J.

SELF-CONTRADICTIONS OF THE BIBLE.

A perfectly reliable, accurate pamphlet. Though anonymous, it is now known to be the work of W. H. Burr, one of our ablest correspondents. More than 30,000 copies hav been sold. Price, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY

John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.—Zadig; or Fate.—The Sage and the Atheist.—The Princess of Babylon.—The Man of Forty Crowns. The Huron; or, the Pupil of Nature.—Micromegas.—The World as it Goes.—The Black and the White.—Memnom the Philosopher.—Andres Des Touches at Siam.—The Study of Nature.—A Conversation With a Chinese.—Plato's Dream.—A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.—An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, $4.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE RISE OF
INTELLECTUAL LIBERTY
From Thales to Copernicus.

By FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND, Author of "The Reign of the Stoics."

"This is a book not only to be read once, but to be kept and referred to, and pondered over from year to year. It is a guide-book of Liberalism through the past centuries prior to 1600, the era of Copernicus and Bruno. It does not take the place of other histories like Gibbon, Hallam, or Lecky, but it makes them intelligible by pointing out the white light that has been cast upon the lurid clouds of ignorance, superstition, and cruelty, from the little stream of Freethought that has flowed in its ragged, broken, and obstructed course down through the ages which now liv only as our realm of Memory and Admonition."

Octavo, 458 pp. PRICE, $3.50.

Address THE TRUHT SEEKER.

THE HUMBOLDT LIBRARY.

Price 15 cents each number, unless otherwise marked.

1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. A series of familiar essays on astronomical and other natural phenomena. By Richard A. Proctor, F.R.A.S.
2. The Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers. 19 illustrations. By John Tyndall, F.R.S.
3. Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, Author of "The English Constitution."
4. Man's Place in Nature. With numerous illustrations. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
6. Town Geology. With Appendix on Coral and Coral Reefs. By Charles Kingsley.
7. Conservation of Energy. With numerous Illustrations. By Balfour Stewart, LL.D.
8. Study of Languages, brought back to its True principles. By C. Marcel.
9. The Data of Ethics. By Herbert Spencer.
10. Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Numerous illustrations. By By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.
11. } The Naturalist on the River Amazon. A record of 11 years' travel. By Henry Walter
12. } Bates, F.L.S. Not sold separately.
13. Mind and Body. The theories of their relations. By Alexander Bain, LL.D.
14. The Wonders of the Heavens. 32 illustrations. By Camille Flammarion.
15. Longevity. The means of prolonging life after middle age. By John Gardner, M.D.
16. Origin of Species. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. With other disquisitions. By Herbert Spencer.
18. Lessons in Electricity. 60 illustrations. By John Tyndall, F.R.S.
19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. By Richard A. Proctor.
20. Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kalley Miller, M.A.
21. The Physical Basis of Life, with other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
22. Seeing and Thinking. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.
23. Scientific Sophisms. A review of current theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. By Samuel Wainwright, D.D.
24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Illustrated. By Prof. H. Helmholtz.
25. Origin of Nations. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, Oxford University.
26. The Evolutionist at Large. By Grant Allen.
27. History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.H.S.
28. Fashion in Deformity, as illustrated in the customs of Barbarous and Civilized Races. Numerous illustrations. By William Henry Flower, F.R.S.
29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Numerous illustrations. By Andrew Wilson, Ph. D.
30. } Study of Words. By Richard Chenevix
31. } Trench.
32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.
33. Vignettes from Nature. By Grant Allen.
34. Philosophy of Style. By Herbert Spencer.
35. Oriental Religions. By John Caird, Pres. Univ. Glasgow, and Others.
36. Lectures on Evolution. Illustrated. By Prof. T. H. Huxley.
37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. By John Tyndall.
38. } Geological Sketches. By Archibald Geikie,
39. } F.R.S.
40. The Evidence of Organic Evolution. By Geo. J. Romanes, F.R.S.
41. Current Discussions in Science. By W. M. Williams, F.C.S.
42. History of the Science of Politics. By Frederick Pollock.
43. Darwin and Humboldt. By Professor Huxley, Professor Agassiz, and others.
44. } Dawn of History. By C. F. Keary, of the
45. } British Museum.
46. Diseases of Memory. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald.
47. Childhood of Religions. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S.
48. Life in Nature. Illustrated. By Jas. Hinton.
49. The Sun: its Constitution; its Phenomena; its Condition. By Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.
50. } Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. By
51. } Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.
52. Diseases of the Will. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald.
53. Animal Automatism, and other Essays. By Prof. T. H. Huxley, F.R.S.
54. Birth and Growth of Myth. By Edward Clodd. F.R.A.S.
55. Scientific Basis of Morals, and other Essays. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.
56. } Illusions. By James Sully.
57. }
58. } The Origin of Species. By Charles Darwin.
59. } Two double numbers, 30 cents each.
60. Childhood of the World. By Edward Clodd.
61. Miscellaneous Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.
62. Religions of the Ancient World. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, University of Oxford. Double number, 30 cents.
63. Progressive Morality. By Thomas Fowler, LL.D., president of Corpus Christi College, Oxford.
64. Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russel Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.
65. Conditions of Mental Development; and other Essays. By Wm. Kingdon Clifford.
66. Technical Education; and other Essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
67. The Black Death. An Account of the Great Pestilence of the Fourteenth Century. By J. F. C. Hecker.
68. (Special number, 10 cents.) Three Essays, by Herbert Spencer.
69. (Double Number, 30 cents). Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. By Fritz Schultze, Ph.D. Translated from the German by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.
70. Essays Speculativ and Practical. By Herbert Spencer.
71. Anthropology. By Daniel Wilson, LL.D. With Appendix on Archeology. By E. B. Tylor, F.R.S.
72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. By J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.
73. Evolution in History, Language, and Science. Four Addresses delivered at the London Crystal Palace School of Art, Science, and Literature.
74. The Descent of Man; and selection in relation to Sex. By Charles Darwin. In 4 parts. 15 cents each.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
T. Clappison, Hamilton, Ont.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
E. A. Stevens, 750 West Lake st., Chicago.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 315 North 10th st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Lcopard st., Phila.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

Mottoes for Freethinkers

We hav received a supply of illuminated motto cards, which we offer for sale. These mottoes are intended to take the place of the "God-bless-our-home" placards which disfigure the walls of so many houses. They are printed on heavy cardboard, 9 inches by 22 1-2. The motto is in black, with colored borders, with an illuminated monogram of U. M. L. The following are the various readings:

THE LIVING HAV A RIGHT TO CONTROL THE WORLD.

FREE THOUGHT WILL GIV US TRUTH.

SUPERSTITION IS THE CHILD OF SLAVERY.

REASON IS THE LAMP OF THE MIND, THE ONLY TORCH OF PROGRESS.

THE SCHOOL-HOUSE IS MY CATHEDRAL.

UNIVERSAL MENTAL LIBERTY.

THE TIME TO BE HAPPY IS NOW, AND THE PLACE TO BE HAPPY IS HERE.

NEVER TROUBLE TROUBLE TILL TROUBLE TROUBLES YOU.

THE WORLD IS MY COUNTRY; TO DO GOOD MY RELIGION.

The price of each of the foregoing is 25 cents.
For Freethought societies there is a large card 22 x 15 inches, printed in colors, with an engraved heading, containing the Nine Demands of Liberalism. Framed it makes a splendid ornament for the lecture-rooms of Liberal societies. Price, 30 cents. Any of these will be sent postpaid, securely wrapped, on receipt of price.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York City.

A NEW PAMPHLET.—JUST OUT.

ADAMI AND HEVA.

BY S. P. PUTMAM.

A poetic version of the Indian Story of the Garden of Eden, in which its superiority to the mutilated copy—the Genesis legend—is shown.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Price, Twenty-Five Cents.

THE

TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL

—AND—

FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC

1886.

(E. M. 286.)

WITH THIRTY PORTRAITS OF DISTINGUISHED EUROPEAN FREETHINKERS, SCIENTISTS, AND PHILOSOPHERS, AND NUMEROUS OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1886,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1885,	17
How the Church Filches from the State,	24
Public Contributions to the Church,	28
The Religion of Crime,	31
Chaplains in our Army and Navy,	32
The Higher Life. By Courtlandt Palmer,	34
My Dream. By Samuel P. Putnam,	37
The American Secular Union,	40
Statistics of our Foreign-born Population,	49
The Curate of Churnside. (Selected Story.) By Jas. Payne,	56
How Voltaire Died. By the Editor,	64
The Iron Virgin,	77
Religious Divisions of the World,	82
Paine Memorial Hall. (Illustrated),	83
The Story of 1885,	84
Immigration to the U. S. 1820–1884,	87
Freethought in Australia,	88
Freethought on the Continent,	92
Subjects of Illustration,	95
Freethought Journals,	100
Religious Denominations,	102
Area and Value of Farms,	103
Population of Large Cities,	103
Liberal Lecturers,	104

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Lick Observatory,
Girard College, Philadelphia,
Freethought Hall, Waco, Texas (Interior view),
Freethought Hall, Waco Texas (Exterior View),
The Tent,
Iron Virgin,
Paine Hall,
Moncure D. Conway,
Saladin,
Annie Besant,
Mary Wollstonecraft,
G. W. Foote,
Austin Holyoake,
J. S. Mill,
George Eliot,
Geo. Standring,
Ernst Haeckel,
Auguste Comte,
Edward Gibbon,
Max Muller,
Thos. Huxley,
Voltaire,
Chas. Darwin,
Rousseau,
Humboldt,
Byron,
Shelley,
David Hume,
Goethe,
Robert Burns,
Richard Carlile,
Herbert Spencer,
Castelar,
Bradlaugh,
Chas. A. Watts,
J. A. Froude,
John Tyndall.

NEW YORK:
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,
33 CLINTON PLACE.

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D
Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

Sabbath-Breaking.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG,
Author of "False Claims," "Bible Morals," Etc.

The best and most thorough work ever written on the Sunday Question from a rational point of view.

Large and Handsome Print.

SINGLE COPIES, - - 25 cents.
SIX COPIES, - - - $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

CHRISTIANITY
A REWARD FOR CRIME.
Substantiated by the Bible.

BY
O. B. WHITFORD, M. D.
Price, 10 Cents. | Per Dozen, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

* * * This marvelous house has been built more than 300 times from our plans; it is so well planned that it affords ample room even for a large family. 1st floor shown above; on 2d floor are 4 bed rooms and in attic 2 more. Plenty of Closets. The whole warmed by one chimney.
Large illustrations and full description of the above as well as of 39 other houses, ranging in cost from $400 up to $6,500, may be found in "SHOPPELL'S MODERN LOW-COST HOUSES," a large quarto pamphlet, showing also how to select sites, get loans, &c. Sent postpaid on receipt of 50c. Stamps taken, or send $1 bill and we will return the change. Address, BUILDING PLAN ASSOCIATION, (Mention this Paper.) 24 Beekman St., (Box 2702,) N. Y.

REPLY
TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S
"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."
By B. W. Lacy.

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, author of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrins. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON.
The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works.

By THOMAS PAINE,
"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."
Price, Single Copies, 25 cents. Six copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.
By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 cents.

S. P. Putnam's Works.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution, with some Criticisms of Universology. Price, 20 cts.

Waifs and Wanderings, a New American Story. Price, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cts. "A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Golden Throne, a Romance. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creativ spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words—the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read Golden Throne.'"—INGERSOLL. $1.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A conversation in rhyme between the Nineteenth Century Infidel and the Galilean Reformer, wherein it is shown there is much in harmony between them. Price, 10 cts.

Prometheus. A poem. "It is crammed with life, thought, and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary beauty."—DR. HENRY W. BELLOWS. $1.

Gottlieb, His Life. A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Price 25 cents.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand, and other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cts.
For all of the above address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Charles Watts's Works.

The History of Freethought. Bound in cloth and lettered. Price, $1.25. CONTENTS: Section I. Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II. What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III. Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV. Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eightcenth Centuries. Section V. Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

The American Secular Union; its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Secularism; Destructiv and Constructiv. 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Christian Evidences Criticised. A reply to the "Christian Evidence Society." Introduction by Charles Bradlaugh. Contents: The Origin of Christianity; The Historical Value of the New Testament; Miracles; Prophecies; The Practical Value of Christianity; The Progress of Christianity. Price, $1.

Secularism; its Principles and its Duties. Price, 75 cts.

Tracts. The following tracts by Chas. Watts are published at the low price of FIVE CENTS EACH: Defense of Secular Principles; Is the Bible Reliable? The Christian Deity; Moral Value of the Bible: Freethought and Modern Progress: Christianity, its Nature and Influence on Civilization; Philosophy of Secularism; Science and Bible Antagonistic; Christian Scheme of Redemption. For all of the above works address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,

PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

Resurrection of Jesus. Showing the contradictions and doubts in which the subject is involved. By W. S. BELL. Revised edition. 25 cents.

Revelations of Antichrist. An exhaustiv work proving conclusivly that no such person as Jesus Christ existed in the reign of Tiberius, but that a Jesus, the son of Mary, was stoned and hanged about a century before, and that his disciples, Simon Kepha, alias Peter, and the apostle Paul, both lived and died before the Christian era. 446 pages and full index. Price, $2.

The Anonymous Hypothesis of Creation. A Brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account. By JAMES F. FURNISS. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Brain and the Bible. By EDGAR C. BEALL. With a Preface by ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, who says of it: "This book, written by a brave and honest man, is filled with brave and honest thoughts. The arguments it presents cannot be answered by all the theologians in the world." Price reduced to $1.

The Creed of Christendom. Its foundation contrasted with its superstructure. By W. RATHBONE GREG. One of the clearest and ablest works ever written. $1.50.

The Essence of Religion. From the German of L. FEUERBACH. Author of the Essence of Christianity, etc. In cloth, reduced to 50 cents.

The Godly Women of the Bible. A History of all the women who figure in the Bible. Sharp and telling in style. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25.

The Holy Bible Abridged. Containing the choice passages and lovely morceaus particularly pleasing to COMSTOCK. 169 pages. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

The Jamieson-Ditzler Debate. A nine-days' debate on God, the Bible, Christianity, and Liberalism. Between W. F. JAMIESON and Rev. JACOB DITZLER, D.D. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Poetry.

The Road to Fame.

A MORAL ESSAY.

At the first dawning of the human mind,
Ere toil is known, when hope is undefined,
Why does the boy in all his little plays
Attempt to imitate his parents' ways?
Why does he long those happy hours to span,
And take on self the duties of a man?
'Tis nature's finger pointing to the goal,
The stilly whisp'rings in the budding soul;
The deep, mysterious something unexpressed,
The god in man hid in the human breast.

Say, heavenly muse, from whence has sprung that law
The ancient sage by light of reason saw,
If not its birth in man's tremendous needs,
The source and fount of all our earthly creeds?
Far as the solar system clips the wind,
Analogy in human hopes we find:
The naked negro in the torrid zone
Has a dim faith, but prays to senseless stone;
The pagan lord of Itzlapalapan
Bowed to the sun a deep religious man,
And chanted hymns about a realm of rest
Where earth's pure souls would be forever blest.

Ye gifted dwellers on Olympus, say
From whence the hope of an eternal day?
Where is the proof of an immortal part
Except in the deep longings of the heart?
Ambition is the beacon o'er the wave,
Inspiring hope of life beyond the grave!

Turn, son of man, thy raptured gaze on high,
Let thy ambition soar unto the sky;
Move ever on and up the broad'ning scale,
And make the force of intellect prevail.

"I formed you free," the great creator said,
"And placed the power of thought within your head.
Yours to attain what giddy hight severe
Ambition leads you on a bright career."
Mourn not, oh, then, misfortune's lowly birth,
For know, true greatness lies in moral worth,
And genius is but patience in disguise
Nerved by high aims until it frets the skies.

See yonder ill-starred son of poverty,
Note those dark lines that ring his brilliant eye;
Emblems of study by the shaded light
Till cocks proclaim the high noon of the night.
Watch his career through life's succeeding turns;
He'll stand at last where fame's bright altar burns,
And wealth and ease will crown his later years
Whose youth was spent in labor and in tears;
And his posthumous fame will teach mankind
The greatest gift is a deep, thoughtful mind.

Boundless as love and pure as maiden's hope
Is wise ambition in its broadening scope;
Bright fields expanding with each new advance
Like some sublime, soul-stirring, wild romance;
Lending a zest to life that none may know
Who delves 'mid slums of ignorance below.

Livs there a man on earth who does not long
To mount the hight and stand above the throng,
And leave upon the gilded wall of fame
In livid letters traced immortal name?
If breathes there such a poltroon, pass him by,
For him will waft no warbling minstrelsy;
Though wealth and ease may crown his earthly lot,
Living unhonored, he will be forgot
When death shall sweep him from this nether realm;
For life is real, not an idle dream.
Man was created with a soul sublime,
And should leave tracks upon the rocks of time;
Not like dumb beasts liv idle all the day,
And at the night of life return to clay,
No plans perfected, and no good works done,
Unwept, unhonored, and his name unsung.

Fear not to scale, but take thy bright ascent,
Ye sons of man, where men before thee went;
That giddy hight your labor can attain,
What man hath done man yet may do again;
Though rough the road and troubles dire distress
Thy slow-fought way, the end is the success;
And history of all ages shall proclaim
A love of use is the true road to fame.

CHAS. HUDGINS.

A Hardshell Baptist Sermon.

[The first Hardshell Baptist sermon ever published, I believe, was the following, which I hav copied from the New York Tribune of 1855. I think it is more edifying, if not more truthful, than any of Parson Talmage's discourses.—Antichrist, A.M.]

I may say to you, my brethring, that I am not an eddicated man, an' I am not one uv them as blieves that eddication is necessary for a gospel minister; for I blieve the Lord eddicates his preachers as he wants 'em to be eddicated, 'an although I say it that hadn't ought to say it; yet in the state of Indyanner, whar I liv, thar's no man as gits a bigger congregation nor as what I gits.

Thar may be some here to-day, my brethring, as don't know what persuasion I am of. Well, I may say to you, my brethring, that I am a Hardshell Baptist. Thar's some folks don't like Hardshell Baptists, but I had rather hav a hard shell than no shell at all.

You see me here to-day, my brethring, drest up in fine close. You might think I was proud, but I am not proud, my brethring; an' altho' I hav been a preacher uv the gospel for twenty years, an' altho' I am capting uv that flat boat that lays at your landing, I am not proud, my brethring.

I am not gwine to tell you dezackly whar my tex may be found. Suffice it to say it is in the leds of the Bible, and you will find it some whar between the first chapter uv the Book of Generation an' the last chapter uv the Book uv Revolutions; an' if you will go and search the scriptures as I hav, you will not only find my tex thar, but a great many other texes that will do you good to read; an' my tex, when you shill find it, you shill find it to read thus:

"An' he played on a harp uv a thousand strings, sperrets uv jus' men made perfeck."

My tex, brethring, leads me to speak uv sperrets. Now, thar's a great many kinds uv sperrets in this world. In fus place, thar's the sperrets as some folks call ghosts; then thar's the sperrets of turpentime; an' then thar's the sperrets as some folks call liquor, an' I hav as good an article uv them kind uv sperrets on my flat boat out thar as ever was fotched down the Mississippi River. But thar's a great many other kinds uv sperrets, for the tex says, "He played on a harp uv a thousand strings, sperrets uv jus' men made perfeck."

But I will tell you the kind uv sperrets that is ment in the tex. It is fire. That is the kind uv sperrets as is meant in the tex, my brethring.

Now, thar's a great many kinds of fire in the world. In fus place, thar's the common sort uv fire, to light a segar or pipe with. Then thar's camfire, an' fire before you're ready an' fall back, an' many other kinds of fire; for the tex says, "He played on a harp uv a thousand strings, sperrets uv jus' men made perfeck."

But I will tell you the kind er fire as is ment in the tex', my brethring. It is hell-fire. An' that's the kind of fire as a good many uv you will come to if you don't do better nor what you've been doing; for he played on a harp uv a thousand strings, sperrets uv jus' men made perfeck.

Now, the different sorts uv fire may be likened unto the different persuasions uv Christians in the world. In the fus' place, we hav the 'Piscupalians, a high-sailin' an' a high-falutin' set. An' they may be likened unto a turkey-buzzard that flies in the air, an' goes up, up, until he looks no bigger nor your finger-nail; an' the fus' thing you know he comes down an' down an' down an' down, an' is a fillin' himself on the carcass uv a dead hoss by the side uv the road; an' he played on a harp uv a thousand strings, sperrets uv' jus' men made perfeck.

Then thar's the Methodis's; an' they may be likened unto a squirrel runnin' up a tree; for the Methodis' b'lieves in gwine on from one degree uv grace to another, an' finally on to perfecksion. The squirrel goes up an' up an' up an' up an' jumps from limb to limb an' branch to branch, an' the fus' thing you know he falls, an' down he comes kerflummux. An' that is like the Methodis', for they is allers a-fallin' from grace ah! An' he played on a harp uv a thousand strings, sperrets uv jus' men made perfeck.

Then, my brethring, thar's the Baptist ah! an' they hav' been likened unto a possum on a 'simmon-tree; the thunders may roll an' the earth may quake, but the 'possum clings there still ah! An' you may shake one foot loose an' the other's thar' ah! an' you may shake all four feet loose an' he laps his tail aroun' an' clings to the branch forever, ah! forever! for he played on a harp uv a thousand strings, sperrets uv jus' men made perfeck!

Book Notices.

WHAT'S TO BE DONE? A Romance. By N. G. Tchernychewsky. Translated by Benj. R. Tucker. Octavo, 329 pages. Boston: Benj. R. Tucker publisher. Price, paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1. For sale at this office.

Without stopping to remark that whatever influence Tchernychewsky may hav with his own countrymen, his name is certainly a "spell" to Americans, we copy here the explanatory note by which the book is accompanied:

This novel and its author hav a remarkable history. This work was written in 1863 in a St. Petersburg dungeon, where the author was confined for twenty-two months prior to being sent into exile in Siberia. The author was not only one of the foremost literary men of Russia, but one of the earliest and most influential of the Nihilists, and, though still in exile, he is looked upon by the Nihilists even yet with a peculiar veneration. His influence upon the youth of Russia was of the most extraordinary and wide-spread character, and was chiefly exercised through this romance, "What's To Be Done?" The book was suppressed by the czar, but not before it had had a large circulation. The Russian work is now rare, but is read secretly in Russia still, where copies hav been sold for a thousand roubles each. Though it has been translated into nearly every European language, Mr. Tucker's translation is the first in English.

The phenomenal movement by which the youth of the upper classes in Russia, and especially the young girls, hav enrolled themselvs in such large numbers in the Nihilistic ranks, received its greatest impetus from the publication of this book, the principal characters in it becoming types on which these young people formed themselvs. So important was the work done by this book that the Italian author, Arnaudo, in his history of "Nihilism and the Nihilists," devotes an entire chapter of over seventy pages to its analysis. He says of it:

"'What's To Be Done?'" was welcomed by the Russian youth with extraordinary enthusiasm, and was always considered by the Nihilists themselvs as the best and most faithful picture of Nihilism."

Alexis Tveritinof, who translated the work into French, writes: "Never did a novel bear such fruit, and in so short a time, as this one. To it and to it alone is due the type that we now see developing more and more—I mean the Russian female student. In 1873 there were 108 of them in the University at Zurich, but after the famous ukase which pronounced them all libertins, and nullified the diplomas of that university, they started for the other universities of Europe instead of returning to Russia and abandoning the study of the sciences. The ukase launched by Tchernychewsky from the depths of his prison was, it seems, more potent than that of the chief of police, Schouvalof, and the minister of the interior, Timaschef. . . 'What's To Be Done?' has completely transformed the family relations of the young generation; and persons may be found whose minds are not sufficiently elevated to understand all the ideas contained in this novel, but who nevertheless arrange their lives upon it as a model, as if regarding it as an ideal of moral force to be attained."

In view of these facts, this book might not improperly be called the "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of the Russian Nihilists.

THE ORDER OF CREATION: The Conflict between Genesis and Geology. A Controversy between the Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. T. H. Huxley, Prof. Max Müller, M. Réville, E. Lynn Linton. New York: The Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place. Pp. 178. Price, cloth, 75 cents; paper, 50 cents.

It is a very precipitous descent from Dr. McWhinney's "Reason and Revelation" to the group of clever Agnostics who hav attacked Mr. Gladstone's opinions on Genesis. The student will find more consoling arguments in "Reason and Revelation" than in Mr. Gladstone's rather watery critique of Dr. Reville's "Prolegomenes de l'Histoire des Religions," and his somewhat stronger "Proem to Genesis." It was the latter, by the way, that brought out Lord Hartington's bitter bon mot: "I don't care about Gladstone's 'Genesis'—I am interested only in his Exodus." Nevertheless, Mr. Gladstone's diffuseness and dimness in statement are quite as convincing as the more trenchant manner of Max Muller or the matchless use of of illustration peculiar to Professor Huxley. This trio might go on arguing forever with infinit.satisfaction to the reader with a taste for this species of gladitorial combat, but without convincing any human mind or changing a single opinion already received. One has the feeling of having a seat in the orchestra and seeing one of the finest examples of intellectual sparring to be found in the world. But when we come to Mrs. E. Lynn Linton's essay, "A Protest and a Plea," we catch the cry of a passionate human heart. "Schools," cries this enthusiastic Agnostic, "are our temples, science is our ritual, time is our heaven; the human race contains our future gods, and the satan we hav to conquer and to chain is that arid egotism which despises for the race what it cannot enjoy in its own person, and cares more for the salvation of its own individuality than it does for the redemption of the world. If in this creed can be found any analogy to the frantic orgies of the Commune, I for one am content to stand in the pillory, and let Mr. Gladstone and his co-religionists pelt me at their pleasure." We wait, she cries, in darkness, without hope in a future life for ourselvs, but with vague hopes for the future of the race in time. We are in darkness; but altruism saves us from despair. To her Dr. McWhinney and Mr. Gladstone offer the Bible, begging her to interpret it for herself in the light of reason and common sense. To her Prof. Max Muller and Professor Huxley offer the half-formed hypotheses of science. In these two books there is material for a greater soul-poem than Goethe ever wrote, and the most pathetic part of it is the strident cry of this woman, who finds no hope in Christianity and only patience in science.—New York Star.

This is a valuable contribution, being compact, fervid in its reasonings yet not at all heavy. Its statements are unanswerable. Evidently the author read widely, thought deeply, observed keenly, and added to all that a nativ genius. On page 53 she has put 12 articles of positiv belief, and as the famous colonel says in the introduction, "there is no misunderstanding between her head and her heart. She says what she thinks and feels what she says."

The design of the book is the emancipation of woman, but in carrying that out she does not abuse men for the position of women She calls upon the women to dare to think and act for themselvs and to gain the place which rightfully, in the author's estimation, belongs to them.—The Path.

THE MYSTERY OF PAIN. By James Hinton, M.D. With an Introduction by James R. Nichols, M.D. Boston: Cupples, Upham & Co.

It is to be feared that the writer of this book, though he may hav set out with the best of motivs, added little to the solution of the mystery of pain. He was a deeply religious man, and it seems not to hav occurred to him as the greatest of all mysteries that an omnipotent and beneficent God should cause or even allow his children a moment's suffering. His cure for pain rests also on a religious basis, and will be unappreciated by those devoid of superstition.

The present edition of "The Mystery of Pain" is a reprint, in excellent shape, of an edition printed in England twenty years ago.

ADAMI AND HEVA. By Samuel P. Putnam. New York: The Truth Seeker Company.

In "Adami and Heva" Mr. Putnam tells in smooth blank verse a story of the love of the first created, and how Brahma was so moved by it that he says from his celestial throne:

"I would meet anything that fate might giv—
Most cruel blows upon the mortal flesh,
All that the finite suffers and endures,
Or imperfection reaps on error's path,
Disdain my godhead, and be made of dust,
Could I be loved by woman as man is."

—New York Star.

HINTS ON METAPHYSICS. Projected in seven Lessons, with Two Lectures and a Philosophical Poem on the Conjugation of the "Verb To Be." By J. V. Beneficio (Bryan J. Butts). Boston: Published by the author.

There seems to be a mental epidemic prevalent just now. Its cause is hard to account for, but its symptoms are quite plain. These consist in a tendency on the part of the patient to take stock in prayer-cure, mind-cure, occultism, so-called metaphysics, and other empty delusions of that class. The literature of the subject is extensiv, and is read with an avidity that excites the wonder of the ordinary intellect. "Hints on Metaphysics" belongs to this kind of literature. It is a book that should not be judged by ordinary objectiv standards, because, judged by those standards, it would be pronounced devoid of meaning. Doubtless the author knows what he is driving at, but nothing short of a subjectiv illumination could reveal it to the average reader.

THE INFIDEL SCHOOL-TEACHER.

MR. EDITOR: That "Infidel School-Teacher" of Mrs. Slenker's was a very clever young lady. She knew how to string arguments culled from the best scientific thought of to-day and in the past, which might hav been the result of deep and extensiv study. If I should criticise the book I should say her heroin was too clever, not too clever for the necessities of the case, but more clever than one could expect. I, too, hav had correspondence of a like nature, only I occupied less ably the position of the school-teacher. I never won anything.

Whatever use may be made of this little book, it is full of clever arguments in favor of Freethought, and ought to be carried as a reference by anyone liable, as all Freethinkers are, to be assailed by Christians. There is something with which to meet all their objections. T. D. HATFIELD.

Passaic, N. J.

The National Defense Associatian has published a pamphlet entitled, "Brief Argument for the Repeal of Section 3,893, Title XLVI, United States Revised Statutes." The law dealt with is the famous Comstock law under which that individual has been, for the last ten or more years, the public censor of the press, and the virtual autocrat of the post-office. In this pamphlet it is shown, first, that the law is unnecessary; second, that it is unconstitutional; and third, that it is mischievous and dangerous. That such a law ought to be repealed no one can reasonably deny. It has done more harm in its thirteen years of existence than its designers could ever atone for if they were to spend an eternity in the hell in which most of them piously believe.

"Two Revelations," by Arthur B. Moss (Watts & Co., London), deals with the story of creation as told in Genesis, and with the facts of evolution as set forth by geology. It contains a great many valuable thoughts and figures. Pamphlet, 15 pp.—Another pamphlet by the same author is "Design and Natural Selection," pp. 16.—Antichrist.

Ingersoll's

The Gods. Paper, 50 c
In five lectures, comprisi
"Humboldt," "Thomas Pa
ity," and "Heretics and H

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 c
Contents: "The Ghosts," " Woman, and Child," "The dependence," "About Far
"The Grant Banquet," "T
Clark," "The Past Rises
Dream," and "A Tribute to

Some Mistakes of Mose
cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmag
plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to I
per, 25 cents.

The Christian Religi
Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah
George F. Fisher. Paper,

Orthodoxy. 56 page
10 cents. $1.00 per doz. po large, clear type, and con could be delivered in tw
This makes a grand mis
Liberals should scatter it g

Ingersoll Catechised:
a Number of Vital Questio the editor of the San Fran cents per dozen; 25 copie
Millions of these should be

Vindication of Thom
the attacks of the New Yor ert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10

Address on the Civil Large size octavo, paper, 1

Ingersoll's Lectures C
Bound in one volume. T for Mr. Ingersoll's works, t all his lectures, except the doxy," bound in one beau calf, library style, and c pages, which is sold at t price of $5. Sent by mail p

Tributes. There hav applications for Mr. Inge
His Brother," "The Vision Banquet Toast," and the "Little Harry Miller's Gr been printed on heavy ton minated border, and in lar ble for framing, and the fo to any address, for 50cts, o

Prose Poems and Sel
new book is a gem. It is spect. In fact, one of th best ever issued. It cont ebrated "Decoration Day famous "tributes" on a place in the hearts of all Freethinkers by her ability, and by the brilliancy of her lectures. The contents of this volume are:
fore published, and all the us shapes, but never heretofore printed in any brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitly fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine, and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price, $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should hav them.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22x28, $5; panel, 10½x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cents; card, 20 cts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS: Introductory; Accident Insurance; Chiefly Women; Why Women Support It; What It Teaches; From Moses to Paul; The Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge; Knowledge Not a Crime; As Much Inspired as Any of It.

VICARIOUS ATONEMENT: Fear; Beginning to Think; Creeds; Self-Control What We Need; Vicarious Atonement Not a Christian Invention; Twin Monsters from Intellectual Pigmies; Geographical Religion; Revelation; Evidence of Faith; Did He talk? What You May Think; Intellectual Gag-Law; The Vicarious Theory the Cause of Crime; Revision; The Church's Money-Box; Shall Progress Stop?

HISTORICAL FACTS AND THEOLOGICAL FICTIONS: Church Fictions; Historical Facts—(Civilization, Comparativ Status, Women as Persons, Education, As Wives, Not Woman's Friend, Morals).

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

Photo-Engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50c.

J. E. Remsburg's Works.

False Claims. Revised and Enlarged. Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture: Falsehood and Deception; Cheating: Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbatic Idea; The Jewish Sabbath; The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; The Sabbath during the Middle Ages; The Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; six copies, $1.00.

Image Breaker. Six Lectures: Decline of Faith, Protestant Intolerance, Washington an Unbeliver; Jefferson an Unbeliever; Paine and Wesley; Christian Sabbath. Each 5 cents; bound, paper, 25 cents; per doz. 40 cts.

Thomas Paine. The Apostle of Religious and Political Liberty. Tells the story of the Author-Hero's life, delineates the leading traits of his character and genius, and vindicates his name from the aspersions cast upon it. Choice extracts from "Common Sense," "American Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason" are given; also, tributes to Paine's character from more than one hundred noted persons of Europe and America, many of them written expressly for this work. Second edition, 160 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound, and containing a handsome steel portrait of Paine. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Apostle of Liberty. An address delivered in Paine Hall, before the N. E. Freethinkers' Convention, January 29, 1884. Price, 10 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Ingersoll's Tributes

REDUCED IN PRICE.

We hav made arrangements whereby we can offer these magnificent prose poems of Mr. Ingersoll's at greatly reduced prices. The Tributes are printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22 inches, illuminated border, large clear type, suitable for framing. The titles are:

The Vision of War,
Tribute to his Brother,
The Grant Banquet Toast,
Address at Harry Miller's Grave.

The price of these heretofore has been $1. We offer them now at FIFTEEN CENTS EACH; THE FOUR FOR FIFTY CENTS. Mailed secure from breakage. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

A SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA,

OR THE

First Ten Decades of Our Era.

BY

DANIEL M. TREDWELL.

Designed to show upon the authority of History that Apollonius of Tyana performed miracles and spoke wise savings equal to those attributed to Jesus Christ. 350pp., octavo, best style. Price $2.50.
Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

A STUDY OF

PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY

BY LEWIS G. JANES.

This book treats of the natural evolution of the Christian religion, its historical antecedents in Palestinian Judaism and Roman Paganism; investigates the history of the founder of Christianity in the light of the latest scientific criticism of the New Testament; shows that the true story of the Man Jesus, and his genuin teachings are separable from the later legendary accretions which hav confounded him with the mythical Christ, and traces the natural development of Christian dogma and ecclesiastical institutions. Complete references and full index. 320pp. 8vo, cloth, gilt top. Price $1.50.
Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

SOCIAL WEALTH.

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

Price, Cloth, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
Clinton Place, New York.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

The Present and the Future Republic of North America.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

Price $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Bible Inquirer. A Key to Bible Investigation. Revised Edition. This pamphlet refers specifically to 148 Bible propositions, with numerous references and citations, that are contradicted in terms by the same number of other propositions in the same book. Price 25 cents.

RUPTURES CURED, by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

LECTURES.

g Philadelphia should atrse of Science Lectures at the Hall of Friendship
ard ave.
r questions).
F. ATKINSON, F.R.A.S.

ERAL LEAGUE No. 257

Industrial Hall, Broad and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and gious and social questions.
the audience. N.B.—Truth
ays on hand at cheap rates.

ettstein's

Store, Rochelle, Ill.

welry; fine gold and silver elets, gold and plated jew-ware, optical, art, and fancy ver, Elgin watch, $9; 4 oz.,
, 11 jeweled, $14.50; same, 15
ljusted, $22. In filled gold ears, 7 jeweled, stem wind,
); 15 jeweled, $28; adjusted,
dd $4.50. Ladies' filled, best nd $30 for 15 jeweled move-gold, 10 k., $22, 7; $24, 11;
karat cases add $8. Gents cleaned, $1; springs $1; and ed mail. Best spectacle in ds must suit or cash back.

And what is a nicer present for either your lady or gentleman friends than one of my latest improved model badges in solid gold, artistically enameled in three colors? Price, $3, $3.50, $4. With genuin diamond in rising sun, $8 and $10.

OTTO WETTSTEIN

Rochelle, Ill.

FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Orgaus, in the cures of which he stands preeminent SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catch-penny get up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magnetic appliance, but simply a medicin to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

N. B.—Dr. Fellows begs leave to say that he is an Infidel of the most pronounced character. Bro. Liberals, your patronage is solicited.

The Secret of the East,

OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German A new cheap edition at only $1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

News of t

THE park commissioner just purchased and impo eros and placed him on Park. The cost of the and then a duty of $1,00 at the custom-house, the latter being designed, it is supposed, to protect home manufactures.

DR. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES, now visiting England, has had a degree conferred upon him by the Cambridge University.

SAMUEL J. TILDEN has just contributed $250 to the Peter Cooper monument fund. The actuary of the fund reports $23,000 in hand.

THREE United States war-ships belonging to the North Atlantic squadron hav gone to Portland, Me., to look after the fishing interest.

THE Central Labor Union has declared a perpetual boycott on the Third avenue railroad, and recommends that any trades unionist detected riding on the cars of that road shall be fined $1 for each offense.

JOHN PERINE, of Orange, N. J., refused to allow a Sister of Charity to go through his shop and beg on the 16th, and his men struck. They went to work the next morning without any concession by the employer.

MR. GLADSTONE is making the canvass of Midlothia seeking a return to Parliament. He attributes the defeat of his Home Rule bill more to Irish agency than to any other.

THE Milwaukee Knights of Labor hav called a state convention at Fort Howard to nominate a full state ticket. A labor convention had previously been called to meet at La Crosse for the same purpose.

THE Dominion government has canceled its orders to seize American fishing-vessels in Canadian waters. They will hereafter be permitted to purchase bait and supplies if they leave the port within twenty-four hours.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND attended a German Schuetzenfest at Washington last Friday. During the exercises he chucked a baby under the chin, which fact was duly telegraphed to all parts of the country by the Associated Press.

BOSTON celebrated on the 17th with appropriate ceremony the 111th anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill. On the same day a statue of Daniel Webster was unveiled at Concord, in New Hampshire, which was Webster's nativ state.

EVANGELIST SAM JONES, of Tennessee, and Evangelist Perkins, of Kentucky, are having a religious discussion involving the question of baptism. It is progressing finely, as each has called the other a liar, and doubtless will be able to maintain his position.

THE Rev. Hezekiah Alltop, preaching at Ripley, W. Va., was guilty of such immoral conduct with the women of his flock that he scandalized the community. Last week he was caught in the house of a widow in a most compromising position, and the neighbors captured him and took him to the woods, where they tied him to a tree and whipped him in a severe manner.

THE New York Sun has been making war upon the photographs of alleged cigaret-makers which are displayed in the windows of cigar-stores in this city. The pictures are rather attractiv, and represent working-girls sitting at a bench, their skirts being so arranged as to display about half of that portion of the limb located between the ankle and the knee. The dress is also cut low in the neck. Anthony Comstock is called upon to suppress these photographs. It has been suggested that the Sun is endeavoring to atone for the injury which it inflicted upon public morals when it published the Pall Mall Gazette exposures and hawked them about the streets of New York.

Odds and Ends.

CONGRESS promises to protect us against oleomargarine: but, alas! who will protect us against Congress?

THE latest report is that the Hon. John L. Sullivan is coming to New York to liv. First Howells, and then Sullivan. Poor old Boston!

HUSBAND: "That fence wants painting badly. I think I'll do it myself." Wife: "Yes, do it yourself, if you think it wants to be done badly."

AT this season of the year a man who can't carry a hoe-handle a hundred yards can lug a fishing-rod twenty miles. The rod is so much lighter, you know.

STATES.

A gentle Miss, once seized with chill
Was feeling very, very Ill.,
When came an Md. for to know
If N. Y. service he could do.

"O.," cried the maid (for scared was she),
"Do you Ind. Tenn. to murder me?"

"La.," cried the doctor, "I Kan. save
You from a most untimely grave
If you will let me Conn. your case,
And bang this liver pad in place."

"Am Ia. fool?" the patient cried.
"I cannot Del.," the man replied;
"But no one can be long time Ill.
Who Tex. a patent blue Mass. pill."

"Ark!" shrieked the girl, "I'll hear no Mo., Your nostrums are N. J.—No go."
—Utica Observer.

THE race-course men think that betting on races is perfectly proper while the church-fair grab-bag continues to turn in such large profits on small investments.

LIVES of bank clerks all remind us
We can make our lives all crime;
And, departing, leave behind us
Not a solitary dime.

ALMOST every paper we pick up contains some allusion to the Parnell Fund. The strangest thing about the Parnell Fund is that it has existed so long without being decamped with.

YESTERDAY.

Said our bright-eyed boy, with hair of gold,
"I'll be a bachelor when I'm old,
And always stay with mamma and you,
As sure as sure, and as true as true;"
But he fell a prey to Cupid's dart,
For tiny Bess stole his tiny heart.
Next day he announced, with solemn air,
"He loved dear Bessie, he did, so there—
Bessie was pretty, Bessie was good—
He'd marry Bessie—yes, he would."
Reminded of what he said before,
He pondered a moment the problem o'er,
Then softly said, in his bashful way,
"I hadn't seen Bessie yesterday."

O boy of mine, 'tis vain to plan,
"I'll be a bachelor when a man."
Some fairy creature with golden hair
And sweet blue eyes like your mother's there,
With rippling laugh, like the song of bird,
Or voice the sweetest we ever heard,
Makes us forget the word long spoken;
Half unconscious their spell is broken,
And then, like you, we simply say:
"I hadn't seen Bessie yesterday."

PARSON: "I tell you, sir, the women are the support of the church. The ministers hav a strong hold upon them." Injured husband: "Yes, I realize it; and the trouble is that the hold is generally on the waist."

SENATORS interested in the oleomargarine bill in the House of Representativs speak of the compound as the "poor man's butter." This may be correct, but experience shows that the poor man always pays the highest price for butter, whether it be genuin or bogus.

"PENELOPE," said a new York lady to her little Boston niece, "will you see how high the thermometer is, please?" "Yes, auntie; it is just even with the mantelpiece." "Thank you," said little Penelope's aunt, who was equal to the occasion; "and now will you see how high the mercury is?" "Seventy degrees, Fahrenheit, auntie," replied the Boston miss.

DRUMMER (examining some bags of coffee on the sidewalk): "You surely don't charge thirty cents a pound for this common grade of coffee?" Storekeeper (confidentially): "Oh, no: we just mark it that way to keep from being robbed. You see, every man, woman, and child who passes grabs a handful of coffee-beans to chew. They always steal the highest priced, so we hav to impose upon them in order to protect ourselvs."

Paine Vindicated!

—o—

A thorough and overwhelming reply to the New York Observer's slanderous attacks upon the Author-Hero of the American Revolution. Containing both the slanders and their refutation.

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

—o—

The New York Observer (Presbyterian) having recently reissued its assault upon the memory of Paine, this pamphlet should be circulated everywhere in vindication.

60pp. Price 10 cents; 12 copies, $1.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD

A Fabricated Account of a Scene at the Death-bed of Thomas Paine.

BY W. H. BURR.

This pamphlet shows that the account of Paine's dying moments attributed to Bishop Fenwick (upon which the Observer relies to prove its principal charges) is a forgery, it being impossible that Fenwick could hav written the alleged account.

18pp. Price 5 cents; 25 for $1.00.

For these two pamphlets address

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

of Thought.

act that the Bible contains man knew at that time and ows now, that it pandered to then existed, and hinted not rtant truths which man has g out and learn by his own industry and research, pos itiv evidence that a God of all knowledge did not write it, and that it was simply the production of men not yet enlightened by truth and science?—D. M. Bennett.

THE instant we admit that a book is too sacred to be doubted or even reasoned about, we are mental serfs. It is infinitly absurd to suppose that a God would address a communication to intelligent beings, and yet make it a crime to be punished in eternal flames for them to use their intelligence for the purpose of understanding his communication. If we hav the right to use our reason, we certainly hav the right to act in accordance with it, and no God can hav the right to punish us for such actions. —Ingersoll.

THE most essential objects of education are the two following: First, to cultivate all the various principles of our nature, both speculativ and activ, in such a manner as to bring them to the greatest perfection of which they are susceptible; and, secondly, by watching over the impressions and associations which the mind receives in early life to secure it against the influence of prevailing errors; and, as far as possible, to engage its prepossessions on the side of truth.—Dugald Stewart.

SURELY every medicin is an innovation, and he that will not apply new remedies must expect new evils, for time is the greatest innovator, and if time, of course, alter all things to the worse, and wisdom and counsel shall not alter them to the better, what shall be the end?—Bacon's Essays.

RING out false pride in place and blood,
The civic slander and the spite;
Ring in the love of truth and right,
Ring in the common love of good.
—Tennyson.

ANY society which is not improving is deteriorating, and the more so the closer and more familiar it is. Even a really superior man almost always begins to deteriorate when he is habitually (as the phrase is) "king of his company;" and in his most habitual company, the husband who has a wife inferior to him, is always so. While his self-satisfaction is incessantly ministered to on the one hand, on the other he insensibly imbibes the modes of feeling and of looking at things which belong to a more vulgar or more limited mind than his own.—Mill's Subjection of Women.

BECAUSE no one would like to pass his life in solitude, not even if surrounded by an infinit abundance of pleasures, it is easily perceived that we are born for communion and fellowship with man, and for natural associations. But we are impelled by nature to wish to benefit as many persons as possible, especially by instructing them and by delivering to them precepts of prudence.—Cicero.

THE consummate hypocrit is not he who conceals vice behind the semblance of virtue, but he who makes the vice which he has no objection to show a stalking-horse to cover darker and more profitable vice which it is for his interest to hide.—Macaulay.

IT is not want of power in God that he cannot lie; it is the infinit purity of the divine nature that makes this impossible by reason of his infinit perfection. . . . . With the power of creating we must also join that of annihilating, which is equal to it and must necessarily be supposed to be in God, because we plainly perceive it to be a perfection.—Bishop Burnett's xxxix Articles.

To rest the authority of the four gospels or other scriptures on the church, and the authority of the church on the four gospels, or these same scriptures, is a style of argument of which a child could hardly be guilty, which an untutored peasant could see to be ridiculous.—F. W. Newman.

THE present is the past grown older and wiser; it is time better understood. Free religion is religion grown older and wiser; it is god and man better understood. The highest fruit of a religion is a better religion. We are to honor the Christian protest for the liberty it secured the world. It is not for the result that the Reformation produced, but for the precedent it established, that we value it. We respect the Protest, not the Protestantism, of the Reformer. That is the only true reformation that allows itself to be reformed. Free religion is the assertion of man's rights, of man's freedom. It is humanity in freer relations with man and in truer relations with the universe. —L. K. Washburn.

Is there for honest poverty,
That hangs his head and a' that?
The coward slave, we pass him by,
We dare be poor for a' that!
For a' that and a' that,
Our toils obscure and a' that;
The rank is but the guinea stamp;
The man's the gowd for a' that.
—Burns.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 13. No. 27. PUBLISHED WEEKLY. New York, Saturday, July 3, 1886. 33 CLINTON PLACE. $3.00 per year.

THE TAXED AND THE UNTAXED.

Notes and Clippings.

MISS ROSE ELIZABETH CLEVELAND, it is said, will make her home henceforth at Chicago, where she will take editorial charge of Literary Life.

A WOMAN'S school of journalism has been opened in Detroit. The girls are to be taught type-setting, shorthand, revision of manuscript, and proof-reading.

IN consideration of her hand and person in marriage, the Rev. Sydney Wilbur, of Albion, N. Y., has decded to Miss Mary M. Coit, of Newark, N. J., his entire fortune, valued at many thousand dollars. Barter of this kind has heretofore been alluded to by another name than that of marriage.

GEORGE MILLER, of Anaconda, Mont., visited the offiee of the Daily Miner, at Butte, for the purpose of shooting the editor, by whom he conceived that he had been injured. The editor took the pistol away from him, threw him down stairs, and fell upon his person, almost crushing the life out of him. Then the Anaconda man was arrested.

THE Independent says: "We are heartily in favor of an amendment to the Constitution that would authorize Congress to establish uniform laws on the subject of marriage and divorce throughout the United States. But we do not suppose that, at present, public sentiment has reached the point at which such an amendment may hav any chance of success." It is to be hoped not. The state legislatures hav shown themselvs to be quite adequate to do all the tinkering our marriage laws require.

IF a carmine tint is observed to hav been imparted to things in the vicinity of the Thousand Islands this week, it need not be attributed to aurora borealis or other celestial disturbance. Dr. Talmage and his congregation, to the number of six hundred, hav chosen that locality as the objectiv point of an excursion upon which they embarked last Saturday.

IT was announced that the Thomas Paine Society, of Frederick county, Md., would celebrate the seventy-seventh anniversary of Tom Paine's death at the house of Aaron Davis, near Frederick; but not a celebrater appeared. Mr. Davis himself observed the day by not working. He said that, while there were only about a dozen members of the society, there were three or four hundred believers of the Paine doctrins in the county, but fear of social ostracism or injury to their business caused them to make a secret of their views.—Sun.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL HORD, of Indiana, has just returned from a visit to Utah. He thinks the present anti-polygamy laws serve only to solidify Mormon sentiment. All who are under indictment are looked upon as martyrs to the Mormon church. "The Mormon women," he says, "are sincere believers in the alleged revelations to Joe Smith, and they enter into polygamous matrimony as a religious act. The only way, I believe, that Mormonism can ever be reached is to enact a law enabling a woman who has been 'sealed' to a Mormon, to recover a proportionate share of his possessions, and to obtain a divorce whenever she becomes dissatisfied. Then encourage a few adventuresses to go to Utah, become sealed to the wealthy Mormons, and in a few weeks, as a purely business transaction, become dissatisfied, and demand a division. You can reach them through their pockets and through their stomachs quicker than in any other way."

IN the baccalaureate sermon before the young men of Trinity College, Dr. Morgan Dix told them that "in our day it looks as though the foundation of Christian education has been undermined so effectually that even the great towers are ready to fall. Large numbers of educators, in revolt from the old faith, are engaged in experiments of which no one can foresee the end; and perhaps in the popular mind the idea of a university is that of a place where absolute neutrality to religion shall be scrupulously observed, where no attempt at disciplin shall be made, where the student shall be practically a law unto himself."

TWENTY members of the Louisiana legislature hav joined in a protest to the governor against his signing the bill known as the Sunday law, giving as reasons that it is a violation of the fundamental principles underlying the constitution, which guarantees to the individual citizen the fullest measure of personal freedom and an absolute separation of church and state; that the arguments that its provisions are in favor of the toiling masses are sophistical and idle, that its effect will be to deprive them of recreation and rational enjoyment on Sunday, and that the proposed law on the whole is obnoxious to public policy and violativ of the constitution.

A TEXAS court has been called upon to interpret the law relating to "shouting in meeting." It seems that the brethren and sisters of the colored Baptist flock in Dallas became so fervid and excited in their devotional exercises as to disturb the entire neighborhood. The aggrieved neighbors complained that their "shouting, screaming, and yelling at the top of their voices and running up and down on the floor, jumping up and down on the same," amounted to an intolerable nuisance," and moved for an injunction to restrain the fervor of the too zealous worshipers. The latter pleaded the "freedom of conscience, and claimed "the right to worship the Lord in their own way." After hearing a mass of testimony, the judge decided that the complainants had a well-grounded grievance, and granted an injunction "restraining the defendants from disturbing petitioners by loud and unusual or unreasonable noise in said church." The law of the case was laid down as follows: "The constitution guarantees perfect freedom of conscience. No court of law can dictate how a man shall worship, but the exercise of that right must not interfere with the rights of another. Shouting in religious worship may be a matter of conscience, but it does not get beyond state regulations by reason of that. I do not think that noise is a part of religion, but I may not be a good judge of that. It seems to me to be only the result of emotional excitement, such as may be found at conventions or theaters. It may or may not be necessary in religion, but it can also be a nuisance. A man has a right to shout as long and as loudly as he pleases, provided he does it where he will not disturb others. Sleep is essential, and to rob a man of his sleep is as much an infringement of his rights as if he were robbed of his chattels."

The Influence of Religion and Philosophy on Morals.*

BY VAN BUREN DENSLOW.

I.

Permit me to ask, not your sympathy, for all sympathy is unphilosophical, but your cold, impartial consideration to the difficulties which beset a candid and judicial mind in attempting to discuss the influence of religion over moral conduct. For I would apprise you at the outset that I desire to speak not merely of the effects of religious enthusiasm, more than those of religious despondency, or than of that religious culture which often supersedes the emotional element, whether enthusiastic or despondent; or than of religious activity, which is often greatest in those that hav least religious culture; or than, finally, of the religious organizations and the creeds which giv rise to them, which are alternately the consequence and the cause of these various states and conditions of enthusiasm and despondency, culture and activity.

It is easy to laud the influences of religion as always moral, and that might please four-fifths of average men and women. It is equally easy, by seizing upon the crusades, religious wars, inquisitions, persecutions, massacres, and great crimes of religion, to condemn them as in the aggregate immoral, and this might satisfy that other fifth, who are more largely represented in philosophical societies than elsewhere. And then there is that very large constituency who, while they admit in the abstract that many questions hav two sides, yet always do so with the mental reservation that one of these is the wrong side, i.e., somebody else's side, and the other is the right side, i.e., their side. All these like to see a man get squarely down on one side of the fence or the other, so that people of one idea can comprehend him, and not dance from one side to the other, or attempt to straddle. This class I intend to offend, for I am emphaticaily on both sides of this question. In board-of-trade phrase, I deal to-night in double options, which are straddles necessarily. I may also offend those who mentally demand that the question shall he discussed from the impossible assumption that true religion is always moral in its influence. I say impossible, because there can be no investigation where the investigator is required to set out with the assumption that there is nothing to be investigated; nor could any progress be made if I were obliged to set up as a theologian, and assume that one man's religion is true, and another's false. In the sense that religion necessarily assumes that its own influence is wholly moral, and that whoever does not so assume is not religious, the mere discussion of the question is irreligious, and it must be carried on from a non-religious standpoint. The methods used must necessarily resemble dissection, and dissection always denies the existence of life in the thing dissected.

Therefore, the examples cited as cases for dissection and analysis will be necessarily generally those of dead religion, and not of living religion; for there is something in living religion which, like all life, defends itself against close analysis by its own power, and makes us desire to rather aid than to analyze or dissect it.

I intend to show that the aggregate phenomena which pass for religion in the world are sometimes moral, and, at others, immoral in their influences, and that what is ordinarily styled Infidelity, i.e., a Godless science and an Atheistic philosophy, are subject to the like praise and censure; that both are essential forces in the world's civilization, and that any philosophy of human life and duty must recognize both as conflicting but necessary factors, each in the main giving reverse sides of the same truth, or presenting truths which are eternally contradictory to each other. All religions hav certain elements of fact to work upon, which science has not the least tendency to remove, and philosophy has not the least capacity to explain. If there were no such fact as death, there would be no such consequence as religion. When our friend dies, science dissects his corpse, givs a Greek name to his malady, and, perhaps, describes his case in some medical work as a very finely developed and interesting one of pleuro-pneumonia or spinal meningitis. But if we ask science whether our friend still livs, or will ever liv again, science will make a note of our question in its memorandum book, and of the date, as of something it may hav occasion to swear to to prove our insanity, and perhaps will inquire of us whether such attacks are frequent.

It matters not whether religion has anything true or not to tell us as to whether our friend shall liv again. It is its function to tell us something, and we go to those who hav something to say, in preference to those who hav absolutely nothing to say.

If science and philosophy are fearful of imposing on the human mind at this juncture, they must stand aside in favor of the priest who has no such fear. The world's work, including the task of explaining the great mysteries, death, life, the first cause, the future life, must devolve on those who will accept it, not on those who decline it. To the end of time science and philosophy, which depend on experimental evidence, will leave this function to the priest, for he alone can go on assumptions, intuitions, inspirations, and dogmas. Discoveries in science hav no tendency to lessen these mysteries. They deal with the knowable only; religion with the unknowable. All they can do is to preoccupy the mind with other subjects and deaden its religious sensibilities. They cannot explain away the grave. Religion includes all thoughts that derive man's duty from the assumption of his immortality. Morality includes all action, to which the quality of right is attached on grounds of authority or law, and not mere expediency or interest. Many persons may vaguely believe that all morality is ultimately the highest expediency. Hence the maxims "Honesty is the best policy," "Virtue brings its own reward," "The seed of the righteous shall not beg," "Seek first righteousness and all other things shall be added." But if a man clearly sees wherein the profit of an act will exceed its penalty, both in quantity and in immediateness, the act is simply selfish, or business-like—not moral. If it is done from a motiv of obedience to God it is religious, which is more than moral. If done from a clear prescience that it will benefit and bless mankind, it is benevolent, not moral. But if it is not done to promote our immediate interest or pleasure, and if we believe it to be right without analyzing, why, it is moral.

For instance, "Thou shalt not steal" is a moral law among all races of men. The fact that one thoroughly believes that his neighbor has more property than he needs or even knows of, that it would be better for all mankind that it should be equalized, that the desired property perhaps is perishing because of its owner's inability to use it, never removes the sense of guilt which attaches to the theft. Yet these circumstances are amply sufficient to make out a case of expediency that the property should change hands. Expediency, therefore, has nothing to do with moral laws. So of obedience to parents, telling the truth, marital fidelity, and the other features of all moral codes. They demand that they be assumed without explanation or analysis. To reason about them and rest them on expediency is to undermine them. Their reason being thus mysterious, it is natural that they should be ascribed to that name in which all mysteries are bound up. If no explanation can be given why we should not steal when it is clearly expedient, it usefully cuts off the call for explanation to say God commands it.

I will not review the historical evidence that moral law has its dawn in religious law, and that in its infancy the human conscience everywhere judges of right and wrong from the standpoint of man's immortal nature and divine environment. The first structures in history were the religious piles on which sacrifices were burnt to appease the offended gods; the first observations of nature, of the flight of birds, of the powers of plants, of the winds and the stars, were by the oracles to discover the will of the gods; the first notions of right were of that which the gods would reward; of wrong, that which the gods would punish.

Science, in which I include the sum of human knowledge gathered by observation of facts, and philosophy, in which I include the trained power of reasoning from any premises of fact to their legitimate conclusions and inferences, hav it no more within their scope to furnish us with a moral standard, are no more able to prove that one act is right and another wrong, than they are to point out whether or not there is a life beyond the grave. It is as foreign from their function as it is from that of mathematics, sculpture, music, or gymnastics.

Science may be defined as the observation, collection, and classification of phenomena, with the view of tracing the relations of causation between them, i. e., the power of two or more phenomena to produce a third. It has to do therefore with secondary causes only, i. e., with causes which are themselvs caused.

If nitrogen and oxygen gases in mechanical union always form air, and never form anything else, and if air is never formed otherwise, then it is a law of physical science that these two substances in this mode of union form air. But if neither of these substances is capable of being resolved into any other constituent substances, then the question who or what creates oxygen or nitrogen is a religious question, because it belongs in the domain of the unknowable; i. e., if answered at all, it must be answered by an assumption which commends itself to our faith merely. It is so answered when it is said either that God makes them, that Jupiter makes them, or that evolution makes them, or that they are not made.

Apply the scientific mode of deducing a law to morals. You first carefully collate the statistics of crime and immorality, and learn that the ratio of vice to virtue, and of crime to morality, recurs in a definit connection with certain causes, such as poverty, heredity, race, and mal-education, as harvest follows seedtime. At last you grind out your law of social science concerning crime. What is it? That in a population of three hundred thousand, a murder is due once a month, and in the ratio for the year of five among Irishmen, three among Germans, two by Scandinavians, Englishmen, and Scotchmen, one by American whites, and one by American blacks. Nine of the murders must be by persons having no trade, three by persons of education, and so on. So a robbery is due once a fortnight, thefts twice a day, and lying every two seconds. The law of social science as much requires that the representativs of the various nationalities shall come forward with their proper ratio of crime, as the state laws require that the states' attorney shall be ready with his indictment, or the sheriff with his rope. There would be a screw loose somewhere if the robbery which was due once a fortnight went over into the third week. The law of social science would need a revision to account for this lapse, this backwardness on the part of the criminal classes in coming forward. Not that social science is to be despised. But its cure for crime would be found in some far-off amendment in our legislation on some economical question, or in our transportation policy, or in our currency laws, which would revive morality by material means, diffusing wealth and promoting industry. But obviously social science could furnish no standard of reform which could work on the individual like a policeman's club or Brother Moody's hell. Perhaps some will say, moral laws can be framed by science. When medical science succeeds in framing any laws of hygiene which will be as generally agreed upon as the current rules of morality are, it will be time enough to discuss this question. Meanwhile the rule for finding health is the same as the miner's rule for finding gold, viz., "Where you find it, there it is."

I thought the rule "keep your head cool and your feet warm" was pretty sound until I met a physician in New York who went up Broadway in December in a fur cap and slippers, and who seemed to prove that the true rule is "keep your head warm and your feet cool." And now, alas!

His scalpels rust,
His bones are dust,

and if we may be permitted to attach a theological department to a scientific man:

His soul has gone
To heaven, I trust.

His studies in the science of hygiene having killed him, he is prevented from practicing it upon others.

I once knew a baby which if it could hav been nursed like Romulus by a wolf might hav lived. For when it cried, the wolf would hav either tossed it up or eaten it up, and either course would hav stopped the pain in its stomach. But being in charge of its young mother, the science of hygiene came along at two dollars a call and revealed that rocking the baby made it dizzy, that tossing it up would crook its legs, and that letting it lie and cry it out would strengthen its lungs. So, four successiv babies died of the science of hygiene, a larger loss probably than any female wolf ever met with.

Mankind do not greatly err for want of sufficient harmony over the question what is morally right and wrong. They agree so well upon it that moral idiots, men who do not know right from wrong, are seldom found except among men and women of the very highest reasoning powers.

So use your own as not to injure your neighbor;

The marriage of one man to one woman;

The nurture of children by both their parents, and their obedience to both;

Telling the truth, except as literary fictions may be made the means of conveying a higher truth;

Covet not one's neighbor's goods;

Loving one's neighbor; the duty of industry, etc.

Some moral rules such as these, except that, in the case of marriage, polygamy is substituted in barbarous periods, are universally accepted in theory, and are continually though exceptionally violated in practice. In insuring obedience to these and other moral duties, it is usually assumed that religion is the chief factor. This may be true if we comprehend in religion all the anterior causes which go to make one's religion what it is, which point its tendencies as the winds point the weather-cock.

These causes, in the order of their relativ importance, are: First, race, including all those differences of history, residence of ancestry, location, climate, food, and past education and institutions which go to make up race. Second, heredity, or the bias which each child inherits from his parent or ancestor, and which stands associated with peculiarities in his brain, nervous system, and body, which cause and constitute his physical personal identity, and whereby we distinguish him from others. Heredity constantly tends to restore the ancestral type; education and experience to weaken it. Thirdly, education, which is the aptness with which the capacity of the individual is developed to obtain the gratification of his normal desires and social wants by means which are consistent with the welfare of society and with the moral standards; fourthly, industry, or the regular preoccupation of the mind with alternating periods of useful productiv work, exhilarating amusement, and healthy repose; fifthly, wealth, or the ability to command the services of our fellow-men in a degree adequate to the gratification of our desires, by means and exchanges which promote the best interests of society and conform to moral standards; and, sixthly, religion, or the sense of acting under motivs derived from our assumed immortality and responsibility to God.

*Lecture delivered before the Chicago Philosophical Society.

An African Kaffer can be converted into a Christian of his sort, perhaps, by a present of ostrich feathers, or beads, or spelling-books, or rum; but he and his descendants for a thousand years would hav to bequeath their slowly-improving stock to the dust in repeated failures before a Christian of the order of Jonathan Edwards or Wm. E. Channing or David Swing would result. To bring the connection between physique and faith home to our daily observation, go into any Methodist church in Chicago. There is probably not a person of the Saxon type, light hair, round face, yellow freckles, blue eyes, in the entire church, except as an accident, or a visitor, or a heretic. All are dark, as if the entire stock of the blood of the early Romans had been reserved for them. The same sanguin-bilious temperament which carried the Roman eagles from the Ganges to Gibraltar indicates that that congregation believes in headship, executiv force; in a bishop, not in a synod nor in individual independence. In politics they will vote for a general; in criminal law they will go for hanging; in suppressing a riot they believe in grape and canister first and then—persuasion. In suppressing intemperance they would knock out the head of the barrel and hang its owner. In theology they would be ashamed of a creed that had not a substantial hell. Even their prayers are not unfrequently as full of force as if they were tournaments in which the blessing was to be wrestled for and borne off by the bishop of the most stentorian lungs, as of old the guerdon was won by the knight of the strongest lance. Being of the Roman type, their church government must be military, worthy of their founder, John Wesley, who was first cousin to the Duke of Wellington, by the same right as sanguin-bilious religion is always first cousin to the bayonet.

Contrast with these the Baptists and Congregationalists, universally of the Saxon type, flaxen hair, blue eyes, round and red or freckled cheeks, broad, not high, heads—congregational because too jealous of their liberties to yield even as much control to others as is essential to organization. The same element is in their blood which made Germany Protestant and divided it into petty principalities; which made Englishmen the authors of parliamentary freedom; which places Plymouth church, Brooklyn, above denominational control, and teaches a Dutchman instinctivly that for him to sell or drink beer is nobody's business. Every flaxen-haired Saxon is his own hero, bishop, king, and kaiser.

Between these is the Presbyterian type, aristocratic but practical, prone to deliberation, believing more in thought than force; cautious, consulting, senatorial, with a physique spare, straight, and free from surplus matter, heads high and narrow, men who in every stage of the world's history hav been its barons, generals, senators; hav led its good families, fenced in their gens with every wall that could maintain gentility, and hav never forgotten in any theory of human equality that blood will tell, and that you cannot make a silver whistle out of a sow's ear. Their type physically is a blending of that of the Scotch lairds, Danish thanes, and the Norman barons.

While physical peculiarities, which, from being predominant in certain races, hav become associated with them in history, thus control religious types, a good common-school education and a moderate competency are the two legs on which the Protestant church-member walks into his church. But for them he would not be there at all. Protestantism is a religion for saving intelligent and comfortable people, not from hell, but from isolation, which is its earthly equivalent, by reminding them of things they already know in terms eloquent enough to giv them a spice of novelty. It is not so much banishment from God as from society that the Protestant ordinarily dreads. Take away from Protestants half their education and they would be Catholics. Take away their competencies and they would stay at home and hav no religion in particular until they could afford it.

Religion, therefore, is the resultant expression of the anterior forces of the race, heredity, education, industry, and wealth. Practically, industry alone has far more to do with the maintenance of morality than any tenets. Pride of family, social ambition, etc., are also powerful means to the same end.

And now we come to our main question: What are the positiv and direct influences of religion in the aggregate over morals? The different religions of the world hav enjoyed very diverse reputations in this regard. In China, to-day, neither the irreligious nor religious class looks upon religion as having anything to do with practical morality. A Chinaman is moral only in proportion as he is rich. Mencius and Confucius are philosophers rather than religionists, but the worship of Joss is a species of incantation for charming away evils. The Greek and Roman mythologies made worship a means of securing temporal blessings, and they deified the sensual nature of man by dedicating temples to every lust and passion, in a manner that led to what would now be regarded as the most gross and bestial immoralities. Indeed, in Greece and Rome, history concedes that it was the philosophers, not the priests, who taught morals. There was nothing that looked like heaven and hell, in our sense, in them, except in the Eleusinian mysteries. The few who were admitted to these were shown the raptures of the blessed and the torments of the wicked quite after the style subsequently adopted into Christianity, and were pointed to a naked, sinless child as the state to which the soul must come which would escape hell and attain heaven. Indeed, the Eleusinian mysteries prefigured the Christian doctrin of heaven, hell, and salvation through righteousness more remarkably than anything in the Old Testament. The very language of Jesus, "Except ye become as little children ye shall in nowise enter into the kingdom of heaven," was but a spoken transcript of the doctrin which for a thousand years, dramatically presented, had illumined the mysteries of Eleusis. Buddhism makes benevolence the sum of all virtues. Mohammedanism, with the exception of its hostility to the use of wine, has scarcely a moral tone of any kind. It is a mere policy of insurance for securing heavenly bliss in consideration of an earthly premium of so many prayers a day to Allah. Christianity has at times degenerated into a similar condition, but it has at most periods had infinitly more to do with morals than any other religion. No other religion is so distinctly supernatural in its claims, nor so aggressiv in assuming charge of moral conduct.

What we shall hereafter say will be confined, therefore, mainly to the moral influences of the Christian religion, except where others are mentioned.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Old-time Orthodoxy.

Some fifty-eight years ago (1828–30), the writer, with his friends, was seriously alarmed for the preservation of our republic from the vigorous assaults of the dominant orthodox priesthood. Their plan was to enforce the idea that this was a Christian government, on the strength of which their idea was to unite church and state.

A review of the battle-field might not be uninteresting even at this late date. The Bible and Tract societies and all religious orthodox bodies acted as a unit in this one controling effort, and, had their object been praiseworthy, would hav elicited praise. The program, without much effort at concealment, was this: Sunday was to be acknowledged and enforced as a legal constitutional "Sabbath," and as such all violations of its sanctity were to be piously and criminally prosecuted. All Sunday traffic was to be suspended—even the carrying of the United States mail! No vessel was to weigh anchor for sea on Sunday. No livery stable man was to hire for pleasure horses or vehicles for Sunday recreation. All public avenues to and from the city were to be closed. All public ferries were to be suspended on Sundays. All ice cream and pleasure gardens were to be closed on Sunday. And, in fine, a man's religious belief and piety were to be a test of his fitness for office.

It would hardly be believed at this late day to what extremes some of these pious fanatics carried their ideas of godliness. One Rev. Dr. Strong, in Albany, in 1826 asserted that the existence of the republic up to this period was to him a wonder, as it had never been blessed with a Christian president. From Washington down, all, all, were Infidels. Washington and the whole crew were disbelievers in the holy Bible. He predicted dire calamity to New York city, inasmuch as its new sheriff, Mr. M. M. Noah, was a birthright Jew.

From an old undisturbed colonial custom a few chains had been allowed before the street doors of some of the old churches. Hence, taking advantage of this custom, every obscure place of prayer or puritanical pious fervor—save the Quaker meeting-houses and the Jewish synagogs—ran chain obstructions before their doors, much to the annoyance of travelers. On the principle that the end justifies the means, monster petitions were placed before Congress with signatures obtained from factories, school-children, poor-houses, and hospitals. General Jackson, Henry Clay, Webster, Sam Houston, and Adams were then before the political world, and were promptly interrogated by the saints in regard to their religious faiths. Of course, the tallest kind of lying was indulged in. Each demurely admitted that he was a sinner and needed the prayers of all good Christians.

This was the state of affairs when Miss Frances Wright, the champion of Freethought—the pupil of the elder Robert Owen, the admired of General Lafayette, the coadjutor of Robert Dale Owen—arrived in New York in 1821. It is thought that the collapse of the nefarious orthodox scheme might be dated from this period. Her radical utterances soon brought down upon her the maledictions of all the saints, and incredible falsehoods were vented against her. But she was even more than a Joan of Arc. Joan, it is true, accomplished the liberation of a thankless kingdom, and deservedly receives the admiration of the world; but Miss Wright strove for the emancipation of a world of shackled thinkers. From her "Hall of Science" in New York emanated a series of debates and debaters which seemed to set the world in a furor of thinking. This, together with her own personal classic lectures at the old Park Theater and in other cities on the subject of Freethought, begot a spirit of investigation which has ever since been onward. Almost the first indication of rebellion against orthodoxy was the general destruction of these puritanical Sunday chains. The impetuosity of our city firemen could brook no obstruction in the passage of their "mercheens;" so down came chains, posts, and all. Even the time-venerated chains of "old Trinity" fell before the firemen's axe. For our old firemen (as we all know) "were of purer eyes than to behold iniquity."

It would be pleasant and instructiv to dwell upon the labors and excellences of this talented heroin in the early days of Freethought, but we can only recommend a perusal of her biography by Mr. D. M. Bennett, in his biographical sketches of "The World's Sages and Thinkers," for sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER'S bookstore.

Such was the effect of free discussion that it seemed to impregnate even the orthodox churches. It seemed to arouse a restless spirit of inquiry into all subjects connected with human emancipation. It was like the explosion of a dynamite bomb among this apathetic, bigoted body of orthodox saints. It evidently gave an additional impetus to our champions of antislavery. It provoked an inquiry into man's inherent rights, and thinkers began to take sides even among the saints, little dreaming where the principle of emancipation would "fetch up?"

About this time several reverends of talent, and in high estimation, in their holy fervor became somewhat logical, and in bad odor with their flocks, by carrying this penchant too far. One Dr. Cox, pastor of a fashionable church at St. John's Park, in descanting on our blessed Lord and Savior, described him personally as not being of the pure Caucasian lineage, but rather oriental, of dark complexion, with curly locks, or what would now be termed "a gentleman of color." This was too much even for some of his patrician saints, hence a schism. It was, in fact, too much even for orthodoxy. His enemies wickedly asserted that he had made it clear that our blessed Redeemer was a nigger! The learned doctor was publicly insulted in the streets, and the windows of his once popular tabernacle were summarily demolished.

D. BRUCE.

Brooklyn, E. D.

Growth of the Productiv Power.

The power of production has been so largely increased of late years that it is estimated that five men can now accomplish as much as six men could in 1870 or eight men in 1850. At this rate of knocking off a man every ten years we shall eventually reach a time when only one man in fifty will hav to do any work at all and when a day's labor may be done before breakfast.—Daily Paper.

And when this time comes, what is to become of the unemployed under our present competitiv system. Tariff and anti-tariff sinks into insignificance alongside of this gigantic question. Machinery in the last twenty-five years has trebled production and at the same time thrown one-fourth of the skilled laborers out of employment, and made them in a manner nonconsumers. The capitalist buys the machine and reaps all the benefit, while the workingman is forced to take the lowest wages he can be starved into accepting, for the competition in labor is increased by every new machine the capitalist puts to work. There has to be some system devised in place of this competitiv one, by which the workingman may reap a fair share of the profit made at his expense by the aid of machinery. This will be done, and the sooner the rich monopolists see it and apply the remedy, the better it will be for all, for if they resist and refuse to apply the remedy, they hav not seen the last of such scenes as took place at East St. Louis but yesterday. I am glad to see that some men are willing to adopt the following plan, which is a long step in the right direction. I inclose it in a slip that I cut out of a paper. I think the firm deserves a free advertisment for leading the way by which the workingman may get simple justice:

AUBURN, ME.—On Saturday last the firm of A. Cushman & Co., shoe manufacturers, laid before a meeting of their 750 employees the details of a plan whereby the net profits of the business shall be divided among the workmen. The workmen will receive as high wages as are paid by competing firms. The services as managers of the members of the firm will be compensated by stated salaries, interest on the plant, and a reasonable amount for wear and tear will be allowed, and the balance of the earnings will be distributed among the men in the proportion that the labor of each contributes to the product. The employees appointed a committee to help carry out the plan.

Steubenville, O. JOHN DOWNES.

IGNATIUS.—In December, A.D. 115, the Emperor Trajan was stopping at Antioch. A fearful earthquake which lasted seven days and came near killing the emperor himself, created such excitement that Ignatius was sacrificed to appease the wrath of the gods. In the absence of any further evidence on the subject, Ignatius has not as much claim to the title of a Christian martyr as one of the Salem witches.—Antichrist.

Chicago Secular News.

Last Sunday one of our pious and aristocratic Presbyterian congregations was worked up to a high degree of indignation by the presence, in the midst of their sweet hour of prayer, of a case of competition altogether too severe for their pastor—the din of a lot of louder blowers than himself. While he, with his prime cheek, was bravely appealing to a personal God he knows does not exist, a Dutch band, with brazen instruments, put a climax on his prayer, and a number of old bald-heads in the congregation were thrown into such a state of excitement that attacks of apoplexy are hourly expected. They wanted to rush out and annihilate the band, but a sober second thought reminded them that such matters were attended with some risk, and as none of them cared to "fight for Jesus just now," they concluded to postpone the matter to some other time, or call upon the police. This church is situated on the north side and picnic parties hav been accustomed on Sundays to march past on their way to the many groves, headed by bands of music; but this freedom from theological tyranny is doomed to disappear by the almighty edict of Captain Schaack, the swashbuckling bully of the Chicago avenue bastile. At the close of the services, it is said, some two hundred male members of the congregation marched in procession to the police station to complain of the above disturbance of their devotions. When Schaack saw the crowd coming he fancied they were some of Spies's supporters, and it is said that he fainted, and needed a couple of tumblers of water dashed into his face to bring him to. He was then so rejoiced at his deliverance that he promised that no Dutch bands should desecrate on Sundays any streets in the vicinity of said church, and that the police should be instructed to keep them several blocks away until an ordinance should be passed suppressing music on the streets on the "blessed Sabbath" altogether. A petition was then signed by those present to the common council asking for an ordinance to abolish musical parades on Sunday. So you see that our public streets are no longer public property, and police are to be paid to enforce their immunity from disturbing strains while worshiping, not the God of the United States, but that of old Abe—the original old Abe—Ike and Jake et al. The petition is to be circulated among all the churches, and the Young Men's Christian Association are to affix their X mark on it. The council will scarcely dare ignore so powerful, important, and "altogether lovely" a lot of citizens, so they think.

Captain Schaack was exposed by Spies and others some time ago for outraging a young girl who was held for some petty larceny. Although the evidence was conclusiv, this worthy remains in power, and anyone supposed to hav the slightest sympathy with the Anarchists is pounced upon by him and treated to a dose of the "sweat-box" and other tortures. That this is no exaggeration will be seen by reading this excerpt from this morning's paper:

Captain Schaack has at last admitted the truth concerning Julius Oppenheimer. Shortly after the Desplaines street riot of May 4th the man was arrested and placed in a cell at the East Chicago Avenue station. No charge was placed against him, and nobody knew where he was until a liberated prisoner informed his friends that Julius was a prisoner in Captain Schaack's dungeon. It seems that after being in the place for weeks Oppenheimer became aware that another prisoner had been locked up near enough to him to admit of conversation. To him Oppenheimer told his story, saying that he was there under no charge, was treated as any prisoner, and had been in confinement for over six weeks. He begged the man to do something for him when he got out. Information was conveyed to the prisoner's friends, but they say that when they attempted to see him the police at the East Chicago Avenue station would not admit that they had such a man at all.

The burgomaster was not slow in expressing his opiniou of the newspapers who hav been uncomfortably truthful in speaking of North Side affairs, but had it not been for those selfsame newspapers Oppenheimer and other unfortunates who hav the ill luck to fall into the clutches of the North Side despot might rot in his dungeon cells, with nobody the wiser. "Mysterious disappearances" hav been frequent of late, and it might be in order to search the cells of the East Chicago Avenue police station.

When Sergeant Montgomery was questioned by another reporter if he thought they had a right to act that way, as it was plainly in violation of law, that worthy, a fair sample of his superior officer, said, "We don't care a damn for the law; we are doing as we like here, and are going to keep on doing it."

The advent of A. R. Parsons in court on Monday was a genuin surprise to the Chicago detectivs. Some two hundred had been hunting for him all over the country. It was not a surprise to the writer, as counsel for the defense had asked for his opinion on the matter of his surrender. It shows the complete innocence of Parsons. That a man able to elude the whole force of the police and newspapers should surrender himself is prima facie evidence of both innocence and heroism. Judge Gary's rulings on the examination of witnesses are so astoundingly partial that Captain Black told the writer this morning that even were his clients convicted the instrument would not be worth the paper it was written on, as the Supreme Court would be compelled to reverse the decision. Nevertheless, they expect to prove their innocence, even before such jurymen as the sheriff and state's attorney hav so carefully selected from the roll of citizen voters.

The cases of faith cures reported at Tolono, Ill., hav been cruelly robbed of their wonderful religious aspect by the statements of the two physicians who attended the lady supposed to hav been so miraculously cured, which statements doubtless you hav received ere this. E. A. Stevens.

The Tent in Wayne Co., New York.

The Tent was pitched for the first time in the season of 1886, on Thursday, June 17th, in the village of Marion, Wayne county, N. Y.

The most bitter and determined opposition was manifested, and every endeavor possible made to keep people away; even those who never attended church were warned "if they went to the Tent lecture they would be marked just so long as they lived in Marion." Yet many attended who never, under ordinary circumstances, could hav been induced to listen to facts against Christianity and in favor of Secularism.

I circulated a large number of copies of The Truth Seeker; only two copies (so far as I could learn) came to grief. One dear, devout follower of the meek and lowly who "believed every word of her Bible, especially the New Testament," and so, of course, desired to "Prove all things, hold fast to that which is good" (1 Thes. v, 21), snatched a copy from the hands of her "lord and master" and tore it up, throwing the pieces in the street.

Another gentle Christian of the masculin gender snatched a copy from the hands of a young lady, and, with harsh, bitter denunciation, tore it in two and flung it in the road. Doubtless the pieces were picked up, and, if by some honest-hearted persons, will lead them from the horror of fierce sectarian hate to the more ennobling principles of Secularism. Thus the good seed sown in bitterness will yield fruit of truth, and incite to ministrations of love and gentleness. Mrs. Reynolds delivered her lecture, "A Woman's Reasons for the Gospel of Humanity," on Sunday evening, and this redoubled the excitement, and set the already seething caldron of bigotry to boiling over, and it made a most savage spluttering. The little village is terribly excited, but the more rational of them are reading their Bible to make sure for themselvs what it teaches. The discussion with Rev. Boyes, Baptist minister at Williamson, resulted in large attendance each of the three evenings despite the unfavorable weather.

The Rev. Boyes was one of those who "rushed in where angels fear to tread." I loaned him a number of Liberal books and a large assortment of Truth Seekers, so he could learn something of the teachings of Secularism. He was sadly lacking in knowledge of Bible, history, theology, or politics. He occupied one-half hour in showing copies of The Truth Seeker and expatiating on the cartoons, convulsing the audience with laughter. In behalf of the Truth Seeker Company I returned grateful thanks for the very excellent advertisment, and added, what he had omitted, subscription price was only $3 per year—four months for $1.

Rev. Boyes did the best he could, and I admired his stick-to-it-iveness. The third night he changed the order to forty-five minute speeches instead of thirty, and after the discussion felt so keenly his defeat that he tried to harang the audience, but they beat a rapid retreat. The Christians say it was not fair, on account of their champion's lack of ability. But Boyes was the best they could get to discuss the question.

On Friday, June 25th, I pitched the tent here at Palmyra; shall remain over July 5th, and then go to Montezuma, N. Y., where, thanks to those indomitable champions of Secularism, Ross and Travis, the way is well prepared for effectual Tent labor.

If the New York Freethinkers' Association Convention is held at White Sulphur Springs, I shall go with Tent from Montezuma to Boonton, N. J., and be there from July 22d to August 2d. Friends in New Jersey, and those on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, should write me at once.

If the meeting of the New York Freethinkers' Association is not held at White Sulphur Springs, I shall hope to reach Ballston Spa later in the season with the Tent. At Boonton, New Jersey, I hope to be joined by friend Kramer, who will for the balance of the season fill the arduous duties of Tentmaster, which duties prove too severe a tax on me.

I hope every Liberal in the state will write to The Truth Seeker expressing wishes in regard to the Convention, and that a large, enthusiastic, and glorious success may result. C. B. Reynolds.

Spiritual Photography.

It was my intention to furnish at this time a report of the proceedings of the Investigating Committee on June 20th and 23d, but an unexpected circumstance makes further delay desirable. The members of the committee wish an opportunity to confer upon their report, which will giv all the results attained up to that time.

Henry M. Parkhurst.

Death of an Old Land Reformer.

The funeral of Mr. William Rowe, who died Thursday, June 24th, took place at his late residence, Hackensack Bridge, N. J., on Sunday, June 27th. Mr. Rowe was in his sixty-ninth year. Besides relativs, a large number of sympathizing friends attended. There were present many of the member of the original Land Reform Association, among whom were the veteran Lewis Masquerier, Andrew H. Day, David Peirson, Henry Beeny, Frank M. Smith, Dr. Weeks, Victor Drury, William Hanson, Samuel Leavitt, J. K. Ingalls, Henry Macdonough, and others from this city, besides his associates in Bergen and Jersey City. Mr. Ingalls delivered an address at the house, and a favorite poem of the deceased, "When We Lay Us Down to Sleep," was recited at the grave, as he had requested. He was buried in a beautiful plot in Arlington cemetery, near Newark. The following extracts are from Mr. Ingalls's address:

Dear Friends: We are assembled to pay our tribute to the memory of our brother Rowe, and to do the offices which circumstance and custom require. The mysteries of life and death are beyond our mental grasp. We know only that we are a part of the Infinit life, and can never be severed from it. Our dear friend was at an early age enfranchised from those fears which darken and depress the mind. His natural love of truth, his deep and conscientious regard for right, his broad love of mankind, left no room for superstition. It was enough for him to be alive and able to do. In service he found security, in duty pleasure, in love law.

It seems scarcely necessary to say that our brother has laid him down to sleep at last in peace with his own mind and with all men. If he is to appear before another and higher tribunal, it will be as a friend of his fellow-being, as an advocate of truth, as a worker for all that ennobles and elevates the human soul.

With such a record the grave can hav no terror, death no fear. It is the laying down of the tired body. It is the closing of our earthday's labor, the sinking of the sun behind the hills, after its appointed hours of giving light and warmth to the earth. Our brother's life, his work, is over, and has now become a part of the possession of the race.

He has builded well. Into the most ordinary duties he has put his best strength, his best capacities, and wrought faithfully everywhere. Whoever has dealt with him in any way has found him conscientious and upright.

In his social and domestic relations he was simply a true man. And though the loss of such a husband, such a friend, is by so much the more severe, so is our consolation so much the greater, that our lives hav been freshened and upheld by relation to so noble a nature, and so true a friend.

After his removal to New York he became acquainted with George H. Evans from whom he first received the ideas about land ownership, which after became to him a "gospel of good will to men." This cause never afterward lacked his devotion and friendly aid.

And he lived to see these ideas go out and spread far and wide, until the poet, the philosopher, and scientist hav taken up their advocacy and acknowledged their relation to all political equality, and to social economy and true religion as well.

With but limited time, taken often from the requisit rest from exhausting toil, and with meager opportunities, he took up the study of the question in all its bearings upon industry and social life, and with his plain but vigorous modes of thought solved it. There were unity and symmetry in his thought; he was consistent with himself. . . One had only to inquire what was right on any important question to know where to find William Rowe.

Of his relation to religion in its popular sense I desire to say a word. He was no scoffer at things held sacred by others of sincere mind. But he was impatient of the shallow hypocrisies of the worldly religions, and of every priestly wile to enslave the minds of the timid but confiding people.

To the superstitious idea of evil he he opposed the natural conception that evil springs from ignorance and misdirection. Good he placed in the utility of actions, evil in the mis-estimation of what would be productiv of good to self or others. He found the great stimulus to greed and unlimited gratification of desire to depend upon the ability to obtain it at the cost of another than one's self. This constitutes the sin of slavery, monopoly, or any class rule which puts it in the power of one to gratify desire at another's expense.

Thus, our brother had formed for himself an economic, moral, and even religious standard. Reduced to practice, it was to make him faithful in whatever he did, to take never what another had earned, to pay himself the cost of every satisfaction.

With each feeling of sorrow and regret for the loss we hav sustained, there arises an assuring consciousness that to hav been related, to hav been known and been loved by so true a man has made brighter and richer our own lives; that the world is better that such a noble life has been and labored in it; and that although that life is now spent, and his work now done, they will leave their influence on lives still here, and render easier and lighter the burdens which the poor and unfriended hav to bear. He was "the friend of the poor" in its best and truest sense, and as such will be remembered.

Lectures and Meetings.

The Spiritualists and Liberalists of southwest Michigan will hold their annual five-day camp-meeting at Lake Cora, near Pawpaw, August 5th to 9th. Speakers engaged: O. P. Kellogg, of Ohio, and Mrs. E. C. Woodruff, of Michigan.

W. F. Jamieson is engaged to deliver the Fourth of July oration at Wentworth, Dakota. He will also deliver two lectures on Sunday. The three following Sundays he will hold grove meetings in Sterling Center, Delavan, and Elysian Lake. Address at Lake City, Minn.

Edward B. Aveling, one of the best of the English scientific and Freethought lecturers, will make a visit to this country this fall, and would like to make engagements for lectures before Freethought and Socialistic societies. His fees will be moderate. Parties desiring his services will please address W. L. Rosenburg, 261 East Tenth street, New York city.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged	$2,489.87
Shoshone	2.50
Dillon, Montana, per G. W. Emerick, B. F. White, Thompson and Blivens, T. F. Chapman, W. P. Dayne, N. M. Wilson, L. C. Fyhrie. W. G. Galigher, Adolph Eliel, Lambert Eliel, F. W. Poindexter, G. F. Paul, T. Huber, Dan Chapman, Richard Dean, O. Klemm, J. A. Leason, Benj. Dittmore, Benj. Freman, Nelson and Mickens, W. F. Eastman, Bloomer and Halliday, John T. Yor, A. S. Rife, Holcombe, John O. Leary, N. A. Stiles, R. J. Scearce, D. Lamont, D. F. Reinhart, N. M. White, Kline and Callanan, O. E. Moore, Geo. Savage, Talbot, E. J. Nelson, Chas. A. Asman, John Beach, and others	31.75
Mrs. L. E. Hanson	1.00
W. J. Seal,	1.00
Ben. H. Dettmer	2.00
D. L. Kemper	1.00
W. T. Eastman,	1.00
B. M. Carrington	1.00
Butte City, per Dr. O. B. Whitford, J. C. Singer, Julian Smith, Jas. Broughton, E. D. Dunkle, E. N. Dunkle, J. F. Beck, G. W. Stapleton, Fred. Cook, David Hall, Peter McCauley, Charles Elis, Mr. Rogers, and others	42.00
Total	$2,573.12

News and Notes.

SHOSHONE FALLS.

On Saturday morning at 4 o'clock I left my snug quarters at the Dewey House, Shoshone, for a twenty-five-mile ride over the lava-beds to the now-famous Shoshone Falls, which every traveler must witness, for it is one of the grandest spectacles on the continent. The ride was exceedingly uncomfortable, for the weather had changed; dark clouds were in the sky, and furious gales from the enormous icy ranges of the North swept the air and cut to the skin like a razor. On the bleakest hills of New England, where the snow lies six feet deep, I never suffered more from the cold. But the horses sped along at a glorious rate, and the onward motion kept my courage to "the sticking place." I earnestly longed for the beams of the rising sun to decorate the endless wastes of sage brush and bleak buttes that rose here and there, relics of a once tremendous volcanic upheaval. It did rise, and a breezy warmth seemed to come with its opening smile. But, alas! the glory was only for a moment, for soon the king of day was enveloped in thick folds of cloud, from which it did not emerge for the rest of the journey. In four hours, however, we had traversed the desert. For the last few miles we could see the floating mist of the mighty cataract in the gray of the morning, rising to the hight of nearly two thousand feet above the surging base. We could hear only the faint noise of the falls, like the distant roll of the ocean. All of a sudden, in the turn of the winding road, we came upon the wonderful grandeur of the scenery. We were at the top of immense walls of molten rock of every variety of shape, and one thousand feet below we saw the circular valley and the glistening waters. It was a magnificent picture, unsurpassed for ruggedness, wildness, sublimity, and terror. It seemed to stretch away like a palace of the giants, a fit place for the Walpurgis Night's Revel, where witches and devils and ghosts and hobgoblins might hav all that was appropriate to their tremendous pranks. Tam O'Shanter never looked upon a scene half so bewildering in its grotesque and awful enchantments. What a terribly hot time nature must hav had of it a million years ago in these vast gorges —a blazing hell suddenly covered with illimitable billows, like cold water upon heated glass, and at once the boiling mass breaks into ten thousand ruins, while the busy waves mold the countless fragments into massiv shapes, that giv a marvelous setting to the floods that pour down the descent of two hundred and seventy feet. Snake river is indeed a very remarkable river. It winds about through an immense extent of country like the coils of an enormous serpent. Its bosom is treacherous, and its whirlpools will swallow trees of hundreds of feet in length, tossing them into an upright position and swallowing them as if they were no more than so many pins. The stanchest boat in one of these eddies would go to eternity on the lightning express. If one tumbles into his snakeship he is yanked under and only reappears miles away. The strongest swimmer has but little chance if he gets into the jaws of this monster. Snake river is indeed well named—brilliant, beautiful, terrible, treacherous, and deceitful; enchanting in its very malignity, it fascinates with its fierce glory, and one feels almost like jumping into its seething embrace of death. It made me shudder to look at its gleaming folds.

Down, down, we went along the jutting sides of the canyon until we struck the valley, and came upon the only dwelling and hotel in the place, a tent. An elegant building has been put up, and will soon be ready for visitors, but meanwhile all that we had for accommodation was this weatherbeaten residence. We were glad of it, for the rain was beginning to pour down just as we arrived, and we were hungry too.

I was glad to see one woman amid these primeval strata. It made me realize the human world, and I knew also that I would hav a good breakfast. There were a couple of romping children also, and a little baby, and I felt that the Garden of Eden was right here in his santanic majesty's own domain. Before taking a bite, however, we hurried over the huge boulders to catch the first glimpse of the falls. We reached the crest of a volcanic surge and stood almost face to face with the thundering battalions, as with white banners they went over the precipitous rocks. Two hundred and seventy feet they went as if into a boiling caldron, and a cloud of steam arose as though from the very bosom of Dante's Inferno; but it was not steam when it got to our faces, but a drenching mist, and we soon went back to our cabin. After the breakfast was over the sun seemed to be coming out, and we crossed the river in a skiff about one hundred yards above the cataract. It was perfectly safe, for we were in the hands of a skilful boatman who knew all the currents of the river, but I had a few tremors as I saw the foaming rapids, the image of eternity so near; but the pleasure of the exciting passage between the towering cliffs, and the view along the vista of mighty walls through which the floods leaped, would conquer fear; and indeed the element of apparent danger only added to the wild joy that one felt in this voyage right across the very jaws of destruction. On the other side we visited the hotel, from whence many beautiful views of the falls can be had. The rain, however, came down so furiously that we soon returned to our snug quarters in the tent and warmed our chilled limbs over the blazing fire of the kitchen stove, and watched with great interest the preparations for dinner, having nothing else to do, for there was not a book or a newspaper to be had. After dinner the weather was quite moody. For awhile the sun came out brightly, and I sat upon the rocks and watched with dreaming soul the wondrous panorama that was round about me. I roamed through the million years of the life of this planet, and dramas of terrific convulsions passed before my mind's eye. I seemed to be in the midst of a huge battlefield; vast castles rose athwart my vision—turrets and battlements; and against these a thousand cohorts had rushed and fallen back in slaughtered ranks, and here they were petrified in indescribable confusion, rolled together at the base of these insurmountable pinnacles; while, like a great organ, the cataract poured its music, sweeping against the cliffs like an invisible ocean pealing the requiem of these dead armies of the past. The sunset and the moon were both drowned in heavy rains, and I was obliged to seek the shelter of the tent and go to bed early, hoping for a brilliant to-morrow.

It came indeed, a bright Sunday in this glorious temple of nature. Saturday midnight my friend Senter, and La Munyon, a North Platte friend, too, came with other companions, and so there was a pleasant troop of pilgrims for a "Sabbath day's journey" around the falls. The rain-bows waved amid the everchanging clouds of mist, and flashed upon the brow of the cataract as if it were a lady fair, and the sun in ardor were decorating her with all colors from his glowing treasury, weaving splendid jewels for the face of his jubilant bride. On the side where the hotel is built there are two or three rocks which jut out so that one can look almost directly into the roaring abyss. The scene is simply amazing. All up and down the banks are different views, and from every point a new splendor is seen. The main thing we did on Sunday was to go down the trail, a sheer descent of nearly five hundred feet, to the banks of the river below. This descent was the tug of war. We had to hang on by rocks, bushes, stumps, etc., and to lose one's grip at times meant a tumble of some hundreds of feet or so. We had to climb up the branches of trees in order to get down, and down branches in order to go up, and it was a tortuous path indeed. The scene at the bottom was of surpassing loveliness. We could look at the falls, and they seemed, as the mists rolled away, to flow from the sky itself—as if a waterspout were bursting from the very heart of heaven—while the river at our feet was rolling and breaking like the tides of the sea. Along the base of the cliffs are caves and grottos with fountains and moss-covered arches adorned with ferns, and grasses, and flowers, delicious retreats from the warm day. Some of these we could not visit on account of the hight of the waters. We penetrated, however, to the "Vaulted Dome," which is one hundred and seventy-two feet high, and from an opening in the top flows a tiny stream glistening in pearly drops all the way down, and falling in a sheen of spray into a crystal basin; and here one can take a sip of water limpid and sparkling as that of the springs of Helicon. Just outside of this fairylike chamber is the Sentinel Rock, two hundred feet high. There is also the Natural Bridge, Washington's Profile, the Devil's Hole, the Bear, and the Eagle's Rock, where the baldheaded eagle complacently nods its head and watches its young amid the roaring of the waters. There is a vast variety of scenery about these falls, and one could spend a week amid their stupendous surroundings.

At this time I hav seen the falls in all their volume and power, for the river is at its hight, but the falls are more beautiful when the waters are low, for then they are clear, and from a dark-blue break into dazzling white, and the cataracts also hav more forms of grace, the emerald moss can be seen beneath the veil of waters, and the waters float like delicate lace and seem to run all along the rocks into streams and brooklets mingling and parting in a network of rainbows. These falls hav not the grandeur and majesty of Niagara, but they are more picturesque. They present a greater number of scenes. The surroundings are more magnificent, for above the falls are the immense bluffs which in themselvs make a wondrous landscape.

We left the falls on Sunday afternoon. Our last view was from the top of the bluff that stretches from the lava beds. Here we could gaze down a thousand feet upon the cataract and the wide abyss. I crawled upon my hands and knees to the edge, and fairly trembled as I looked over into this awful chasm. I thought the devil, or sonething, was drawing me right over and down into that dizzying mass of rocks, and so I crept back. I left my pilgrim staff in one of the cracks of the lava. I wonder if I shall find it there when I return.

The ride back in the warm Sunday afternoon was delightful. Amid the sage brush could be seen the brilliant cactus flower, the bright "snowballs," ten thousand daisies, and wild flowers by the multitude. Far off along the southern horizon could be seen the Goose Creek Mountains, to the westward the Nevada range, and to the northward the Sawtooth, all covered with snow and shining in the glorious atmosphere. The jack-rabbits jumped up on every side and made quite a procession for our advancing way, as many as a dozen leaping along at a time with their enormous ears sticking up like banners. The sunset was just over, and the full moon was making all the earth beautiful when we drove into Shoshone, and I went to bed with my mind full of the wonderful sceneries of that never-to-be-forgotten journey. It seemed as if I had passed through a land of enchantment, and drank of the elixir of the gods. No witch who ever rode through the midnight air on a broomstick could hav a more exultant passage amid the phantasmagoria of nature's suberb freaks. I almost felt as if I had seen the devil himself or his throne,

> Which far
> Outshone the wealth of Ormus or of Ind;
> Or where the gorgeous East, with richest hand,
> Showers on her kings barbaric pearl and gold.

On Tuesday evening I lectured at Shoshone. On account of failure to secure a hall, I was obliged to postpone my lecture at Broadford. As no satifactory arrangements could be made at Eagle Rock, I gave up my appointments there. I came on directly from Shoshone to Dillon, Montana, where I hav received a delightful welcome. I lectured last evening in the Court House. The hall was filled to overflowing, many being obliged to stand. I lecture here again this evening. I find this one of the brightest and liveliest towns I hav yet struck, and my first experience of the Montana people is extremely agreeable. I am now at the pleasant home of G. W. Emerick, a subscriber of THE TRUTH SEEKER, one of the "old-timers" of this country, and he is a "rustler" indeed. With only twenty-four hours' notice he gave me, by his tremendous energy, one of the largest audiences I hav had during my whole trip. With a few more such workers as Mr. Emerick, many a brilliant attack could be made which now has to be abandoned because there is nobody to prepare the way, and so indifference prevails and orthodox stupidity continues to reign where there might be some flashes of progress. There is plenty of Liberal force in this country. It needs organization and concentration. One man in Wood River said I ought to be hung; that shows he is beginning to think. He has got a new idea, although not a good one, so far as I am concerned, for I am in no hurry for martyrdom; yet, so far as he is concerned, it is a new idea, and so is a blessing to him; and if I can only get another one into his head with it he may be converted. The Methodist minister at Bellevue thundered against me on Sunday evening. He was at my lectures, and I invited him to the platform that he might free his mind, but he would not meet me face to face. He declared from his pulpit that I ought to be struck dead by the hand of heaven. I suppose I must get my life insured at once. He said I had more liver than heart. That is a sign of good health. I had rather hav my liver any time than his soul. If my liver is all right, my spiritual welfare is assured; I hav the foundation for an earthly paradise. An activ, heretical liver is better than the whole heart of orthodoxy, for the liver is a living lion, while orthodoxy is a dying donkey, its only sign of life being the faint flutter of its ears, which will make a big tomb for its corpse one of these days. Well, I am glad I made the "fur fly" on the poor orthodox head; perhaps it may shake a spark of life into the cerebellum, and giv it a little "true inwardness."

I shall lecture at Dillon again on Sunday afternoon and evening, July 18th. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Dillon, Mon., June 18, 1886.

Communications.

Jefferson and the Declaration of Independence.

The following, from an autograph letter written by Thomas Jefferson to Joseph Delaplain, April 12, 1817, may be of interest to the reader:

"Your statements of the corrections of the Declaration of Independence by Dr. Franklin and Mr. Adams are neither of them at all correct. I should think it better to say generally that the rough draft was communicated to those two gentlemen, who each of them made 2 or 3 short and verbal alterations only, but even this is laying more stress on mere composition than it merits, for that alone was mine; the sentiments were of all America."

This agrees with Jefferson's letter to Madison, in which he says: "I consented; I drew it; but before I reported it to the committee I communicated it separately to Dr. Franklin and Mr. Adams, requesting their corrections, because they were the two members of whose judgments and amendments I wished most to hav the benefit before presenting it to the committee, and you hav seen the original paper now in my hands, with the corrections of Dr. Franklin and Mr. Adams interlined in their own handwritings. There alterations were two or three only, and merely verbal. I then wrote a fair copy, reported it to the committee, and from them unaltered to Congress."

Another statement by Jefferson is contained in his autograph inscription on the face of a mahogany writing case given to a friend by Jefferson a few months before his death. It is dated Monticello, Nov. 18, 1825, and reads as follows:

"Thomas Jefferson givs this writing-desk to Joseph Coolidge, Jr., as a memorial of his affection. The desk was made from a drawing of his own, by Ben. Randall, cabinet-maker, of Philadelphia, with whom he lodged on his first arrival in that city in May, 1776 and is the identical one on which he wrote the Declaration of Independence."

John Adams's statement (see his works, vol. 2, pp. 412–514) corroborates Jefferson as to the latter's authorship of the Declaration, while differing somewhat as to details, especially as to a sub-committee. "Mr. Jefferson," says Adams, "came into Congress in June, 1775, and brought with him a reputation for literature, science, and a happy talent for composition. Writings of his were handed about remarkable for their peculiar felicity of expression. Though a silent member in Congress, he was so prompt, frank, explicit, and decisiv upon committees and in conversation, that he soon seized upon my heart, and upon this occasion I gave him my vote and did all in my power to procure the vote of others. . . Jefferson proposed to me to make the draft. I said, 'I will not.' 'Why?' 'Reasons enough.' 'What can be your reason?' 'Reason first: You are a Virginian, and a Virginian ought to appear at the head of this business. Reason second: I am obnoxious, suspected, unpopular, and you are very much otherwise. Reason third: You can write ten times better than I can.' 'Well,' said Jefferson, 'if you are decided, I will do as well as I can.' 'Very well. When you hav drawn it up, we will hav a meeting.' A meeting we accordingly had, and conned the paper over. I was delighted with its high tone and the flights of oratory with which it abounded. . . I consented to report it, and do not now remember that I made or suggested a single alteration. We reported it to the committee of five. We were all in haste, Congress was impatient, and the instrument was reported, as I believe, in Jefferson's handwriting, as he first drew it."

Daniel Webster, in his Boston address of August 2, 1826, said: "The original draft, as brought by him [Jefferson] from his study, and submitted to the other members of the committee, with interlineations in the handwriting of Dr. Franklin, and others in that of Mr. Adams, was in Mr. Jefferson's possession at the time of his death. The merit of this paper is Mr. Jefferson's. . . As a composition the Declaration is Mr. Jefferson's. It is the projection of his mind, and the high honor of it belongs to him clearly and absolutely."

In his centennial oration in Boston, Hon. Robert C. Winthrop said: "As often as has been observed by me, the original draft of that paper, still extant in the archives of the state department at Washington, and as I hav observed how very few changes were made or were suggested by the illustrious men associated with its author on the committee for its preparation, it has seemed to me to be as marvelous a composition of its kind and for its purpose as the annals of mankind can show. The earliest honors of this day certainly may well be paid here and throughout the country to the young Virginian of the masterly pen."

Careful study of the writingsof Jefferson has satisfied me that the objections which hav been offered against his authorship by a few individuals who hav claimed the honor for Paine are without good foundation. Nothing is gained by attempts to make Jefferson, the Freethinking statesman of America, a man honored for his integrity as well as his ability, appear as meanly claiming credit for a paper which he did not write. All honor to Paine for his noble writings; but all honor to Jefferson, too, for his great service. Honor to whom honor is due. ——.

Government: What Is It?

In the mind of the masses government is an idol that can do no wrong. In truth it is a monstrosity, composed of two leading features growing out of two of the lower or animal faculties in man's nature; that is to say, selfishness and force, or acquisitivness and combativness, the combativ element to support and promote the selfish element. This view excludes from "government" the higher faculties of veneration, love, and the like. To see what government is under such conditions, imagin, if you can, an individual wholly divested of every humane feeling while supporting such a nature by whatever of brute force he possessed. Now multiply this individual by the number of citizens in a commonwealth or kingdom, and you hav our idea of so-called government, for no other elements in their nature enter into the organization called government but these. This makes government what we claim, to wit, an omnipotent force supporting omnipotent selfishness. Do you deny this? Does it not murder wholesale in war to enforce its selfish exactions or to carry on its wars of conquests and subjugation? Certainly so. Where do corporate agents go for charters to despoil the citizen but to government, where selfishness is an organized omnipotency? Where such grants are made, don't you see government, by implication, binds itself to furnish whatever of force is necessary to make the grant effectiv? This explains why the military always and everywhere is ranged on the side of the despoiler. Look at the collection of rents, interest, etc.; these are legally established rights, or wrongs rather; the state binds itself to their collection where resistance is offered. Don't you see this is ranging the whole of society, through government, against its individual members? That is, the whole against the parts in behalf of a part—in behalf of that part already the stronger one; stronger by the grant, stronger in influence and cunning in securing the grant or taking advantage by using such grants.

The omnipotency of society or government over its members is seen in the imprisoning of them for crime, taking their lives for greater crimes, sending them to the gibbet or block for holding views antagonistic to those generally received, as illustrated on every page of history, to say nothing of conscript laws taking whole blocks of the population for the work of wholesale murder. If so potent as this over the person of its members, why less so over their property? Is it less so over property when the property of the citizen is subject to use by the state to promote the interest of a corporation if taken nominally "to promote the public good?" Take another case: government offers a bounty to those who win in the market as gamblers, in the shape of usury on all gains, but puts a fine on those who lose, in the shape of payment of usury on the loss. Thus the cunning, deceitful, and crafty are rewarded by a bounty on all gains, while the unsuspecting, less cunning, and confiding pay a usury tax on every loss. Strength is thus added to the strong, weakness multiplied to the weak. This is a poor illustration of survival of the fittest, but a good one of survival of the meanest. How could it be otherwise? The surroundings are abnormal, what could the result be but abnormal? The competitiv or cannibalistic system precipitates the individual into such a hand-to-hand conflict for subsistence that selfishness or hatred, the antithesis of love, is abnormally developed, producing monsters rather than men. It revolutionizes childhood's nature, and puts in its stead that of the savage. Under this system the more a man works the less he has, the less he works the more he has; if he works none at all, he has more yet. This is hell boiled down.

But what shall we say as remedial to this man-murdering order of things? We believe, and history teaches, that force is necessary to enforce an unjust system. It has never been tried as a governing force, but we know, as between individuals, justice usually enforces itself. Suppose the love-element in man is organized into a governing force instead of being an outcast dependent on individual impulse and opportunity for a field of action. Don't you see the moment that is done the force element in government becomes a useless appendage, and is at once relegated to the realm of the individual where its abuses may be offset by the restraints of other individuals? This is where it should be, instead of being a force in government to be used in overpowering the members of society. We hav seen force in government is the great essential to enforce the selfishness organized into a power there. Love does away with the force, and per force knocks the prop from under selfishness, and relegates it to the realm of individual direction, where, like force when so relegated, it too is offset by the selfishness of other individuals, instead of being an omnipotency in government to override the rights of individuals. Under the existing order, each is against each, each is against all, and all are against each, making hell for everybody. Love organized into government makes each for each, each for all, and all for each. This is heaven for everybody. The first or competitiv, antagonistic, cannibalistic system produces monsters, for a monster system is the mold they are cast in. The latter system produces men-gods or god-men, for an omnipotency of love casts their character, holds them up and appeals to their higher nature, calling it into activity, and developing it to the highest pitch of perfection, not by altering his nature, but by changing the relationship of the governing forces from that of antagonism to that of helpfulness toward him.

Abingdon, Ill. W. T. Wallace.

Professor Bell in Illinois.

After three hours' ride on the cars from Chicago, June 12th, I stepped from the train at Chebanse, 64 miles south of this place. I looked around to see our stanch Liberal Joseph Haigh, author of "Why Don't God Kill the Devil?" but did not catch a glimpse of him, and therefore betook myself to lugging a heavy package of Liberal books to the hotel. Having stored my treasures, I started for Mr. Haigh's residence, a mile or more out of town, but before going far I saw him coming in a carriage, and soon afterwards he kindly greeted me. Stepping into the conveyance, it was not long before we were at his happy home. Mr. Haigh is quite well informed on Liberal questions, but it is lamentable that there are so few like him. If there were five or six more as good Freethinkers in Chebanse as he is, it would be a splendid field for Liberal work. Mrs. Haigh made my stay comfortable by serving us bountifully with the good things of the season.

From Chebanse I went to Springfield, hoping to get as far as Mechanicsburg on Monday evening, but was train-bound until the next day, while the good Liberals were waiting patiently Monday evening to see me put in an appearance before lecture time. They were disappointed, and to comfort them the Rev. J. W. Robbins, who was reconnoitering on the street corners, volunteered the suggestion, "He's probably got drunk and lost the train," or words to that effect.

I reached Mechanicsburg a day late; however, the hall was filled every night with attentiv hearers. Occasionally a pious girl or mother in Israel would get up and go out. But their room was soon filled by those who did not want to go out, no matter how long the lecture was.

One of the ministers, the Rev. J. W. Robbins, attended all my lectures and took notes, to use when I am far away. At the conclusion of my lectures on the first and second evenings, I gave an invitation to clergymen if any were present, to reply to my lecture; but the Rev. J. W. Robbins, the extinguisher of the great iconoclast of the West, J. E. Remsburg, did not care to open up his batteries just there and then.

He replied or refuted, nay, routed, Remsburg, hoof and horn. It was after this fashion: In the little town of Mechanicsburg, after J. E. Remsburg lectured there last winter, the Rev. J. W. Robbins, Campbellite, and the Methodist minister held union meetings for some six or seven nights, so I am informed, and took turns in setting up a man of straw and then knocking him out, to the infinit admiration of their pet lambs. These gentlemen hav convinced themselvs that they hav dynamited the Kansas man. My Liberal friends could not induce Mr. Robbins to hold a joint discussion with me. He wants to debate with Mr. Remsburg. It is the scalp of that quiet Atchison man he is pining for. He turned a deaf ear to their persuasions on my behalf. He did not know me. He would hav to hav credentials before he would dare to undertake the work; yea, "certified credentials." I did not know where to put my hand upon such articles, as I had none lying around loose, and, besides, we hav no priests or popes to apply to for such things. It was asking too much of me, my friends thought. Another difficult piece of diplomacy was about his own credentials. If the reverend gentleman had been asked for his credentials, he would doubtless hav applied to his church, for he could not apply to the churches of other denominations for a "character;" and if his credentials were "certified" to by his own church, we should still need some one to certify for the church. If I am correctly informed, some of the frail members of that sacred organization could not stand the test of "certified credentials." We cannot help thinking that this "certified credential" business is the last straw that breaks the Campbellite's back. We shall see. He does not exact this condition from the image-breaker out of the West, and we shall therefore wait until he meets him in battle array. Now I am not a prophet, but I will predict that the Rev. J. W. Robbins will back down from a debate with John E. Remsburg as he did with me.

The Methodist minister warned some who were coming to hear me that they had better not go, as "there are no decent people going up there."

The work of Mr. Remsburg there last winter and my three lectures last week in Mechanicsburg hav done something to arouse some life in that little out-of-the-way old dead town.

I made the acquaintance of a number of good Liberals there—namely: H. H. Martin, John Thompson, Wm. Beck, and others whose full names I cannot recollect. Mr. Enos Scott, of Franklin, came all the way from home to hear our debate or lecture.

These good Liberals would be a great deal better if they, every one, took THE TRUTH SEEKER. I was pained to find so very few Liberal papers in circulation there. There are so many Freethinkers who feel no sense of responsibility in supporting our Liberal papers. Many of them, though poor, squander more money in two weeks on tobbacco than would pay for a year's subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER. I like the Liberal who says, "I cannot do without my Liberal paper or papers." W. S. BELL.

302 State st., Chicago, Ill.

Comstock At It Again.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: It is time that the attention of Liberals throughout the United States should be called to the latest action of the Vice Society and its agent—the endeavor to obtain new and more comprehensiv restrictiv mail laws. Three or four bills hav been introduced during the session of the forty-ninth Congress, and perhaps some of them hav been loudly talked of and made known for the purpose of obscuring the one particular amendment which is proposed to the existing Comstock law. It is a bill introduced in the House of Representativs, April 5, 1886, the same date, by the way, that a similar bill was introduced in the Senate of the state of New York, but this bill, No. 7,544, introduced by Mr. Merriman, is an amendment to section 3,893. It reads as follows:

Every obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy, or disgusting book, pamphlet, picture, paper, writing, or print, or other written or printed matter of an indecent character, and every article or thing designed or intended, or purporting to be for the prevention of conception, or procuring of abortion, and every article or thing intended or adapted, or purporting to be for any indecent or immoral use, and every article or thing so advertised or offered for sale as to suggest or lead to the use of the same for the purpose of prevention of conception, or the procuring of abortion, or for indecent or immoral use, and every written or printed card, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisment, or notice of any kind, giving information directly or indirectly where, or how, or of whom, or by what means any of the hereinbefore mentioned matters, articles, or things may be obtained or made, and every envelope, wrapper, or postal card upon which indecent, lewd, obscene, filthy, disgusting, or lascivious delineations, epithets, terms, or language, may be written or printed, are hereby declared to be non-mailable, etc., etc., much after the old law.

This should be known really as the Disgusting Literature Bill, instead of the Obscene Literature Bill, for the main change is in the addition of this word, which will extend the power and supervision of the Vice Society over many things which hav hitherto been out of their reach. We know that the obscene literature law, as it now stands, has been the means of many unjust prosecutions, in fact, a dangerous tool in the hands of bigots. What infamies could not be committed under this new bill and the word disgusting? Much of the matter of THE TRUTH SEEKER and of other Freethought publications, and certainly a majority of its pictures, would be very "disgusting" in the eyes of thousands of men who sit on juries. Evidently the object expressed in the report of the Vice Society, some six or eight years ago, to stamp out Freethought literature, is still in mind. The society has not succeeded under the law as it is, and in requesting a new law they hav not the cheek to ask for just what they want, the use of the word blasphemous or heretical, but they doubtless hope that in the word disgusting they hav got a lasso with which they can swoop in and choke to death anything which does not find favor in their eyes. This bill has been reported favorably from the Committee on Post-offices and Post-roads, and has passed a second reading in the House. It is, therefore, none too soon for the Liberals throughout the land to take prompt action against it, and send in letters, telegrams, and petitions to their representativs, letting them know what is thought of it. Not a moment is to be lost, for the end of the session is near at hand, and it is during the closing hours of legislation that the sly agent of the Vice Society succeeds in his nefarious business. So slyly did he work in Albany at the end of the last legislature, that he got just such a bill, the word "disgusting" included, through both houses and into the hands of the governor for signature. It was only by the most activ and energetic work on the part of a few Knights of Liberty that this dastardly scheme to obtain legislation by stealth, and to steal away the liberties of the people as a pickpocket would their cash, that this bill was defeated at the last moment. Except that we had a democratic governor, and one who has not forgotten the meaning of democratic principles, or the true nature of American government, we should this day hav upon the statute books of the state of New York "the most sweeping and dangerous measure that was ever introduced into any legislature of a civilized government"—the remark of a wide-awake American lawyer of English birth. As secretary of the National Defense Association, I ought sooner to hav discovered these new assaults upon liberty, but must now trust to others to work speedily to make amends for my shortcomings. The Defense Association has just published a new pamphlet directed against this sort of mail legislation, and would be pleased to supply it to all interested at 25 cents per copy. E. B. FOOTE, JR.

No Natural Theology.

The supernatural idea is unnatural and unreasonable, as is evident from the meaning of the word employed to express it. Nature has never revealed, nor can it ever reveal, a supernatural being. Hence the argument for such a being from a universal natural sentiment of humanity is baseless. First, there is no such sentiment, and secondly the superstitious idea too generally infused into offspring proves too much. It is diverse and conflicting as found in different peoples. This proves it to be unreal and indeed false. Could it possibly come from nature, it would, by its contradictions, destroy its own testimony. That animals of all classes generally prefer life to death is true; that, if they could get another and better world to liv in forever, they would gladly accept it, is likewise true; but that nature or reason shows any such world is not true; or that to die is the way to liv again in such a world is no less unreasonable than the most absurd proposition to be framed in any language. Such faith is never taught by nature, nor to be had by the exercise of reason or logic. It comes rather by ignorance, credulity, and superstition. Shapen in iniquity and in sin, did ignorance, the mother of devotion, conceive it.

This train of reflections has been occasioned by an interesting and instructiv incident coming to the mind of the writer yesterday. A young man, born and reared of Liberal parents, expressed his gratification to hear that I was for Freethought. Said he, "I know but little of the book called Bible, as I read but a few passages only once or twice in my life, because I found them contrary to all experience, and in accord with all absurdity." That being enough to satisfy, or rather disgust, his truth-loving mind, he had no more use for the book. "But," said he, "last Sunday I went and heard an aged, old-fashioned man read and preach on a story about a man called Jesus raising a dead man called Lazarus, lying in his grave for three days." That this man, possessing common sense, could really believe such a ridiculous absurdity, he had no idea. Why or how he could try to get others to believe, this guileless young man was puzzled to imagin. His reasonable, childlike singularity is referable to the fact that superstitious ideas had never been instilled in him. He was allowed to grow up as all children should be, to rely on his sense, and freely exercise his own brain in its natural reasonable way. Free thought, careful experience, and a simple love of truth had kept out naked, silly, and tyrannical authority. Like an honest pair of nicely-balanced scales, his mind was ever ready to go with preponderating evidence. When may the time come that all parents and all their children shall go and do likewise! W. PERKINS.

Belleview, Fla.

Truth.

This true test of manhood and womanhood, and the want of it the base hypocrit and cringing slave, is very seldom declared by the Christian, especially by the priests. They seem to hav more fear of the fact, truth, than they pretend to hav for their real God, by them called the devil. They hav orally declared and published more than a hundred million lies about him, yet, according to the Bible, he is the only truthful supernatural being on the list. His word was always taken without a promis of reward, a sign to convince, or an oath to confirm.

Not so with Jehovah, judged by this same Bible. His own representativs, Noah, Abraham, Moses, and others, would not believe him when he was talking to them in the first person, as a man would speak to his neighbor, unless, in addition to his declaration, Jehovah would giv them a sign and then swear to the promis or statement. Old Abraham required this of him frequently, and even when Mrs. Abraham laughed at him for announcing to Mr. Abraham that she would bear him a son, and he asked her why she laughed at him, she denied it, priestlike, and Jehovah was obliged to giv a sign and declare the matter most solemnly.

How unreasonable and inconsistent the priests are! They would not take the word, statement, promis when given, delivered, made in their immediate presence by Jehovah himself, unless in addition he gave a sign and sealed it with an oath. And yet, away up here at the end of the nineteenth century, if we ask for proofs to sustain these idle, useless traditions and nursery tales, the mere ipse dixit of interested priests, pretenders, and tyrants, we are anathematized without a hearing, all the friends of humanity are libeled, and the good and true are slandered in the most shameful manner.

But when a priest does actually declare a truth, it is really refreshing. This was inadvertently done here in Sacramento a short time since. The priest was speaking against the common school system, denouncing the schools as "godless [if he had said priestless, that would hav been partially true], and that the church must obtain possession and full control of the schools; that if the priests could not destroy the common schools, they would soon destroy the church, for," he continued, "we can only hope to retain our places and hav an easy time and fat living so long as we can keep the people in ignorance, and in the fear of the priest."

Wonderful, when Christian priests will tell the truth! It is so seldom they do so that it comes like a flash of light in the midst of midnight darkness.

Know ye that all religions are based on ignorance and fear; that religion is and always has been the common enemy of man. It has always been leagued with the murderous robber and oppressor. There is not a tyrant existing to-day but is upheld and sustained by religion and the church.

Only a few days ago the blatant, falsifying priests from New York to San Francisco were howling against the strikers and workingmen and denouncing Freethought, Infidelity, and Atheism for these demonstrations, as the outcroppings of their teachings and of too much freedom for men and women. But what were these little patterings of drops by cheated, wronged, and defrauded laboring men against the giant monopolies of the Goulds, Vanderbilts, and the church, in comparison to the mad, wild, destructiv, and murderous religious mobs in this month of June in that religiously cursed land of Robert Emmet, Ireland? When this fomenter of strife and inventor of falsehood, cruelty, murder, wrong, oppression, and all kindred crimes, religion, is eliminated from earth, then will man bound forward as he never has before, and he, man, woman, and child, shall liv for and worship true humanity, and be governed by love, wisdom, justice. P. V. WISE.

Sacramento, Cal., June 14, 286.

Epigrammatic Mr. Bowman.

All any lie lacks of being true is not being in the Bible.

It seems strange that an allwise God would make an unwise book.

The Bible is right on all subjects—it takes both sides of every question.

Some of the preachers are not even good for nothing, but most of them are.

It seems, according to religion, God started the human race to get a chance to use up his brimstone.

It is a bad religion that kills a good man in order to reward him, and brings a bad man to life in order to punish him.

I may regret this when they are sorting out the souls, but if they don't resurrect me with the toothache I won't complain.

Some of the states allow preachers to ride on the railroad for half fare, but that is an encouragement for them to emigrate.

In order to be saved we hav got to admit that Joshua put off sundown, and believe the story of Mary and her little lamb.

They say we hav got to hav a new heart in order to be saved, but it won't cure the heart disease. Some people would prefer a new liver.

The Christians teach us that all mankind are totally depraved, and then ask us to take the word of a lot of totally depraved translators.

Religion is a blister on the hands of science. Giv any religion the power, and it will be but a short time until the sheriff will be passing around the hat.

Every one has had something to say about the whale story. I don't know which was crazier, the man who told the story or the man who believes it. The story is larger than the fish.

Some of the preachers out West think that Uncle Sam ought to join the church. But Uncle Sam and Bob Ingersoll are the two biggest Infidels in the country. Enough lies hav been told about the latter to make a dozen Bibles.

If preachers would tell their congregation that they had found a piece of the flood, they would be believed. If they would find in their Bible that a canal had been dug to the moon or some fellow had ridden a bicycle across the equator, they would be believed all the same. G. W. BOWMAN.

South Prairie, Wash. Ter.

BARNABAS.—The Epistle of Barnabas, like that of Clement, is anonymous. The first writer who mentions it is Clement of Alexandria (A.D. 189–202), who calls its author the "Apostle Barnabas," and it is so described in the oldest Latin manuscript. It was highly valued by the early church. Origen ranked it among the holy scriptures, and it is contained in the earliest codex of the New Testament. But Eusebius rejected it as spurious. We are told in this epistle that Jesus chose as his apostles those "who were sinners above all sin, that he might show that he came not to call the righteous, but sinners." "To repentance," adds a later scribe, not only here, but also in Matthew and Mark. . . The epistle makes the ascension of Jesus take place on the same day as the resurrection.—Antichrist.

P. S.—In view of the discovery that Paul flourished before the Christian era, the Epistles of Clement and Barnabas, if genuin, must hav been written before the year one.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - - JULY 3, 1886.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00

Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

The Knights of Labor and the Church.

Last week we referred to the pastoral letter denouncing the Knights of Labor issued by the cardinal archbishop and the bishop of the province of Quebec. The letter is the outcome of the seventh provincial council, which met recently in Quebec. After fulminating against secret societies in general, and the Freemasons in particular, the bishops say of the Knights:

"There are beyond these forbidden societies others which must not be frequented under the pain of committing a grievous sin. Among these we may mention those that exact from its members a secret which must not be whispered and unreserved obedience to hidden heads, such as, in particular, the society of the Knights of Labor, which the holy congregation of the Inquisition, by its answer in 1884, declared among those societies forbidden by the Holy See, and others of a similar kind."

The mandement concludes by advising the workingmen to form protectiv societies, with a priest at their head, and with a constitution which has been approved by a bishop. It is reported that the pope has sanctioned the condemnation of the Knights, and that the prohibition by the church will shortly be extended to the United States.

In 1880 Mr. Terence V. Powderly, the head of the Knights of Labor, said to E. A. Stevens that when the church ordered him to do one thing and the Knights commanded him to do another, he should obey the order of the church. If he is the same willing slave of the church now that he was six years ago, the Knights will soon lose their Grand Master Workman, and also about three-fifths of their members; for if a man of Powderly's intellect chooses chains instead of freedom, the ignorant members of the order will hav no hesitation in deciding which way to go.

It is a pitiable spectacle, the hold which superstition has upon the world!

Which Is It Damnation to Disbelieve?

A writer in a recent number of a daily paper of this city calls attention to the differing versions of the Bible upon a very simple statement—the prophecy in relation to the rebuilding of Jerusalem. He quotes the Jewish version, the Douay, and the King James. The Jewish version is that of Rabbi Lesser, published in Philadelphia in 1854, "carefully translated according to the Masoretic text on the basis of the English version." The translation occupied him for fifteen years, and is now in general use among the English-reading Jews. He made use of the researches and studies of thirteen learned Jewish commentators, and "he trusts that to those who are of a different persuasion his labors will not be unacceptable, as exhibiting, so far as he could do it, the progress of Biblical criticism among ancient and modern Israelites—a task utterly beyond the power of any but a Jew by birth and conviction." He further explains that those who make use of scripture to assail the Jewish faith do so "by a perverted and hence erroneous rendering of the words of the original Bible."

The comparison of this Jewish translation with the Catholic and Protestant translations made by the writer alluded to is interesting, showing that two of the three writers knew but very little about what Daniel meant; and we hav added the Revised Version of King James that our readers' choice may be from as extensiv an assortment of holy writ as it is possible to obtain. Freethinkers are entitled to the best there is going of sacred books. If the revised version makes the matter any clearer, then we are repaid for the trouble. The following are the different versions of the prophecy contained in the closing verses of the ninth chapter of Daniel:

LESSER.	DOUAY.	KING JAMES.	REVISED VERSION.
24. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to close up the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to atone for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the most holy things.	Seventy weeks shortened upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, that transgression may be finished, and sin may hav an end, and iniquity be abolished, and everlasting justice may be brought; and vision and prophecy maybe fulfilled; and the saint of saints be anointed.	Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the most holy.	24. Seventy weeks are decreed upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish trangression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up vision and prophecy, and to anoint the most holy.
25. Know therefore and comprehend, that from the going forth of the word to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the anointed the prince will be seven weeks; and during sixty and two weeks wil it be again built with streets and ditches (around it) even in the pressure of the times.	Know thou therefore and take notice: that from the going forth of the word, to build up Jerusalem again, unto Christ the prince, there shall be seven weeks, and sixty-two weeks; and the street shall be built again, and the walls in straitness of times.	Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the prince shall be seven weeks, and three score and two weeks; the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times.	25. Know therefore and discern, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the anointed one, the prince, shall be seven weeks; and threescore and two weeks, it shall be built again, with street and moat, even in troublous times.
26. And after the sixty and two weeks will an anointed one be cut off without a successor to follow him: and the city and the sanctuary will the people of the prince that is coming to destroy; but his end will come in a violent overflow; but until the end of the war devastations are decreed (against it).	And after sixty-two weeks Christ shall be slain; and the people that shall deny him shall not be his. And a people with their leader that shall come, shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be waste, and after the end of the war the appointed desolation.	And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself; and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined.	26. And after the threescore and two weeks shall the anointed one be cut off, and shall hav nothing; and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and his end shall be with a flood, and even unto the end shall be war; desolations are determined.
27. And he will make a strong covenant with the many for one week; and in the half of the week will he cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease; and this because of the prevalence of the abomination which bringeth devastation, and until destruction and what is decreed shall be poured out upon the waster.	And he shall confirm the covenant with many, in one week; and in the half of the week the victim and the sacrifice shall fail; and there shall be in the temple the abomination of desolation; and the desolation shall continue even to the consummation, and to the end.	And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week; and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations, he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate.	27. And he shall make a firm covenant with many for one week; and for the half of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease: and upon the wing of abominations, shall come one one that maketh desolate; and even unto the consummation, and that determined, shall wrath be poured out upon the desolator.

Here we hav four different renderings of an important prediction. Which of the four is "perverted and hence erroneous?" On what authority is this to be decided? and what must we believe to be saved? Were the "most holy things" anointed, or the "saint of saints," or the "Most Holy," or the "most holy" without the personification signified by the use of capital letters? Was the city built again for a plain anointed prince, for Christ, for the Messiah, and how did the Douay translators know that what might be a simple Jewish prince—and what the King James translators termed the Messiah, without specifying which Messiah, and the revisions of this century were content to call "the anointed one the prince"—was Christ? And at the end of the sixty-two weeks was it simply an anointed one (which might be any earthly ruler) who was to be cut off, or was it Christ who was to be slain, or was it any Messiah who might be around at the time, or was it the anointed one? Was the final destruction continued only until "the end," or was it "poured out upon the waster," or "upon the desolate," or "upon the desolator?" These and many other pertinent questions will be asked by the anxious seeker after truth, and if so many conflicting answers are given on an important matter in only four verses of one writer, what diversity may we not expect when the whole Bible is diligently compared and revised? The Bible idolaters ought to agree among themselvs before asking others to accept their polyglot.

Peace with Honor.

In remitting the amount of his arrearage, Mr. H. C. Gill, who, it will be remembered, stopped his subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER because the pictures displeased his Christian friends, makes the following pacific observations, accompanied by some similes the applicability of which an hour's dextrous thinking has failed to determin:

"MADISON, O., June 21, 1886.

"TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY, Dear Sirs: Inclosed find draft for $4.20, as per statement May 18, 1884. Please balance account and oblige.

"I see under the Editorial head of the 12th of June number of THE TRUTH SEEKER a somewhat extended defense of the cartoon department of the paper. I am well aware that as civilization advances the ground must be prepared to receive the seed. Huge trees must be cut down, stumps grubbed out, the ground plowed and dragged, the seed sown, and then dragged again. All this work requires much labor and sweat of the brow—and at the same time much discomfort to the opossum and coon and a host of other animals that hav preëmpted the soil. We can't advance one element without disturbing another. We hav our Christian friends right in our own families—the wife and children Christian, the father pagan; and vice versa. 'Tis said that the owl and rattlesnake and prairie dog will all liv in the same hole happily together, but if some cartoon of an animal should come prowling around and crawl into that hole, it would without doubt break up that happy family. But you say: 'What of that? Don't the cartoon hold the fort?' Yes, indeed; but where are the poor owl and snake? I tell you, we must hav more charity for those who do not believe as we do. Education will do more to elevate humanity than illustration. The church advances in proportion to the standard of education. The rough edges are being smoothed and the sharp corners rounded off, and if we behave tolerably well we can liv in the same hole with Christians. Being that Christianity is a part of the great fabric under which we liv, the less we punch it the less liable we are to get wet by having a damp blanket thrown over our prospects, our social standing, our business relations with one and another. Let us be charitable with each other if we do not all believe just alike. H. C. GILL."

Did Mr. Gill ever know a forest cleared without hard blows? And is the comfort of the 'possum and the coon to be considered above the necessities of civilization? We fancy not. If in the clearing process through the forest of superstition our cartoons bring down a few Christian 'possums and coons—as they seem to hav done—shall we stay the blows of the ax? We do not think that even Mr. Gill would counsel that, if he really wishes to see the forest cleared.

When there are Christians and pagans, as Mr. Gill calls the Infidels, in one family, we fail to see why each may not hav his or her favorit journal, and yet get along peacefully. But if they will fight, why should the Infidel be eternally compelled to make the sacrifice? His rights are as sacred as the rights of the others. Christians always like to hav their "feelings" considered, but when do they consider the feelings of others? They say to Mr. Gill, "Your paper hurts; stop taking it!" But if Mr. Gill should say to them, "Your religious journal wounds my feelings by its slanders of Infidels; please don't take it any more," would they sit down and write to the editor to remove their names from the list? Experience does not warrant such a conclusion. They say to the Infidel: "If you behave tolerably well, we can liv in the same hole with you [the words are Mr. Gill's, not ours], but if you don't, then look out! If you pinch us, we will throw a damp blanket over your prospects, your social standing, your business relations." And some Infidels get right down upon their knees, and say, "Good Lord! good devil!" just as they are told to do. Out upon such "charity with each other!" We want none of it.

We believe in peace, but it must be peace with honor, and without sacrifice of manhood. The precept to turn the other cheek is outlawed—and the only Christians who practice it are a few Infidels. The enfranchisment of the soul is still a painful process for many of them. They are afraid of the church, and the minister inspires fear, though they know his pretensions are folly. To be respectable they are willing to lose their self-respect. Knowing the fierceness of Christian bigotry in many localities, we do not think this the strangest thing in the world, but it nevertheless is one of the most deplorable. Some time, though, we expect to see these terrorized Infidels get up off their knees, wipe the tears from their cheeks, stand erect, and claim their rights. But the first instance of this kind will probably not occur in Madison, Ohio.

When Was Christ Born?

A correspondent says he has read somewhere that Cyrenius was not sent to Syria until the 37th year after the battle of Actium, which was in the year 30 B.C., consequently the taxation spoken of in Luke ii, 2, and coincident birth of Jesus must hav been as late as A.D. 6. This point has often been made against Luke's chronology, and appears to be unanswerable. The year when Cyrenius, or Quirinus, came to Judea is not quite certain, but it was certainly as late as A.D. 6, and some authorities put it A.D. 7 or 8.

The author of the book of Acts, who professes to be the same who wrote the third gospel, makes a similar, only worse, blunder. In chapter v Gamaliel is made to say that the rebel, Theudas, was slain, and after him "rose up Judas of Galilee, in the days of the taxing," and he also perished. The rebellion of Theudas is described by Josephus (Ant. xx, 5); he was slain about A.D. 46, some fifteen years after Gamaliel is alleged to hav made that speech.

Luke is the only New Testament writer who attempts to giv dates, and he seems to make a blunder every time. On this question we cannot, perhaps, do better than to present what "Antichrist" says in the third chapter of his "Revelations:" "The error of the date fixed for the birth of Christ was a very natural one. Dionysius, a Roman abbot, by nation a Scythian, undertook from religious motivs to establish a Christian era. This was in the early part of the sixth century. Taking as the basis of calculation the statement of Luke that when Jesus was baptized by John he began to be about thirty years of age, and that John began to baptize in the fifteenth year of Tiberius Cæsar, and allowing one year for John's prior ministry, the birth of Jesus would fall fourteen years before Tiberius became emperor. The calculation was a very simple one, based upon the figures of Luke, the only Evangelist who attempts to giv dates. But Dionysius and his fellow-priests overlooked one important fact, viz., that Herod, who, according to Matthew, ordered a slaughter of infants in the hope of destroying the little rival to his throne, died three or four years before the date of the birth of Jesus, as they had fixed it. So the churchmen of later times, in order to save the story of Matthew, hav been compelled to set back the birth of their God at least four years, to the serious detriment of Luke, who should hav made Jesus at least thirty-four years of age, instead of thirty, when he was baptized by John.

"But a set-back of more than four years is necessary to accommodate the story of Matthew, who sends the infant Jesus to Egypt to escape the massacre, and keeps him there until the death of Herod. The period of the sojourn in Egypt is not stated by Matthew, but in the gospel of the Infancy, a book of almost, if not quite, equal antiquity to Matthew, it is three years. If, therefore, the story is to be credited at all, the birth of Christ must be fixed about 7 B.C., which would make him thirty-seven at his baptism. Indeed, Appleton's New Cyclopedia and McClintock & Strong's Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature now concede that the birth of Christ must hav been at least as early as 6 B.C.

"Alas! poor Luke! Your pitiful attempt at chronology has betrayed you. Was it the Holy Ghost that misled you into an error of from four to seven years? Oh! no, for inspiration is played out now; the more sensible and progressiv Christians hav given it up, and defend their system on a purely historical basis. No inspiration is needed to inform the world that Christ was "about thirty years of age" when he was at least thirty-four, and probably over thirty-seven. Any profane historian would guess nearer than that. It is bad enough for the Holy Ghost to confess that he seduced the innocent and confiding Mary, without falsifying the chronology of the scandalous affair. If it was he who inspired the record of Matthew and Luke, he is a worse liar than Antichrist was in the pretended estimation of John.

"Is it not a most remarkable, nay, humiliating fact, if so great and good a man as Christ is claimed to be did exist, leaving out of view his disputed divinity, and if his birth and death were such public and conspicuous events as they are described to be, that there should be no record of the date of either event, and nothing to fix it within at least four years? Of what great historical personage within the last two thousand years are the birth and death involved in such obscurity and uncertainty?"

Editorial Notes.

"COULD Jesus Christ Write?" will be the subject of an essay by "Antichrist" next week.

RELIGIOUS item printed in italic in the New York Christian Advocate: "We solemnly warn all Methodists to refuse employment as an evangelist or confidence as a professing Christian to one S. A. Burns, operating as an evangelist. We giv this caution without malice toward the said Burns, in the discharge of our official duty, because we hav indubitable evidence which proves him to be utterly unworthy of confidence and dangerous to the peace of families."

THE New York Sun's attack on the pictures of alleged cigaret-makers in the windows of cigar-stores has had the effect of banishing the objectionable photographs to a considerable extent. The Norwalk Gazette now urges the Sun to attack cigarets themselvs, which, it says, are "a thousand times more noxious and degrading than the pictures." This would be a practical reform. Those who object to pictures need not look at them, but there is no escaping the cigaret-smoking fiend. He poisons the air wherever he goes. Any attempt to abate this nuisance will merit the uniform approval of mankind.

WE see by Watts's Literary Guide that the cartoons in THE TRUTH SEEKER are exciting much interest in England. The editor says that so far as he can judge they are universally admired. We regret to say that that is not the case in this country. A great many Christians object to their publication, and hav even gone so far as to induce Freethinkers to cease taking the paper because of the injury the pictures do to their religious feelings. While we would not knowingly tread upon a fly, much less a Christian, it grieves us to lose subscribers, and we cannot regard as right the action of the Christians mentioned.

THE letter-carriers of this ci y last week held a meeting to advocate the eight-hour day, and to induce the postal authorities to shorten the hours of labor to that limit. Among the sympathetic letters read was the following from Col. Robert G. Ingersoll: "If this government cannot afford to employ men at reasonable wages, working reasonable hours, to distribute the letters at the present prices, then I am in favor of raising the postage, and, for one, I am willing to pay such postage as will enable the government to pay fair wages for reasonable work. I want no man to work more than eight hours a day for my benefit. I do not believe that a government should be unjust, mean, or stingy in order to be economical. The people of the United States—the most generous in the world—are willing to pay what work is worth. This government should set an example to be followed by individuals. It should set a good example. In the first place, it should be honest. It should not want something for nothing. It should set an example to street car companies, railroad companies—in fact, to all corporations and individuals—an example that ought to be followed, and the result of which would be beneficial to the whole people."

SIGNIFICANT admissions were those made by Daniel Curry, D.D., LL.D., in his paper read before the Cleveland congress of churches entitled, "Present Necessity for a Restatement of Christian Beliefs." "It is very manifest," he said, "that the present age is a time of changes in the forms of Christian thought, and of modifications of doctrinal conceptions. The formularies of doctrin which hav come down to us from the past, although so precious to those by whom they were once cherished, no longer satisfactorily express the theological conceptions of the best minds of Christendom." Evidently Dr. Curry had in mind such preachers as Beecher and Newton and Collyer and Savage and Chadwick and Swing and a host of others of the brightest minds in the ministry, who hav all discarded the fundamental doctrins of Christianity and are preaching a set of glittering generalities which may be summed up in "Be good and you will be happy." Of theology they preach little or none. God is too good to damn them; they are too good to be damned—therefore they and everybody else will get into heaven. This loose kind of "Christianity" does not suit Dr. Curry and his brethren, and he desires to set boundaries to it, to classify it, to formulate it into something like a creed to which he may point and say, That's Christianity. But the problem of how to do it is as yet beyond his comprehension to solve. "Ours," he admits, "is not an age of creed-making. It is clearly impossible at this time to produce new formularies of doctrin, like the Augsburg confession, or that of Dort or Westminster. The respect demanded for free thought in the individual precludes the possibility that anyone shall be required to shape his conceptions of religious truth according to any detailed scheme formed to his hand by some council or synod, and especially do the creeds of past centuries fail to answer to present demands." In this dilemma Dr. Curry seems to hav the English constitution in mind, and yearns for some such "unformulated consensus" for a heresy gage. But we beg leave to remind the doctor that a religion which cannot be stated is open to innumerable abuses both ways, and that a man who does not know what he wants is very apt to be ruled out of court. He may revise the "doctrin of the lost things" a million times, but still the simple proposition remains, either there is a hell, or there is not. And we would remind him further that when the fear of this place of punishment is removed from the Christian mind, the church will lose its hold upon its followers, so low is the plane of thought upon which they hav been educated. In the interest of the preachers who are to come after him, Dr. Curry should let the creeds alone.

JOHN RUSKIN'S insufferable conceit leads him to read the Christians of London a good lesson. He was applied to for a contribution to pay off a church debt, and answered by letter (that it might get in the papers) thus: "I am sorrowfully amused at your appeal to me, of all people in the world the precisely least likely to giv you a farthing. My first word to all men and boys who care to hear me is, 'Don't get into debt. Starve and go to heaven; but don't borrow. Try first begging. I don't mind, if it's really needful, stealing. But don't buy things you can't pay for.' And of all manner of debtors, pious people building churches they can't pay for are the most detestable nonsense to me. Can't you preach and pray behind the hedges, or in a sand-pit, or in a coal-hole first? And of all manner of churches thus idiotically built, iron churches are the damnablest to me. And of all the sects and believers in any ruling spirit, Hindoos, Turks, Feather Idolaters, and Mumbo Jumbo Log and Fire Worshipers who want churches, your modern English Evangelical sect is the most absurd and entirely objectionable and unendurable to me. All which you might very easily hav found out from my books. Any other sort of sect would, before bothering me to write it to them."

THE Rev. Mr. Talmage can cram more falsehoods in a sermon than perhaps any other preacher of equal note. Speaking of the Bible, he says: "That book brought George Washington down on his knees in the snow at Valley Forge." The little hatchet story is inherently more credible than this. The former has an appearance of probability, though long since completely exploded. But General Washington was never noted for his piety. On the contrary, when admonished by his rector that he ought not to go out of church before the communion service, he resented the admonition by absenting himself from church altogether on those occasions. In one of his messages he declared that this was not a Christian government, and his proneness to profanity is well known, both at the head of the army and at the head of the government. But Dr. Talmage has the effrontry to repeat the absurd story that when at Valley Forge, in winter quarters, with at least one comfortable room all to himself, General Washington went out and knelt down in the snow to pray. Did Dr. Talmage or the inventor of that story ever do such a thing? It is even contrary to the precept of Jesus Christ, who told his disciples to enter their closet, shut the door, and pray in secret. And surely if anybody is able to obtain that seclusion it is a parson or a general, each of whom is provided with a private apartment for secret business.

SOME time ago Sam Jones, the revivalist, became angry at the Baptists because some of them did not support his meetings, but rather used their influence against him. He denounced them as liars and enemies of God, who would rather the world should go to hell than get to heaven by any other road than the Baptist. Mr. Jones's remarks were intended to apply generally, but he had the Baptists of Indianapolis in his mind as especially deserving of the skinning. As it is not to be expected that one Christian will tamely submit to abuse by another Christian, the Rev. Dr. Jeffrey, a Baptist preacher of Indianapolis, entered the lists and defended his sect by calling Mr. Jones "a falsifier and a moral scavenger." This made things even so far as the preachers themselvs were concerned, but the gospel did not spread rapidly among the Indianapolitans, owing to the sneers of the ungodly, who persisted in recalling to the forgetful Christians some words in the New Testament to the effect that enemies should be forgiven, not abused. So Mr. Jones and Mr. Jeffrey bethought themselvs of a scheme to illustrate Christian charity, attract attention, and obtain an advertisment. They would in public apologize for their hot words, fall upon each other's necks and weep. Such contrition from so eminent exemplars of the gospel could not fail to be edifying to the people, and fill the contribution box. Accordingly it was done in the presence of a great Indianapolis audience. "I hav been sorry a dozen times that the remark I made as to a half dozen cowardly proselytes should hav been taken to mean a great Christian denomination. I retract the word 'liar,' as construed to apply to them, for I would no more reflect on that denomination of Christian people than I would upon my wife and children." Thus Sam Jones. Then Mr. Jeffrey spoke his lines. "I heartily accept this broad and ample explanation and retraction by Brother Jones," he said. I am satisfied that he has a great, kind heart, and that the word was a slip of the tongue. I do not propose to be outdone by Brother Jones in magnanimity. I say here that I take back every word which was severe and pungent in my note of protest, and I wish I had not used those words. I giv to Brother Jones here and now my hand and heart, and invite him to preach in my church to-morrow morning." The world will now resume its motion, the moon will again start on its cold and cheerless journey, the sun will shine, the rivers will flow on to the sea, and all animate and inanimate nature will rejoice—all except that other distinguished Indianapolitan, the editor of the Iron-Clad Age. The making up of the quarrel has deprived him of a subject for an editorial, and the Christians of the place must be on their guard or he will contrive to set Mr. Jones and the Baptists by the ears again.

Letters from Friends.

SYLVANIA, OHIO, June 19, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: In a communication of Thomas Rogers, of New York, in THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 12th, were these words: "In spite of our glorious Constitution, the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that this country is 'essentially, lawfully, and by proclamation Christian.'" That was a surprise to me, and I wish Mr. Rogers or THE TRUTH SEEKER would giv the case and the time when such decision was given, and oblige a subscriber.

J. M. HOPKINS.

MIDDLETOWN, PA., June 13, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $1, for which send two copies TRUTH SEEKER as directed. I hope THE TRUTH SEEKER will not be reticent in ventilating the evil fruits of sectarian religions since the Ulster riots. I say it is high time for advanced thinkers to speak out on this subject. Is it not criminal from a scientific standpoint to pervert the minds of youth with sectarian hatred and prejudice? Cease the cartoon farce! and devote the space to demonstrating the grand results that must ensue in establishing an unbroken system of harmony and affection among all peoples, which sectarian imposition prevents.

MAJOR LANDIS.

FORT FAIRFIELD, ME., June 14, 286.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me to cast my ballot in favor of those pictures. They are first-rate, and they cause me hearty laughter. The workmanship, too, is good enough for me or anybody else, and even better than could be expected from an engraving that is to be used but once.

Talk about wounding the feelings of Christians! Damn it! They hav wounded our feelings for nearly two thousand years, and we hav had to grin and bear it. And now allow me to say to Mr. Heston, return the compliment with double compound interest, and let them grin and bear it awhile and see how they will like it. Go on showing up the tremendous absurdities and glaring inconsistencies of the Christian system, and I guess the editor will gain as many subscribers as he will lose, at any rate, for I see that almost all his "Letters from Friends" are in favor of pictures. H. H. GILMAN.

PAULINE, ARK., April 27, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I send you 25 cents in stamps. Please send me a few copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER. I am taking several papers, but I think I will soon subscribe for THE TRUTH SEEKER.

I also send you my pamphlet I had published, for which I was expelled from the Masons. I hav taken an appeal to the grand lodge of the state. If the expulsion is sustained by the grand lodge, so be it, for I will never recant a word I hav written or spoken, nor even suffer a reprimand. I propose to make my case a test case, for there is not a fossilized organization in the world to-day to which I will surrender my liberties. I was expelled from the Masons because I did not believe in a personal God with the anthropomorphical attributes of heathen mythology. I am fully in accord with the views set forth in THE TRUTH SEEKER in regard to Masonry. Yours truly, W. R. BACHELOR.

FROM A GERMAN FRIEND.

LINCOLN, ILL., May 30, 1886.

MISTER TROOT ZEEKER: I vood gif you shoost von vords from mine hed out, unt oof I got zum langwidges vot I haf I vood gif you enny. Ven I reat me zum tings outen your TROOT ZEEKER, unt dair find zum zuch zendiments ant oxpressions apout ter tifel and aboud hell ant te breachers ant zuch tings, I ish mity glad I got your bapers all de vile effery veek to reat to do me zo much goot. I lofe to zee doze pigdures vot you print, unt I laf minezelf so hart ven I zee dot "Shirked to Sheezus," ven dot rooster got himzelf hanged fur murter, ant den mit a briest stannin py his site goes right avay to glory mit a hangman's rope, ant de fait in de Lort. O! vot a gospels. It makes hebben easy for de schoundrel, but de feller dot de schoundrel kills goes ritc avay to hell. I gan neffer pclieve any zuch tings dot a lofing fadder in himmel can make zum hell, ant a tifel to bunish his own shildren. Go on mit de pigdures vot you print—day are goot for de shildren to zee. Your frien, CASPAR KARL.

MILFORD, MASS., June 20, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: H. Clay Luse says: "I never was ashamed to open up my TRUTH SEEKER in any place until you spoilt it by hideous cartoons." Charles Remhard writes: "Since you hav illustrated the paper I feel ashamed to show the paper to any church-member." H. C. Gill says: "Please take my name off your list, as I don't want the paper. The last paper is too horrid for my Christian friends to look at." There is a trinity of so-called Liberals ashamed to show the pictures to Christian friends. Why not hav an arbitration committee of Christians to decide what pictures you can print, so that Luse, Remhard, Gill & Co. can show them to their Christian friends without hurting the feelings of either? Christians hav never been ashamed to hurt the feelings of unbelievers through all conceivable modes of torture that the ingenuity of man could devise, thereby making the history so truthfully and graphically illustrated. See what history has been made in New England: "In 1636 Elizabeth, the wife of Thomas Applegate, was sentenced to stand with her tongue in a cleft stick, for scolding, reviling, and railing." "In 1741 Sarah Hales, the wife of William Hales, was sentenced for her miscarriage to be carried to the gallows with a rope about her neck, and to sit an hour upon it, the rope's end flung over the gallows; and after to be banished." What a subject for friend Heston to illustrate! Would it be a horrid picture for "Christian friends?" If so, what was the reality? Yet the Christians hav only words of praise for the Puritans. Shall we be ashamed to show them the inhuman work of the men they glorify? The shame is theirs. From the inception of Christianity it has lived by forcing tribute from the unbelieving. Now its power is waning, but the spirit remains. We force them to look at no pictures, but are not ashamed to call their attention to them. We hav editorials that are trenchant and incisiv; the illustrations must be kept on the same line of thought.

CHARLES C. JOHNSON.

DUBLIN, TEXAS, June 10, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: We had the pleasure of attending the lectures of Mr. John E. Remsburg at Comanche, June 5th and 6th. His subjects were "The Apostle of Liberty," "Bible Morals," and "False Claims of the Church." The lectures were well attended considering the hold orthodoxy has on the people of this place. Quite a number of church-members and a few clergy were present. We need more such able advocates of Liberalism as Mr. Remsburg. It would soon rid the people of superstition and fanaticism. We need more readers of the old reliable TRUTH SEEKER. Your illustrations are simply immense. We hope your subscription list will continue to increase until every family in Texas will be readers of your invaluable paper. We hav a Liberal journal near us, the Independent Pulpit, ably edited by J. D. Shaw. We are glad to see the Liberal literature circulated over our great state. Superstition is fast giving way and Freethought takes its place. We predict that the time is not far distant when religious bigotry and fanaticism will be a thing of the past. Yours for truth and reason,

S. L. EWING.

PORT TOWNSEND, W. T., June 5, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I am an old miner—a forty-niner; hav been long on the frontier of our civilization; hav made big raises and spent it again, and I am going into the interior of Alaska again in search of the yellow metal. I hav been there before, so know I will get some. I was raised in the narrow-minded school of the Auld Kirk, Presbyterian. I got into a theological argument in Tacoma, W. T., with a gentleman named Kahlow, a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER, in 1876, who put it into my hands, and I am happy to state that through its influence since, I am to-day a man totally disenthralled from the old superstition.

Please find inclosed price of your ANNUAL and send it to me so I can carry it into the wilderness with me. I assure you if I ever get settled so as to send weekly for your paper I will surely hav it; but, sir, though unknown to you, my money in a small way has assisted, with others of your subscribers, since 1876 to spread the light of Liberalism, and I am to-day, thanks to D. M. Bennett's writings and controversies, a confirmed Liberalist. I am sorry I could not say all this in less words; hope you will forgiv my lengthy first communication. But, dear Macdonald, my whole heart is in your work, for no man can be a true citizen of America and owe his highest allegiance to the pope of Rome. I am personally acquainted with Reuben Albertstone, a thorough Liberal, and one of your subscribers in Sitka. I lived there five years; also A. Vincent in this town, though he does not get it this year, but he says he will again. There are a good many Liberals here, but unorganized and not popular.

Hoping I may be successful enough to assist the cause, I remain, Yours truly, ROBERT A. DUGGAN.

LAKE CITY, MINN., June 15, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: The study of mental characteristics is the greatest on earth. Thus I thought while reading the many diverse views of your correspondents. Such diversity has always been a thorn in the flesh of Christianity. It is a rose in the hand of a Liberal. Some of your correspondents who imagined themselvs "liberal" had not discovered that the foundation of Liberalism is mental liberty—diversity of thought and free speech. It is not agreement in views, a truth that some very progressed Freethinkers would do well to heed. I hav known some of the best Liberals who were, and are still, church-members. They were, of course, illogical. Some professed Liberals are bigots. They, too, are illogical. Liberalism is not the product of Christianity. Bigotry is not the product of Liberalism. The perception of this truth givs me a more exalted estimate of human nature. Instinctivly the human mind loves truth. War is declared the moment we begin the search for it. We fall out about the question, What is truth? At this juncture Liberalism will do for the race what religion never had it in her nature to do, recognize the inherent right of every mind on earth to seek for truth by its own method, even though that method be transparently false. The church has always been willing that the race should get truth by the true method, and it was the judge of what is the true method.

This brings us to the picture business. Had THE TRUTH SEEKER readers all borne these fundamental truths in mind, you might hav had as many criticisms of the "gallery," but not one gazer would hav voted to abolish art because it was employed to ridicule some people's "sacred views." This is, practically, the position of those who object to your illustrations; I mean, so far as your paper is concerned, they do abolish it. If it is wrong or illiberal to ridicule and burlesque sacred views, then the orator commits a wrong. Where will the embargo stop? If Watson Heston has no right to pencil the Chicago Times' "irreverent" head-lines, which I quoted in one of my lectures several years ago in Carthage, the home of Mr. Heston, how can I escape the charge of blasphemy?

Do you remember "Fox's Book of Martyrs," an illustrated Christian work? Talk about "horrors," there they are in all their pristine Christian beauty. It appears that some of our nickel-plated Liberals make the historian responsible for the deeds he records. They hav many words of condemnation for the pictures, but not one word of rebuke for the Christians who committed the horrors that the artist paints. If they answer that they do condemn them, we reply, Then you are guilty of what you charge against the cartoonist!

One brother says "cob-houses." A little girl in this very town where I happen to be at present, Wentworth, Dakota, said the other day that her teacher told her that people who oppose the Bible are bad people, and that God has a right to kill bad people. As her parents are Freethinkers it gave the little one something to think about. Is that a cob-house?

The truth is that some Liberals are not free from the orthodox egg-shell. They hav committed the mistake of supposing that Liberalism means uniformity of opinion upon all subjects.

The church is in abject fear of the cartoonist. It is as afraid of a laugh as an ape of a whip. We hav found out its weak spot; let us puncture it. W. F. JAMIESON.

MECHANICSBURG, ILL., June 17, 286.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed I send $2, which credit to my account on THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Our little village is much stirred up over three lectures delivered by W. S. Bell. The lectures were well attended in spite of the efforts of the orthodox to the contrary. We endeavored some time ago to get a debate between Elder Robbins of this place and Mr. Bell, but Mr. Robbins refused to meet him, offering, however, to get a neighboring minister to do so. The "neighboring" minister proved to be Mr. Grubb, of Kentucky, who, Mr. Robbins informed us, would debate with Mr. Bell, but required references, etc., certified to. This ended the matter. We agreed to be responsible for Mr. Bell, they to be the same for Mr. Grubb. But as they were hunting a hole to crawl through without baeking square out, they of course would not agree to this.

The lectures were splendid, and I think did a vast amount of good. Even some of the church people admitted that Mr. Bell handled his subjects admirably. Mr. Robbins was present, and although he did not come forward and answer Mr. Bell's argument when invited to, he took notes, and we shall probably hear from him next Sunday after Mr. Bell has gone.

There is a considerable Liberal element here, but they are like those of other places, afraid. Many of the people had a wrong conception of Infidelity. Mr. Bell showed them what we were and what we advocate. W. A. BECK.

SMITH'S MILL, MINN., May 29, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: In renewing my subscription for another year I hand you herewith the name of a new subscriber. I am not satisfied with myself in furnishing but one subscriber at this time, as I had the promis of and expected to send you three or four new names. The parties I was counting on to take the paper liv in the country, and I hav not seen them lately. I will try and get you more subscribers, for we must hav the pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER, as well as the good solid reading matter. Surely we hav as good a right to make "comic sketches" of the Bible stories as the Christians hav for illustrating their Bible. If there is any wrong about either, I consider it by far a greater wrong for a father or mother to show their children the highly-colored pictures in their "holy Bible," and teach them that the pictures are true representations of the characters and events that are recorded therein. The comic sketches show the absurdity of the stories, and were the Bible stories founded on fact and reason, the sketches could do them no harm; while to children the Christian's illustrated Bibles make a lasting impression on their minds, and I think it is adding a superstition to a superstition, is misleading to the young, and very wrong. Probably Mr. Heston can giv us a sketch by and by of one of the Bible heroes, "and man after God's own heart," the man with a thousand wives, though it would be rather a tedious task to giv us a likeness of all of his wives. But we won't be particular, a hundred or two would do.

Yours truly, H. S. VOTAW.

SYDNEY, C. B., NOVA SCOTIA, June 15, 286.

MR. EDITOR: When I last wrote you, I was waiting an ice-bound steamer at Port Hawkshur. Since then I hav visited several places on this island, but for the last few weeks I hav been sojourning at my esteemed friend C. H. Grant's; and a royal good friend he is, not only to those who visit him but also to the cause of Freethought. He stands almost alone in the community where he resides, and many a set-to he has had with the clerical gentlemen of the whole island, and it would be safe to say there is not one of the cloth able to debate these invincible dogmas with him without receiving some severe scars. But outside of one or two families which I hav met here, the rest are fearfully creedbound. I often think, How sad to hav superstition reign where there is so much that is beautiful, for really the climate and scenery are delightful. What with fishing, boating, sailing, rowing, rambling and feasting among the beauties of nature, and enjoying myself in general, I am almost loth to leave for the scorching sun and cyclones of Omaha; but such is life, and I hav determined to leave to-morrow for the West.

I was one of the doubters as regards the illustrations in the glorious TRUTH SEEKER being for the best, but the more I see the effects they hav on outside folks the more I think they are a benefit, and I really believe they are doing good, so I hope they may be continued. Our mutual friend here handed me an old book, within which, in the handwriting of Judge Ingraham Ball, Oct. 26, 1782, I find the following about Voltaire: "He, Voltaire, wrote an epigram on the king of Prussia which displeased his royal highness, who at once sent his sergeant-at-arms to Voltaire. The Prussian hero went to the house of the poet and told him he came by his majesty's special command to reward him for an epigram on his royal master by administering thirty lashes on his naked back. The poor philosopher knew that remonstrance was in vain, and after submitting with the best grace he could, opened the door and made the farewell congé to his unwelcome visitor, who did not offer to depart, but told him with the most Germanic gravity that the ceremony was not yet concluded, for the monarch he had the honor of serving must be convinced that his commission was punctually fulfilled, on which account he must hav a receipt. This also was submitted to, and given as follows: 'Received from the right hand of Conrad Backoffer, thirty lashes on my naked back, being in full for an epigram on Frederick, the third king of Prussia, by Vive le roi VOLTAIRE.'"

If there isn't a sheol for such scoundrels, there ought to be. Not wishing to weary you, I remain, with Long liv THE TRUTH SEEKER! Your friend, I. W. ARCHIBALD.

CHATHAM, N. Y., June 16, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I hav been a reader of your paper since November. Until that time I did not know there was a paper published of that class. I hav always been a strong opponent of church creeds and strong against any teaching as facts or certainties of that which not any of us knows anything about. I say, Uphold not superstition in any of its many forms.

I notice some hav objected to the pictures in your paper. Of course, they are ludicrous, but you cannot overdraw them, do the best you will. I believe it is good to hav pictured before us the absurdities which the clergy of the land uphold. Now, the fact of the whole matter rests here, that everyone must die sooner or later; that every day places us nearer the close of our natural existence. And with this idea before each and every one of us, is it not better for us to teach facts of truth to those about us and do what good we can for the love of doing good; not for the fear of any punishment or hope of reward, but prompted by a pure and reasonable motiv wholly for the love of the right? How much better this than to be urged on by superstition threatening upon every side, doing good out of fear of some terrible punishment! We must die, but farther than that the very best of us know nothing. There may be this, or may be that, but what should concern us is how to liv while here for the best interests of all humauity. Let the pictures come thick and fast, and more of them. I am sure I am not ashamed to let any of the clergy see them, or anyone else that needs to be led out from superstition to reason and truth.

I will mention a little incident that comes directly under my notice: Parties lived in Dutchess county, N. Y., consisting of man and wife. He was wealthy, and a miser; his wife has been sick ever since last winter, and he denied her every comfort and care, except what the neighbors furnished. About two weeks ago, he was found dead in his bed. He had made a will leaving his wife the use of $500 during her natural life; the rest was to go to missionaries. This man has denied himself and wife every comfort, with the idea of helping the missionary cause. I hav only one more word to add, Away with superstition, away with it!

J. L. BROWNING.

DES MOINES, IOWA, June 8, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I send a clipping from the Des Moines Leader of the 7th inst., thinking you might be interested in it. Mr. Welsh, manager of the paper, is a Catholic, and he may voice the hearts of a multitude of his faith. He thinks if the Catholics hav a majority they can organize, take charge of the schools, and use the local taxes to carry them on, and "one of the most important battles for civil and religious liberty in our history" would be in vain.

A majority is their aim, and if they get it, I tell you, good-bye American liberty. Senator Blair's fears are well grounded. We must awake and show, especially the young, the true inwardness of Catholicism, and all other religious humbugs at once; scatter common sense tracts everywhere, as Jamieson suggests, ere it is everlastingly too late. Send me $5 worth of your tracts, if you please, and I'll commence at once. The church is the cause of all the commotion nearly the world over. She is cunning, secret, and determined to accomplish her ends, and she is wrong and rotten to the center. She is, and ever has been, the foe of science and freedom. Put her down before it is too late to preserve our present liberties. Show her up, vividly aud truly, and future generations will thank you. If not, back will go the wheels of progress centuries. D. H. CROSS.

Senator Blair to the Christian Union.

The Jesuit element in the Catholic church has been, in its secret ways, exceedingly activ in the effort to embarrass and defeat this bill. Their adroit manipulators of men—many of them expelled from Europe as the foes of intelligence and of the free tendencies of modern political institutions—are now here under the orders and with the money of the Vatican at their command, when necessary, endeavoring by pressure, political and spiritual, to control the action of the members of the house, by subsidizing the press, and every way known to priestcraft, to prevent the indorsement and assistance of our common school system by the nation. They naturally say that such action by the nation will giv the common school system—the cradle of political liberty and religious heresy—a tremendous advantage in the warfare which they wage against it in behalf of the parochial school system, by which alone do they hope to preserve their spiritual supremacy in this country. They hav organized all over the country to defeat this bill, and a great deal of the strange perversion of the Northern Republican press is the work of their money and political threats. The Jesuit element of the Catholic church, too, is engaged in a strenuous effort to control the labor organizations of the country as a force in their own interest; but of this I need not write you. I admit that I am surprised at the apathy of the friends of civil and religious liberty in this country. They may not be aware as yet of the work which has been done while they hav slept. Around this bill is now being fought one of the most important battles for civil and religious liberty of our history.

The Des Moines Leader's Comments.

The Catholics of America are expected to oppose this bill with might and main, while all others are expected to rally to its support and secure its adoption. But why? There is nothing in the bill calculated to save the public school system from destruction, if it is in danger. Under the present system, the schools are under the management of directors chosen by the electors of the school district. If the patrons of the school wish a change of teachers or of text-books, they can hav it. That feature of the system has been its salvation.

Under the school laws of Iowa certain studies must be provided in every school, and the teacher must hav a certificate from the county superintendent, or the school district cannot draw from the county treasury its per capita share of the county school fund; but otherwise the district is independent of outside influence or control. If the Blair bill should become a law, the school district, as we understand it, could still refuse the proffered assistance, raise its own funds by taxation, and be independent. In that case, if our position is right, where the Catholics were in the majority they could organize and take charge of the schools and use the local taxes to carry them on, and "one of the most important battles for civil and religious liberty of our history" would be in vain.

LOGANSPORT, IND., June 21, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: As the columns of your paper hav always been open for the honest discussion of all liberal ideas, I would like to use (for the first time) a portion of your valuable space in which to answer Brother Wettstein's article, which appeared in your issue of May 1st. Like myself, he is seeking truth by the light of science, and takes nothing on faith alone. As for myself, I hav yet to read the views of a Spiritualist which I could fully indorse, so perhaps my reasoning will at least hav the merit of novelty.

As to the existence of a God, it is a subject above and beyond mortal ken, and as it cannot be proven or disproven by any known process of reasoning, or any aid that science can giv, it is equally foolish to either affirm or deny. Leaving this an open question, as it always will be, I proceed. I take it for granted that Brother Wettstein accounts for man's existence on the evolution theory; that the lower forms of matter evolve or produce the higher. When the matter composing the earth first (through well-known laws) formed itself into a sphere, it must hav been in an intensely hot or liquid state. If it always existed as solid matter, by what process did it become round? It was cast off from the sun or some intensely hot planet. I do not for a moment suppose that the matter composing it was ever "created." Matter is eternal—cannot be created or destroyed, but is ever changing and assuming different and higher forms.

First the mineral kingdom only was represented. Then gradually in their order the vegetable, animal, and spiritual, each depending upon and being composed of all below it. When either form reaches its ultimate or highest degree, it ceases to exist as such, and passes into the next higher. Spirit is composed of matter in its most refined state. Each step from the mineral to the spiritual contains matter in a more refined state than the one immediately below it. Here creep in his mistaken ideas. He will admit that matter, by and through the laws of evolution, finally produces man, but according to him, at this stage nature becomes impotent and can go no farther. I believe the resources of nature are boundless, and that she will ever continue to evolve the higher from the lower through the immeasurable cycles of eternity, aud that all sentient beings will in time become beings far beyond even our utmost possible conceptions of a God.

Spirit is composed of matter, but all matter is not visible, does not hav weight, nor is it necessarily susceptible to either of the five senses; for instance, gas, electricity, magnetism, mind, etc. Had man only five senses he would not be superior to the brute, but he has two more, viz., "talking" and "judging." The lower animals contain a spirit essence, but it is as inferior to that of man as is its organism. Both are consumed by man, and become part of his higher organization. Let me ask, when you look at this paper, what is it that sees? Surely not your eyes; they are simply the medium through which the sensation of sight is conveyed. When you hear a friend speak, what is it that hears? Not your ears; they are but the instrument through which the impression that a sound has been made is conveyed to—what? If Brother Wettstein will get his TRUTH SEEKER dated May 1st, I will try and answer the questions he propounds to Brother Bradford, in the order in which they are asked.

The spirit does not exist previous to the body, but is born with it and nurtured by it. The body is for the purpose of individualizing the spirit. The spiritual body is composed of a very refined electricity, which permeates every portion of the physical body, and hence assumes its shape, and consequently exists as male and female. The body acts as a battery which is fed by the air we breathe, the water we drink, and the food we eat. The particles composing the spiritual body are attracted to the physical by the laws of elective affinity. The spiritual body has all the organs, arteries, and nerves of the physical, and hence has a brain. The spiritual body begins its growth soon as the physical body is strong enough to eliminate its electrical particles from surrounding objects. Should a child die before birth, it would not, I think, hav become sufficiently individualized to maintain a separate existence, but would, like the body, be absorbed by surrounding bodies.

A child dying after reaching a stage of individualized intelligence will continue to grow to maturity in the spirit world. (His next lot of questions are answered by my reply to his first.) The spirit has no knowledge except what it acquires, and goes into the next world or stage of action just where it leaves off here, and will continue to grow in wisdom and knowledge through eternity. The spiritual and physical bodies are so closely related that when one suffers the other suffers through sympathy. The mind or spirit does not necessarily sleep when the body does, but may be in constant activity. Where is the person who has not retired at night with a perplexing question on his mind that he could not solve, and on awaking next morning it was perfectly clear? Spirit cannot move a body of grosser matter, and I will here say that I believe the so-called materialization of spirits a humbug. They are already material, and if visible to us at all it is through our spiritual eyes, and not our natural ones. Certainly the degree of intelligence corresponds with the development of the body. The more healthy and refined the physical body, the higher the grade of spiritual intelligence produced.

I hav talked with many persons who had lost a limb, and they invariably tell me they can still feel the amputated member as plainly as before the injury. I would be pleased to hav Brother Wettstein explain this. Can he not conceive of a plaster-cast still existing after the mold in which it had been formed was destroyed?

When death occurs, and the body ceases to nourish the spirit, it leaves its grosser likeness, and the real man enters upon a new state of existence, just as the beautiful butterfly emerges from the hideous caterpillar. It is born, so to speak, into its new existence in a manner similar to its first birth. Nature never changes her immutable laws. Soon as death begins in the physical body, the spiritual body commences forming above it. The spirit goes wherever it is attracted by spirits of similar development, or impelled by inherent desires. As to its means of locomotion, go ask of the lightning. Being composed of like substance, they move with like rapidity. The first abode of the spirit after leaving the flesh is on or near the earth, finding its proper place among spirits of like development, according to the law of gravitation, and going higher and higher in proportion to its intellectual abilities. The spiritual body is the outward manifestation of a still more refined essence—the soul—which the spiritual body develops in the same manner that the natural body develops the spiritual. The soul is composed of an exceedingly refined magnetism. The electrical surrounding develops the magnetic soul within, just as the current of electricity passing through the coils of an electrical machine causes the core within to become a magnet. The soul is the seat of intelligence, so that, as a matter of fact, we are living inside of two bodies instead of one. There is nothing inconsistent in a man's being a Materialistic Spiritualist, and the sooner our Liberal friends find it out the better. All is material, spirit and body, and here is illustrated the law of the survival of the fittest. The spirit, being the superior, is immortal. We are on a broad platform; there is room for the Atheistical Spiritualist. Here we can all unite against our common enemy—the degrading superstition of religious dogmas. C. L. JACOBS.

Where Shall the State Convention Be Held?

ROCHESTER, N. Y., June 20, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: The time is nearing when our annual Convention will be held somewhere, and I beg to offer a few thoughts for consideration in selecting the place. There are three points to be especially considered. Where can it be held the cheapest? What place is the most accessible? Where can the cause receive the greatest benefit? In view of this, I do not hesitate in saying that a better location, all things considered, cannot be chosen than Rochester. The Convention held here has not been equaled since; and there is no reason why the coming Convention may not be equal to, if not better than, any former one. There is one very good reason why Rochester should be the place chosen. A place to hold the Convention can be had free of charge, and should it be thought advisable, the grounds at the Sea Breeze are already guaranteed; and when it is once known that this is a beautiful summer resort, connected by rail to Rochester, situated on Lake Ontario and Irondequoit Bay, it will draw many who would not otherwise attend. At this point hotel accommodations are complete, with every facility for first-class accommodations, at prices that all can afford to pay. Besides, boating, fishing, etc., may be enjoyed freely. These are but a few of the advantages that the Sea Breeze offers that other cities hav not. A more complete press report of the proceedings has never been given than by the papers of Rochester. In behalf of the Liberals, and citizens generally, I beg the committee having this matter in charge to remember the generosity of the past, and that we stand at our posts ready to do all possible for the success of the Convention and bid you all a hearty welcome. As a city Rochester needs no praise. Outside of orthodoxy, the people generally are liberal in thought and purse, as will be proven if the committee will giv them an opportunity. Let us hear from others.

A. E. RINGER.

MALTA, N. Y., June 21, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: As the time draws near for our next Convention I thought I would write you a few lines and let you know what we will do to hav it at White Sulphur. This is a very nice place to hold the Convention; it is owned by the Boston & Housatonic Railroad, and they hav calculated to make everything as fine for excursion picnics as can be made. The grounds are in good order, clean and kept in first-class shape; the hotel is large, and has a piazza sixteen feet wide clear around it; also the best dancing floor I ever saw. Mr. Luther says if it rains and is bad weather we can hav the use of the house, and he will furnish from twenty to forty tents for nothing, and will do all he can to make it pleasant for all who attend the Convention. The spring is the nicest water you ever saw, and very healthy.

There are large barns and sheds to accommodate teams; fine bath houses—hot or cold baths. Twelve or fifteen hotels and boarding houses are near the lake. The Boston & Housatonic Railroad runs within one mile and a half of the grounds; thence by boat every two hours to the Spring. It is eight miles from Saratoga, and seven from Ballston; round trip from Saratoga for 25 cents. We hav five or six steamboats on the lake which run to the Spring, and lots of row-boats for fishing, and lots of fish in the lake. Mr. Luther, the proprietor, says if R. G. Ingersoll comes he will giv him the best room and board he has got free of charge. I thiuk the first of September will be the best time for the convention, and Sulphur Springs the best place to hold it in the state. I would like to hav you see the place if you could before the Convention, or hav Reynolds see it.

JOHN V. ARNOLD.

Children's Corner.

Edited by Miss Susan H. Wixon, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

That Dreadful Boy.

I'm lookin' for that dreadful boy
(Does anybody know him?)
Who's leading all the other boys
The way they shouldn't go in.
I think, if I could find that boy,
I'd stop what he is doin'—
A-bringing all the other boys
To certain moral ruin.

There's Tommy green, a growin' lad,
His mother does inform me,
The way that he is getting bad
Would certainly alarm me.
She feels the blame should rest upon
John Brown—a recent comer—
For Tommy was a lovely child,
A year ago this summer.

But when I spoke to Mrs. Brown
Her inmost soul was shaken,
To think that Mrs. Green could be
So very much mistaken.
She did assure me Johnny was
As good a child as any,
Except for learning naughty things
From Mrs. Whiting's Benny.

And Mrs. Whiting frets because Of Mrs. Blackham's Freddy;
She fears he's taught young Benjamin
Some wicked tricks already.
Yet Fred is such an innocent
(I hav it from his mother)
He wouldn't think of doing wrong
Untempted by another.

Oh! when I think I've found the boy
Whose ways are so disgracin',
I always learn he's some one else,
And livs some other place in.
And if we cannot search him out
He will (most dreadful pity!)
Spoil all the boys who otherwise
Would ornament our city. —Babyhood.

A Three-Legged Dog.

You never saw one, did you? No, you never did. A dog that walked on three legs! But I hav seen such a dog, and he got along very well on his three legs—better than you would think. His name was Rover, and he was owned by Mr. and Mrs. Smith, who keep a laundry. Rover was a great pet, and was really a fine, intelligent dog. He was not cross, and always made very free with children and others with whom he was acquainted. He used to hav great fun helping himself to food from the children's hands when they were eating. I remember little Susie's first acquaintance with Rover. This is the way she told it: "I was walking along eating a piece of pie, when the laundryman's dog came up and stood on his hind legs and tried to get it out of my hand. 'You can't hav my pie,' I said, and then he tipped me over and took my pie in his mouth, he did, the laundryman's dog, and I cried."

Her own little dog witnessed this performance, and, not daring to attack Rover, ran barking into the house, and pulled Susie's mamma by her dress until she went out to see what he meant, when he guided her to where little Susie lay kicking and screaming on the ground, with Rover beside her, contedly finishing the piece of pie.

When Rover was ten years old a man threw a stone at him and hurt one of his fore legs, so that a sore came upon it. It grew worse, and a physician was called. It was so bad that, in order to save Rover's life, it was thought best to amputate the leg, which was done, quite near to the body. It healed over nicely, and Rover limped about for a good while on his three legs. His master and mistress were very kind, and treated him precisely at if he were a child who could not speak and tell his troubles. It was quite a curiosity to see Rover going about so well on his three legs. But last winter Rover's health began to fail. I think he was about eleven years old, or twelve, and the infirmities of age began to tell upon him. Finally, the stump of the amputated leg became affected with gangrene, and, as it was offensiv and certain death apparent, to spare him some hours of pain, he was kindly helped along the road where all must go at last. Rover died. Gentle hands tenderly made him a grave, and laid him away, and his loss was sincerely mourned by those who had been so long and fondly attached to him. Rover had his faults, doubtless, as all dogs hav, but he had his dogly traits, as well. He was honest, truthful, and sincere, devoted to the end—faithful unto death. S. H. W.

Stop and Think.

When anger bids you say a bitter thing,
Just stop a moment, if you can, to think;
For words are cruel and they leave a sting,
And one can never know how deep they sink.

When anger bids you answer with a blow,
Just stop a moment; 'tis a senseless thing,
As one who sacrifices self must know
How little to his honor it will bring.

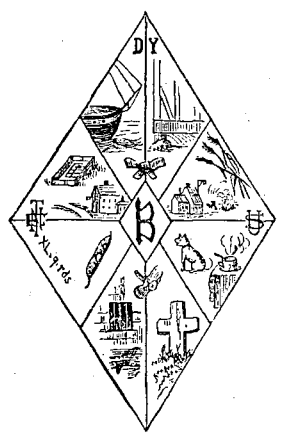
When anger shows a fault in long-tried friend,
Just stop a moment till you understand
The motiv prompting him; and in the end
You will forgiv, and lend a helping hand.

When anger bids that you resent a wrong,
Just stop a moment till you know the right,
Then yield to it, and let your blows be strong,
Nor stop a moment till you win the fight.

A Clever Humming-Bird.

I'll tell you how a clever humming-bird shielded her little ones from the rain. There they were, a nestful, and the rain beginning to fall. The people who had watched the nest out of their window were concerned about the young birds, but the mother-bird evidently was prepared for the emergency. Near the nest grew a large leaf—it was a butternut-tree—and on one side of the nest a small twig stuck out. When the drops began to fall, she came quietly and with many tugs pulled the leaf over the little nest, for a roof, and hooked it by the twig on the other side, which held it firmly.

Thus the half-feathered babies were kept as dry under their green roof as if their house had been built by a carpenter, like the sparrow-houses all around on the trees.



When the rain was over, the mother came back and unhooked the leaf.—St. Nicholas.

Alcohol, Muscle, and Brain.

We put a drop of alcohol into a man's eye. It poisons it. We try it upon the lining of a living stomach. Again it poisons it. We study, after death, the stomachs of drinking men, and find alcohol produces in regular stages redness, intense congestion, morbid secretions, deeper hurt, destruction of parts, utter ruin. We study its influence upon the health and strength of sailors and soldiers, and find it helps to freeze them in the Arctic regions and exhaust them in the tropics. We watch two regiments on a long march in India, one with and the other without grog, and are driven to the conclusion that even moderate quantities of alcohol weaken the muscles and break the endurance. We visit the training grounds of oarsmen, pedestrians, and prize-fighters, and learn everywhere the same lesson—alcohol is a poison to muscle and brain.—Dio Lewis.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—REBUS.

Eight mottoes for young folks.

2.—CONUNDRUM.

What horticultural operation are these boys attempting?

Correspondence.

Salem, Ill., June 15, 1886.

To Miss Wixon and the Corner: Seeing my other letter in print, I thought I would try again. It has been raining a great deal. I hav just received a letter from a young Liberal friend of Macon county, N. C. I will say I would like to be with him at his home. There is a Sunday-school at our school-house, which I do not think is the place for such things. Well, I must tell you I am hearing some fine music just now on an accordeon played by a German. I think the large cartoon of "Jerked to Jesus; or, Heavenward by Hemp," and "Our Janus-faced Religion" are excelled by nothing except our Corner. One of my twin brothers is very sick, but I think he will recover. Well, I guess I will close, for fear of making my letter too long. I will ask for correspondence from some of the young friends of the Corner. I will close, wishing success to Miss Wixon and the Corner. Rufus O. Williams.

P.S.—I send my sincerest thanks to Mr. H. Gilmore for the song which he has been so kind as to send me. R. O. W.

[We are pleased to hear from Rufus again and thank him for kind wishes. We trust his sick brother is quite well by this time.—Ed. C. C.]

Rochelle, Ill., June 14, 1886.

Dear Miss Wixon: My papa takes The Truth Seeker, and I like to read the little letters in the Children's Corner. I got a letter from Sam Newton from Cuba. He sends me a leaf that grew on the grave of Columbus. My papa had the pleasure yesterday to giv Mr. Otto Wettstein a ride out in the country. His little boy and little girl went too. I will close for this time.

Yours, Wiemke Praets.

P. S.—My grandpa bought several Freethought badges from Mr. Wettstein. He gave one to papa. They are nice. W. P.

[We are glad to add our friend to our list of correspondents, and shall be pleased to hear from him again. Mr. Wettstein's badge-pins are handsome. The editor of the Children's Corner wears one, and she also has another, left in her charge by Mr. Wettstein for sale. The same will be forwarded to any address named on receipt of the price, $4.]

BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

The Story Hour. For Children and Youth. By Susan H. Wixon. Without Superstition. The Only Illustrated Freethinkers' Children's Story-Book ever issued. 66 full-page and 25 smaller illustrations; large type, heavy toned paper, broad margins, illuminated covers; 4to. 224 pp., bds., $1.25.

Two Little Red Mittens. A Story of the Rightway Almshouse. By Jennie Butler Browne. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

Apples of Gold. A Story-Book for the Young Folks. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. Second edition. Price, $1.25. This very excellent work for young masters and misses, has passed through a very large edition, and a second has been issued at a reduced price of $1.25, free of postage. This new edition has a photograph of the author which adds very much to the value of the volume.

The Youth's Liberal Guide. By Prof. H. M. Kottinger, A.M. Price; $1.00. This volume aims at the education of youth in the principles of Freethought, at the same time that it inculcates moral duties and human rights from a standpoint of pure reason and common sense. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

LITHOGRAPHS
OF
CHARLES DARWIN

Admirers of the Great Naturalist, and practically the father of Evolution, will be glad to know that we hav a fine lithograph of him for sale—size 18¾x24 inches on heavy plate paper. Framed, the picture will make a splendid ornament for the parlors of Freethinkers. Price, 25 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

FREETHOUGHT NOVELS.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By Wm. McDonnell, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Price reduced. Paper, 90 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Family Creeds. By William McDonnell, author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth. $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Exeter Hall. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Nathaniel Vaughan. Priest and Man. A Radical novel of marked ability. Equal to George Eliot's works. By Frederika Macdonald. 404 pages. $1.25.

The Outcast. A deep, finely written Radical story. From the London edition. By Winwood Reade, author of Martyrdom of Man. 30 cents.

All in a Lifetime. A Romance. By Miss Susan H. Wixon. "The great charm of this novel is its absolute fidelity to nature. Its personages are those one meets with in common life, and are portrayed with a vividness and perspicuity I was scarcely prepared to expect to find, in such a marked degree, even from so gifted a pen as that of Miss Wixon, whose brilliant and lucid style is familiar to most readers in the Freethought ranks." Price, $1.50. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

THE CONVENTIONAL LIES OF OUR CIVILIZATION.

From the German of MAX NORDAU.
SEVENTH EDITION.

A most powerfully written book.—Phila. Record. This Book is not a Book! It is a Deed! and those who oppose it will prove that they fear it.—Vienna News. Price, 50 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

MOSES BEFORE THE COURT;
OR,
The Forgery of the Old Testament.

Dedicated to the clergy
BY
H. J. SEIGNEURET,
Secularist.

Price, - - - - - 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

CANADIAN SECULAR UNION
LEAFLETS.

Long felt want supplied at last.
Small cost.—Concise argument.—Written in a spirit of love and candor that will Awake Thought without arousing Prejudice.
Five Hundred of any one kind for $1.
Sabbath or Sunday, Which?—Historical. Evidence how Sabbath was Changed?—Immortality. The aims and objects of Secularism.—The Bible, What it has done for humanity,

500 for $1.

The Best Leaflets Ever Issued.

Prepared by leading lecturers, and carefully revised by committee of our most able Secularists.
Address CANADIAN SECULAR UNION,
Science Hall, Millichamps Buildings,
4t27 Adelaide St., East, Toronto, Ont.

SELF-CONTRADICTIONS OF THE BIBLE.

A perfectly reliable, accurate pamphlet. Though anonymous, it is now known to be the work of W. H. Burr, one of our ablest correspondents. More than 30,000 copies hav been sold. Price, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR
HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

This book is just what the busy world of to-day needs—a perfect compendium of history from 2,000 years B.C. on up to 1883, all in a nutshell.—Elmina Slenker.

As a text-book in schools, the book would occupy an important place; in the family it would be no less important, as conveying information that all should be acquainted with.—Susan Wixon.

Mr. Cottinger's intentions in writing this book are excellent, and his standpoint admirable. It may be commended as fulfilling its purpose of a concise and interesting historical text-book.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.
For Schools, in Quantities, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Books on Practical Steps in Present Needs.

History of Woman's Costume Movement; its first 35 years, Events and Persecutions, Supplemented by Modern Martyrdom. 132pp., fine paper, 25c. Progress vs. Fashion. 32pp., paper, 10c. Woman's Way Out. 32pp., paper, 10c. Love and Transition. Poetic, in two parts; an Epic and an Argument. 191pp., in fine cloth and gilt, 75c.
Sent on receipt of price, by the author,
tojn1 M. E. TILLOTSON, Vineland, N. J.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

CONTENTS:

The White Bull: A Satirical Romance.—Zadig; or Fate.—The Sage and the Atheist.—The Princess of Babylon.—The Man of Forty Crowns. The Huron; or, the Pupil of Nature.—Micromegas.—The World as it Goes.—The Black and the White.—Memnom the Philosopher.—Andres Des Touches at Siam.—The Study of Nature.—A Conversation With a Chinese.—Plato's Dream.—A Pleasure in Having No Pleasure.—An Adventure in India.

Handsome 12mo. 448 pages, laid paper. With 67 engravings. Price, cloth, beveled boards, $2.00. Half calf or half morocco, marbled edges, $4.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

The Bible Analyzed.

BY
John R. Kelso, A.M.

CONTENTS:

The Old Testament.—The New Testament.—The Creation.—The Deluge.—The Exodus.—The Miracles of the Bible.—The Errors of the Bible.—The Prophecies.—The Devil or Satan of the Bible.—The Heaven and Hell of the Bible.—The Sabbath of the Bible.—The God of the Bible.—The Messiah or Savior.

Crown octavo, 833 pp. Splendidly executed. Sent by mail, post paid. Price, $3.00.

THE RISE OF
INTELLECTUAL LIBERTY
From Thales to Copernicus.

By FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND, Author of "The Reign of the Stoics."

"This is a book not only to be read once, but to be kept and referred to, and pondered over from year to year. It is a guide-book of Liberalism through the past centuries prior to 1600, the era of Copernicus and Bruno. It does not take the place of other histories like Gibbon, Hallam, or Lecky but it makes them intelligible by pointing out the white light that has been cast upon the lurid clouds of ignorance, superstition, and cruelty, from the little stream of Freethought that has flowed in its ragged, broken, and obstructed course down through the ages which now liv only as our realm of Memory and Admonition."

Octavo, 458 pp. PRICE, $3.50.
Address THE TRUHT SEEKER.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents; twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price, per dozen, 30 cents per hundred, $1.50.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
T. Clappison, Hamilton, Ont.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
E. A. Stevens, 750 West Lake st., Chicago.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

MONTANA.
O. B. Whitford, Butte City.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 315 North 10th st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

Mottoes for Freethinkers

We hav received a supply of illuminated motto cards, which we offer for sale. These mottoes are intended to take the place of the "God-bless-our-home" placards which disfigure the walls of so many houses. They are printed on heavy cardboard, 9 inches by 22 1-2. The motto is in black, with colored borders, with an illuminated monogram of U. M. L. The following are the various inadings:

THE LIVING HAV A RIGHT TO CONTROL THE WORLD.

FREE THOUGHT WILL GIV US TRUTH.

SUPERSTITION IS THE CHILD OF SLAVERY.

REASON IS THE LAMP OF THE MIND, THE ONLY TORCH OF PROGRESS.

THE SCHOOL-HOUSE IS MY CATHEDRAL.

UNIVERSAL MENTAL LIBERTY.

THE TIME TO BE HAPPY IS NOW, AND THE PLACE TO BE HAPPY IS HERE.

NEVER TROUBLE TROUBLE TILL TROUBLE TROUBLES YOU.

THE WORLD IS MY COUNTRY; TO DO GOOD MY RELIGION.

The price of each of the foregoing is 25 cents. For Freethought societies there is a large card 2 x 15 inches, printed in colors, with an engraved heading, containing the Nine Demands of Liberalism. Framed it makes a splendid ornament for the lecture-rooms of Liberal societies. Price, 30 cents. Any of these will be sent postpaid, securely wrapped, on receipt of price.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York City.

ADAMI AND HEVA.

BY S. P. PUTMAM.

A poetic version of the Indian Story of the Garden of Eden, in which its superiority to the mutilated copy—the Genesis legend—is shown.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Price, Twenty-Five Cents.

THE

TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL

—AND—

FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC

1886.

(E. M. 286.)

WITH THIRTY PORTRAITS OF DISTINGUISHED EUROPEAN FREETHINKERS, SCIENTISTS, AND PHILOSOPHERS, AND NUMEROUS OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1886,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1885,	17
How the Church Filches from the State,	24
Public Contributions to the Church,	28
The Religion of Crime,	31
Chaplains in our Army and Navy,	32
The Higher Life. By Courtlandt Palmer,	34
My Dream. By Samuel P. Putnam,	37
The American Secular Union,	40
Statistics of our Foreign-born Population,	49
The Curate of Churnside. (Selected Story.) By Jas. Payne,	50
How Voltaire Died. By the Editor,	64
The Iron Virgin,	77
Religious Divisions of the World,	82
Paine Memorial Hall. (Illustrated),	83
The Story of 1885,	84
Immigration to the U. S. 1820–1884,	87
Freethought in Australia,	88
Freethought on the Continent,	92
Subjects of Illustration,	95
Freethought Journals,	100
Religious Denominations,	102
Area and Value of Farms,	103
Population of Large Cities,	103
Liberal Lecturers,	104

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Lick Observatory,	Saladin,	Edward Gibbon,	Goethe,
Girard College, Philadelphia,	Annie Besant,	Max Muller,	Robert Burns,
Freethought Hall, Waco, Texas (Interior view),	Mary Wollstonecraft,	Thos. Huxley,	Richard Carlile,
Freethought Hall, Waco Texas (Exterior View),	G. W. Foote,	Voltaire,	Herbert Spencer,
The Tent,	Austin Holyoake,	Chas. Darwin,	Castelar,
Iron Virgin,	J. S. Mill,	Rousseau,	Bradlaugh,
Paine Hall,	George Eliot,	Humboldt,	Chas. A. Watts,
Moncure D. Conway,	Geo. Standring,	Byron,	J. A. Froude,
	Ernst Haeckel,	Shelley,	John Tyndall.
	Auguste Comte,	David Hume,

NEW YORK:
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,
33 CLINTON PLACE.

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D
Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

Sabbath-Breaking.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG.
Author of "False Claims," "Bible Morals," Etc.

The best and most thorough work ever written on the Sunday Question from a rational point of view.

Large and Handsome Print.

SINGLE COPIES, - - 25 cents.
SIX COPIES, - - - $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German A new cheap edition at only $1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

REPLY
TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S
"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."
By B. W. Lacy

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, auther of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrins. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysterics, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON.
The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works.

By THOMAS PAINE,
"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."
Price, Single Copies, 25 cents. Six copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.
By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 cents.

S. P. Putnam's Works.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution, with some Criticisms of Universology. Price, 20 cts.

Waifs and Wanderings, a New American Story. Price, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cts. "A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Golden Throne, a Romance. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creativ spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words—the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read Golden Throne.'"—INGERSOLL. $1.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A conversation in rhyme between the Nineteenth Century Infidel and the Galilean Reformer, wherein it is shown there is much in harmony between them. Price, 10 cts.

Prometheus. A poem. "It is crammed with life, thought, and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary beauty."—DR. HENRY W. BELLOWS. $1.

Gottlieb, His Life. A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Price 25 cents.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand, and other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cts.

For all of the above address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Charles Watts's Works.

The History of Freethought. Bound in cloth and lettered. Price, $1.25. CONTENTS: Section I. Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II. What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III. Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV. Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V. Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

The American Secular Union; its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Secularism; Destructiv and Constructiv. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Christian Evidences Criticised A reply to the "Christian Evidence Society." Introduction by Charles Bradlaugh. Contents: The Origin of Christianity; The Historical Value of the New Testament; Miracles; Prophecies; The Practical Value of Christianity; The Progress of Christianity. Price, $1.

Secularism; its Principles and its Duties. Price, 75 cts.

Tracts. The following tracts by Chas. Watts are published at the low price of FIVE CENTS EACH: Defense of Secular Principles; Is the Bible Reliable? The Christian Deity; Moral Value of the Bible; Freethought and Modern Progress; Christianity, its Nature and Influence on Civilization; Philosophy of Secularism; Science and Bible Antagonistic; Christian Scheme of Redemption. For all of the above works address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS,
PUBLISHED AT THE TRUTH SEEKER OFFICE.

Resurrection of Jesus. Showing the contradictions and doubts in which the subject is involved. By W. S. BELL. Revised edition. 25 cents.

Revelations of Antichrist. An exhaustiv work proving conclusivly that no such person as Jesus Christ existed in the reign of Tiberius, but that a Jesus, the son of Mary, was stoned and hanged about a century before, and that his disciples, Simon Kepha, alias Peter, and the apostle Paul, both lived and died before the Christian era. 446 pages and full index. Price, $2.

The Anonymous Hypothesis of Creation. A Brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account. By JAMES F. FURNISS. Cloth, 50 cents.

The Brain and the Bible. By EDGAR C. BEALL. With a Preface by ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, who says of it "This book, written by a brave and honest man, is filled with brave and honest thoughts. The arguments it presents cannot be answered by all the theologians in the world." Price reduced to $1.

The Creed of Christendom. Its foundation contrasted with its superstructure. By W. RATHBONE GREG. One of the clearest and ablest works ever written. $1.50.

The Essence of Religion. From the German of L. FEUERBACH. Author of the Essence of Christianity, etc. In cloth, reduced to 50 cents.

The Godly Women of the Bible. A History of all the women who figure in the Bible. Sharp and telling in style. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. A finely written Radical romance. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall, Family Creeds, Day of Rest, etc. 500 pages. Paper, 80 cents; cloth, $1.25

The Holy Bible Abridged. Containing the choice passages and lovely morceaus particularly pleasing to COMSTOCK. 160 pages. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cts.

The Jamieson-Ditzler Debate. A nine-days' debate on God, the Bible, Christianity, and Liberalism. Between W. F. JAMIESON and Rev. JACOB DITZLER, D.D. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Book Notices.

SACRED MYSTERIES AMONG THE MAYAS AND THE QUICHES, 11,500 YEARS AGO. Their Relation to the Sacred Mysteries of Egypt, Greece, Chaldea, and India; Freemasonry in Times Anterior to the Temple of Solomon. Illustrated. By Augustus Le Plongeon. New York: Robert McCoy, 4 Barclay street.

The Mayas and Quiches were people inhabiting the countries now known as Central America and Yucatan. These people M. Le Plongeon evidently believes to be the oldest in the world. The six-thousand-year chronology of the Bible does not trouble him in the least, and Adam and Eve he passes over as myths, and thus begins the investigation with mind untrammeled. To all appearances these ancient Americans can claim as great antiquity as any other race. The writer finds among them nearly all of those symbols that are associated with great age. Indeed, he sees reason to believe that the center of culture was here, and that the Mayas and Quiches sent out colonies, as England does now, carrying with them the arts and other adjuncts of civilization. Hence came the secret ceremonies of Freemasonry, the sacred mysteries and rites of Egypt, and further along all the holy absurdities that exist to-day or hav existed in the past. Facts to corroborate this theory are not wanting. The Maya Hieratic alphabet and the Egyptian alphabet are given side by side, and resemble each other to a degree which shows that they had a common origin. A great many theories hav been furnished to account for the cross being a universal sacred symbol, all of which are satisfactory, but M. Le Plongeon givs a new one. He holds that the constellation in the heavens known as the Southern Cross, appearing at the end of the dry season as a harbinger of moisture, made the cross dear to the eyes of all pious Mayas and Quiches, and from them the notion spread to other countries. The book is full of interest, a specially attractiv feature being the illustrations. These are called Moss types. They are actual photographs of the ancient works of Central America and Yucutan, transferred to metal and printed upon fine paper in a manner which reproduces the original photograph with almost perfect fidelity.

MOSES BEFORE THE COURT; or, the Forgery of the Old Testament. Dedicated to the Clergy. By H. J. Seigneuret, M. D. (alias Secularist), a graduate of the University of France, and Author of St. Matthew Before the Court. New York: The Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place.

"St Matthew before the Court" was reviewed in these columns some time since. "Moses before the Court" is quite as thorough a refutation of the idea that Moses had anything to do with making the Old Testament as the former brochure is that Matthew was the author of the forged gospel which contains his name.

The first thing the author does is to show that Moses was as really a myth as was Brahma, Buddha, or Chrishna. While Egyptian history tells about a man who, probably, Josephus calls Moses, the man referred to by contemporary historians was a leper, a priest of the sun, and was expelled from Heliopolis (the city of the sun), and became a brigand, a kind of leader among the brigands, who, with his band of vagabonds, committed all sorts of atrocities. These brigands finally built a city called Hierosyla (Jerusalem) or the city of robbers. (See Josephus against Appion, book 1 § 34.)

The argument before the court is that these books are without date—that the kings of Egypt are not even mentioned by name, the title Pharaoh being only equivalent to king. He then shows the book to be filled with anachronisms, such as recording Moses's death, burial, the mourning for him, and his grave not being found unto this day; that it contains the history of cities that could not by any possibility hav existed until at least 344 years after the pretended death of this pretended Moses. "Dan" is a case in point. (Gen. xiv, 1; Judges xxviii, 28, 29; Deut. xxxiv, 1.)

Again, Genesis givs the names of eight successiv kings "who reigned in Edom before any king reigned in Israel." As Saul was the first king of Israel, it could not hav been written until after his day. As it speaks of kings of Israel in the plural and in the past tense, it could not hav been written before the days of Solomon, about five hundred years this side of Moses. Many other similar arguments are introduced.

Next the doctor proves Ezra or Esdras, the priest, to hav been the forger of the five books of Moses. The proof on this point is positiv—there can be no mistaking it—that the main object was to forage on the people to feed a lazy priesthood. On page 29 the writer says:

Figure to yourselvs a bee-hive full of activ workers gathering honey to feed a swarm of lazy drones, and then disgorging their surplus in the mouths of yellow-jackets and black felons, and you will hav a proximate idea of the Jewish people eaten up by its priestcraft. Look how this vulture Esdras provides for the welfare of his large covey of hungry church birds; how he orders the people to bring in their first-born of every cattle; also the first fruits, crops, and produce of every kind, and for offerings of which they were eating the best, obligation to bring the fattest cattle, no defectiv victims being received. Look also how he is anxious that their cellar be supplied with the best wines, their oil-jars with the finest juice of the olivs, their kitchen with the whitest flour and the choicest morsels of roast beef, mutton, calves, doves, etc., God having his nostrils satisfied with the smell of burning tallow and other refuse burnt on the sacred fire. I tell you, gentlemen, that Esdras must hav felt his pride satisfied when, covered with his sacerdotal robes, resplendent with gold and precious stones, he strutted on the piazza of the temple, contemplating with a sneer the ignorant crowd of superstitious Jews prostrate at his feet. Our ministers, preachers, and priests try yet a parody of that degrading spectacle, but the man of the Vatican blessing Rome and the universe (urbi and orbi) from the peristyle of the basilic of St. Peter is to-day the only imitator and successor of the Jew Esdras.

Before the writer gets done with Moses before the court, he turns prophet and says.

But the martyrdom of each past Freethinker has raised thousands of others to follow on the same track. It seems that every drop of blood shed for the cause of truth and mental freedom has been a fertilizing dew which has fecundated the prolific womb of the goddess of liberty. Let us rejoice, then, gentlemen. We are progressing onward more and more every day. Where there was one unbeliever in the forged Bible two hundred years ago, there are to-day millions. With your noble efforts, the time is fast coming when superstition shall hav entirely disappeared, and when truth, liberty, and mental freedom shall reign supreme over the world.

To obtain this grand result it may require the steady work of a couple of generations, but light will come, and our grandchildren, at least, will see it shine in all its splendor. They will see the last preacher, a Bible under his arm, emigrating to some savage island, and will ask their father, "Who is this lean and shabbily clothed man?" Then he will answer, "Let this miserable wayfarer go in peace, and do not mourn his fate; with him goeth the last enemy of mankind."

The book can be had of its publishers for 10 cents.—New Thought.

THE ORDER OF CREATION.

This contains the controversy betwcen Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Reville, and Linton, as to the order in which creation proceeded; pp. 178, cloth 75 cents, paper 50 cents. Those who followed this interesting dispute will find this a valuable book, as it brings together the arguments of these masters of rhetoric, science, and philosophy into one compact volume, and enables all who care for different kinds of authority upon vexed questions, to see what these modern lights each hav to say as to the evident conflict which exists between Genesis and Geology.—The Path.

Every number of the Popular Science Monthly contains matter of value. All subjects of scientific interest are treated, always by their ablest exponents. The July number is no exception, and among its dozen articles there is not one that will not doubly repay perusal. Price 50 cents per number; to be had through this office.

The North American Review for July contains sixteen articles. The first is by Minister to Turkey S. S. Cox on "Mohammedan Marriages;" the second is a continuation of the remarkable series of "Letters to Prominent Persons," by "Arthur Richmond," addressed this time to the Rev. Dr. Dexter. There are also a number of historical letters from Sherman and Grant, besides other contributions from prominent writers. The price of the Review is 50 cents per number. It can be ordered through this office.

"The Alpha and the Omega. An Exposition of the First Half of the Book of Revelation of St. John," has by some means found its way to this office. It is a pamphlet in short, poetry-like lines, written by the Rev. S. L. Cousins, B A., retired chaplain R.N. If the fact that Mr. Cousins is a retired chaplain did not inform us that he is already well along in years, we should feel like remarking that he will feel ashamed of this performance when he is older. There may be hope for him yet. Mr. Byrne, a graduate of Princeton University, says concerning this work: "As a study for the curious, it will well repay perusal." We doubt it. Mr. Byrne significantly adds, with an ungrammatical confusion of numbers inexcusable in a college graduate: "It is given as a theory, which one can accept or reject as to them seems best."

The Forum, the new first-class monthly, has at once taken its place where it belongs, near the head of the list. Here is the contents of the June number: "Arbitration in Labor Disputes," Justice T. M. Cooley; "From Puritanism—Whither?" Bishop F. D. Huntington; "The Limit of Speed in Ocean Travel," Prof. R. H. Thurston; "How I was Educated," Chancellor John H. Vincent; "Mischievous Philanthropy," Prof. Simon Newcomb; "The Persistence of the Keely Motor," Park Benjamin; "The Evolution of the Boycott," Dr. William A. Hammond; "The Psychical Wave," Elizabeth Stuart Phelps; "The Future of Sunday Journalism," Rev. Julius H. Ward; "Something More about Domestic Service," A. B. McMahan. The Forum sells for 50 cents a number. Subscription $5 per year. Like all other good publications, it may be had through the TRUTH SEEKER office.

There is a good deal of queer matter printed, but about the queerest yet is Mrs. Julia Franklin's pamphlet, "The Truth Unveiled," published at the office of Foundation Principles, 429 First avenue, Clinton, Iowa. It attacks marriage, theology, and government with equal incoherence, and has tacked on as "addenda" communications from Spinoza, Humboldt, George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Lafayette, Lucretia Mott, and others. testifying that these are their sentiments. Five or ten cents forwarded to Foundation Principles at the address given would probably result in the receipt of this pamphlet.

"The Hindoos as They Are" was the title chosen by A. Ruthnasawmy Mudaliar, B.A., for his lecture at the sixth anniversary of the Madras (India) Progressiv Union. The lecture is published in pamphlet form, and will be found to deal also with Hindoos as they ought to be. The writer is himself a Hindoo, and a heretic not only to Christianity but to Brahmanism. He regards the Vedas much as he does the Bible, as not necessarily to be relied upon where there seems to be good evidence that they are misleading. In this respect he differs from Colonel Olcott of the Theosophical Society.

Mr. Mudaliar criticises many customs in vogue among his countrymen. He asks them, for instance, "How many do you think you will find who can giv you an intelligent and consistent reason for the three horizontal or the three vertical lines which they carry as marks on their foreheads?" The custom of taking a plurality of wives as a proof of wealth and respectability is likewise condemned; as is also the perpetual widowhood enforced upon Hindoo women. Signs, however, are not wanting that these practices are destined to sink into desuetude before advancing enlightenment. The essayist notes that the Vedas and Shastas are dropping into forgetfulness on account of the inability of the younger generation to read them, but he sees in this no cause for regret. He believes that the languages in which these ancient records are written are no longer useful to be studied.

The intelligent young men of India are blossoming out into Materialists; that is to say, they prefer knowledge to myth; and there, as in Europe and America, are to be found the reconcilers who are endeavoring to find in the old fables and traditions "the adumbrations of the facts and demonstrations of Western science." The prevailing religion of India is Brahmanism; and Mr. Mudaliar pays that religion a high compliment for its toleration when he says that Secularists and Freethinkers "hav not here to labor under the misconceptions and prejudices which in Europe and America embitter the life of many an honest seeker after truth."

This pamphlet is put forth by the Madras Secular Society. Price one anna.

Good Words for Our Lecturers.

REMSBURG.

J. E. Remsburg has returned from his Texas tour—one of the most successful he has yet made. Large audiences greeted him at nearly every place. The following are a few of the many complimentary notices he received from the Texas press:

He is a quiet, yet a forcible and eloquent speaker, using elegant language.—Denison Daily News.

The speaker uses excellent language, and his manner indicates an earnestness in the cause he champions that cannot but impress his opponents with his honesty of purpose.—Denison Sunday Gazetteer.

Language that could not fail to thrill the soul of every true American.—Ibid.

A fluent and interesting speaker.—Sherman Daily Democrat.

Mr. Remsburg is an excellent speaker, uses chaste and eloquent language, is thoroughly educated, and brings to bear the combined force of these acquirements in presenting his subject in an exceedingly interesting manner.—Ft. Worth Daily Gazette.

Those present were greatly entertained. Mr. Remsburg justly ranks as one of the foremost speakers in the Infidel ranks.—Ibid.

A second Bob Ingersoll. His language is elegant and his ideas decidedly peculiar.—Ft. Worth Evening Mail.

His talk was in the main good and logical.—Corsicana Daily Courier.

John E. Remsburg lectured at Mayer's Hall last night to upward of eight hundred people on the subject of "Sabbath-Breaking." The lecturer is a fluent speaker.—Dallas Morning News.

In language mild and gentle, his propositions were logically constructed, and the great array of the best established authorities, together with the many and self-evident facts, could not fail to fasten the conviction of truth on every assertion he made.—Kerens Light.

The lecturer's diction was choice and classical. The lecture was listened to with marked attention, and he was frequently interrupted by applause.—San Antonio Express.

The advocates of the Puritan Sabbath received a severe and well-merited castigation at his hands.—Texas Freie Presse.

"Thomas Paine, the Apostle of Liberty," was his theme, and a glowing tribute in masterly language did he pay that great defender of the rights of man. The diction and thought of the lecture were elegant and profound, and he was listened to with marked attention and frequently applauded.—San Antonio Light.

His defense of the life and character of this grand old patriot was very able.—Overton Sharpshooter.

His peculiar and yet logical method of reasoning is very striking, and invariably carries conviction.—Houston Post.

The lecturer was scholarly, polished, and elegant in his style, and held the rapt attention of his hearers from the beginning to the conclusion of his remarks.—Waco Day.

PUTNAM.

A fair audience assembled at Larsen's hall last evening to hear the lecture of S. P. Putnam, secretary of the American Secular Union, of which the famous Freethiuker and lecturer, Robert G. Ingersoll, is president. The gentleman is a very pleasant and attractiv speaker, presenting his views in a forcible and logical manner, which held the closest attention of the audience. He strikes hard blows at the different religious persuasions, and provokes much merriment at times, as he holds up to ridicule the inconsistencies prevailing among believers in the different creeds and dogmas of the present age.—Herald, Bellevue, Idaho.

Samuel P. Putnam delivered an eloquent lecture last evening on the subject, "The Glory of Infidelity." Any person who hears Mr. Putnam speak must be convinced of the gentleman's earnestness and conscientiousness in the views to which he adheres. No matter how much we may happen to differ with him, still there is always admiration in listening to men who hav convictions, and dare express them.—Wood's River News-Miner.

Putnam, the Freethinker, is the best posted and best talker we hav ever had on Wood River. He has been with us off and on for a week, enjoying our beautiful scenery and climate, and spending his evenings lecturing to those of our citizens who delight to listen to words of reason. It's a fact that the theater has been crowded every night whenever Mr. Putnam was advertised to speak, and the verdict of our people is in his favor, and against the orthodox treatment. We were born a Baptist, and as we got older our pate got petrified until we were termed by the Idaho mossbacks a "hardshell." Brother Putnam, by his lectures in Hailey, has touched the chord which expands our mind-vision, and we discover that a Freethinker is the only free man on God's green earth. His talk is convincing; we speak from experience. It will do you all good. The priest and the preacher should listen to him, without malice aforethought, and it's ten to one they will turn themselvs loose in Mr. Putnam's very pathway at the next meeting of their congregation. Everything which is good, ennobling, and which tends to elevate man and womankind, Mr. Putnam advocates; that which degrades and debases—be it in the Bible or in our daily walks—he knocks out. To-night he goes to Ketchum, and the people there should turn out en masse.—Inter-Idaho, Hailey, Idaho.

The Secret of the East,

OR,

The Origin of the Christian Religion and the Significance of its Rise and Decline.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD.

Price, $1.00. For sale at this office

Bible Fabrications Refuted

and

The Errors of the Bible Exposed.

BY O. B. WHITFORD, M.D.

Price, 15 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO., 33 Clinton Place, New York.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, 1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50cts; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to Be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscan. 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3. Millions of these should be circulated.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, for 50cts, or either one for 15cts.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitly fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine, and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price, $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should hav them.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22x28, $5; panel, 10½x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cents; card, 20 cts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

J. E. Remsburg's Works.

False Claims. Revised and Enlarged. Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture: Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbatic Idea; The Jewish Sabbath; The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; The Sabbath during the Middle Ages: The Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; six copies, $1.00.

Image Breaker. Six Lectures: Decline of Faith, Protestant Intolerance, Washington an Unbeliver; Jefferson an Unbeliever; Paine and Wesley; Christian Sabbath. Each 5 cents; bound, paper, 25 cents; per doz. 40 cts.

Thomas Paine. The Apostle of Religious and Political Liberty. Tells the story of the Author-Hero's life, delineates the leading traits of his character and genius, and vindicates his name from the aspersions cast upon it. Choice extracts from "Common Sense," "American Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason" are given; also, tributes to Paine's character from more than one hundred noted persons of Europe and America, many of them written expressly for this work. Second edition, 160 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound, and containing a handsome steel portrait of Paine. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Apostle of Liberty. An address delivered in Paine Hall, before the N. E. Freethinkers' Convention, January 29, 1884. Price, 10 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

SCIENCE LECTURES.

al friends visiting Philadelphia should at-ae Spring Course of Science Lectures unday evening, at the Hall of Friendship
, Ninth and Girard ave.
te at 2:30 (Secular questions).

PROF. ATKINSON, F.R.A.S.

NDSHIP LIBERAL LEAGUE No. 257

very Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and ts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and cussions on religious and social questions.
eakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth publications always on hand at cheap rates.

ACON AND SHAKSPERE.

that Wm. Shakspere could not write.
nnets written by Francis Bacon to the Earl x and his bride, A.D., 1590. By WM. HENRY
Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

tto Wettstein's

lar Jewelry Store, Rochelle, Ill.

lin diamond jewelry; fine gold and silver
s, chains, bracelets, gold and plated jew-
lver and plated ware, optical, art, and fancy
3 oz., coin silver, Elgin watch, $9; 4 oz.,
4oz., stem wind, 11 jeweled, $14.50; same, 15
, $19; same, adjusted, $22. In filled gold warranted 20 years, 7 jeweled, stem wind, jeweled, $23.50; 15 jeweled, $28; adjusted, est filled cases add $4.50. Ladies' filled, best
20, 7; $22, 11; and $30 for 15 jeweled move-
Ladies' solid gold, 10 k., $22, 7; $24, 11;
jewels. For 14 karat cases add $8. Gents low. Watches cleaned, $1; springs $1; and d per registered mail. Best spectacle in ld, $1. All goods must suit or cash back.

And what is a nicer present for either your lady or gentleman friends than one of my latest improved model badges in solid gold, artistically enameled in three colors? Price, $3, $3.50, $4. With genuin diamond in rising sun, $8 and $10.

OTTO WETTSTEIN
Rochelle, Ill.

. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catch-penny get up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magnetic appliance, but simply a medicin to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

N. B.—Dr. Fellows begs leave to say that he is an Infidel of the most pronounced character. Bro. Liberals, your patronage is solicited.

tion; Twin Monsters from Intellectual Pig- [illegible] Friend, Morals).

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

Photo-Engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50c.

Ingersoll's Tributes

REDUCED IN PRICE.

We hav made arrangements whereby we can offer these magnificent prose poems of Mr. Ingersoll's at greatly reduced prices. The Tributes are printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22 inches, illuminated border, large clear type, suitable for framing. The titles are:

The Vision of War,
Tribute to his Brother,
The Grant Banquet Toast,
Address at Harry Miller's Grave.

The price of these heretofore has been $1. We offer them now at FIFTEEN CENTS EACH; THE FOUR FOR FIFTY CENTS. Mailed secure from breakage. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

A SKETCH OF THE LIFE
OF
APOLLONIUS OF TYANA,
OR THE
First Ten Decades of Our Era.
BY
DANIEL M. TREDWELL.

Designed to show upon the authority of History that Apollonius of Tyana performed miracles and spoke wise sayings equal to those attributed to Jesus Christ. 350pp., octavo, best style. Price $2.50.
Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

A STUDY
OF
PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY
BY LEWIS G. JANES.

This book treats of the natural evolution of the Christian religion, its historical antecedents in Palestinian Judaism and Roman Paganism; investigates the history of the founder of Christianity in the light of the latest scientific criticism of the New Testament; shows that the true story of the Man Jesus, and his genuin teachings are separable from the later legendary accretions which hav confounded him with the mythical Christ, and traces the natural development of Christian dogma and ecclesiastical institutions. Complete references and full index. 320pp. 8vo, cloth, gilt top. Price $1.50.
Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

SOCIAL WEALTH.

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

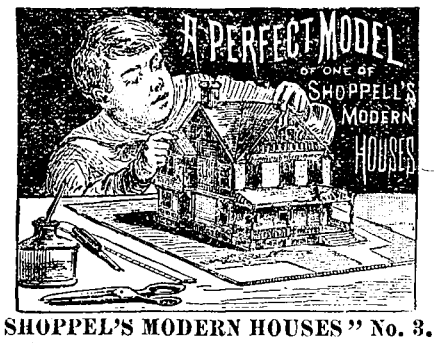
Price, Cloth, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
Clinton Place, New York.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

The Present and the Future Republic of North America.

BY A CAPITALIST.



A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

Price $1.50.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Bible Inquirer. A Key to Bible Investigation. Revised Edition. This pamphlet refers specifically to 148 Bible propositions, with numerous references and citations, that are contradicted in terms by the same number of other propositions in the same book. Price 25 cents.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

"SHOPPEL'S MODERN HOUSES" No. 3.

(Just Published, July 1, 1886) CONTAINS:

A colored frontispiece showing the modern style of painting.

A cardboard supplement, ingeniously drawn and colored, to supply all the neccessary pieces for constructing a model house, with plain directions for putting them together.

While the supplement affords both old and young the greatest amusement, it is more than a toy. It is, in fact, a most practical lesson in Architecture; a perfect, scaled model of one of our most popular designs, so exact that it is useful to builders.

55 New Designs for Residences (cost varying from $500 to $15,000).
2 New Designs for Barns.
1 New Design for a Chapel.
Drawings and description of a model Kitchen (by Maria Parloa) and a perfect Cistern.
An Article on Villa Park Associations.

SENT, POSTPAID, ON RECEIPT OF PRICE, $1.
Address
THE CO-OPERATIVE BUILDING PLAN ASSO'N.
191 Broadway (Box 2702), New York.

WANTED—Lady agents actually clear $20 daily with my wonderful entirely new patent rubber undergarments for females. A minister's wife sold 13 first hour. MADAM H. N. LITTLE,
6t27 Box 443, Chicago, Ill.

News of the Week.

Ex-President Arthur's health is very feeble. He has just gone to New London, Conn., for a change of air.

In the college boat-races last week Columbia beat Pennsylvania and Harvard, and Yale beat Pennsylvania.

The $5,000 rhinoceros which the Central Park commissioners recently purchased died last Saturday of pneumonia.

The laundry girls who went on strike at Troy, N. Y., three weeks ago hav returned to work at the former rates of pay.

The French princes hav been expelled from France. These gentlemen regard themselvs as rightful sovereigns of that republic.

There will be a sparring match on the Polo grounds in this city, July 5th, between Sullivan, of Boston, and Mitchell, of England—provided both are sober enough to appear.

The British Parliament was dissolved by the queen on the 25th ult., who remarked in her speech on that occasion that this course was taken in order to ascertain the sense of her people on the Irish Home Rule question.

Daniel Douglas Home, the Spiritualist, is dead. He was 53 years of age. He is said to hav had the power of invoking the spirits of people who were dead, and was on that account consulted by several crowned heads.

The strike of the Lake Shore switchmen at Chicago has been marked by scenes of lawlessness and violence. The strikers seized locomotivs and captured a freight train last Saturday, and a passenger train was derailed.

The Rev. John E. O'Sullivan, a Catholic priest of Syracuse, N. Y., will spend the next ten years in the spiritual and bodily retreat at Auburn, having been sentenced by the court to that number of years' imprisonment for outraging a girl.

The president went off on an excursion last week in a yacht bearing the piratical name of Corsair. He left Mrs. Cleveland at home. Since his marriage the president has been working unusually hard, and is said to be in need of rest.

Judge David Davis, of Illinois, died at Bloomington last Saturday, aged 71 years. In 1860 his support of "Old Abe" won him the distinction of being known thenceforth as Lincoln's "right-hand man." His death was caused by a carbuncle.

All but fifteen of the 146 inhabitants of Pottersville, N. J., went to a church picnic one day last week and were poisoned by eating ice cream. How the poison got into the cream nobody has told. Nearly all the poisoned persons will recover.

Up to last Saturday President Cleveland had vetoed seventy-one bills which had passed both houses. Sixty-four were pension bills and the others were mainly appropriations. An effort will be made by the Republicans in Congress to override some of the vetoes.

A Chicago judge holds in the case of Robert Schilling, indicted for boycotting, that a threat to injure a man's business is conspiracy. A New York jury has found Paul Wilzig guilty of extortion in accepting money to settle a boycott levied by the Carl Sahm Musical Club.

The Rev. T. S. Cartwright, of Paterson, editor of the Church Press, was sitting in his library last Friday reading his Bible when the front legs of his chair broke and he was precipitated to the floor in such a way as to break two of his ribs. He now desires to know what he shall do to be safe.

The Methodist Appellate Court at Philadelphia has granted the Rev. Mr. Goss a new trial, and ratified the expulsion of the Rev. Mr. White. The charges against these clergymen were that the Rev. Mr. White committed rape upon his servant-girl, and that the Rev. Mr. Goss was knowing to the fact but made no complaint.

Frank Howell, of Scranton, Pa., promised to marry Miss Effie Costello, and the wedding day was fixed. While in New York a short time ago Mr. Howell visited a medium, who called up the spirit of Howell's father. In course of conversation with the defunct member of the family the prospectiv bridegroom was advised not to marry Miss Costello. The young man acted accordingly, and broke off the match. The young lady now brings suit for breach of promis, and on account of the prominence of both parties the case is regarded with extraordinary interest.

Odds and Ends.

"Are you a Christian, young man?" asked a melancholy missionary of a bystander whom he thought might prove a hopeful case. "Oh! dear no," was the cheerful reply; "I'm a choir-singer."

Jones read in the papers that experiments in Spiritualism were made in courts during the progress of a certain case. "What are we coming to?" he exclaimed, indignantly, "if the very tables of the law commence to turn?"

Harvard College is papering dead walls with the announcement of the celebration of her 250th anniversary. It comes in November, and the bones of Cotton Mather are being articulated for the occasion. No show this year is complete without a Jumbo skeleton.—Life.

THE ROMANCE OF A POOR YOUNG MAN.

A young fellow quite fond of champagne,
Could a case or two easily dragne;
But the barkeepers knew
That his shekels were few—
So he generally had to abstagne.

Teacher: "Jessie, can you tell me what it is that a cat has that no other animal has?" Jessie: "Fur." Teacher: "Wrong. Carrie, what is it?" Carrie: "I don't know, ma'am." Little Ethel (holding up her hand): "Please, ma'am, I know." Teacher: "Well, Ethel, what is it?" Ethel: "Kittens."

"My dear," said an anxious wife to her husband, who is running for office, "we must economize in every possible way." "I do economize," he replied. "Yes," she said, bitterly, "you spend ten or fifteen dollars a day in treating a lot of barroom loafers to beer and whisky just to get them to vote for you. Do you call that economy?" "Certainly; that's political economy."

"Mr. Featherly," said Bobby at the dinner table "how do you pronounce d-o?" "Do, Bobby," replied Mr. Featherly, indulgently. "How do you pronounce d-e-w?" "D-u-u-ew," and here Mr. Featherly put on a genteel air for the benefit of Bobby's big sister. "Well, then, how would you pronounce the second day of the week?" "Tewsday, I think." "You're wrong." "Wrong? How would you pronounce the second day of the week?" "Monday."

"Petah, whut yo' gwine do wif dat razah—humph?" "Spec's I'se gwine t' sha'pen dat razah. Doan' yo' see no mo' out'n dem ole peepe's ob yo'n?" "G'way, Petah! Wha' fur? Wha' fur yo' a-sha'p'n'n dat razah—humph? Yo' done got no bea'd, chile!" "G'way yo'se'f, ole man; yo' done got no sense. De Baptis' chu'ch fai' am a-hold'n dis eb'n'n—duz yo' know dat much? An' dat upstaht niggah bahbe's agwine—yo' un'stan'? An' dat yalle' gal dat tuk up wif dat upstaht niggah am agwine—duz' yo' heah me? An I'se agwine, an dis yer razah, she's agwine. G'way yo'se'f."

"Can you conceive," asked the professor, "an eternal vacuum, a portion of space unoccupied, an empty void into which nothing ever enters, from which nothing can ever come, which maintains inviolate and forever its own eternal emptiness?" "I can," replied the student; "I hav a stylographic pen."

The colporteur had crossed over the line into Kentucky without knowing it, and as he entered the tavern with a handful of tracts he said: "Gentlemen, may I ask you to——" and every gentleman then and there arose from his chair, took his quid from his mouth and cast it behind the stove, and sauntered briskly toward the carpenter-shop, said, "Thanks, don't care if I do." And then, seeing he was in Kentucky, the colporteur "jined the gentlemen."

Paine Vindicated!

—o—

A thorough and overwhelming reply to the New York Observer's slanderous attacks upon the Author-Hero of the American Revolution. Containing both the slanders and their refutation.

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL

—o—

The New York Observer (Presbyterian) having recently reissued its assault upon the memory of Paine, this pamphlet should be circulated everywhere in vindication.

60pp. Price 10 cents; 12 copies, $1.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD

A Fabricated Account of a Scene at the Death-bed of Thomas Paine.

BY W. H. BURR.

This pamphlet shows that the account of Paine's dying moments attributed to Bishop Fenwick (upon which the Observer relies to prove its principal charges) is a forgery, it being impossible that Fenwick could hav written the alleged account.

18pp. Price 5 cents; 25 for $1.00.

For these two pamphlets address

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

Gems of Thought.

If God did say, Keep Saturday holy, the Christian Puritan bigots had not the feeblest authority in the world for setting it aside, and saying Sunday should be the holy day. I deny, and I defy proofs to the contrary, that God or his son Jesus ever gave a command that Sunday should be kept holy. If any day is to be kept holy, it is the original Sabbath, Saturday, and none other. And even the observance of Saturday is an old Jewish commandment, and is no more binding for us than to be circumcised and to burn the blood and flesh of bulls and he-goats to make a sweet savor in the nostrils of Yaveh.—D. M. Bennett.

We are laying the foundations of the grand temple of the future—not the temple of all the gods, but of all the people—wherein, with appropriate rites, will be celebrated the religion of humanity. We are doing what little we can to hasten the coming of the day when society shall cease producing millionaires and mendicants, gorged indolence and famished industry, truth in rags and superstition robed and crowned. We are looking for the time when the useful shall be the honorable, and when Reason, throned upon the world's brain, shall be the king of kings and god of gods. —Ingersoll.

In every experimental science there is a tendency toward perfection. In every human being there is a wish to ameliorate his own condition. These two principles hav often sufficed, even when counteracted by great public calamities, and by bad institutions, to carry civilization rapidly forward. No ordinary misfortune, no ordinary misgovernment, will do so much to make a nation wretched as the constant progress of physical knowledge and the constant effort of every man to better himself will do to make a nation prosperous.—Macaulay.

How ineffectual are all our efforts to preserve the morals of a people if the laws which regulate the political order doom the one-half of mankind to indigence, to fraud, to servility, to ignorance, and superstition, and the other half to be the slaves of all the follies and vices which result from the insolence of rank and the selfishness of opulence.—Dugald Stewart.

Ye see yon birkie, ca'd a Lord,
Wha struts and stares and a' that;
Though hundreds worship at his word,
He's but a coof for a' that.
For a' that and a' that,
His ribband, star, and a' that,
The man of independent mind,
He looks and laughs at a' that.
—Burns.

The true law is everywhere spread abroad, it is constant, eternal. It calls us to duty by its commandments; it turns us away from wrong-doing by its prohibitions. We can take nothing from it, change nothing, abrogate nothing. Neither the senate nor the people hav the right to free us from it. It is not one thing at Rome, another at Athens; one thing to-day, to-morrow another. But, eternal and immutable, the same law embraces all times and all nations. There is one being alone who can teach it and impose it upon all—that is God.—Cicero.

The sensible object is out of man, the religious is in him. Religion is the indirect or imperfect consciousness that man has of himself, and the goodness, justice, wisdom which he worships exist only as his own attributes.—Feuerbach.

Certainly if the Bible is such a revelation as men claim, it has egregiously failed to answer the purpose for which it was intended, seeing that men equally able, earnest, and sincere differ among themselvs radically and hopelessly.—C. H. Brigham.

Men are good not because of their orthodoxy, but in spite of it; their goodness is the outgrowth of their humanity, not of their orthodoxy. Heresy is necessary to progress; heresy in religion always precedes an endeavor for political freedom. You cannot hav effectual political progress without wide-spread heretical thought. Every grand political change in which the people hav played an important part has been preceded by the popularization of heresy in the immediately earlier generation.—Bradlaugh's Heresy.

This is true liberty, when free-born men,
Having to advise the public, may speak free;
Which he who can and will deserves high praise,
Who neither can, nor will, may hold his peace.
What can be juster in a state than this?—Milton.

Protestantism is rapidly declining in Germany; it makes no perceptible progress in France; in Spain and Italy it has no future. It achieves no fresh conquests, and at every point is giving way to the pressnre of secular thought. The wail of Protestantism is as general as it is pathetic.—O. B. Frothingham.

I think I know a worthy man when I meet him, and they are so rare in the world that no honor is too great for those that are such.—Locke's Familiar Letters.

I know not how it is, but most people prefer being in error and defending, with the utmost pugnacity, that opinion which they hav taken a fancy to, to inquiring, without any obstinacy, what is said with the greatest consistency.—Cicero.

FREEDOM.

They are slaves who fear to speak
For the fallen and the weak,
They are slaves who will not choose
Hatred, scoffing, and abuse,
Rather than in silence shrink
From the truth they needs must think;
They are slaves that dare not be
In the right with two or three.

Is true freedom but to break
Fetters for our own dear sake,
And, with leathern hearts, forget
That we owe mankind a debt?
No! true freedom is to share
All the chains our brothers wear,
And, with heart and hand, to be
Earnest to make others free!
—James Russell Lowell.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 13. No. 28. PUBLISHED WEEKLY. New York, Saturday, July 10, 1886. 33 CLINTON PLACE. $3.00 per year.

INAUGURATING HOME RULE IN IRELAND.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Women's Suffrage party's State Committee hav sent Governor Hill, of New York, a letter of thanks for signing the bill declaring that both mothers and fathers can legally vote at school elections.

THE REV. PETER CRUDDEN, of Lowell, Mass., recently died, leaving an estate of $500,000, acquired by industrious solicitation, and which goes to a surviving sister. The Catholic authorities hav sued the estate, claiming that the property belongs to the church.

THERE is a grain bag monopoly in San Francisco, and the following notice, sent out by an extensiv grain dealer there, shows how it works: "Having learned that some farmers intend to put their new wheat into old sacks, I now giv you notice that I shall accept new wheat only if in new sacks."

THERE are 375 railroad stations open on Sunday in Massachusetts, while 461 men are needed to run Sunday trains. To keep the horse cars in movement, 2,958 men hav to work. Some 300 telegraph and telephone offices are open on Sunday, employing probably twice that number of operators.

MRS. MINA BAUHMAN, of Logansport, Ind., has begun a suit for $1,000 damages against the German Lutheran church at that place, and also asks for an injunction restraining the pastor and trustees from ringing the chime of bells of the church. She complains that her daughter, who is an invalid, suffers severely at each ringing of the bells. Church bells ought to go. They are a public nuisance.

BLASPHEMY is so rife in the north of Italy that the archbishop of Genoa has published a charge against it, in which he specially denounces the Secolo of Milan as a blasphemous print, which all in whose hands it may fall should burn, lest they themselvs be burnt in everlasting fire.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND has signed an act granting the franking privilege to General Grant's widow. This will relieve her of the expense of paying postage on her letters. Mrs. Grant's fortune is only about a million dollars, and this act will enable her to get along without borrowing stamps. There is a chance also that the publishers of the general's "Memoirs" will profit somewhat by the gratitude of this great republic.

TALMAGE'S excursion with his congregation to the Thousand Islands is causing some remark. It seems that the Sunday which the party spent away from home was not observed as good Christians should observe the Sabbath. One brother went fishing, taking many of the Tabernacle pilgrims with him, while the superintendent got a gun and went out and shot a coon. The women went sailing, and boating, and fishing. Yet, strange to say, nobody was drowned.

CHICAGO papers giv an account of the movements of Anarchist Parsons since the night of the Haymarket riot. When the bomb exploded Parsons leaped from the wagon and ran to his home, where he held a conference with his wife, and they decided that his flight was necessary. By morning he was on the Rock Island train with a ticket to Omaha. His disguise was thorough and unique. He took refuge on a farm near Papillon, a small town twenty miles west of Omaha. There he remained until June 18th, when, yielding to the advice of Captain Black, he started for Chicago. He boldly entered Omaha, purchased his ticket, and made the journey of five hundred miles without an attempt at concealment. Parsons constantly communicated by letter with his wife, and latterly with Captain Black.

A WOMAN and her paramour hav recently been tried at Caen, France, for the murder of the woman's husband. A letter written by the woman was put in evidence, in which she said they must kill her husband in order that she and her accomplice might be "forever afterward happy by the blessing of God." When he was taken very ill she wrote: "Oh, if it would only please God to remove him." But as he got well they resolved to shoot him, and burned a candle to the success of their project on the altar of the Virgin.

AMERICA now has a full-fledged cardinal. Last week Wednesday the red beretta was duly conferred upon Archbishop Gibbons at Baltimore, in the presence of a large number of church dignitaries. Secretary Lamar represented the Cabinet at the ceremony. President Cleveland sent by the Rev. Dr. Chapelle, pastor of St. Matthew's church, in Washington, a personal letter congratulating the Cardinal, whose acquaintance and personal friendship he has for some time enjoyed, upon his elevation to the cardinalate. Hail Columbia, happy land!

JOHN B. SMITH, of New Britain, Conn., had more apples than he knew what to do with last fall, so he stored four hundred barrels in a neighbor's large ice house. In the winter the house was filled with ice, all around the apples, which were solidly frozen. To Mr. Smith's great surprise the fruit, a short time ago, was found to be in perfect condition. He shipped twenty-five barrels to this city, and they sold readily at three dollars a barrel. More were called for, and now the whole four hundred barrels of hard, fresh, sound Baldwins hav been sold at that price, right in the middle of June.

THE order of the Boston Board of Police closing up bakers' shops and barber shops Sunday still engrosses public attention at the Hub, and makes steady business for the courts. In the case of Bernard P. Verne, charged in the municipal court with keeping his barber shop open on the Lord's Day, Judge Hardy declined to exercise jurisdiction, and sent the case to the higher court, the bonds remaining the same. This action has excited much interest among the barbers of the city, many of whom are of the opinion that no further arrests will be made—certainly not until the Verne case is settled.

Two old people who were on their way to church yesterday at Milton, Pa., were run over and killed by a newspaper train. This sad accident will be held up to the public as a strong argument against Sunday newspaper trains, but it will be offered by way of offset by Colonel Ingersoll that people who remain at home waiting for the Sunday newspapers to be brought to them are never run over by these swift moving trains.—World. If the Christians can stand this moral the Infidels can. It was the Christians who got hurt, while the wicked persons on board the train escaped physical injury. The incident is a plain warning against going to church.

The Influence of Religion and Philosophy on Morals.

BY VAN BUREN DENSLOW.

II.

1. The primary influence of the doctrin of immortality, which surrounds man with divine associates in this life, and points him onward to a larger and more intimate association with the divine natures of all ages, in the future life, is most ennobling, in that it causes man to set an infinitly higher value on himself and on his fellow-man. I think this view redounds more to the cultivation of sympathy and love among men than any other can; it magnifies certain peculiarities in which all souls are equal, and thereby lessens the importance of the factitious advantages of birth, position, and fortune, and the like in which men are unequal. No set of men hav ever defied kingly authority more vigorously than the class who relied on this as the bottom fact in their creed, that all men are equal in the sight of God, i.e., that the lesser features in which they are unequal are not to be compared with the great fact of immortality in which they are equal. Republicanism in England, which is the parent of republicanism in America, was cradled in Puritanism, that of Germany in Lutherism. Subjects learn earlier to contend against princes and priesthood for freedom to worship what they suppose to be God than for the liberty to perfect their own welfare or maintain their own rights.

The offsets to this moral gain are two: Religion so accustoms the human mind to a credulous acceptance of the myths and miracles which are deemed necessary to sustain the doctrin of immortality as to stultify man's capacity for distinguishing the credible from the incredible, or rather to create a conflict between historic truth, which means something that actually occurred, and religious truth, which seems to include whatever produces a sense of religious exaltation and profit, or, as the phrase goes, promotes the cause of Christ.

I am profoundly aware of the true value of literary and religious fictions for the inculcation of moral ideas. I can see that the question whether the book of Job is a novel or a biography is not of the slightest importance on the value of the book as a source of religious truth. Fictions are the necessary vehicles for teaching lessons concerning human character. The invaluable lessons contained in Dickens's works would not be enhanced by so much as a hair's weight by proving that all his hundreds of characters once lived. Nor would the value of the teachings of Moses, Jesus, and Paul be greatly diminished if it were true, as some Swedenborgians contend, that no such persons ever lived. Religious men are right in asserting that the moral faculty may draw moral and religious truths from historic fictions as easily as it can draw immoral conclusions from historic facts. The bee will draw honey from flowers that drip with poison. The wasp will extract poison from flowers that drip with honey. So the moral sense in man is its own distiller; it may grow strong on fictions, it may grow weak on facts. Perhaps this will sound to some of you like a vain and empty argument in behalf of religious lying. I leave that to my critics. I wish merely to indicate by a few examples that this habit of using and manufacturing fiction to illustrate truth is becoming very common among Christians, and that it sometimes fails to stand connected with the deepest reverence for actual facts. Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, at a recent Sunday-school convention in Brooklyn, called to instruct teachers in the method of teaching children, got off the following stories:

He knew of one man who, in a doleful strain, told a congregation at a prayer-meeting how great a sinner he was. "I was an awful sinner," said he, "a great sinner. I was the chief among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely."

Some men never learn how to phrase a prayer. A spirited horse was running away with a man, and every minute promised to be his last. He grabbed hold of the sides of the wagon as it bounded along after the runaway, and as he could not think of any other prayer, he said, "O Lord, make us thankful for the mercies we are about to receive."

There was a tiring sameness in the expressions of those who had experiences to relate. A young man got up once and said: "I am on the ship of Zion, and we are sailing up the heavenly harbor; soon we'll reach the Golden Gate." Another man said: "I, too, am on the ship of Zion, and we are sailing with a good breeze. I guess we are going as fast as thirty knots an hour. Every man is at his post. Soon we'll come to the pearly gates." Another arose and said: "I, too, am on the ship of Zion. It's a steamship—a four hundred hoss-power. We are going up the heavenly harbor, and we are going faster'n any other ship. We're bound to glory." An old and feeble woman arose and said: "I'm seventy years old, and for fifty years I've been on the road to heaven, but I've been goin' afoot, and I expect to keep goin' afoot until I get there; and it seems to me if you folks that's goin' on the steamship don't take care, you'll bust your bilers." When this story was told the congregation rocked and surged with laughter.

It is always difficult to prove a negativ, and impossible to doubt a clergyman; but I think that we would all assume that Dr. Talmage was not present when these supposed facts occurred, and that if we had been present we should not hav heard them. Still, if some serious man like Mark Twain or Josh Billings, who isn't making up stories for fun, should vouch for them, we don't know what we might say.

The Rev. J. Hyatt Smith said that he was once trying to illustrate the difference between Christ's joy at the conversion of a sinner, and the joy the converted one experienced. He didn't know how he was going to get through, when suddenly a story crept into his mind. His brother Natty, when a child, was blind. A cloudy film had spread over his eyes, cutting off the sight. One day he and his brother were playing on the nursery floor, using a large onion for a ball. They rolled and tossed it back and forth, until it became bruised and juicy. Natty, in handling it, got his fingers wet with the juice, and when he rubbed his eyes with his hand he uttered a sharp cry of pain. Then he jumped to his feet, and, screaming with joy, exclaimed, "Oh, I see! I see!" The delicate surgery of the onion had cut through and removed the film that blinded him. He leaped into his mother's arms, quivering with delight, while she clasped him to her breast and uttered words of joy. The happiness of the child was one; the happiness of the mother was another. "When I returned home after church that Sunday," said Mr. Smith, "my little blue eyes climbed into my lap and said, 'Hyatt'—she has no respect for the cloth; it's her mother's training—'Hyatt,' she said, 'was that story about the onion a true story?' 'Yes, my pet,' I said. 'Oh,' she said, 'I thought you were only preaching.'"

In the ordinary untheological course of events, if Mr. Smith had ever had a brother Natty cured of blindness by onion juice getting into his eyes, his daughter would hav heard of it a thousand times as part of the ordinary family history, and as a reason for recommending onion juice to all blind people. But I fancy that in order to remove a film by onion juice, the quantity to be employed would amount itself to a cataract of Niagara which would sweep away both patient and malady in the resistless flood and amidst the deafening roar of its falling thunders. To search such a story for historical truth is to do it an injustice. It is its rich religious truth that compensates for the discrepancy that no member of the family had ever heard of it before, and that even its sacredly commissioned author in telling it, while in one breath he assures his little daughter it is a fact, in the next assures the public it is a story. The world had waited for eighteen centuries without an exact definition of the difference between Christ's joy at the sinner's conversion and the joy of the sinner himself. Perhaps some sinners had modestly declined to be converted for fear their joy should be of the same quality as Christ's. At all events, eighteen centuries is long enough to wait for anything. Rev. J. Hyatt Smith is the only man that knows. If he dies intestate, without bequeathing this fact to the world, it will never again be discovered, because no other man will ever hav a brother Natty cured by onion juice. Of what consequence, compared with such a revelation of original truth, is the question whether Smith had any brother named Natty, or whether Natty was blind, or whether he was cured by onion juice?

Perhaps some of you may remember a celebrated trial in which the greatest preacher now living figured a year or two ago. For some reason it has become impolite to mention this trial in good society, although it has never been deemed rude to mention the trial of Jesus, or of any person, however eminent in piety, who we are quite sure was innocent. Shortly afterward there was a little trial of a case in which this eminent divine was sued by a dentist for the price of his mother's false teeth. The testimony ran somewhat as follows:

Counsel: "Mr. Beecher, what were these teeth made of?"

Answer: "I don't know—hav really no idea."

Counsel: "You know they were not made of sealing-wax, I suppose?"

Witness: "They might hav been, for aught I know." [Laughter.]

Counsel: "Or leather, Mr. Beecher?"

Mr. Beecher: "Of course. Or leather, for aught I know." [Roars of laughter from all parts of the court-room.]

Here again, under a veil of audacious and hilarious pleasantry, Mr. Beecher, at the cost of a trifling fiction, inculcates the great moral and religious truth that when a witness is on the stand he is not to say anything from which the opposit side of the case can draw the least advantage.

So when Mr. Beecher's novel of "Norwood" was published, and he, according to the statements in the public press, went to Canada, and there, in order to copyright it, having resided there only one day, swore that he was an inhabitant of Canada, a point that, so far as I know, had never previously occurred to any American author, the religious lesson doubtless to be conveyed is that, on a question of copyright in another country, one day with the Lord is as a thousand years and a thousand years are as one day.

According to my best observation, in the matter of scrupulous regard for truth, the Christians of to-day occupy a medium position the scholarly skeptical class of unbelieving Freethinkers, independent secular minds, and non-religious business men ranking as a rule higher, and the classes of society which are irreligious through animalism and mere grossness ranking lower. And yet I hav met with people among the class of professors of the Christian religion, who use it as a social prop for their respectability, and as an aid in business, whose faculty for lying transcended anything that I ever saw, even among criminals.

I will not refer to the effect of religious ideas upon the truth-telling faculty in Catholic countries, where the bones of the saints must stimulate faith by constantly curing somebody; the eyes of the Virgin in the pictures of the Madonna must open, and her lips must move into an approving smile or spoken word to the rapt devotee, and where sacred shrines must work their daily miracles. The degree of practical respect which these pretenses inspire is happily expressed by a sign which the mayor in one of the towns in southern France caused to be erected over one of these miraculous spots. It reads:

De pars le roi
Defense a Dieu
De faire des miracles
En ce lieu.

Liberally translated, it would read:

By supreme command of the king
It is strictly forbidden that God
Should do any miraculous thing
To disgrace this sacred sod.

It seems at first singular that anyone should suppose that the belief that one's lies are all forgiven in advance for whatever reason the forgivnness issues, should hav a necessary and irresistible tendency to cause men to tell the truth. Christians can see that the Mohammedan's belief that his lies are all irresistibly foreordained by Allah, has not a good moral effect on the Mohammedan. The Protestant can see that the sale by the Catholic priest of an indulgence, permitting the faithful to tell so many lies on payment of so much money to the Lord, did not in Luther's time hav a good effect on the Catholic conscience, and that investing a priest with the supposed power to utter God's forgivness is an imposition on the human mind, and demoralizing. And the good Catholics cannot see that it is any safer to hav the forgivness of God simply assumed by the believer than it is to hav it uttered by the priest. The philosopher, failing to comprehend the thing at all, declines to see that it is any better to hav the forgivness issue in consideration of the blood of Christ, than in consideration of the sum of money. He even holds that, as matter of daily observation and obvious fact, the lies told by Christians, notwithstanding the faith of those who tell them that they are forgiven through the blood of Christ, are not forgiven at all, but lead straight on to their punishment exactly as those told by non-Christians do, and receive the same measure of punishment in this world; and if the punishment in this world is not remitted he sees no reason to believe that the punishment in the next will be, since this world and the next, if there be one, are supposed to be under the same divine government. Besides he objects to being forgiven at all. And that, Spurgeon says, is a sufficient reason why he will not be forgiven.

It is certain that this commercial theory of salvation bears stronger marks of the Jewish mind than of the mind of the author of the universe, for nowhere in the universe of nature are violations of natural laws forgiven on any such principle.

Diverse as may be its moral effects, the doctrin of forgivness through faith, instead of the inexorable punishment of all sin, is of the essence of any propagandizing aggressiv conquering faith. Judaism, Brahmanism, the Greek and Roman religions, Confucianism, and all natural religion are non-propagandist faiths because they fail to teach that the supreme virtue in human conduct is that element which musters men into the religious organization holding that faith. On the other hand Christianity, Buddhism, and Mohammedanism are the aggressiv conquering faiths.

Each of these makes the supreme virtue to consist in that state of mind which gathers the sinner into the organization, be it Christian, Mohammedan, or Buddhist, just as military leaders in time of war say, it matters not what you are, or hav been, so long as henceforth you fight on our side. This is a very simple weapon for an evangelist seeking simply to enlist troops, but it is much too simple for a moral philosopher seeking to inquire into the causes of the war, and the merits of the contest. One of its immoral effects is to reduce all sins to one level, by the mischievous sophism that they are so in the sight of God. Thus the Christian minister who was recently convicted at Dixon of having poisoned his wife in order to marry pretty Miss Paddock, could consistently, with average Christian teaching, hav reasoned thus: It is as wicked for me to desire Miss Paddock as it would be to marry her if my wife were living. It is as wicked for me to wish my wife dead as it is to murder her by poison. But, as I wish both these things, I am under condemnation spiritually for both these crimes. I could not need any greater forgivness if I had committed them both. By committing both, and repenting, I can secure at once the highest measure of social and personal happiness without sacrificing my own eternal welfare; and as to my wife, she is a good Christian, and while she is rather uncomfortable here, she will be immediately happy in heaven. Principles which work out such an argument cannot but hav something of this tendency, even in minds which do not follow the chain of deductions so coolly. I was first made conscious of this tendency many years ago when informed by an acquaintance who was then and has since been in good standing as a Baptist, that he had made an assignation with his mistress in the same week in which he was to enter a city church by letter from his home church in the country. He gravely argued, in answer to my charge of hypocrisy, that my indignation resulted solely from my narrowness of mind; that by his salacious relations he enjoyed one part of his nature, and by his religious associations he enjoyed another; that by sinning he was made happy in his lower nature and in this world, and by repenting he was made happy in his higher nature and fitted for the next world; while I, who kept no mistress, and belonged to no church, would lose much of the happiness of this world, and would be absolutely sure of damnation in the next.

According to the commercial theory of salvation it is a sort of bankruptcy. The larger the aggregated score of unpaid debts, which in our days of sin we run up to the Almighty, the more valuable is the faith and the savior, who wipes them all out and says, practically, Now go and run in debt again. At least such is the philosophical view of this question, which has its share of truth, i.e., is half true. When I come to speak of the religious passion as a moral purifier, I shall present the other half, which is also half true. You never can arrive at a whole truth without marrying in one two half-truths, which cannot liv apart, and yet when united perpetually contradict each other.

The cases of domestic crime, wife-murder and husband-murder, for the purpose of marrying other persons, are more common among religious persons than the irreligious, for the reason that to many religious people, unchastity that is discovered seems more disgraceful than a murder that is not discovered, and, of course, the religious guilt is equal because each violates God's law, and nothing can do more. On the other hand many irreligious persons are unable to see that incontinence is immoral, or only in a light degree. To a mind that is under the reign of law, without religion, murder stands out in a deformity so great that forgivness cuts no figure, and would be laughed to scorn. He cannot see how the murdered person can forgiv him or why society should, and he doubts if God, if he believes in God, will forgiv him, and whether it would repair the evil if he did. Such a person has no temptation to commit murder in order to perpetrate matrimony or make money. If he kills, it is through brutal passion, not cool premeditation. Some years ago a minister at Elgin had the grief to see his wife drown in eighteen inches of water, after which he went and collected an insurance on her life.

While I write a Baptist deacon of great influence and long apparent piety, and his paramour, await trial for a like crime in Vermont. Probably twenty such cases of cool, deliberate murder arise every year against religious persons in the United States, and hav during most years for fifty years past. Not the least of the sins which religious organization has to answer for is the unscrupulous clannishness with which it protects and covers every criminal who does not repudiate his faith, and the saintly arrogance with which it assumes that the evidence which should convict a skeptic should acquit a Christian.

Another evil is the dangers of the state of sentimental gush or what Carlyle, in deriding the word enthusiasm, calls emtoosy-moosy, meaning thereby an enthusiasm which is maudlin or drunken, which pervades certain stages of religious experience. Religion is not an exception to the universal law which governs all medicinal substances, that if the first and immediate effect upon the system is stimulant, the second and drug effect must be narcotic; if the first effect is so keen as to make the conscience feel that he that looketh upon a woman with desire has committed adultery, the second will be so stupefying as to prevent one perceiving that adultery is any greater offense than admiration.

Protestantism abolishes the confessional mainly because it believes it unfavorable to virtue. Yet in so doing it removes the grated and barred partition, and the sense of official weariness and monotonous routine which usually separate the Catholic priest from the penitent, without removing that principle of human nature which leads sin-burdened men and women to insist on confessing to somebody, the confession being the more gushing and melting in proportion as it is rare. A minister, deacon, new convert, the family doctor, anybody will do at a pinch, but confession there must be; even if there is nobody around any more competent to forgiv them than a notary public or a lawyer. I do not feel at liberty, nor would it be consistent with etiquet before a mixed audience, to cite instances of distinguished immorality which hav occurred so near to the period of sincere conversion, and so immediately after the feeling that one's sins were forgiven, as to seem simply incredible. In one case, upon the word of a Methodist of high standing, the most serious lapse from virtue occurred in the same hour in which he knelt at the prayer altar with a lady of previous and subsequent perfect chastity. Both were admitted to the church, and hav ever since been reputable and moral members, upon an experience which was inseparably connected, in their own minds only, with this inexplicable and solitary immorality. When I hav stated this to clergymen in certain instances they hav frankly said that psychologically it was rare but not incredible, since in their own experience their periods of highest religious fervor were frequently those of least self-control.

While sporadic cases of immorality growing out of high religious fervor may occur, its general effects are certainly purifying, and in many cases very beautiful. Still, the effects are not always good where no immorality supervenes. It is this stage of religious fervor that supplies the sad, very sad, cases for our insane asylums, something of which you hav all seen. But, apart from these, I hav known cases in which the fact of conversion, without occasioning insanity, has produced the same effects as Millerism or Millenniumism—has exercised so powerful an influence over young men who previously were industrious and useful as to withdraw their affections from the world and daze them into sickly fools, without ambition enough to continue in the performance of any duty, and without talents enough, as exhorters or lay preachers, to make their continual Bible reading and religious frenzy a means of either usefulness to others or even of mental exhilaration to themselvs. Their religious life became a sort of paralysis of the intellect, destroyed their muscularity and masculinity, and was as blighting to their further usefulness as intemperance or any vicious excess would hav been. The wisest preachers, even in the midst of revival seasons, tell such persons to let religion alone, keep away from the meetings, and go on with their secular business. On the whole, however, it is the reaction from this high stage of religious fervor which is more likely than the fervor itself to develop immoral effects. In the emotional churches, like the Methodist, Christians backslide into non-Christians, or, as they are called, worldlings. In the more austere churches like the Presbyterian and Baptist, which hold to the doctrin of the irresistible perseverance of the saints, that a man or woman once a saint is always a saint, the loss of the divine fire lands the saint in hypocrisy or in utter self-deception. These sad anomalies hav occurred so continually within my knowledge that I am satisfied that the means of maintaining moral conduct in men and woman should be taught on some more scientific and comprehensiv basis than that of mere religious faith of any kind. At least, the consciences of men and women should not be drugged into stupor by the assurance that, having got their faith fixed into a certain theological channel, they hav done all they can, and if after that time they sin, they are sure of forgivness. It would be nauseous for me to enumerate cases of people who are both devotional and unscrupulous; of men given to prayer and also to the polite forms of robbery that prevail in business; of praying women who, half in ignorance, half in crime, wage a cruel war against nature itself to evade the duty of motherhood; of individuals in both sexes who seek, while maintaining their church membership, to ward off their true reputations by continual treachery and falsehood. I think such persons would be purer if they reversed the Christian faith, and instead of regarding their faith in Christ as the ground of their salvation, they understood that it must be possible for Christ to hav faith in them. And here let me add, in justice to these persons, that their hypocrisy is in part inevitable, and arises out of the economical system, as I think unsound, which Christianity, and more especially the teachings of Jesus himself, present as to the relativ duties of selfishness and benevolence. I do not feel that I trespass on the domain of theology when I discuss the teachings of Jesus concerning the acquisition of property, because this is a question mainly of political economy. It affects mainly this life.

The teachings of Jesus are, in my judgment, on this point intense and impracticable communism. They oppose the acquisition of property, and favor its immediate free distribution; they oppose industry, and recommend idleness; they condemn wealth as a crime which shall shut a man out of the kingdom, and commend poverty as a beatitude. They make giving the chief virtue, and so commend beggary as the noblest employment. I know there is a popular habit of glossing over these doctrins and taking them in a Pickwickian sense. But those who will study the history of the sect of the Essenes, as given by Neander, will see that Jesus uttered them literally. When the moral young man, who had great possessions, and who had kept the law perfectly, asked him what more he should do to inherit eternal life, he said, "Sell all thou hast and giv to the poor, and come and follow me." It was very demoralizing advice. When he counseled his disciples to "be ye therefore as the lilies of the field, for they toil not, neither do they spin," he means literally that they should not work. Following this teaching literally in Russia, under the Greek church, beggary is commended as a virtue, and the class of men whom the czar canonizes into saints are the lazy, lousy, and filthy religious tramps who wander from the Crimea to Novgorod, seeking cast-off garments more filthy than their own, and visiting sacred shrines and begging. Hence the obligation on the Russian priest to perform no productiv labor and to own no property, poverty, chastity, and humility—to hav no land, no will of his own, and no wife, being his three vows. Hence the admiration with which Protestants look upon Muller, whose dependence on prayer, however, to support his enterprise, is simply a dependence on a judicious system of religious advertising, for he knew that an announcement that he intended to liv by prayer alone would be so remarkably presumptuous that everybody would tell it everybody, and this free advertising would cause sufficient contributions to come in better than open appeals for aid.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

How These Brethren Love Each Other!

The American Hebrew (old line orthodox organ) is poking solemn fun at the Sinai Congregation of Chicago, which affects liberalism and talks about reform. It declines congratulating the Sinaites on their twenty-fifty anniversary, only because "its history is a narrativ of cowardly retreat and surrender of principle."

1. Giving up the Talmud, it clung to the Bible. (Reign of Robespierre Felsenthal.)
2. Then cut out the Mosaic dispensation, and clove to the prophets. (Period of Danton Chronik.)
3. Having, however, throughout its checkered career a kindly word to say now and then for the Decalog. (July 4, 1875, July 4, 1876, February 22, 1878, scepter of Marat Kohler.)
4. It has at last had to giv up even that, that it might murder the Sabbath. (Murder committed Thursday night, October 17, 18—. Terrorism of Egalite Hirsch.)

We cannot conscientiously be profuse in our congratulations to such a congregation. Congratulatory telegram from Dr. Kohut's American Hebrew to Sinai Congregation:

"Happy shall he be that takes and dashes thy children against the rocks. Let the Lord of Israel be praised forever and ever" (Psalm cxxxvii).

The Occident, organ of these Chicago "reformers," which defiantly copies this, is playing a part that reveals the manysidedness of politicians. While abounding in technically sectarian Hebrew affairs, it is reprinting from the Nineteenth Century magazine Huxley's damaging comparison of the Hebrew religion, doctrins, and ceremonies with the superstitions of Tahiti and the Polynesian savages. It reasons that it is all, and the sacrifices especially, identical with the worship of ancestors and with that ghost-craft which is strictly related with it.

The old orthodox Hebrew is not far from the truth in its charges, though it sacrifices the exact truth to epigrammatic point. For instance, Dr. Robespierre Felsenthal, a friend and disciple of Lessing before the formation of the Sinaites (1859), had emphasized the tenet that "the Bible is not the source of Judaism but a production of the same," and this pamphlet "Kolcore Bamidbar" proceeds to invalidate the persistent authority of biblical laws, reserving allegiance exclusivly to "the moral (spell with a big M)—Moral Laws inscribed by divine hands into the spiritual Nature of Man; furthermore that any religious law that is not rooted in the psychological or physical nature of man is obligatory only so long as it exercises an elevating and furthering influence upon head and heart, upon thoughts and deeds of the members of the community."

Dr. Felsenthal does not tell us whether such "elevating and furthering influence," etc., and the consequent obligation, is to be decided on by private judgment or by majority vote. This lex non scripta is a transcendentalism that floats with easy rein. He may retort by asking whether the more stringent pretensions of a lex scripta hav secured either obedience or agreement in its application.

For those who hav an interest in imposing any law it may seem to be the might of right, while to their subjects it is the right of might.

The "eternal validity of Moral Laws inscribed by divine hands" is pompously authoritativ; but when their "psychological roots" meet a soil so shifting as the nature of man, as the it seems right to me of different men at different times in different circumstances—what becomes of the "eternal validity?" Or why invoke "divine hands?"

Ne Deus intersit nisi dignus vindice nodus.

The tables or tablets of the Decalog had for centuries been commonplaces of morality in China and elsewhere, and the "Lord's chosen people" hav been scandalously delinquent toward several of them—even by divine command. EDGEWORTH.

HERMAS.—The "Pastor of Hermas" was probably the most popular book in the church during the second, third, and fourth centuries. . . . Ireneus quotes it as scripture, Clement of Alexandria regards its revelations as divine, Origen claims it as divinely inspired, and Tertullian alone, of all the fathers, rejects it outright. But Tertullian had embraced Montanism, with which the views of the "Pastor" did not harmonize. . . . . It is a book of "Visions," about as edifying as the average rhapsody of a "speaking medium." It has no quotation from the Old Testament. . . . . Neither Jesus nor Christ is once mentioned in the whole book.—Antichrist.

Miss Gardener in the Field.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: You will, no doubt, be surprised, after knowing of my recent illness, to get a letter from me from this place. But there was "a cry from Macedonia 'come and help us.'" And I came. Macedonia this time was Waynesburg, Pa., and the crier was that stanch and fortunate Freethinker, Mr. H. Clay Luse. I call Mr. Luse fortunate because he did not hav to go through the horrors of orthodoxy in his childhood. He was born with a free brain, a boon which cannot be overestimated, an endowment beyond price, even if that were given as the only great birthright; but in this case there was added the happy combination of independent social and financial standing, which enables Mr. Luse to do justice to his brains without fear of doing injustice to his appetite. He has not had to sell his birthright for—as the boy hath it—a dose of potash.

Both his father and mother, who called upon me, are stanch, intelligent, and earnest Freethinkers, and encourage and aid him in his efforts. Mr. Luse is quite a young man yet, and with his energy and earnestness, I think, we may confidently expect him to do much for the enlightenment of his fellow-men. Through the efforts of Mr. Luse and Mrs. Lucy Dorsey Iams—than whom we hav no more intelligent and attractiv worker in the "home mission" field—a lecture was arranged for at this place. The expenses were all paid by subscription, and they invited all who were not afraid to hear both sides of the question to come free of charge.

I am not very good at estimating numbers, but I should think there were three hundred in the Town Hall when I began to speak. This was ten per cent of the entire population of the town, which was certainly doing well.

Mrs. Iams had, through her own personal influence, caused my pictures and posters to be put in most of the windows of the leading stores, and her cunning little boy, who is not yet seven years old, watched to see that they were kept up. Wherever he found that one had been taken down he produced another, and insisted upon putting it up.

He called upon me, and told me about it himself in a very amusing way, so I told him that I should tell you of it, and that this very youthful but very vigorous little branch of a Freethought family is named Jay Donald Iams, and is the son of a leading lawyer, whose mind is too clear to be superstitious, and whose sense of moral obligation is too correct to permit him to curry favor by pretending to be so.

Fortunately Mr. Iams and his wife can afford to be honest, because their ability and charm of manner assure them a firm footing wherever they may be. These I hav named hav been the prime movers in giving this town Freethought lectures from time to time; but from the number of Freethinkers who hav called upon me and who aided Mr. Luse financially in the matter I should think, notwithstanding the fact that the town is very orthodox and manufactures theological students to order, that the thinking portion will be amply able to take care of itself. They say that a very short time ago not ten people in the town would hav dared to sit through my lecture. Last night a few only left the hall. Some of these were small boys who were not interested, two or three were very orthodox ladies, and the rest, I am told, were theolgical students who may hav felt personally grieved by a sentence in my lecture which speaks of "theological students who wear number six hats." Had I known there were any such in my audience, I should hav tried to make the number of the hat small enough to allow them to escape. But one cannot avoid accidents of this nature always, and one can only offer an apology for anything which may hav seemed personal, which I am quite willing to do.

But I shall leave Mr. Luse and Mrs. Iams to tell you of the lecture. I enjoyed it heartily—all the more when a young man arose after it was over and said that it made his "blood run cold to hear such talk." He was invited to state why, as soon as his circulation should revive sufficiently, whereupon he asked me what was a "soul" and how we would ever hav known how to be "modest" if it were not for Jehovah and the Bible. Of course, this had nothing to do with the subject of the lecture, which was simply an argument to show that the Bible and orthodoxy are not friends to woman and should not be supported by her. This point, however, he did not touch at any time. His first question being a conundrum which no human being ever has answered yet, I confessed that I should be unable to satisfy his cravings in that direction.

Then we had rather a comical little tilt over the "modesty" taught in the Bible, and the variations of the article "furnished by Jehovah" in different countries. I assured him that in Feejee he taught his children that modesty was best conserved by liberal tattooing and no clothes at all, and then we ran the scale from that up to the Japanese gentleman who would be disgraced were he to tell a "smutty" story to another man as surely as the same thing would happen to him were he to tell it in this country to a party of ladies. The gentleman then said that that was because these people had no Bible; but he did not name any of the passages wherein I could find the standard of modesty by which Jehovah guided himself, and as I hav no microscope with me, I hav been unable to find anything which is not wholly on the other side of the question.

Still, as this was a new "reason for not being an Infidel"—as this gentleman said—I concluded to let you know that henceforth we hav this unique argument to meet. I am sorry that I, in my amusement of the moment, forgot to tell him that a little book called "Bible Anthology" was once compiled, which dealt with this point, and gave no word not in the Bible, and yet it was declared so wholly indecent that it was not allowed to go through the mails. Still this gentleman proposes to learn and teach "modesty" by means of these passages. I should think that his success would be phenomenal. But I am making my letter too long. As I sit by my window writing it, I can hear the men on the court-house steps vigorously debating the new ideas, which will insure their circulation, and therefore accomplish our objects. The handsome basket of flowers presented me by Mrs. Sears sits by me perfuming the air, and I am expecting a delegation of lawyers, who asked permission to call this morning before my train leaves. Mr. Iams is to present them.

Sincerely, Helen H. Gardener.

Waynesburg, Pa., June 24, 1886.

Chicago Secular News.

A religious war of no small dimensions has been waging on the west side of Chicago for the last few days between the Christian parents of the West Division High School children and their principal and the Board of Education. The principal very properly refused to permit prayer at the graduating exercises, which were, however, held in a church, and this was the signal for their bellicose attitude.

The facts, stripped of all verbiage, are: That the graduating class met to perfect a program, and some one moved that, as the exercises were to be held in Dr. Goodwin's church, the pastor be invited to do the praying act. There being no opposition, the motion was declared passed, though several in the class, not caring a fig about the matter, did not vote. Mr. Welles, the principal, hearing of the action of the class, informed them that prayer was against the rules of the Board and could not be permitted, and further, that if it was proposed to open the exercises by prayer he would hav nothing to do with it. Finding Mr. Welles inflexible, some of the class appointed themselvs delegates to confer with the chairman of the High Schools Committee, Mr. F. H. Collier, who escaped the dilemma by introducing them to Adolf Kraus, president of the Board of Education.

Mr. Kraus explained the rules and policy of the Board as opposed to everything sectarian; they desired to treat with the utmost consideration the religious feelings of all sects and avoid anything tending to giv offense. The Board proposed to giv the children a good school education and implant within them general principles of morality, but would leave to parents the religious part of their education, and pointed out that each denomination might be dissatisfied by what the priest of the other said, which was all very commendable. Instead of sustaining the principal and enforcing the rules to the letter, Mr. Kraus finally descended to the level of the lick-spittle politician and asked: "Why didn't you go on with your praying and say nothing about it, as they did on the North Side High School?" but if he was asked for permission he would be compelled to obey the rules of the Board and refuse. After the tremendous struggle to secularize the Chicago schools, here is a Liberal president willing to be blind to the principle involved, and even advises the violation of the rules his friends secured his appointment to maintain. If Mr. Kraus is correctly reported, he certainly is a traitor to the Board as well as to the public; but we can't believe all we read, especially if it is in the Chicago papers.

The damaging and very grave charge is brought against Mr. Welles, by the pupils and their parents, that the principal chews tobacco and smokes cigars, a practice which all really goody-goody Christians are supposed to look upon with utter disgust. He also contemptuously referred to the floral offerings as a "litter of rubbishy flowers," which shows his utter lack in the finer sensibilities, and no high school principal who is not an apostle and follower of the esthetic sun-flower poet is a fit subject to associate with the young ladies who chew gum in the high school. Oh, horror of horrors! just to think of it! This high school principal is said to hav "sneered" at" holding the exercises in a church, declaring it an unsuitable place. A veritable heathen is this high school principal. Over and above all other terrible things charged, it is also darkly hinted that "no one knows what his religion is, or whether he has any." Pupil Pearson, who has made himself quite numerous in this matter, delivers himself of the idea that Mr. Welles "believes in the religion of Virgil more than that of Christianity"—whatever that may mean. Young Pearson still survives. That explicit statement of his idea has had no fatal effect, either on himself or the principal, as yet.

The communication of a "Christian" mother shows "this terrible state of things—this pretty how do you do." The maternal breast is agitated, and forthwith propounds the following conundrum:

> Must we be required to pay teachers for poisoning the minds of our children with mental diseases which are more ruinous to them than is small-pox, or even leprosy, to their bodies? Will our Board of Education, of which we are so proud, permit such a state of affairs any longer to exist? We shall see.

This furnished the farewell Sunday evening sensation for that celebrated defamer of Chicago, Dr. Kittridge, who, notwithstanding that he pretends that this city is nearer perdition than any other of its size, has decided to let us all go to the bottomless pit and slide through to the other side if we can. Kittridge is fully persuaded that none but him, and his methods alone, could possibly save so wicked a community, so he cruelly abandons us in our hour of trouble and accepts, as a solace for his conscience, an extra $2,000 which some wind-bag worshipers of your city are willing to part with for his services. Kittridge utters this farewell wail:

> This group of young girls—pure, noble, Christian girls—went down to the president of our school board and asked if they might hav a prayer at the opening of their graduating exercises, and they were refused, and when they pleaded that the exercises were to take place in a church, the president said, "No matter; there could not be a prayer." Why, friends, that is worse than heathenism. We gave up the Bible at the demand of those who believed that it might lead to sectarian division, but now we are asked to giv up God. We are asked to plant our schools not only on a non-sectarian basis, but on an Atheistic basis, and I ask this great congregation if, as Christian citizens, they are ready to meet calmly and without protest the insult that has been thrown in the face of the church of Christ in this city. I am going away, but if you like that sort of thing, bear it. I thank God, however, that the principal of the North Side high school, without consulting any board of education, determined he would hav a prayer at the graduating exercises, and I had the unspeakable joy of making that prayer. If the position of the public schools is to be not only no Bible, but no recognition of the one eternal God, then I stand with the Roman Catholics for religious schools. I heard a gentleman say this afternoon that he was going to send his daughter to the high school, but when he heard of this action on the part of the school board he determined not to allow her to go to the high school. For my part, I would rather send my child to a Roman Catholic school than a school that stands on the basis of Atheism.

Poor Kitt, he seems terribly cut up! But it is only a seeming, his way of working up theatrical effects. Of all such we can truly say:

> O cunning enemy, that, to catch a saint,
> With saints dost bait thy hook! Most dangerous
> Is that temptation that doth goad us on
> To sin in loving virtue.

E. A. Stevens.

The Tent at Palmyra, New York.

We find this one of the most discouraging of fields; those who attend are much interested, but it is not in accordance with the dictum of Mrs. Grundy to attend the Liberal lectures. "Our first-class people do not attend," and so our attendance is at all times quite discouraging. In the midst of depression and weary, over-taxed strength, doing Tent-master's duties as well as own to save expense, how cheering and refreshing to receive letters like the following. It is such honest, earnest, enthusiastic, generous souls that make our work endurable, and buoys us over the dark, rough spots in our pilgrimage. Mr. Mann is secretary of the St. Thomas Secular Society.

C. B. Reynolds.

St. Thomas, Ont., June 23, 1886.

Friend Reynolds: I hav neglected to reply to your last letter till I could see all those who would wish to go to the camp-meeting near Buffalo. I think a half dozen or so would go for a week or so if the meeting lasted that long. We are having good success with our meetings, all of which I attribute to your lecturing here. It a very thankless business, working for the good of humanity. Those we wish to help refuse our assistance, and do all they can to injure us. A man must hav a more than ordinary love for his fellow-men to work as you hav done, and know that you will not get the credit for it till after you cease to exist. It is a wonder you do not get discouraged. But the time will come when the memory of Ingersoll, Watts, Reynolds, and the rest of those who hav striven to elevate man above the gross superstition of the past will be venerated as Paine and Voltaire now are. I don't complain of direct opposition; I rather like that, but the indifference of Liberals and the cowardice of some when the opposition makes a special effort. Your lectures brought five new members to the club. The Truth Seeker Company hav sent me five copies of their paper per week, which sell readily. As soon as I hav time I will increase the order to fifteen. Yours fraternally, J. H. Mann.

That Story About Stephen Pearl Andrews.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: To what you say of Andrews's resources in June 26th, allow me to add since I first met him, when he called on me at French's Hotel, New York, in 1870, I hav, on many different occasions, listened to proof of his extemporaneous power. Though a great scholar and philosopher, he was one of the readiest and most convincing off-hand speakers I ever met, a match for Wendell Phillips anywhere or time.

E. H. Heywood.

The American Secular Union.

News and Notes.

I found Dillon, Montana, one of the most enjoyable places I hav visited. It is a pretty city among the spurs of the Rocky Mountains. The peaks are snow-covered, and the green and wooded slopes are shining all around in the bright and cheerful atmosphere. Wide plains and meadows spread for miles, and the sparkling rivers flow from the uplands. This is on the Atlantic side of the mountains, and all the streams flow eastward. The country about Dillon is rich in resources; the farming lands, where water can be procured, and the pasture lands, are good. The mineral treasures are also excellent. There is a prospect of the development of one of the finest tin-mines in the world. If this is done, Dillon will be one of the largest cities in the West. Its growth already is steady and permanent. It has the neatness and elegance of a New England village—with about a hundred times as much activity. There is a splendid Liberal element in Dillon. The best men and women of the place are thoroughly in sympathy with advanced ideas. A Secular Union will be formed, and will hav a commanding influence.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Emerick are noble Liberals indeed. It was the lady in this case who gave the original impulse for the lectures, and who had the courage to do the first work for Liberalism. Before the lectures there was apparently but little acquaintanceship in regard to the objects of the American Secular Union. But now an unexpected power has been developed, and, almost to their surprise, the Freethinkers find themselvs in the ascendant in this community. So much for one woman's insight and determination. It is the promis of our movement that woman's intellect and heart are now with us, and so art and music will come, and noble sociability. When woman leaves the church its doom is sealed.

The churches had several prayer-meetings on the evening of the second lecture, and also a big ice-cream festival. I suppose they expected to freeze the Infidel out. The Court-house was again crowded, and the "New Heaven and Earth," the paradise of liberty, science, and humanity, was warmly welcomed. Another lecture will be given at Dillon on my return trip, July 18th.

Besides Mr. and Mrs. Emerick, and Mrs. L. E. Hanson, whose delightful hospitality I enjoyed, I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. and Mrs. Blivens, Mr. and Mrs. Eastman, Mr. and Mrs. Carrington, who aided the lectures with excellent music, Mr. and Mrs. Estes, Mr. and Mrs. Dittmer, Mr. Barbour, who introduced me to the meeting, Mr. B. F. White, mayor of the city, Mr. Thompson, Mr. Paindexter, Mr. Chapman, and many others, nearly fifty in all, leading citizens of the place, and intelligent and cultivated ladies and gentlemen, who will make in Dillon one of the brightest Liberal organizations in the land.

I also enjoyed the acquaintance of Messrs. Wright and Oakley of the Dillon Examiner, who are not afraid to publish a genuin newspaper and giv impartial reports of what is going on in this world.

I am now on the hills—almost touching the sky, it seems—on the other side of the mountains, where the waters flow into the Pacific at Butte City, a lively metropolis, next to San Francisco the most important point in the West, and the largest mining camp in the world. There are several vast smelting works here and the smoke rolls constantly to the sky. All the people are upon the go—the streets are crowded. There seems to be a boom in every store and a mine at every corner, and, indeed, it is very much like Virgil's description of Carthage—the whole community are busy as bees. The city is constantly growing; many elegant buildings are being constructed, besides new manufactories. In fact, Butte looks quite oriental in the variety of its houses, there being all sorts of architecture—from the snug little cottage with one room and a stove on the outside, to the palatial residence with flower gardens and beautiful green lawns. Go out of an evening, and with the lights, the crowd, the ever-changing faces, the music, the ornamented windows, one might imagin that he was in the picturesque city of Bagdad. In spite of the enormous crowds order prevails, everybody minds their own business, and it almost looks as if you were in a New England city on a fair day, all is so festiv and at the same time so steady-going. I like Butte, with its tremendous rush and vim, with its forward look to new worlds to conquer. It has a brilliant future. Its natural resources are many; the people are plucky and progressiv. It has more millionaires to its size than any city in the world, and its situation is beautiful, with superb mountain scenery on every hand. The panorama of an evening is simply gorgeous—the golden clouds, the ranges of hills, the lustrous valleys between, the gilded dwellings, all glowing in the magical sunset; and it seems as if the glories of dreamland were flashing in the entrancing landscape.

There is a large Liberal element in this city. I had full houses on Sunday afternoon and evening. It was one of the most intelligent and cultivated audiences I hav ever addressed. It represented the best portion of the community. Business and professional men were there. One-half of the audience were ladies. There was a brilliant array of new bonnets, and it did my soul good to hav beauty thus adorn the way of human progress, for I believe in a new bonnet with all my heart. It is one of the brightest signs of human improvement. Dr. O. B. Whitford, president of the Liberal Society here, introduced me to the audience with a felicitous speech.

I am now at the delightful home of the doctor, having a good rest and exhilaration for heart and mind. Dr. Whitford is author of that able and brilliant pamphlet, "Christianity a Reward for Crime." This is one of the brightest campaign documents published, and should be in the hands of every Liberal, not only for his own benefit, as making a decisiv and startling point against the popular theology, but for the benefit of his Christian friends. The more he can get to read this brilliant brochure the better. Dr. Whitford is a clear, concise, and vigorous writer. He calls things by their right names, and dissects Christianity with the insight of the physician and the skill of the surgeon. He is author also of "Bible Fabrications," another keen attack upon superstition, and a triumphant refutation of theological assumptions. He has in preparation another book, "The Origin of the Bible," which will be in its research and condensation of history a most valuable addition to Freethought literature.

Dr. Whitford is one of our mighty pioneers in this Western country. For over a quarter of a century he has been a pronounced Freethinker, and has never failed to let his colors fly in the face of the enemy. He has met the fiercest opposition, and his life has oftentimes been threatened. He still bears the scar of a bullet that was sent by a religious foe. He has won his way in spite of all, although he has been ostracized by the churches to the fullest extent possible. Yet now he has the largest practice of any physician in the city, for the Christians, like other folks, are sensible enough not to want to die, and when danger really comes they send for Dr. Whitford. They had rather be cured by the Infidel than receive extreme unction from the priest, and Dr. Whitford is known to be one of the best physicians in the Western country. He has traveled three hundred miles at times, on horseback, to visit patients. He is busy almost every hour. I can hardly find time to talk with him, for patients are constantly coming, no matter to what church they may belong. The doctor has founded the Miners' Hospital, which is a most excellent and flourishing institution. It is by his generous efforts that my lectures here hav been so successful. He is thoroughly devoted to the cause; full of enthusiasm, kindliness, and manliness; a representativ man indeed, and in the years to come he will be a marked influence in Western Liberalism. He has been mayor of Butte City, and this shows the honor in which he is held by his fellow-citizens.

Mrs. Whitford is equally Liberal, though not quite so aggressiv as the doctor, but bright, brave, and womanly, and a noble aid to our warrior physician in his contest with ignorance and error. Their home is sweet and delightful, a happy resting-place indeed. I enjoy myself to my heart's content, and do just as I've a mind to on these heavenly hights, where the mountain air givs a delicious intoxication. I do not play the harp here. It is not Zion, nor sheol, but a Secular fireside, whose amenities delight and strengthen, where life flows along like a stream of music born of this happy earth and sky, the real world of nature.

I hav also had the pleasure of meeting Mr. J. C. Singer, Julian Smith, Fred Cook, one of the most Splendid workers in the field, whose contributions to THE TRUTH SEEKER hav been often noted; Mr. James Broughton, Mr. E. D. Dunkles and E. N. Dunkles, J. F. Beck, G. W. Stapleton, at the head of the bar in Montana; Mr. Rogers, Charles Elis, David Hall, P. McCanley, Chas. Steffel, Professor Speck, and others. My stay in Butte City has been exceedingly pleasant. My hope is increased, for I feel the great currents of human advancement. I see that the beams of the coming day are touching with golden shafts these glorious hill-tops.

Dr. Whitford and myself went Sunday last to hear the Baptist minister, considered the best specimen of orthodox oratory in the place. His name is Frost, but he is by no means a "nipping frost." His sermon was the most pointless thing to which I ever listened. He compared the "new birth" of Christians to the hatching of hen's eggs. He said we couldn't explain either. Poor man! I advise him to study the egg more carefully. Its process to birth of a chicken is explainable on natural principles—so is the so-called "supernatural" birth of the Christian. I think the minister must hav been thoroughly demoralized by the presence of the doctor. I do hope that on ordinary occasions he is not quite so stupid as he was on this Sunday morning. Fortunately for the clergyman, the doctor only goes to church once in ten years. This Frost (-bitten, I guess) also said at his prayer-meeting that the anti-God man was coming, but that he had no "magnetism," and nobody would go to hear him. It happened, however, that I had an audience both afternoon and evening ten times larger than his own. I think it must hav been a "cold day" for that Frost.

I heard our friend George C. Miln last evening. He is making quite a successful tour in this Western country, and I rejoice that his ability is beginning to be recognized. I saw him in Richelieu, and he gave a strong and splendid rendition of that character. Miln is evidently a student, and he brings vigor and intelligence to his work. He was received with the heartiest applause.

A Secular victory has been won here in the public schools—Bible-reading is abandoned. The issue was made in behalf of liberty and justice, and the "divine book" had to go. So much is won for human progress.

I shall be at Bozeman, July 4th and 11th; at Butte City, July 16th; at Dillon, July 18th; at South Weber, Utah, July 20th; at Milton, July 21st; at Park City, July 22d; at Salt Lake, July 25th; at Denver, Col., August 8th and 15th; at Seward, Neb., August 21st, 22d, and 23d; at Valley Falls, Kan., August 24th and 25th; at Lincoln, Neb., August 29th; at Omaha, September 5th; at Ottumwa, Iowa, September 12th; at Chebanse, Ill., September 19th; at Chicago, September 26th.

Other dates, as soon as arrangements are made, will be announced. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Butte City, June 23, 1886.

Constitution for a Secular Society.

The following is the Constitution of the Braceville Secular Society, of Braceville, Grundy Co., Ill., adopted May 27, 1886. With the proper changes in names it is an excellent form for adoption by any auxiliary secular society:

I.—This Society shall be known as the Braceville Secular Society.

II.—The objects of this Society shall be to promote the intellectual, social, and moral advancement of its members, to act as an auxiliary to the American Secular Union in its efforts to accomplish the total separation of Church and State, and to these ends to encourage the investigation of all questions relating to the religious, social, or political advancement of man.

III.—(1) Any person of good moral character may become a member of this society by signing the Constitution and paying the initiation fee.

(2) Every person—member of this Society or who may visit this Society's meetings—shall be entitled to express his or her opinions, and no person shall be debarred on account of creed or belief on any subject from expressing such opinions, providing the language used shall be proper and respectful. We recognize the principle of "Charity to all—malice toward none."

IV.—(1) The officers of this Society shall consist of a President, a Vice-President, a Secretary, and a Treasurer, all of whom shall be elected semi-annually.

(2) It shall be the duty of the President to preside at all meetings of the Society, and conduct the same according to parliamentary rules; appoint all committees not otherwise provided for; giv the casting vote in case of tie; countersign all orders for money, and perform such other duties as are usually required of and performed by a presiding officer. He shall not make or second any motion, neither shall he take part in any debate while in the chair.

(3) It shall be the duty of the Vice-President to perform all the duties of the President in case of the latter's absence, or when called upon by that officer.

(4) It shall be the duty of the Secretary to keep an accurate record of the proceedings of the Society; to keep a register of membership, enrolling the names of members of the Society, with the date of their siguing the Constitution, resignation, withdrawal, etc.; to keep all accounts between the Society and its members; to draw all orders on the Treasurer passed by the Society, attesting the same by signature; to keep a list of all orders drawn on the Treasurer—recording date, amount, and name of persons in whose favor drawn; to keep and preserve all records and documents belonging to the Society not otherwise provided for; to write all communications, issue all summonses or notices required by the Society, and make the necessary reports to the Secretary of the American Secular Union. It shall also be the duty of the Secretary, on the expiration of his term to make a detailed report of the business of his office.

(5) The Treasurer shall be required to giv a sufficient bond—approved by the Society—whenever the amount in the treasury exceeds $25. He shall keep all moneys belonging to the Society, and pay therefrom all orders drawn or attested by the Secretary, countersigned by the President, and approved by the Society; shall keep a regular and correct account of all moneys received and paid out, and shall at the first meeting in each month giv the Society a statement of its funds. At the expiration of term of office, or sooner, if called upon to do so by proper authority, he shall present a written record of his doings in his official capacity, and turn over to his successor in office all moneys, books, papers, and other property in his possession belonging to the Society.

V.—Any member of this Society who shall be found guilty of any dishonorable or immoral act or practice injurious to himself, his family, or to society, or by which this Society may be scandalized, shall be subject to such penalty as the laws of this jurisdiction or the discretion of the Society may prescribe.

VI.—No addition, alteration, or amendment shall be made to this Constitution without a vote of two-thirds of all the members of the Society, and no motion to amend shall be acted upon at the same meeting at which it is proposed.

JOHN P. CUMMING, Pres., Braceville, Ill.
FRANCIS BOSTON, Sec., Braceville, Ill.
THOS. CUMMING, Treas., Gardner, Ill.

LIST OF MEMBERS:

John D. Dawkins, Vice-President; Mrs. Francis Boston, Mary G. Dawkins, H. C. Hamil, P. Turner, John Burr, Wm. Rodger, John Mainwarring, Harry Warrington, Geo. Billard, Wm. G. Dawkins, Thos. G. Dawkins, M. Gammage Dawkins, all of Braceville, Ill.; Robert Cumming, C. Snyder, of Gardner, Ill.

The Joys of Heaven.

The pleasures of heaven for an eternity! What can they be? Did ever the mind of mortal man essay to grapple with the thought of what these pleasures of eternity could be? Did ever a man of the most advanced theistical opinions sit himself down to ponder the possibilities or probabilities of these eternal pleasures?

As man can hav no conception of pleasures beyond those of earth, how can the grappling-irons of thought catch on to those of heaven? Impossible! Yet we are told of the joys of heaven by the pampered priest and pious layman, who are continually tooting of, but never about, them. They profess to be satisfied that heaven is the place of eternal bliss, but concerning the nature of this bliss they say nothing. Is it to be a state of lengthened sweetness long drawn out, one and indivisible? or a state where countless sweetnesses of innumerable varieties will obtain? The great and good book does not tell us; and those who are "called"—the "call" heard the quickest is that which comes from the richest congregation of would-be saints on high, but not striving very hard to be such here, save by profession—to pilot us to the golden shore do not tell us, and we are left in complete darkness as to the heavenly joys of the hereafter.

Now this seems to be too bad. It is too bad, really; the true believers should know something of what these joys are to be, I think, that they might revel in anticipation thereof, finding earthly reward for the faith they evince. Then again, if the nature of these joys were known, or only a thousand or two of said joys, providing they are multifarious, were described in glowing colors, would not all hands catch on to the heaven-bound train, resolved to participate in these multinominal joys? Would not a florid description of these joys, say by a Beecher, attract many more millions to the upward-bound train than the fervently described torments of hell drive thereto? From the slight acquaintance I hav with human nature I am compelled to an affirmativ reply.

Man, from the time he commences to toddle to the time when he begins to totter, is ever in pursuit of the phantom happiness, each taking direction according to his bent; and here and there, and now and then, he catches on, but only ephemerally, when he makes another break for the phantom in the same or some other form. Now, you tell him there's fun to be had—lots of it—here, there, or otherwhere, but don't or can't tell him what kind of fun, the chances are that he will not seek fun of a quality unknown to him, and which may not be fun to him at all—yes, the chances are ten to one he won't seek fun he knows not of, knowing or thinking he can get that which he knows of in some other locality.

From the kid of a decade to the septuagenarian, with these and all the intermediary ages, it is the same. Very few go prospecting for pleasure, knowing nothing of the "lay of the land" or the possibilities. To be sure they are often disappointed when they think they are on the right trail, but that is but disappointment, and always to be found somewhere in the chapter of chances, if not on this page on another, if not to-day to-morrow. Every one knows that and takes the chances, but no one would ever think of sailing over to a desert island in pursuit of fun; if he did he wouldn't be a disappointed man, but a damphool, downright and unmitigated. No, a man doesn't sow for pleasure in an arid waste, but in a field he believes to be fruitful; if he fails to reap of it his seed is bad or not suitable to the field, or accident prevents.

But, speaking of joys in the abstract, or vaguely, or indefinitly of joys: Now, take a ten-year-old boy, for instance, who livs in the country and likes to go fishing on Sundays—fish seem to bite more freely Sunday than any other day—whose mother says to him, Saturday night, "Sammy, I've got something nice locked up in the cupboard there for you if you won't go a-fishing to-morrow, and will go to meeting; something real nice, my son." "What is it, mar?" "Oh, I can't tell you, Sammy, only it's something real nice." "Lemme see it, mar." "No, I won't; not to-night. Now you go to bed and dream that it's real nice, for it is. Be a good boy now, and go right to bed, and don't tease me any more about it, and you shall hav it to-morrow night."

Well, the kid goes to bed with his head chockful of that "something good locked up in the cupboard," and resolves to secure it by abstaining from fishing and by going to meeting. He goes to sleep and dreams a dream of multitudinous dreams in one, a section of which is that his mother givs him, on Sunday evening, for not going a-fishing, and for going to meeting, a monstrous toad which jumps for him with throttle valve wide open, and would swallow him only that he tumbles into a well at the moment, and finds himself the next on a fairy island pulling in fish of all colors and beautiful to look at, as fast as ever he can; continuing to dream of fishes until he wakes early in the morning. Up, he pokes his head out of the window and finds the sky overcast—just the day for bites. "Huh! I'm a-goin' a fishin'," he mutters. "The ol' woman hain't got nothin' for me locked up more'n a store tart for a cent or a penny whistle, an' I don't wan't them, coz I'm a-goin' a-fishin'."

He gets into his duds, creeps down stairs, gets what grub he can, with his tackle, not extensiv or expensiv, and hies him to the fish-pond on the wings of expectation, coming home at night with a good string of fish—fish, I think, prefer to be caught on Sunday rather than any other day.

Now, that mother might hav had pie, and pickles, and peanuts, and popcorn, and peaches; taffy, and tarts, and tamarinds, and tidbits generally locked up in that cupboard for her son, but missed the mark she aimed at by not showing him the goodies. Had she showed them to him, and sent him to bed with his mouth watering for the sweets and goodies, she would hav hooked her fish for sure, instead of his hooking his. That's the mistake she made, and that's the mistake made in regard to the sweets of heaven, I think. They are not described to us, they are not shown to us, but kept locked up in the heavenly cupboard, and, as we can't guess what they are, the large majority of us go a-fishing, feeling certain of catching something, if not a big string, with better luck next time. In other words, we go for a sure thing, if not for us to-day, then to-morrow, rather than forego and trust to that which is vague and uncertain. Don't we?

Now, as I hav said, no mortal can hav any conception of heavenly joys, and it is worse than useless to try to fancy what they may be. That they must be entirely different from earthly joys and pleasures is shown by the fact that the latter are tabooed, condemned, and anathematized by the truly and professedly pious of earth, as abominations of sin and wickedness. The pleasures of the card-table, billiard-room, champagne seance, dinner-party, theater, race-course, etc., will not, certainly, be numbered among those of heaven, being under the ban of righteousness (pharisaical) here, and so, who can guess, much less tell, what these joys and pleasures are to be?

Ha! I think I hav caught on to one, perhaps. "Great moral shows," moral circuses with "moral kangaroos" and things. I wonder if these would be tolerated in heaven? They might be, nobody knows. And, possibly, that exhilarating game known as chess might be allowed. I should hope not, however, to any great extent, if I were one of the "elect." The pensiv and pandemic game of poker—heavens! no. That would never be allowed there. Baseball—never, unless umpires can be dispensed with. Dancing, the poetry of motion pastime—holy horror! never! the abomination of abominations is that! What then? Ha! ha! I hav caught on to one for certain—church fairs, with religious raffles and holy grab-bags, not to mention oyster stews, with one oyster to a stew! These hilarious affairs would be permitted, I should think, and how happy we could be! But there, it is all speculation concerning the joys and pleasures of heaven; what they are to be no mortal can conjecture. Talmage can get up the best program of anyone I know of, but as he slops over so profusely, his program would not be accepted at par, and I never heard of anyone dreaming of them.

Now, what puzzles me is why the joys of heaven are kept under cover of secrecy when, made known, they would capture the crowd; and the terrors of hell, which frighten but few nowadays, are so graphically depicted and shown up! Compared with this puzzle the 15-puzzle is simplicity itself. Hell's horrors are trotted out to scare people to heaven, but don't scare for a cent in these days. Heaven's joys, which, if depicted in glowing colors, would draw all to heaven, are kept dark, indefinably dark. How strange, how passing strange!

But 'tis so, 'tis pity, and pity 'tis 'tis so. The cupboard of heaven is locked, a sight of the sweets is denied us, and the Master won't tell us what they are. This being the case, most of us are going a-fishing, with more faith in the probabilities of the pond than in the possibilities of the cupboard!

SI SLOKUM.

P.S.—I received a postal card the other day, reading as follows:

> A man is a fool who Allows himself to be a tool. particularly of the devil. because he Gets below the level. of any animal that God. created, his mercy is imense. in regard to you Yours, etc., THE WHITE HORSE.

This is a verbatim copy of the screed, singularly free from the arbitrary and constraining influences of grammar, spelling, and punctuation, liberal with capitals, and not confined to rules of construction, etc, &c.

The writer had evidently read "The Horse Claims a Soul," published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 26th, and was disgusted, if not horrified, to find that the horse claimed a place as a soul-bearer among the animals of the genus homo, who egotistically claim that they are the only animals sporting souls, whatever souls may be. The writer of the postal felt hurt and humiliated when his ego was stepped on by the horse. Sorry, but can't help it. S. S.

P.P.S.—The next time he undertakes doggerel, let him do it in the conventional way, in stanzas, not in prose. S. S.

. SEND to THE TRUTH SEEKER office for a catalog of the books we hav for sale. The catalog is free.

Could Jesus Christ Write?

The only instance recorded in the New Testament of any writing by Jesus Christ is in John viii, 8, where it is said, "He stooped down and wrote on the ground." But unfortunately the first eight verses of this chapter are wanting in the two oldest codices, the Sinaitic and the Vatican.

Outside of the New Testament there is a Syriac document, which contains a letter said to hav been written by Jesus to Abgar, king of Edessa, a city in Mesopotamia, about five hundred miles distant from Jerusalem. King Abgar heard of the mighty works of Jesus, how he healed the sick without drugs and roots, made the blind see and the lame walk, cured lepers, cast out demons, and even raised the dead. So he sent a letter to Jesus, inviting him to come and cure him of a grievous disease which was wasting away his body. To this invitation Jesus wrote the following answer, which was returned to Abgar by his messenger, Hananias:

> Blessed is he that believed in me not having seen me. For it is written concerning me, that those who see me will not believe in me, and that those will believe who hav not seen me, and will be saved. But touching that which thou hast written to me, that I should come to thee, it is meet that I should finish here all that for the sake of which I hav been sent; and, after I hav finished it, then I shall be taken up to him that sent me; and when I hav been taken up, I will send to thee one of my disciples, that he may heal thy disease, and giv salvation to thee and those who are with thee."

Many Christian scholars hav believed this absurd story. Eusebius was the first to relate it, and in 1841, 1843, and 1847 some Syriac documents were found in a monastery in Lower Egypt, apparently of the fourth century, containing a confirmatory but fuller account of the story of Abgar and Jesus Christ.

"These things were done," says the Syriac document, "in the year 340," that is, of the kingdom of the Greeks, or the Jewish era of the Seleucidæ, and it coincides with A.D. 29, or the fifteenth year of Tiberius, when Luke tells us that Jesus was baptized by John. Clement of Alexandria (A.D. 200) also positivly affirms that Jesus suffered in the fifteenth year of Tiberius, and Tertullian (A.D. 220 or later) not only says the same, but fixes the day, March 25th. But astronomical science contradicts all this. If Christ was crucified it was at the time of the Passover full moon, and on Friday. But March 25th A.D. 29 was a whole week after the full moon (which in that year was March 18th, eight days too early for the Passover), and the next full moon was not before April 16th, which was Saturday. The Passover never came earlier than March 26th nor later than April 25th.

In the letter Jesus says: "For it is written concerning me that those who see me will not believe in me, and that those will believe who hav not seen me, and will be saved." No such passage can be found in the scriptures, either canonical or apocryphal, now extant. If such a passage ever existed, it has been lost more than fifteen hundred years, and there is no evidence that it ever could hav been regarded as scripture. How unfortunate that in the only scrap that Jesus is ever supposed to hav written, except what he traced on the ground with his finger, he should hav made a false scripture quotation!

But further, the character of the pretended quotation is in keeping with all the early Christian literature—that is, an attempt to prove the divinity of Christ by prophetic writings. It is silly enough for the fathers to resort to this as their strongest proof of their Lord's divinity, but for the son of God himself to do it, and withal not to convince a Hebrew, but a heathen, caps the climax of absurdity.

Jesus makes no secret of his ascension in his letter to the heathen king, while all the time he withholds it from his chosen disciples. He ventures only to tell them that he is to be killed and to be raised again (Mark viii, 31; Matt. xvi, 21), but "they understood none of these things, and this saying was hid from them" (Luke xviii, 33, 34); and Simon Kepha, waxing wroth at his master for foreboding such a disaster, boastingly declares that it "shall not be" (Matt. xvi, 22). And when the report of his resurrection comes to the ears of his disciples it seems to them as an idle tale (Luke xxiv, 11), so incredulous are they of such a miracle; "for as yet they know not the scripture that he must arise again from the dead" (John xx, 9). The idea of an ascension had not been communicated to the chosen twelve, and yet the Jewish Messiah, whose mission was not to the gentiles, "but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Matt. x, 5, 6), writes to a far-off gentile king, not only foretelling his ascension, but flattering him with a hope of salvation for believing in an unseen savior, while those who are favored with a sight of the son of God are coolly placed in the category of lost sinners!

Abgar seems to hav been an easy convert. At a distance of five hundred miles from Jerusalem he hears of the fame of Jesus, and from the reports of his mighty works, all done in the space of a few months at most, he believes at once. It is as if Black Hawk, hearing of the doings of Jo Smith, should forthwith hav become a believer in Mormonism. In a few months Thaddeus comes to Edessa, and having healed the king by the power of Christ, the conversion of his majesty is completed, and the petty Mesopotamian king, instead of the Emperor Constantine, becomes the first royal convert. But the important event is hidden from the world, being locked up in the archives of Edessa, until Eusebius, in the fourth century, happens to find the "historical" document. In the mean time Abgar's successors all lapse into heathenism, as the sequel shows, and continue pagans for more than one hundred years.

There is one more record of alleged letter-writing by Jesus Christ. The letter is contained in a document entitled "Narrativ of Joseph," purporting to hav been written by Joseph of Arimathea, who begged from Pilate the body of Jesus for burial. Joseph tells a marvelous story of the crucifixion and reappearance of Jesus to himself, to John, and to Demas, the crucified robber. Gestas, the other culprit, died blaspheming Jesus, and taunting him with pretending to be the son of God. But Demas was penitent, and addressed an eloquent prayer to Christ for salvation. His prayer was answered by a promis of immediate admission to Paradise, accompanied by a letter of introduction to the gatekeepers there, and a proper guarding of the premises until the second coming of the son of God. A copy of this letter written by Jesus on the cross is transmitted to us by Joseph as follows:

Jesus Christ the son of God, who hav come down from the hights of heaven, who hav come forth out of the bosom of the invisible father without being separated from him, and who hav come down into the world to be made flesh, and to be nailed to the cross, in order that I might save Adam, whom I fashioned—to my archangelic powers, the gatekeepers of Paradise, to the officers of my father: I will and order that he who has been crucified along with me should go in, should receive remission of sins through me, and that he, having put on an incorruptible body, should go into Paradise and dwell where no one has ever been able to dwell.

After writing this, and instructing Demas what to say at the gate of Paradise, Jesus gave up the ghost. Then the dead body of Gestas appeared as that of a dragon, while the corpse of Demas vanished. Joseph having obtained the body of Jesus, placed it in his new tomb. When the Jews learned this, though it was Sabbath evening (i.e., Friday night), they seized Joseph and put him in prison. But the next night at the fifth hour (Saturday, 11 P.M.) a great light shone in the prison and two men appeared; the house was lifted up and Joseph came out. Then he recognized Jesus and the robber, the latter bringing a letter to Jesus straight from Paradise. Presently Jesus sat down and read the letter. Talk about the wonders of the modern telegraph! This beats it all hollow. Jesus, on the cross, with his hands nailed fast, writes a letter of one hundred words and hands it to his brother Demas, who takes it 'way off to Paradise and brings back an answer of two hundred words the next day

Joseph followed Jesus and the robber into Galilee, where he saw Christ transfigured and ministered to by angels. After remaining there three days, the disciple John met the party. John, not being able to recognize Demas, besought Jesus to reveal the strange man to h[illegible] which he did, to John's astonishment and delight. Just then a multitude of voices were heard welcoming the robber to Paradise as a great king.

"This history," says the reverend translator of the apocryphal gospel, "seems to hav been popular in the middle ages, if we may judge from the number of Greek MSS. of it which remain."

Is it credible that Greek copies abounded in the middle ages, when Latin was almost the only language of the learned? The learned Father Hardouin, who died in 1729 at the age of eighty-three, vehemently maintained that all this kind of literature was forged by Benedictine monks after the middle of the thirteenth century. ANTICHRIST.

(TO BE CONCLUDED.)

The Beginning of the End.

The repeal of the Atheists' disability laws is the beginning of the end of the age of bigotry. The work of enfranchising reason began to bud under the hand of Jefferson in Virginia and is now blossoming out by the help of Joyner in Massachusetts. See the following from the Globe:

ATHEISTS AS WITNESSES.

The Senate judiciary committee reported in favor of referring to the next general court petitious asking the repeal of the Public Statutes which permit evidence of a person's disbelief in the existence of a God to affect his credibility as a witness. The report, however, drawn in the bold hand of Senator Joyner, takes an opportunity to present these reasons for repealing the law mentioned:

It is a hateful and, unhappily, almost obsolete relic of an unjust, unnatural, and odious system of statute law, which at one time, in violation of the broad principles of the common law, excluded from the witness stand whole races of men on account of color and creed.

It is in conflict with all important laws of evidence, which, with this exception, admit the testimony on equal terms of men of every form of religious belief.

It is an obstacle to justice, and is in conflict with the spirit, if not the letter, of the Constitution.

It permits the credibility of witnesses of the highest moral character to be assailed in a manner that cannot be done to a thrice convicted felon, or even a red-handed murderer who professes, as he usually does, to be very sound in his religious opinions.

When Massachusetts by an act of reason and justice declares her independence of the "kingdom of God," she will be free indeed, and a fit member of the American republic.

Upon the accession of all citizens of the commonwealth of the Puritans to their right to tell the truth in spite of the priests, let all Freethinkers who can attend hold a grand jubilee and parade from Paine Hall to Beacon Hill. JOHN P. GUILD.

Augusta, Me.

More Minnesota.

We left Elk River for that wonderful, Aladdin-like city, thirty miles away, Minneapolis. It would require a good-sized pamphlet to describe all the interesting sights which we saw in one day in that young but mighty city; for we pressed into service not only the slow-going street-car, but the motor-car, and still more astonishing, in this lightning age, we whirled away in the "electric-car," propelled by electricity. Think of that, you slow-going Eastern folk!

After a ride over a portion of this city by St. Anthony, we fairly flew over the rolling prairies out to the far-famed Lake Minnetonka. I must here confess to a great disappointment. It is the most overpraised lake I ever looked upon. We next visited Lakes Harriet and Calhoun, nearer the city. They are not so famous nor so large as Minnetonka, but they are very much prettier—perfect beauties. The shore of Minnetonka in many places is low, muddy, marshy. The shores of Lakes Harriet and Calhoun are hard, sandy, pebbly, and are as symmetrical as if carved by the hand of a sculptor. Time did not admit of our going all around and over them. That would require weeks, which many tourists giv every year to this lovely portion of our planet.

In the evening we were back to Minneapolis in barely time enough to eat supper and attend the Presbyterian Assembly of the United States, held in Westminster church. There we heard the great Dr. Hall, of New York city, Dr. Howard Crosby, and several other notable divines. The spacious church was filled to overflowing. The deep-toned organ made music as grand as the occasion. It was all exceedingly religious. Even the laughter engendered by the witty remarks of staid reverend doctors was a subdued, religious-like laughter, very proper, very decorous. When a Presbyterian clergyman jokes, he seems as much out of his nativ element as an elephant trying to dance. The performance of one is about as graceful as the other. There is nothing hearty about a Presbyterian laugh. It is a delicate little thing; acts as if it would catch cold on the slightest exposure, and die right there on the spot. Just watch the next religious laugh that ripples over a pious congregation. It is decreed to be of that faint hue, like a gentle breeze touching the glassy lake. The God of the pious never was friendly to mirth, and our Christian friends act as if they knew it.

After God was invoked the clerical gentleman made an onslaught. The "heathen" were attacked again. An occasional shot was fired at the Infidel. It did not take me long to learn that this meeting appertained to "Home Missions," and that the great obstacle in their way is Infidelity. During the day Dr. Crosby, it appears, remarked that "institutions of learning must be kept under the oversight and control of the church, which shall train our Presbyterian youth in the ways of truth and righteousness." In order that his hearers might know just what he meant, he said, "Dangers to the youth of the country arising from the teachings of Materialism, naturalism, etc., which were now taking a hold on the susceptible minds of young men in colleges. This tide should be stayed through the means which that Christian education which this board (on academies and colleges) had been created to foster and further."

These gentlemen read the handwriting on their theologic walls. To hear them one would suppose that the fate of the universe depends upon Presbyterianism. Rev. Dr. W. C. Roberts represented it as the only remedy for woe. "The gospel furnishes the only cure that can heal our wounds as a nation. Either we must hav a Cæsar, a stronger government, or our whole nation must be imbued with the principle of Christianity." "Great is the responsibility resting on the American church, and especially on that branch to which we belong." "What is this opposition to our Sabbath, to our Bible, and to our Christian sanctuary, of which we hear so much everywhere? What is that Materialism which threatens to undermine all that is spiritual in the life or religion of our people?" The church is in a fright.

Rev. Lyman Marshall believed, he said, that "one of the great dangers to this country is the incoming flood of foreigners, with their disregard of our religious ideas. The Germans are a particularly dangerous class. These Germans when they become Presbyterians make some of our best members. It was a German who rescued our Bible."

Rev. J. V. Guenther claimed that "the way to reach the unbelieving Germans and to correct their unbelief was to send them the gospel just as we send it to benighted Americans." He begged them not to think that all Germans were Infidels.

Are they not the salt of the earth? In spite of their thousands of preachers, the Freethought movement is gaining on them. If it continues to gain as it has for the past quarter of a century, where will Presbyterianism be?

As we were leaving Minneapolis next morning for the southwest, we had a fine view of that young giant city. Literally, there were hundreds of buildings in process of erection. A few years more and the "twin cities," St. Louis and Minneapolis, will be one, rivaling Chicago in population, and surpassing it in beauty. Minnehaha Falls will be within the corporation. W. F. JAMIESON.

Lake City, Minn.

A Sunday in Vichy.

Up at 7 o'clock and take a spray bath at the Etablissment Thermal de Vichy. Make an effort to understand the Frenchman that sprays me, but it is a bad failure. He says, "Oui, oui, monsieur," and I say, "Bon," or "Bone," I forget which—and get out. The Frenchman calls the bath a grande douche à percussion. First-class, two francs fifty centimes—or fifty cents. The church bells ring; the sound is pleasant to the ear in this pure atmosphere. No one seems to care a button but a few worn people, mostly women, of the poorer class. At the doorway of the church half a dozen beggars and cripples ask alms almost under the basin of holy water. As the people come out, the holy water almost drops on the poor people when the healthy penitents use it in "tit, tat, toeing themselvs." The water did not appear to do the wretched any good, for not one copper was given them while I looked on.

The people turn out early to their baths and water The church is lost sight of completely at 9 o'clock. The devil takes possession, and runs the Sabbath until he wants to sleep. His majesty begins his innings at half-past 8 A.M., to make the invalid healthy, the poor content, all happy. A very fine band plays delightful music. The soldier, sailor, tinker, and tailor, and priests, women, children, and dogs promenade the beautiful park of about fifty acres, listening to the band, and getting up an appetite for the grand gorge, or déjeuner, or breakfast, at 10 o'clock; and I am glad to say the subjects of his sulphurous majesty hav splendid appetites, and the other fellows are not far behind; only these chaps, and their female companions, act as if they had lost something and were trying to find it at the bottom of the wine-bottle. After breakfast about two-thirds of the folks go to the cafés and drink coffee, smoke, and some drive. The pious soul lugs his missal and himself to the musty den of a thousand years, and sleeps under the shadow of the holy "Virgin" and child. Sunday passes, with the help of Satan, to the satisfaction of everyone but the priest, who looks piously mad, it seems to me, because he cannot taste of the honey of the wicked (in public).

At half-past five dinner time arrives, and another grand feast commences and lasts until seven o'clock. The priest subsides, or, in other words, he puts off his dress of slavery, and, if he can get an order from his master, he will be seen at the Casino in the garb of a white man. The Casino is where the great adversary of souls plays his trump card to the delight of fifteen hundred people on the holy Sabbath night—the theater, the grand band, billiard room, card room, reading room, grand saloon, all under the same roof, all going at the same time. Every place is crowded with happy faces. Even the fellow with the missal crawls in and chuckles, takes a hand, wins or loses a few francs. You know something of the temptation of the Lord on the mountain. Well! it is no wonder the Lord did not tumble to the bargain, for the land was not worth a cent an acre; but if the devil had shown him the Casino and park at Vichy (which he might hav done, since space and time are nothing to the devil or Lord), the world would hav had no savior to mourn, and the Virgin Mary would hav been sent to the House of Correction.

The play in the theater was, on this Sunday evening, "The Devil and Dr. Faust." C. E.

Vichy, France, June 6, 1886.

OF the seventy-seven persons now in the Utah penitentiary for polygamy, thirty-five are English, twenty-five are American, ten Scotch, two Swedish, two Irish, and one each from Norway, Denmark, and South Wales.

IT is estimated that when the Lick telescope shall be finished and set in position it will hav cost $164,850. The observatory dome will cost $56,850, the mounting $42,000, the visual objectiv $53,000, and the cost of the photographic objectiv will be $13,000.

OF the eight hundred prisoners in the penitentiary on Blackwell's Island only three refuse to go to church. These are Most and his companions, Braunschweig and Schenck. Most is the son of a sexton and once sung in a choir, but now he says he hopes the sacred chalices will be used as drinking cups at public wine fountains, the churches turned into concert halls and theaters, and the priests and nuns strangled in the belfries.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - - JULY 10, 1886.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

Prayer.

Just now the subject of prayer is receiving a great deal of attention at the hands of the religious press. It is treated in almost as many ways—the degree of belief in it is as various—as there are editors writing upon the matter. THE TRUTH SEEKER readers will doubtless recollect the leading New York Congregationalist journal's four ways in which God answers prayers. The proofs of these ways were about the craziest lot of reasons ever set forth by an old woman in frock coat and trousers. The Independent has been followed by the Christian Advocate, which last week lent a hand toward supporting the unsupportable theory of divine interposition in human affairs. Mr. Buckley, being crafty, catches his readers with guile, yet leaves a loophole in his argument large enough to crawl through whenever a case of unanswered prayer is brought to his notice.

A subscriber writes to him asking that Christians be invited, through the Advocate, to pray for the recovery of his sick wife, whose name is not to be given to the public. Now, it will not do for Mr. Buckley to say that prayers are of no avail in this case. Such confession would ruin his business. He cannot afford to ignore the request, for that might lose a customer to the church. Neither does he want to own up that the Advocate and its editor hav no influence with God. The next conference might ask for his resignation as editor in favor of some one who has a "pull" with the throne. But he must get out of the dilemma in some way, and this is how he manages to do it:

"We willingly giv this notice, but in doing so desire to say that we do not believe that the power of prayer for a blessing on a single person is cumulativ in the sense that a hundred persons earnestly praying for anything for another person will prevail where ninety-nine would fail; or that fifty-one might prevail where fifty would fail, all other things being equal. Though, of course, if a hundred know of the case they will pray for the blessing, and be blessed in so doing. The promis in the Bible, subject, of course, to the condition elsewhere expressed, 'if we ask anything according to his will,' is: 'If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my father which is in heaven.' Prayer does not exert its force in a mechanical way. One hundred men can pull more than fifty of the same strength. Abraham could do as much for Lot in Sodom as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Where one person is better than another, the prayers of the better may prevail where the prayers of the less good would fail; but, supposing the persons to be of equal piety, God is not a man that he should be persuaded by an imposing array of signers to a petition.

"And, further, we believe that it is impossible for persons to pray with any intelligent grasp of faith where they are entirely ignorant of the situation, as they are in this case. To pray that a man's wife may recover when one knows nothing about her history, what her relations are to him, to the church, and to the world, and without any personal acquaintance with her, seems impossible in fact, though it may be possible in fancy. If the prayers were for the conversion of a sinner, or for the special good of any one, the case would be wholly different."

Mr. Buckley, it will be noticed, throws away the "numbers" argument in advance. There is no cumulativ power in prayer. One prayer is as good as a million. That admission removes the responsibility from the Advocate and its editor in case the lady dies. Next, although the Bible promises that when two persons on earth are agreed upon anything, God will answer their prayer, the promis is coupled with the condition "if the thing asked is according to his will." That lets divinity out, for if the prayer is not answered it is plain proof that the thing asked for was not according to his will. Further, it makes a difference in praying for the recovery of a sick wife as to how she stands with her husband. From this it is to be presumed that if she has not submitted herself to him in all things, if she has not allowed him to be always the head, if she has not always adorned herself in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety, if when she has desired to know anything she has gone to trustworthy authority or investigated the facts for herself instead of asking him, then prayers for her are impossible in fact! This is a very large loophole for Mr. Buckley, for what wife has not had her own way occasionally, and walked without either shame or brazenness? Yet still another hole to crawl through is the relation of the woman to the church. If she has left undone that which becometh women professing godliness, if she has not learned in silence with all subjection, if she has prayed with her head uncovered, if she has not kept silence in the churches, then are prayers for her recovery impossible in fact, though possible in fancy. It seems to us that in providing an abundance of doors of retreat, the editor has been obliged to employ heartless workmen, with exceedingly sharp and wicked tools. But why should the case be wholly different with the sinner? Do sinful women always obey their husbands and acknowledge him as their rightful head, even as Christ is the head of the church? Do sinful women never proffer to teach nor try to usurp authority over the man? Is the conversation of a sinful woman always coupled with fear? Does she cheerfully own up that woman, being deceived, was in the transgression, and therefore to blame for all the evil in the world? We hav met a few lady sinners (if by "sinners" are meant heretics) who stoutly anathematized St. Paul, but yet we will venture to assert that all the prayers the Advocate's subscribers can offer between now and the judgment day would not convert them. Really, we cannot see why the case of a sinner is wholly different.

Having sufficiently discouraged the applicant, Mr. Buckley throws in some affirmations concerning prayer for the benefit of his other readers. He says:

"Let no one suppose that we believe prayer for the sick to be useless. On the contrary, we believe that the prayers of this Christian woman and her husband will certainly be answered, and that in one of two ways: Either she will recover through God's blessing upon the means used or, if he should see fit, by the operation of his providence, without respect, so far as can be seen, to the means used intentionally by men; or as Paul was answered when he besought the Lord thrice that this thing might pass from him. In that case, both she and her husband will learn the meaning of the scripture which saith: 'And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me.' This, as we hav proved by experience in periods otherwise hopeless, is 'a wholesome doctrin and very full of comfort.'"

First. Mr. Buckley believes in prayer. This is a general statement, and one safe to make. He also believes that this woman will recover. He has probably seen her doctor. And her recovery, he thinks, will occur in either of two ways: (a) Because of the medicin she has taken; or, (b) In spite of the medicin, which, we take it, is the English of the theological phrases used. Second. If she does not recover, then God will allow her to die, which is another way he has of answering prayers concerning sick people. Authority for this is found in 2 Corinthians, xii, 7–9. Paul had a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan, which he thrice besought the Lord to remove. Instead of removing it, the Lord gave him grace to bear it. The Independent terms this God's indirect method of answering prayer. In the present instance the assertion is that if the woman does not recover she will be given the grace to die and her husband will be given the grace to bear the loss. This, Mr. Buckley says, is "a wholesome doctrin, and very full of comfort." Inasmuch as he has buried two wives, Mr. Buckley's experience is valuable, and in this instance his word may be relied upon. No doubt the "brother of respectability, residing in one of the cities on the Hudson," will derive needed consolation from the scriptural reference and its personal verification by one of the most eminent Methodist theologians of the present time.

We do not know why their advocacy and reiteration of a belief in prayer is so unanimously made by the religious press just now, unless it is because the editors imagin that the people hav forgotten the death of Garfield and are again in a mood to be cajoled into acquiescing in a doctrin which givs the priests and ministers almost unlimited influence with the ignorant, and fills the coffers of an institution as dishonest as the doctrin is absurd.

The Cause Abroad.

The English National Secular Society held its annual conference at Glasgow, June 13th, in the hall of the Glasgow branch society. The report of the executiv committee shows a steady growth of the society, the accession to the membership during the year lacking but two of a thousand, while seven new branches were formed. The treasurer's report showed balances on hand in the general, benevolent, and propagandist funds. New Secular halls are being built in several towns, toward the erection of one of which five hundred pounds hav been donated by a generous Infidel. Notices of intended donations of liberal amounts to the benevolent fund and to the educational work also appear.

A hopeful sign of the growth of Secularism in England is the enmity evinced toward it at the last election. The Primrose League, an important Conservativ organization, has for one of its principal objects checking the progress of Atheism. During the last election campaign charges of Atheism were recklessly made against many candidates for Parliament, and similar charges hav been published against municipal and school board candidates. Mr. Bradlaugh reports that in the majority of these instances the attacked candidates hav been elected.

A bill for the repeal of the blasphemy laws has been introduced in Parliament, and was on the calendar for its second reading for July 28th. The dissolution of Parliament will necessitate its reintroduction next session. One prosecution for blasphemy has occurred in Scotland during the year just closed, that of an aged newsdealer, Robert Ferguson, for exposing copies of the London Freethinker for sale in his store in Edinburgh. He was sentenced to fourteen days' imprisonment. A significant action in connection with the movement for the repeal of the blasphemy laws was the refusal of the council of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association to aid the endeavor in any way.

No progress worth mentioning has been made in Parliament on the bill allowing Infidels to affirm. The defeat of its chief spokesman, Mr. C. H. Hopwood, Q.C., at the last general election was fatal to the bill. At the election just completed the executiv of the Secular Society recommended that in every case candidates be pressed to giv their support, if elected, to an affirmation bill, and also to the bill repealing the blasphemy laws.

During the past year Mrs. Besant has presided over a literature committee, which, the report says, has distributed gratuitously an enormous quantity of literature upon theological, political, and social subjects. The Hall of Science classes hav been maintained, eleven of the classes being for science and two for art. A deficit in the finances of the classes appears, which has been borne by Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant personally.

The executiv's report embraces also one or two other countries, in which work has been done in connection with the English society. An International Congress was held last September at Antwerp, and notice is given that the next will sit at Lille on September 20th of this year. A Freethought Society has been established in Portugal, having its center at Lisbon. In Sweden an organization is flourishing, with headquarters at Gotenburg. Of the Bruno monument fund the report says:

"Additional subscriptions hav been received by the Bruno International Committee at Rome during the year, in large part from the United States of America, for the monument to be erected in Rome to the memory of Giordano Bruno. The whole of the moneys are stated to be properly invested, the sculptor's work is proceeding, and application is before the Roman municipal council for the grant of the necessary site. It is trusted that the statue may be ready for unveiling on the 17th February, the anniversary of Bruno's martyrdom."

Report from the local society of Madras, India, is encouraging. The society has a growing membership, publishes a weekly journal in the English and Tamil languages, and has a book depot for the sale of Freethought literature. Australia now has three Freethought journals, and the English Secularists are fast colonizing the sixth continent. We are pleased to learn from this report also that "in Canada and the United States of America there has been great lecturing activity during the present year."

After the outgoing officers had been reëlected, the Conference discussed the revision of the statement of the society's principles, which had been made by a committee. After considerable talk, the following was formulated as a declaration of what Secularism is:

"Secularism teaches that conduct should be based on reason and knowledge. It knows nothing of divine guidance or interference; it excludes supernatural hopes and fears; it regards happiness as man's proper aim, and utility as his moral guide. [The remaining three paragraphs were then put one by one and carried:]

"Secularism affirms that Progress is only possible through Liberty, which is at once a right and a duty; and therefore seeks to remove every barrier to the fullest equal freedom of thought, action, and speech.

"Secularism declares that theology is condemned by reason as superstitious and by experience as mischievous, and assails it as the historic enemy of progress.

"Secularism, accordingly, seeks to dispel superstition; to spread education; to disestablish religion; to rationalize morality; to promote peace; to dignify labor; to extend material well-being, and to realize the self-government of the people."

The report of the proceedings of the Conference shows that our British brethren are putting in plain, hard, sensible work for the equality before the law of the Freethinker with the Christian, and notable gains hav been made, especially on the taking of oaths by Freethinking jurors. It is generally conceded, too, that in England there will be no more legal persecutions for blasphemy, and the opinion was expressed at the Conference that old Mr. Ferguson would hav the honor and glory of being the last Infidel martyr in Scotland. If this shall prove to be true, the sufferings of Mr. Foote and his colleagues and of Mr. Ferguson will indeed hav borne noble fruit. When the cruel blasphemy and the absurd oath laws are repealed and an affirmation bill passed, the English Secularists will hav an honorable and permanent place in the history of the world. Every American Freethinker will be glad to know of the progress that has been made, and if our English brethren ever run short of local reformatory work they can come over and help us.

Orthodoxy Defined.

Considering that about one-half of the preachers in the larger cities, and they the brainy ones, hav publicly renounced the doctrin of hell for the wicked, and accepted the theory of evolution, we hav for a long time been at a loss to know what the church of the present day deems heresy. Everyone knows what it formerly labeled as heretical teaching, and how it punished the teachers. But within the last ten years the spinal column of orthodoxy has lost much of its rigidity, and the church stoops with the weight of trouble Infidelity has been to her. But now the Methodist church, through its chief official organ, has said what a man may not preach without working under false pretenses as the pastor of an orthodox church. The doctrins which constitute orthodoxy are these:

1. The evangelical doctrin of the punishment of the wicked.
2. The divinity of Christ.
3. The Atonement.
4. The new birth.
5. That the scriptures contain the only revelation of God to man.
6. All doctrins necessary to and corollary of these.

Any preacher, says the organ, who does not defend these affirmations of theology, yet occupies a pulpit, is a base pretender, and a robber of the church. This, we take it, is an authoritativ statement of what orthodoxy is to-day. What an enormous number of pretenders and robbers are breaking the bread of life to the weary Christians!

IT is seldom that itinerant colporteurs hit the nail so squarely on the head as did the one of those employed by the English Religious Tract Society. His field of work was Hungary. One day when selling books in the market-place a peasant came to him and demanded a regular devil's book, filled with nothing but nonsense from beginning to end. The colporteur gently extended to him a copy of the Word of God.

Editorial Notes.

THE Maurepas (La.) Gazette pronounces J. E. Remsburg's "Sabbath-Breaking" "an interesting and exhaustiv treatis on the subject."

Two statements in the Messiah's Herald of June 23d:

"Christians are safe in a house built on a rock which cannot be moved by the wildest storms."

"Fifty thousand acres of crops and two villages hav been destroyed by floods in Hungary, and greater damages are threatened."

The first is a religious statement, the second a statement of fact! The agreement between them is significant.

MORE truth than is usually contained in judicial remarks was spoken from the bench by Judge Cowing in this city the other morning. A German was before him charged with attempting suicide. The German had repented of his deed. "I vos drunk, judge," he pleaded, "und I ton't do dot some more. I vant to liv all vat I can now." "That's right," said Judge Cowing, "stay here as long as you can, for none of us knows very much about where we will go when we leave here."

H. W. BEECHER, who is now in England, occupied the pulpit of the City Temple one Sunday recently. The dispatch says he "prayed for more wisdom among the queen's counselors." The dispatch adds that the prayer will be used by the Tory politicians against the present ministry, of which Mr. Gladstone is the head. It seems that Mr. Beecher is bound to meddle with politics wherever he is. But in this instance his pulpit stump speech will further the schemes of his enemies. Mr. Beecher is a Home ruler.

THE action of the Harvard overseers in abolishing the rule of the college making attendance upon morning prayers compulsory is causing the religious editors much pain in their inmost bowels. Their criticisms upon the overseers irresistibly compel us to conclude that their idea is that unless the students are forced to it they will not be religious at all, and rather than that this should happen the editors would use the army, if need be, to drive the young men to prayer. This is Christianity, it is true, but it does not seem to us to be common sense.

NEWS comes from Reading, Pa., that the Rev. D. D. Albright, formerly superintendent of Bethany Orphan's Home at Womelsdorf, convicted of brutally beating Harry Kramer, an orphan inmate, has been sentenced to pay a fine of $50 and all the costs. Mr. Albright is probably one of those people spoken of by Ingersoll, who think that when the savior said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven," he had a rawhide under his mantle, and made that remark simply to get the children within striking distance.

A DUDE of the name of Pierson, in closing a criticism of "Men, Women, and Gods," in the Keynote, says: "It will be of peculiar interest to note if this author shall stick to her fallacious belief until the last day, or if she will cringe and crawl in the presence of death, as did Paine, Voltaire, and Rousseau." When this was first read in this office it was proposed to send Mr. Pierson the truth in regard to the death of the three famous personages named, but on meeting with a young man who knew him, it was decided to let the dude go, as his intellect was not of sufficient strength to comprehend the facts.

THE Rev. Mark Trafton is writing for a religious journal a series of papers upon the romance of colonial history. An item in a recent paper recalls the fact that the first Episcopal church organized in this country was shipped back to England instanter—beads, cassock, and gown, cape, stole, and surplice, all went together. Governor Endicott would hav none of the popish mummery. As the Puritans had left England because they wished to worship in their way, which the Church of England would not allow, this may hav been righteous retribution, but it does not square exactly with the claims made for the Puritans by their descendants.

A WRITER in the July Forum asks, "Shall we muzzle the Anarchists?" Certainly. Muzzle everyone who does not think just as "we" do. Let the Episcopalians muzzle the Methodists, the Methodists the Adventists, the Adventists the Unitarians, the Unitarians the Presbyterians, the Presbyterians the Baptists, the Baptists the Congregationalists, the Congregationalists the Catholics, and so on to the end of the chapter. Then let all the sects turn to and muzzle the Infidels, and then let the Infidels turn to and muzzle the Anarchists, Socialists, Communists, and the like. Free speech is a dangerous thing in a free country, and what is the use of a free country, anyhow?

CHARLES K. WHIPPLE, one of the old-time Abolitionists, writes to a Boston journal: "In the preface to that admirable book, 'The Jesus of History,' now unfortunately out of print, its author acknowledges his resemblance to Joseph of Arimathea in one particular. He had held for several years the views expressed in that work, but had not declared them publicly, 'for fear of the Christians.' But for my remembrance of this expression, I should hav failed to notice an historical inaccuracy in the excellent address made by Frederick Douglass in Tremont Temple, May 24th, at the anniversary meeting of the New England Woman Suffrage Association. Speaking of the idea upon which this association was founded, Mr. Douglass said that its growth had been strong, steady, and irrepressible, 'though the heathen raged.' History will hav to record that it was the Christians, not the heathen, and preëminently the Christian ministers, who 'raged,' when Abby Kelley and Lucy Stone and the sisters Grimké began to speak in public, though their speech was advocacy of righteousness and rebuke of popular sin. The facts upon this subject, happily preserved in the pages of the Liberator, must be remembered and repeated as long as the orthodox clergy continue their false declarations that the abolition of slavery and the elevation of woman hav been brought about by such Christianity as they teach, and such Christians as hav grown up under their tuition."

"THE glory of God sets upon the hill-tops these beautiful June days. It is a real inspiration to take the Fitchburg Railroad and ride up through the Berkshire Hills."—Golden Rule. The inspiration probably read like this: "Pass Rev. F. H. Kasson, editor of the Golden Rule, over the Fitchburg Railroad. ——, Gen. Ticket Agent."

WHEN the papal ablegate arrived here bearing the insignia of a cardinal for the use of Mr. Gibbon, of Baltimore, he was met down the bay by a committee of the St. Michael's Romau Catholic Association who had obtained the use of a government steamboat for the purpose. It has come out since that not only was a revenue cutter used, but the baggage and effects of the papal delegation were passed by the Custom House without examination. This was done in response to a letter from the Association asking that the courtesies usually extended to foreign embassadors be shown the pope's emissaries. In other words, the United States were asked to recognize the pope as a nation, which our complaisant treasury officials did.

MESSRS. BURR AND UNDERWOOD are discussing in the Indianapolis Sentinel and the Iron-Clad Age the question whether Paine or Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence. The problem will perhaps never be settled to the satisfaction of all, but everyone must admit that with Paine's "Crisis" and "Common Sense" at hand any person of good literary ability could hav formulated that immortal document without doing any large amount of original thinking. Commenting upon the discussion the Seymour, Ind., Republican says: "Professor Underwood in last week's Iron-Clad Age has settled the question as to who wrote the Declaration of Independence in his usual way, that of quoting somebody else's opinion. What Professor Underwood can't establish by citing what others think and believe on the subject would be difficult to find."

THE Christian at Work says:

"Thomas Paine has no great hold on the traditions or the affections of the country. The seventy-seventh anniversary of his death passed almost unnoticed hereabouts. As to how it was observed elsewhere read this:

"'It was announced that the Thomas Paine Society of Frederick county, Md., would celebrate the seventy-seventh anniversary of Tom Paine's death at the house of Aaron Davis, near Frederick; but not a celebrater appeared. Mr. Davis himself observed the day by not working. He said that, while there was only about a dozen members of the society, there were three or four hundred believers of the Paine doctrins in the county, but fear of social ostracism or injury to their business caused them to make a secret of their views.'

"That cannot hav a very deep hold on their affections which is discarded from fear of social ostracism."

If the Christian at Work had been published in the sixteenth century, those Protestants who refrained from avowing their heresy for fear of the flame or rack would hav been sneered at by the editor as people upon whom their religion had no very deep hold.

IN the current number of the Forum, J. H. Seelye, president of Amherst College, writes upon the question, "Should the State Teach Religion?" In the course of his "argument" in favor of this proposition he uses the most dishonest and foolish controversial weapons that ever were wielded by a pedagog. He says:

"Even if it should be claimed—though I do not think it could be proven—that certain individuals are moral without any religious constraint, this would never be affirmed of the masses of mankind." "A false religion will be found more conducive to virtue than no religion. Without inquiring as to what might or might not be true in respect of the moral life in any given instance of a cultivated or an uncultivated Atheist or irreligious man, there need be no hesitation in affirming, either from the facts of human nature or of history, that an Atheistic people, a people without religion, if such could be, could not hav virtue enough to maintain themselvs as a people."

Mr. Seelye is a remarkable specimen of the religious lawyer. There are a great many thousands, if not millions, of moral Atheists in this country alone, and yet he thinks it cannot be proven that a moral Atheist exists! And without stopping to inquire as to whether Atheism and morality were ever united in one person, he sets it down for a fact that an Atheistic people can possess no virtue! We pity the students of Amherst if this is the kind of morality and love of truth that is taught them. They will be more apt to end their days in a penitentiary than to become useful members of society.

Lectures and Meetings.

MRS. LILLIE DEVEREAUX BLAKE has made engagements to speak on "Woman Suffrage" throughout New York state this summer. The following dates are fixed: July 8th, Turners; 9th, Walton; 10th, 11th, and 12th, Norwich; 13th, Homer; 14th, Dryden; 16th, 17th, and 18th, Dansville.

MR. REYNOLDS'S Tent will be at Montezuma, N. Y., from July 8th to 19th. Mrs. Reynolds will speak on the Sunday evenings of the 11th and 18th. Mr. Reynolds will use the platform the remaining evenings. Of Mr. Reynolds and his work at Palmyra, the Democrat of that place says: "Ex-Rev. C. B. Reynolds, of Rochester, has been delivering biblical lectures for the past few evenings in his tent at the foot of Cuyler street, which hav been quite interesting. Mr. Reynolds was formerly a Protestant minister, but his views now embrace the theory of Paine and Ingersoll, whose pictures, together with that of Bennett, adorn the wall of his tent behind the pulpit. We do not know whether the gentleman's lectures are calculated to improve the minds of the masses—morally and religiously speaking—or whether they hav a tendency to drive the better thoughts of those who hear him into the same channel That Mr. Reynolds is an able and talented man there can be no doubt, but we cannot indorse his views."

Letters from Friends.

GRAHAMVILLE, FLA., June 25, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me to thank you for THE TRUTH SEEKER's brave stand with regard to the affair of John Most and free speech. Fraternally yours, J. WM. LLOYD.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 12, 286.

MR. EDITOR: I am highly pleased with the pictures. I am going to hav them bound in book form when the year is up. They will instruct and amuse my children and grandchildren. MRS. E. M. HANSSON.

MURRAY, O., June 20, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I write this letter to thank you for continuing to send the best of all reform papers—THE TRUTH SEEKER—to me when I am in arrears. Do not borrow any trouble because I do not send money sooner; you can count on me as a life subscriber so long as the paper is conducted as it now is. I would not say "stop my paper" because some one differed from me in opinion. The oak tree has the same right to be angry at the willow because the oak has broader leaves—that is, if the oak had passions like man. I hate bigotry, I love justice, I like variety. Differences of opinion develop our faculties of reason. We sometimes learn something from a mere child. The illustrations are immense. Continue them.

Inclosed find $2, which please place to my credit on THE TRUTH SEEKER Yours fraternally, D. E. LEWIS.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., June 26, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Your journal of Freethought is immense. Those cartoons are very attractiv and convey a world of meaning to many of my customers. In addition to my confectionery I hav quite a collection of Freethought literature, which I hav placed on the front counter by the door, free of access to all who enter. There are those who do not pause to peruse this Liberal matter, while many are desirous of reading, especially the rising generation. During the Boy Preacher's series of four month's rant and rage the boys, many of them, would desert the great rock church by an exit through the windows, and would come down to Nick's store to read aud to hear Freethought expounded. We liv in a part of our store-house, are open to sell goods or open to conviction day and night, Suuday aud all the time, within one block of three of the capitol's largest churches. Suffice to say that my wife and I (both being Aguostics) hav a hot time with Christian folk. Mr. Editor, if there is any way by which I can get tracts and leaflets gratuitously and to dispose of in the same manner, please inform me, for I am not able to purchase and giv away as I should like to.

N. N. NEIHART.

GETTYSBURG, PA., June 28, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Please forward me by return mail books as follows, for which find inclosed $2.75: "The Christian Religion," Ingersoll, Black, and Fisher, paper, 50 cents; Ingersoll's Tributes, the four, 50 cents; Lacy's "Reply to Lambert's 'Notes on Ingersoll,'" paper, two copies, $1; "Resurrection of Jesus," by W. S. Bell, 25 cents; "Men, Women, and Gods," by Helen H. Gardener. Lambert's "Notes on Ingersoll" are being distributed to some extent here, and I wish to show my orthodox friends that Lambert has not got all of the argument, as they who hav read little or none of Ingersoll seem to think he has. A Presbyterian friend handed me Lambert's book with a triumphant air, and remarked, "That finishes Ingersoll." After reading it, I told him Lambert was game too small for Ingersoll to fool away time on, but that the priest's sophistry and misstatements had been ably answered by B. W. Lacy, and that if he would read it he should hav it. He consented. Hence this order.

Your cartoons are simply immense, and I hope they may continue. The one of June 26th, "Obeying the Commandments of Christ, and the Result," is particularly strong. Squirm and shift as they may, the Christians cannot get away from the plain meaning of the advice Jesus givs in Matt. vi, 25. The language cannot be tortured into any other meaning than that given it in said cartoon. Indeed, Watson Heston hits it every time. W. T. KING.

IRWIN, IOWA, June 13, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I am just "proper proud" of Watson Heston, that great genius, painter, poet, preacher, politician, and philosopher, all combined. I wish I could paint, or write, or talk so as to make Christians hate me like poison. I would like to stir up the hyenas for the fun of hearing them growl if nothing else; but do you know, it's a very hopeful sign when a true delineation of the very foundation of Christianity—such as is "Jesus Paid It All"—can horrify the better sense of Christians, and is repugnant to their finer sensibilities? The medicin that does not make them feel quite sick for a time cannot do them much good. It shows that the remedy is having the desired effect. For the love of humanity, giv them more of it! That picture "horrid!" Why, that recording angel has the best, most honest face I ever saw an angel wear, and, in the matter of wings, it does not seem to me that the artist was at all stingy of feathers. That angel seems to hav a "corner," so to speak, on quill pens, for he seems to hav nothing to do but to reach behind and pluck a quill when the stump in his hand is worn out. If Mr. H. C. Gill is a steel pen manufacturer he may complain, but unless he or his "Christian friends" hav an interest in the steel pen trade, they can hav no reasonable cause to feel hurt. Then the poor bankrupt sinner, for whom "Jesus Paid It All," and whose "righteousness," at the best, according to the Bible, "is but filthy rags," is far too respectably dressed, and his bearing is much too manly and genteel for such miserable sneak. It is the blood—the two and one-half gallons of blood—that is so "horrid," and that is not in the picture at all.

It's considerably a matter of taste about illustrating the paper at all, and since the editor seeks to gather the general sense of his readers, I will say I like it. If some articles don't suit me, I don't order my paper stopped. I call that a mean trick, and I don't care who knows it. Then our editor, you all know, is going by our votes, and Gill and the other poor miserable dodos who order their papers discontinued are casting insults right iuto our faces about the way we run the paper. Pictures or no pictures, stick to the paper, and just for Gill's sweet sake I am going to get four new subscribers if I hav to pay for them myself. I know nothing about Gill but just this one trick of his, and I call it mean. J. K. P. BAKER.

NORTH HURON, N. Y., June 28, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find five dollars to pay for THE TRUTH SEEKER from April 1, 1886 as long as you please, and don't giv up the cartoons. I think Mr. Gill's Christian friends can stand the pressure as well as I can to look back upon scenes such as the burning of Servetus by John Calvin, and hundreds of a similar kind. G. W. SMITH.

AXTELL, KAN., June 21, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Our darling baby boy Pearl (named after S. P. Andrews), eleven months old, died the 15th inst. We were fortunate in haviug THE TRUTH SEEKER "Book of Forms," so we had Mr. Mason (the president of our Union) read Form 8 at the grave. The Anchor, the local paper here, printed it in full. I do not know that there was ever a Liberal funeral service before in this part of Kansas.

I am working to get up a debate here between a Campbellite and a Mr. Orem, who is, in belief, what Mr. Jamieson called a Bible Materialist. Questions: Resolved, That the Christian (Campbellite) church is the true apostolic church. Orem negativ. Second, That the dead are unconscious. Orem affirmativ. Orem is smart and will make the immortal soulists stick out their eyes to see how much positiv proof there is in their Bible against their belief. He makes the Spiritualists the hardest fight of any in this country if they try to prove their doctrins by the Bible. I wish to advise every Liberal not near to a Freethought lecturer to get your "Book of Forms" and hav some friend read a service. It will do more for our cause than anything else, and all Libcrals will be respecte.l more in society. E. W. MINER.

P.S.—We wish to hear from John Peck. He hits hard. E. W. M.

CENTRALIA, ILL., May 29, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Here is a chance for you to redeem yourself partially, at least, for the small sum of $3. "A Special Intention" is not to be thrown away when it givs one a chance in three hundred masses. In my unselfishness I giv this sure chance to you. Go and be happy. F. D. REXFORD.

[The following are the promises alluded to. In emulation of Mr. Rexford we pass then on for the benefit of others. There is nothing mean about us—ED. T. S.]:

IMPORTANT.

You will not miss the Alms, which will await you for a hundred fold reward at the Great Judgment. Offer it as a balance against past offenses; to get grace to resist Temptation; to bring a blessing and success on your affairs; and for the dear departed souls who may be relieved by this act of Charity.

SAINT JOSEPH PRAY FOR US.

The Sisters of Charity implore a little aid to enable them to pay for schools for the children of the West, and to relieve the suffering poor. They faithfully promis, to those who giv it themselvs, or who assist them by procuring money from others for this purpose, a special Intention in offered for the Souls in Purgatory, as well as a daily remembrance in the prayers of the Sisters.

300 MASSES,

Jesus meek and humble of heart make my heart like unto thine.
300 days' Indulgence each time.

Sweet Heart of Mary, be my salvation.
300 days' Indulgence.

[Here is inserted the picture of a cross marked off into sixty small squares.]

Please collect Five Cents for each small square (piercing the same with a pin) till the sixty are full; you will then hav THREE DOLLARS to send in a Post-Office Order, payable to

Sister Agnes Morrogh Bernard,
Superioress,
The Sisters of Charity,
Ballaghaderin, County Mayo.

Please write for more Cards, if you or your friends can fill them, and send us a few addresses.

HAILEY, IDAHO, June 13, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: On the evenings of the 5th and 6th of June, we had the pleasure of listening to Mr. S. P. Putnam. The hall was well filled both evenings, and Mr. Putnam was frequently applauded. Mr. Putnam is a man who commands the attention and respect of his audience from beginning to end, and they don't go to sleep either. The subjects of his lectures are live issues such as the people listen to with intense interests, and, pardon the egotism, but we are not all mossbacks out here. We like progress. According to appointment Mr. Putnam had to lecture at Bellevue the 7th and 8th, but he was prevailed upon by a large number of our best citizens to return here on the 9th, which he did, and he chose for his lecture that excellent subject, "The Glories of Infidelity." The hall was filled with ladies and gentlemen; yes, even our ministers came to listen to his eloquent pleadiugs for the liberation and advancement of the human mind from priestcraft and superstition; and at the conclusion of the lecture he was tumultuously applauded. Send us more like Mr. Putnam. One such man will do more for the liberation, elevation, and moral refinement of humanity than all the priests that ever lived or ever will liv, until they discard that man-made absurdity called the holy word of a God for the true book of nature, namely, science.

Sorrow often follows joy, just as clouds often obscure the beautiful sun that gladdens the hearts of all, and so with us. After enjoying the pleasure of listening to Mr. Putnam's excellent pleadings for mental and moral advancement and refinement, we were, on the 11th, called upon to sustain the loss of the most beautiful and loveable child that I ever yet hav seen; the beautiful little nine-months-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walsh. The poor grief-stricken parents hav our heartfelt sympathy in their sorrow.

CHARLES AHLSTROM.

EAST OTTO, N. Y., June 24, 286.

MR. EDITOR: Please excuse the tardiness of my renewal, which I send with the name of a friend. Your illustrations attracting his attention caused him to subscribe. Some, it appears, do not like the pictures, but I think they are doing good. I hav taken THE TRUTH SEEKER eight years; hav often solicited but never before got a subscriber for it. I will not do without THE TRUTH SEEKER as long as I can see so much good done, and so long as I can pay for it.

CLARK BURCHARD.

CHARLES CITY, June 22, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: In this you will find draft for five dollars, three for the paper on subscription, one dollar to Campaign Fund, twenty-five cents for the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for 1886; "Men, Women, and Gods," fifty cents; twenty-five cents for "Sabbath-Breaking."

I hav tried to get some one to subscribe for THE TRUTH SEEKER to send with me, but so far hav failed. There are a good many people here who don't believe in the churches, but they dare not come out and say so in public for fear of public opinion. The pictures in the paper are O.K. They will do a good deal of good, and many will look at them who would not look at the paper without them. I will try and see if I can get some to subscribe for the paper yet. I think it is kept up to standard, and is first-class in all respects. I see "Brick" Pomeroy pitches into you in this week's paper, but you are right in regard to free speech. I sent you a Catholic paper published in this state, and will send you another—that is, if I can get it—with the account of a gathering of the churches on our public schools; so you will see the will combine together to suppress Freethought where it is necessary for them, both Protestants and Catholics. The bishop of the church of Rome made a very long speech, and they all indorsed it to a man. Times are very hard here, for money is scarce, and many are idle with no work in sight, and that is bad in this country. JOHN MAHARA.

CANTON, ILL., June 20, 286.

MR. EDITOR: Notwithstanding the "religious racket" has been tried and failed, still it came so near being a success that political aspirants of all parties are encouraged to try it. We hav two of 'em (as far as heard from; probably the returns are not all in yet) in Fulton county. One is secretary of the Fulton County Fair Association. We hav his authority for saying that every one of the judges of the coming fair belongs to the Sunday-school association, and he said they had a first-class board, which caused the writer to giv an involuntary sigh. Mr. Secretary is also an aspirant for county clerk. The other was president of the Fairview Literary Society. One of the members (a minister) made a vigorous assault (with words) upon Mrs. John W. Abbott for reading an essay entitled "A Minister's Meditation." The reverend gentleman told the lady that would hav to be stopped. He is also an aspirant for the same position as the above. There are two more aspirants for the same office, all subject to the decision of the Democratic County Convention. The other two seem to be willing to make the race without having their names mentioned in connection with Sunday-school associations or with religious subjects in any other way, and take the chances on their manhood instead of showing themselvs to be religious bigots. Brethren, I would suggest you sit down on 'em hard wherever they pop up, because there is no outspoken Liberal but knows by experience what kind of justice such persons will deal out just to the extent of their power. JOHN W. ABBOTT.

SAN JOSE, CAL., June 20, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: In looking over some files of different papers, saved from time to time, I come across THE TRUTH SEEKER. In going to and fro on the earth I always speak a good word for THE TRUTH SEEKER. Having no abiding-place, I cannot hav the paper as often as I would like, and hoping I hav many friends who will be glad to hear I am still in the land of the living, and in the garden city, the beautiful home of our stanch advocate of freedom and Liberalism, Dr. J. L York, I will send a few lines. I hav been stopping a short time in this lovely city of gardens, but alas! I find it dead to all appearances as far as Freethought is concerned. Now I wish they could hav a shaking up of the dry bones; they need it badly. There is plenty of good timber here for an honest worker to handle. Why, may I ask, are Liberals so backward in keeping meetings up? When one is a good worker he has no means to forward the movement. But perhaps it is all right. Freethought is growing stronger and stronger. We find the churches full of it, and very little "Jely Clist," as John Chinamen says, preached now. Pardon the expression, but some of the old Adam is alive even here. Our new mayor is trying to hav the bands stop playing in the city limits on Sunday. To think that the beautiful strains of music seems sacrilegious to some! I cannot imagin the thoughts of such a person; they cannot be pleasant. We hav a large portion of law-abiding citizens who think music one of the best methods of worship. All know it will charm the savage breast, and soften the hardest heart. How often, when we feel at war with ourselvs and all the world, a sudden strain of sweet music passing dispels the cloud and drives the frown from the brow! Then why should we not hav music in our parks, streets, or any place? San Francisco sends out every Sunday by the thousands its wage-workers, who hav no other day of recreation. They go to the adjoining towns, taking their music with them, to hav a day of rest for mind and body, but some little minds and smaller souls think it wicked, and hold up their hands in holy horror. I, as a Liberal, feel terribly alive, and, had I a vote, such small-souled ones who try to bolster up their god (I spell it with a little g) by stoping music on Sunday, would get a rebuke they would remember.

We had a tent meeting here, and the speaker raged and almost swore because the people did not do as well by him as they did for our good Brother Ingersoll. He called them a one-cent crowd; said Ingersoll got a dollar a head while he got only $18 out of a one thousand eight hundred house. It makes us Liberals hope we are not back-sliding. I will close by sending greetings to Liberals all over the broad earth, rich or poor, bond or free, feeling sure the cause is gaining ground the world over. MRS. O. A. BENJAMIN.

FLORENCE, ALA., June 21, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I hav read every number of your paper for several years, and as time rolls on I more fully realize the greatness of the work you are engaged in performing. In reading your published "Letters from Friends" I notice very few are from the Southern states. Perhaps your subscribers are few from this section, and no doubt this is the leading cause. It may be that you people of the Northern States think that we are a poor, ignorant race, and not able to grasp Freethought ideas, and to send us out a lecturer would only be casting pearls before the swine; but in this respect you might be mistaken. I hav read with considerable interest J. E. Remsburg's account of his tour in Texas, and am truly glad he is meeting with so much success, and hope his efforts there may encourage others to extend their usefulness into even all the Southern states. I am aware such a venture would require courage if not physical prowess, and may be this is why they do not come among us, simply because they are afraid of bodily harm. I do not assert or suppose this is the reason; but if it is I would suggest that the war is over—Lee surrendered twenty-one years ago; that the "bloody chasm" has been filled up and green grass is growing on the mound.

We are now one common people—at least in the Liberal ranks—and the enemy that stands in our way is "orthodox" superstition. Old Jewish mythology ought to occupy the same position in literature that Roman and Grecian mythology does. This is what we are fighting for and this is the keynote of our intellectual campaign. The war may last a century or more, but reason commands the fortress—in fact, the whole army—and she has lost the art of surrendering since the days of Martin Luther. On our banner is written in letters of gold "U. M. L.," and the greatest man in the nation is our general. I need not call his name. This is the army I belong to, in my own peculiar way, and the sectional words "North" and "South" are rubbed out.

In conclusion I would suggest the propriety at the next meeting of the "American Secular Union" of some one making a motion to send a Freethought missionary to the Southern states, and you can put me down as a subscriber to funds raised for that purpose. M. B. SHELTON.

FILLMORE, UTAH, June 9, 286.

MR. EDITOR: I had Mr. S. P. Putnam for six nights in our county, as follows: May 22d, at Scipio; 23d, at Fillmore; 24th, at Kanosh; 25th, at Peterboro; 26th, back to Fillmore; and on the 27th he finished at Scipio. My Scipio friends, P. C. Neilson and Samuel Rowley, took him from and to the terminus. Where he lectured but one night I had him deliver his lecture on "Universal Mental Liberty," and for the second night his "New Heaven and Earth." Both are superb and a complement of each other. We had good audiences all through. They listened attentivly, and seemed well satisfied with what they heard. Some expressed surprise at the novel way in which Mr. Putnam treated his subject, especially his "New Heaven and Earth," but they seemed well satisfied nevertheless. At Fillmore and Scipio, where he lectured twice, his audiences were larger the second than the first night, which is the best indication that his first was appreciated.

Mr. Putnam is eminently fitted for Utah and its people. He is fearless and frank with his audiences. There is a style about him and his delivery that sits well, and commends him to our Western friends, while a vein of humor runs through his whole discourse well calculated to keep the audience attentiv and interested. In short, he is just the man for this work, and I am sure he has accomplished a great deal of good. He is so easily entertained. He seems content with whatever he gets. He makes one think that he is royally entertained on the most common fare. Our friends expressed the greatest satisfaction to me afterwards. They were afraid they should not be able to do enough to make him comfortable; they were delighted at their success. At Scipio we stopped at the house of Mr. P. C. Neilson, as stanch a Freethinker as we possess; at Fillmore at my own house, except a dinner at Mr. Christensen's and supper at Mr. Kelly's; at Kanosh our friend Mr. Chas. Crane entertained us royally. He is the only real Liberal of that place, but he is a host himself. His wealth makes him independent, and he seems to rather enjoy telling the Christians what he thinks of them, and things in general. In short I should say he feels good when in hot water. He possesses a wife who is a jewel indeed, and their latch-string is always out. With a few such in each settlement we should soon be a power in the land.

At Peterboro we were entertained by my friend Peter Robinson, who is always on hand when there is anything going on. This place is small, and therefore we had but a small audience. My friend said that all who were in town were present except two, and business kept them away. The whole town is Liberal. I do not think there is a good Mormon in it.

On the whole, I consider Mr. Putnam's trip to our county a complete success. The bishop of our place offered us his meeting-house, which we accepted for the second night—though we hav a larger hall ourselvs, but wanted seats. We had no trouble whatever in getting houses in any of the settlements.

I went north with Mr. Putnam to attend the picnic and sociable at Lakeside, near Farmington, where I met for the first time Mr. Reynolds, of Wanship, chairman of the executiv committee of Utah, whose indefatigable zeal for our cause has done so much to make this campaign a success.

Friend Haight, at whose grove the entertainment was held, as well as his amiable wife, had their hands full, and nobly did they sustain their reputation. There were also present friends Edholm, of Morgan; Larson, of Deweyville; Jost and Wilson, of Ogden; Hales, of Bountiful; Mason and lady, of Salt Lake. Mrs. Mason is just one of those ladies who insure success to any entertainment, and if the whole committee will come as near doing their share for the success of the Convention to be held at Salt Lake City next winter, February 20th, 21st, and 22d, as she will on the committee on music, I predict for it a perfect success, and a new lease of life to the American Secular Union in Utah. I must not forget to mention visiting friend Jost at Ogden—a stanch, indefatigable worker for Freethought. He has nearly completed fitting up a nice Freethought reading-room 24x24 feet, containing some 150 volumes, besides a large amount of magazines and papers, etc., and he is sending for more all the time at his own expense and free of charge. He is a true Liberal. May many more follow in his footsteps.

GEO. C. VEILE.

LEXINGTON, KY., June 24, E. M. 286.

MR. EDITOR: I was very much interested, even if not instructed, by Mr. Mitchell's able sophistry in THE TRUTH SEEKER of May the 29th, and although I hav neither the time, space, nor desire to discuss the questions presented, yet I hav a few words to say in reply. Mr. Mitchell, as all readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER doubtless know, is not much in love with law, but is what one might term an Anarchist. I hav no fight with the Anarchist, the Socialist, or Communist, or anybody else, for that matter, but when one ignores facts that are demonstrated every day in order to giv prominence to theories supported by neither reason, common sense, nor experience, as is the case with the writer mentioned, a friendly criticism will not, I think, be out of place.

Passing over our philosopher's uncomplimentary reference to the South, in which he says the "bowie knife and the pistol were the arbitrators of all disputes between gentlemen of honor, where for ten generations strong men whipped the defenseless backs of women, and where the auction block was more popular than the school-house," we come to the alleged evils of the law. To believe him, one would think law and government the greatest curse mankind was ever afflicted with, and the two things above all others to be abolished. The worst crimes, in his estimation, we can be guilty of is to obey and acknowledge allegiance to this government, and the most depraved, abandoned wretches we hav to contend with are our legislators and those people who hav been so fortunate as to accumulate wealth. But, admitting Mr. Mitchell's statement to be true—and it would be something remarkable if it were—suppose we do the most desirable thing, in his estimation, and abolish law, what would be the result? What would follow? Can he tell us? "Oh, but people would liv and work for others, and crime, and intemperance, and poverty would be unknown, and the millennium will hav arrived," I think I hear him say.

No doubt it would be a "millennium" for the Anarchist, Socialist, and Communist, and other enemies of government, of which class of people Mr. Mitchell seems to be an able representativ. There would be no restrictions then. It would be one of their "inalienable rights" to do as they please. Could they not kill, murder, rob, and plunder without the fear of the penitentiary or the gibbet before their eyes? The recent riots at Chicago, Milwaukee, and St. Louis would sink into insignificance beside what they would do if their "millennium" should arrive.

It will never do to abolish law. We need something to restrain our passions. Man has not reached a state of perfection yet, when he can dispense with all law and government. They are just as necessary to-day for his proper behavior as they were two thousand years ago, and will be for ages to come. As people still murder, rob, steal, and kill, and wrong and cheat each other, it is silly to talk about the coming of the alleged millennium while such a state of affairs exists. The Anarchist is not a practical everyday man. He is a man of the future, not of the present. He is also a slave to his imagination. He thinks all men are alike, which displays rather a limited knowledge of human nature on his part. Because he is capable of living an honest, virtuous, upright life without government restraints (but does he?) he supposes all other men can also, and he denounces every one opposing his theories.

As Mr. Mitchell has so kindly furnished information concerning the evils of money, for a few moments let us notice some of the benefits which are also to be derived from this medium of exchange.

Because men abuse the use of money, because it contributes to their depraved appetites, passions, and lusts, is this a sufficient reason why we should regard it as a stumbling-block to progress, and a thing, therefore, to be abolished? Many people abuse the use of food to such an extent as to require the attention of a physician, which, according to Mr. Mitchell's logic, is a sufficient reason why food should be regarded as a curse. If men make themselvs sick by excessiv eating, we should abolish food as useless in sustaining life, and dispense with all nourishment. Then, again, we frequently hav steamboat explosions and railroad wrecks, and on the same principle we might argue that as there are many lost thereby, steamboats and railroads should be abolished. Doubtless the reader will call this reasoning silly, as indeed it is; but it is not more so than the reasoning of our Anarchist writer, Mr. Mitchell.

No one will deny, I presume, not even our friend Mitchell himself, that money, as a medium of exchange, is very beneficial as well as a curse to the human race. In fact, its benefits are incalculable. We will enumerate some of them. It feeds the hungry, clothes the naked, and contributes to the pleasure and happiness of all. It builds asylums for the insane, hospitals for the sick, and almshouses for the poor. It opens up and develops the resources of the country, enabling men to engage in industries and enterprises by which many poor people find employment and support for themselvs and families. It relieves suffering, want, and distress, comforts the aged, the sick, and the dying. It educates our children, cares for the orphans, the destitute, and the infirm. It is a sure specific for poverty, our chief inheritance, and the best possible friend to the poor shivering mother and her starving children. It is an enemy to disease, perpetuating, if not securing, health, the greatest blessing we can possibly obtain. It alleviates pain and wretchedness, providing food for the hungry, fuel for the cold, and employment for the idle. These are some of the benefits to be derived from the commodity called money, and yet money is a curse, and the "one devil to be destroyed!"

"Those whose spiritual vision has been open," says our old friend, "can clearly see the condition the people are in." Indeed! But how about secular vision? Wouldn't that do just as well? Is "spiritual vision" superior to secular vision, and can it penetrate where the latter cannot? As it requires "spiritual vision" to "see the condition the people are in," that divine thing must be a great blessing in these troubling times, of the utmost importance, I should say; but as secular vision is just as penetrating, and serves all practical purposes just as well, the new "vision" will not soon be adopted, I'm thinking. But perhaps, after all, it is, like the visions of the prophets of the alleged holy Bible, only a "visionly vision," anyway, and purely imaginary, as it were.

In conclusion, I desire to state that it was not my intention to write in opposition to Mr. Mitchell, or to accept his challenge for any one to prove money and law to be otherwise than an evil and a curse, for I keenly felt my inability to properly write an answer, being familiar with neither political economy nor the financial question. I preferred that some one else better qualified for the work should undertake the task, but, but as no writer seemed to care to measure swords with our Anarchistic philosopher, I respectfully submit the above remarks for his consideration. They are not an answer, nor are they intended to be, but the honest, sincere opinions of a sincere anti-Anarchist, anti-Socialist, and anti-Communist.

D. B. C.

Where Shall the State Convention Be Held?

302 STATE ST., CHICAGO, ILL., June 23, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: It is my opiuion that it will be better to hold the congress of the Secular Union in New York, and immediately after the New York Freethinkers' Convention. Many can attend them both if thus arranged, who could not if they shall be held at different places. In this union there will be strength. W. S. BELL.

WARRENSBURG, N. Y., June 28, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Find $2 for "The Order of Creation," "Moses Before the Court," and "Adami and Heva;" the remainder to C. B. Reynolds to help on his campaign. I hope that he will pitch his Tent at Ballston Spa, and it is my desire that the New York Freethinkers' Convention be held at the White Sulphur Springs, near or at Saratoga Lake.

WILLIAM WILCOX.

WEST BRIGHTON, N. Y., June 29, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: One word in regard to the place of holding the next Freethinkers' Convention. I would like to suggest Sodus Point. I will state my reasons: The soldiers and all of the old vets will hold a reunion there next September. They hav a large gathering and some noted generals attend. They go in for enjoying themselvs generally. This convention would help fill up the bill. Now for the advantages: It is near Williamson, Wayne county, where there is about as large a Liberal element as almost anywhere. Dr. A. Amstin is a host of himself, as Reynolds can testify. Several railroads come together there. The place commands a fine view of old Lake Ontario. I wish the bold hero, Ingersoll, could be there and talk to the old comrades. I wish Mrs. A. H. Colby could be there to stir up their minds. She shook old theology all out of me, and I can be thankful enough for it. Best wishes for the old TRUTH SEEKER. It's the Bible for me.

Yours truly, SAMUEL E. SKINNER.

BALLSTON SPA, N. Y., E.M. 286.

MR. EDITOR: I hav just seen Mr. Luther, proprietor of White Sulphur Springs Hotel, and he told me that if the Convention was held at his place he could furnish us forty nice tents, or more, free of cost to anyone who may desire them, and if Colonel Ingersoll comes he will giv him the best room in the house free of cost, and board the rest at $1 per day. There is any quantity of boats, all free; and a large piazza all around the house that will seat 1,500 people, giving a splendid view of the lake. It is nine miles to Saratoga, and not twelve, as stated in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and which makes a splendid ride for 25 cents. A great many people would attend from Saratoga and Ballston Spa, and the best mineral springs in the world can be found in both places. We hav the best iron springs in the world here in Ballston Spa, and lots of other mineral springs. So, take it all in all, it would be the most delightful time ever had at any Convention. Brother J. V. Arnold told me that he would do all in his power to help it along. He will invest $50 in it, and other Liberals in Saratoga and Ballston Spa will do the same. I hav been to see all the Liberals I could. All say they would like the Convention to be held as a sort of camp-meeting and picnic holiday, as it would bring people together who would not otherwise ever know what our Infidel camp-meeting is. In short, it would be the grandest time the Liberals ever had, and the cost will be very small. I will gladly answer any or all questions in regard to grounds and other matters. WILLIAM THORPE.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

Two More Prizes.

A few weeks since an unknown friend sent us five dollars for the Children's Corner, which we offered in two parts as prizes for stories, open to competitors from May 1st until August 1st. We hav lately received through the same channel another five dollars for the Children's Corner. We offer the same in two prizes, as follows: For the best original essay on Freethought, or, Why is Freethought Superior to Christianity? three dollars.

For the best puzzle (not pictorial) illustrating some Liberal principle, or conveying in its answer some maxim, motto, or witticism of Freethought, two dollars. These prizes are open to all, but we shall prefer to make selection for prizes from efforts of those competitors who are under twenty, if such shall possess sufficient merit. Time, three months from July 1st. Puzzles and essays to be sent to the address of the editor of Children's Corner.

Next week we shall print the story which wins the largest prize offered by D. B. Cozine, Lexington, Ky., and the following week the story which takes the second prize offered by that gentleman. We take this opportunity to kindly thank all our generous-hearted friends who hav materially aided the Children's Corner, and also those who hav no less assisted us by contributed articles, suggestions, and many kind, encouraging words. It is such appreciation that enables us to persevere in our labor of love, and we hav, already, the sweet satisfaction of knowing that many children are, by means of our little Corner in THE TRUTH SEEKER, growing up, free from superstition, into the grace and glory imparted by true Liberal principles, and unsullied Freethought. ED. C. C.

The Buried Statue.

Deep in the earth long years it lay:
Its marble eyes were sealed to day;
Its marble ears were deaf and dull,
Yet it was wondrous beautiful.

A vinyard grew above its head;
The grapes they knew, and whispered
Each unto each, as evening fell,
"Brothers, keep counsel, nothing tell!"

There was no record left, nor trace
Of sculptor, or of hiding-place;
The hand that shaped it lay in dust,
His cunning chisel turned to rust.

The hands that dug the grave so deep,
And laid the statue to its sleep,
While hearts beat quick with haste and fear,
And ears were strained a step to hear;

The foe who threatened them that day—
All, all were dead and passed away.
The world had turned and turned it o'er;
Nothing was as it was before.

Still through all change of war or peace,
New men, new laws, new dynasties,
The buried statue kept its place
With the same smile upon its face.

The years to centuries gave birth;
Heavier and heavier pressed the earth;
Autumn and spring enriched the vine
Whose purple grapes were crushed for wine.

And then, in search of gain or spoil,
Men came to dig the aged soil,
And after half a thousand years
In silence spent the statue hears!

How did it feel when, fine and thin,
The first long ray of light broke in
And gilt the gloom with glory new,
And let the imprisoned beauty through?

Say, did it tremble as a heart
Long pent in darkness and apart
Trembles, with fear and rapture stirred
At love's low signal, long unheard?

Or did it blench as, sharp and clear,
The urgent spade-strokes drew more near,
Blindly directed, fraught with harm
To marble breast and marble arm?

No answer, save the subtle smile
Baffling and tempting in its guile,
Which seems all wordlessly to say,
"Darkness was safe, but fairer, day."

—Selected.

A Musical Hen.

J. G. McDonald, of Portage, Wis., owns a musical hen. The hen delights to steal away to the house of a music teacher adjoining Mr. McDonald's residence, and at odd times, while the music is going on, has succeeded in laying an egg under the sofa or some other equally unusual place.

The other day the music teacher heard notes sounding from the piano, and going into the music room, perceived this curious inhabitant of the henhouse walking up and down the ivory keyboard, tumbling out thirds, fifths, and eighths to her henship's great delight.

As the tinkling melody leaped forth the hen curved and arched her neck from side to side in apparent delight, and clucked in a musical way.

A Stranger Visit.

That is what Dotty calls it to this day.

You see, she was out driving with mamma and a sudden shower came up; and because there wasn't time to get home, mamma called at the first house.

It wasn't a very large house, and it was painted red, all but the end toward the road. That was painted white. Dotty found time to wonder about it a good deal while old Charley was jogging up the lane.

"I s'pose maybe there wasn't any more red at the store," said she. "'Relse they thought folks would only look at the face end. What do you s'pose, mamma?"

But mamma didn't s'pose anything about it. She hurried old Charley along as fast as she could, but the first big drops had begun to fall before they were all safe under cover. Then a minute more it was raining rivers.

There were no little girls or boys lived in the red house, and Dotty felt this to be a trial. But there was a man, and a woman with funny glasses on, and a grown-up girl, and a grandma who told stories, and before long Dotty felt very well acquainted indeed.

The shower lasted a long while—until after supper. Dotty was glad of this. There was a pumpkin-pie on the table, and Dotty liked pumpkin-pie, the way mamma made it, but this wasn't made quite as mamma makes pies. It was sweetened with molasses instead of sugar, and spiced with ginger instead of lemon. Dotty's second mouthful wasn't so big as the first. The grown-up girl smiled.

"Isn't your pie good?" she asked.

Dotty blushed. She was a very truthful little girl, but she wanted to be polite. She looked at mamma, but mamma wasn't paying any attention. She looked at the grown-up girl.

"It's—it's almost good," said she.

Then how they all laughed—everybody but mamma, who felt for a minute as if she would like to shake Dotty. And the grown-up girl put down a little plate of nice white honey in place of the pie.

"See if that isn't quite good," said she.

"And it was!" said Dotty, telling the story to grandma. "Just the goodest I ever tasted of. They're real nice folks, grandma, and they liv in a red house with a white face, like our cow, and I'm going again, 'cause they asked me to. That was a good stranger visit, gramma."

"Almost good," laughed mamma.—Youth's Companion.

Stating a Problem with Exactness.

"Bessie, if there were three apples on the plate, and you took one, how many would be left?"

"If Fred was here, mamma?"

"That wouldn't matter."

"Yes it would, mamma."

"Well, with Fred here, then?"

"Mamma, there wouldn't be any apples left."

"Why not, Bessie?"

"'Cause Fred would take the other two."—Philadelphia Call.

The Thistle and the Cornstalk.

A Canada Thistle which had taken root in a Farmer's garden one day saw a blade of Corn peeping out of the Ground, and in tones of Ridicule called out:

"What a Little one for a cent! It's a wonder you hav the Cheek to force Yourself into my Company."

The Blade continued to grow day by day, and it was of such bright color and looked so Thrifty that the Thistle finally called to the Farmer and said,

"Really, but I can't put up with such impudence, and I hope you will Remove that Cornstalk at once!"

"And who are you?" queried the Farmer, having for the first time noticed the Thistle.

"Me? Why, I'm the Biggest and Handsomest Canada Thistle in the Business. My Genealogy carries me back to King——"

"Umph!" interrupted the Farmer. "One grain of Corn is of more value than a Hundred Thistles. Come out of that by the Roots."

MORAL:

The Thief who abuses the Law always givs Himself Away.—Detroit Free Press.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—QUESTIONS.

What number should never be mentioned in company, and why?

What man had neither father nor mother at his birth?

He walked upon earth, he talked upon earth;
He reproved blind man of sin;
Was never in heaven and never in hell,
And will never be therein.

ELIZABETH PRIMROSE.

2.—CHARADE.

A pair of twins, their mother between,
Exactly alike in feature and mien.
Not little Tom Thumbs, as you might suppose;
Though one may be Tommy, they're both of them Toes.
To name a fruit the three combine,
The common fruit of a common vine;
An apple indeed that is very well known,
Not the "apple of discord," by Eris thrown;
For the golden fruit of Hesperides,
That was stolen of old by Hercules;
Nor that which stuck in Adam's* throat,
(I'll write the moral below in a note);
Nor Sodom's apple, tempting fair,
That, bursting, turns to dust in air;
Not any apple of any tree;
Nor yet a mythical fruit we see;
But the real fruit of a common vine,
"The apple of love," our three define.
But I cannot let the occasion pass
Without a little more "apple sass"—
Though there be apples and apples untold,
The best are Miss Wixon's "Apples of Gold."

J. K. P. BAKER.

*Adam's apple—see Webster. Moral: Chew your food before you swallow it.

SOLUTION TO PUZZLE OFFERED BY HOMER A. BILLINGS IN OUR PUZZLE BOX, MAY 22, 1886.

A Liar's the scoundrel who tells you a lie;
A Berry's a fruit very small;
A Tyrant's a despot, controled by no tie,
But LI-Ber-Ty,—'s better than all.
One half of a Liar amounts to L I.
Six-tenths of a Berry to BER.
One-third of a Tyrant amounts to T.Y—
S. here we hav
LI.BER.TY—Sir.

Fabius, N. Y. HOMER A. BILLINGS.

ANSWER TO PUZZLE IN THE CHILDREN'S CORNER, JUNE 19, 1886.

One is in a pet, the other on a pet.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, JUNE 26, 1886.

1.-9½. 2.-Portugal (por 2 gal), Hayti (H 80), Tyrol, Italy (tire a little e), Cuba, Poland, United States (united s t eights), China, India, Germany (in d a German e), Japan, Tripoli (triple e). 3.-Kite, hornbill, crossbill, spoonbill, crane, linnet, flamingo, lark, dodo, bittern, tern, teal, sparrow, nutcracker, cockatoo, nightingale, kingfisher.

Correspondence.

HIGHTOWER, GA., June 25, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Noticing your Corner in THE TRUTH SEEKER I thought you would like to hear from north Georgia. Though I am no scholar at all, and see no chance of ever being one, on account of poverty, nevertheless I love good reason, let it come from what quarter it may. I am thirteen years old. Father reads all the Liberal papers he can get. We hav a friend at Madison, Ga., Mr. A. A. Bell, who sends us papers occasionally. Pa shows them around and makes people frown; he does not care; he is kind, and the first thing they know they are talking to him again. Ma is a Christian, but since she has read Liberal literature she never tries to scare us with an angry God or devil. They say I am hard-headed like Collins's ram, but I reckon I fill some space, and, of course, must defend that space. Pa says if I don't nobody else will. Pa is the only Infidel in this county. He has a lonesome time by himself. I hope some of the cousins will send me some of their old evangelizing papers as I am not able to buy them myself.

Your well wisher, NELLIE A. GUTHRIE.

P.S.—You must excuse me; I do not know anything about grammar. N. A. G.

[Nellie has good, sensible ideas, and she must improve every opportunity to inform her mind. Our Liberal papers are great teachers, and if debarred the pleasure and benefit of school one can still make great progress by reading the best thoughts of Liberal and scientific writers.—ED. C. C.]

BAXTER SPRINGS, KAN., June 23, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: I am a little girl ten years old. I liv in Michigan, but am visiting my grandpa, H. A. Crum, at Kansas, who takes THE TRUTH SEEKER, and says it is the best paper printed. I like the Children's Corner. I would like to see more correspondence. I would like some little girls to write me. We hav a graded school here. My oldest sister graduated here this spring. She had thirty bouquets. The City Hall was decorated nicely with flowers, and was crowded with people. It was worth coming one thousand miles to see. My sister read the salutatory exercise. I wish I had her pictnre after she took her seat with all her bouquets. She gave me the "Story Hour." I think it is splendid, all but "Poor Little Susie." We all sympathize with you in your loss. No more this time.

BERTHA M. FERRIS.

[We thank little Bertha and her friends for their sympathy. Because we loved little Susie we love all children and aim to do them good.—ED. C. C.]

HARWICH, MASS., June 25, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Seeing you put litttle girls' and boys' letters in the Children's Corner, I thought perhaps you would mine, so I try to write something that will do to put in print.

I read the Children's Corner every week, and sometimes learn the verses to recite in school.

I read the stories from the "Story Hour," and sometimes get grandpa to read to me. I go to the Internediate School, and am the youngest one of my classes.

I was eight years old the 12th of last November, and my birthday is the same as my grandpa's.

I hope to see you some day.

EMILY F. ROBBINS.

[Emily writes well for a child so young. Yes, we hope sometime to meet, not only Emily, but many other young friends, all of whom we cherish tenderly.—ED. C. C.]

B. F. R. writes: "My girls hav gone down to the camp ground, and I am alone with the little chicken, which the old mother hen, for some reason, has disowned and discarded, and which takes to the inmates of the house as trustingly as though we knew just how to cluck for it. Every day I take it out to scratch and dig for worms with my help, and it seems to know all about it, without any instruction. To see how knowing it is in its line—the tiny little thing—it makes me think that if human beings are immortal why shouldn't chickens be? And to follow up the analogy, if chickens be, why not the sponge? I'll stop just here—it is too much for me. I can't reason it out—the evidences for and against are about an even thing. If phenomena can settle it there may be a solution, but it would cost a small or big fortune to follow up investigations."

BIBLE MYTHS

AND THEIR

Parallels in Other Religions.

Being a Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of heathen nations of Antiquity, Considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous illustrations.

The object of the work is to point out the myths with which the Old and New Testaments abound; to show that they were held in common with other nations; and then trace them to their evident origin and explain their meaning.

"It is unquestionable true that the results of a rationalistic study of the Christian scriptures are nowhere else so accessible as they are now made in the work before us."—N. Y. Sun.

1 vol. 8vo. Cloth. About 600 pages.

Price, $3.00.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER,

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50c.

THE ORDER OF CREATION.

A Discussion Between

Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton, Reville.

On the Conflict between Genesis and Geology.

CONTENTS:

I. Dawn of Creation and of Worship. By Hon. W. E. Gladstone.
II. The Interpreters of Genesis and the Interpreters of Nature. By Prof. T. H. Huxley.
III. Postscript to Solar Myths. By Prof. Max Muller.
IV. Proem to Genesis: A Plea for a Fair Trial. By Hon. W. E. Gladstone.
V. Dawn of Creation. An Answer to Mr. Gladstone. By Albert Reville, D.D.
VI. Mr. Gladstone and Genesis. By Prof. T. H. Huxley.
VII. A Protest and a Plea. By Mrs. E. Lynn Linton.

This is a new book and contains the latest discussion on the mistakes of Moses. The names of the participants are a guarantee of its able character.

Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
T. Clappison, Hamilton, Ont.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
E. A. Stevens, 750 West Lake st., Chicago.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

MONTANA.
O. B. Whitford, Butte City.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 315 North 10th st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

Mottoes for Freethinkers

We hav received a supply of illuminated motto cards, which we offer for sale. These mottoes are intended to take the place of the "God-bless-our-home" placards which disfigure the walls of so many houses. They are printed on heavy cardboard, 9 inches by 22 1-2. The motto is in black, with colored borders, with an illuminated monogram of U. M. L. The following are the various readings:

THE LIVING HAV A RIGHT TO CONTROL THE WORLD.

FREE THOUGHT WILL GIV US TRUTH.

SUPERSTITION IS THE CHILD OF SLAVERY.

REASON IS THE LAMP OF THE MIND, THE ONLY TORCH OF PROGRESS.

THE SCHOOL-HOUSE IS MY CATHEDRAL.

UNIVERSAL MENTAL LIBERTY.

THE TIME TO BE HAPPY IS NOW, AND THE PLACE TO BE HAPPY IS HERE.

NEVER TROUBLE TROUBLE TILL TROUBLE TROUBLES YOU.

THE WORLD IS MY COUNTRY; TO DO GOOD MY RELIGION.

The price of each of the foregoing is 25 cents.

For Freethought societies there is a large card 22 x 15 inches, printed in colors, with an engraved heading, containing the Nine Demands of Liberalism. Framed it makes a splendid ornament for the lecture-rooms of Liberal societies. Price, 30 cents. Any of these will be sent postpaid, securely wrapped, on receipt of price.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York City.

ADAMI AND HEVA.

BY S. P. PUTMAM.

A poetic version of the Indian Story of the Garden of Eden, in which its superiority to the mutilated copy—the Genesis legend—is shown.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Price, Twenty-Five Cents.

THE

TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL

—AND—

FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC

1886.

(E. M. 286.)

WITH THIRTY PORTRAITS OF DISTINGUISHED EUROPEAN FREETHINKERS, SCIENTISTS, AND PHILOSOPHERS, AND NUMEROUS OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1886,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1885,	17
How the Church Filches from the State,	24
Public Contributions to the Church,	28
The Religion of Crime,	31
Chaplains in our Army and Navy,	32
The Higher Life. By Courtlandt Palmer,	34
My Dream. By Samuel P. Putnam,	37
The American Secular Union,	40
Statistics of our Foreign-born Population,	49
The Curate of Churnside. (Selected Story.) By Jas. Payne,	50
How Voltaire Died. By the Editor,	64
The Iron Virgin,	77
Religious Divisions of the World,	82
Paine Memorial Hall. (Illustrated),	83
The Story of 1885,	84
Immigration to the U. S. 1820–1884,	87
Freethought in Australia,	88
Freethought on the Continent,	92
Subjects of Illustration,	95
Freethought Journals,	100
Religious Denominations,	102
Area and Value of Farms,	103
Population of Large Cities,	103
Liberal Lecturers,	104

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Lick Observatory,
Girard College, Philadelphia,
Freethought Hall, Waco, Texas (Interior view),
Freethought Hall, Waco Texas (Exterior View),
The Tent,
Iron Virgin,
Paine Hall,
Moncure D. Conway,
Saladin,
Annie Besant,
Mary Wollstonecraft,
G. W. Foote,
Austin Holyoake,
J. S. Mill,
George Eliot,
Geo. Standring,
Ernst Haeckel,
Auguste Comte,
Edward Gibbon,
Max Muller,
Thos. Huxley,
Voltaire,
Chas. Darwin,
Rousseau,
Humboldt,
Byron,
Shelley,
David Hume,
Goethe,
Robert Burns,
Richard Carlile,
Herbert Spencer,
Castelar,
Bradlaugh,
Chas. A. Watts,
J. A. Froude,
John Tyndall.

NEW YORK:
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,
33 CLINTON PLACE.

HISTORY

OF THE

INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT

Of Europe.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D
Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

Sabbath-Breaking.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG,
Author of "False Claims," "Bible Morals," Etc.

The best and most thorough work ever written on the Sunday Question from a rational point of view.

Large and Handsome Print.

SINGLE COPIES, - - 25 cents.
SIX COPIES, - - - $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German A new cheap edition at only $1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass cure—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

REPLY

TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S

"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."

By B. W. Lacy.

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, auther of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrins. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON.

The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works.

By THOMAS PAINE,
"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."
Price, Single Copies, 25 cents. Six copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.

By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.

Price, 25 cents.

S. P. Putnam's Works.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution, with some Criticisms of Universology. Price, 20 cts.

Waifs and Wanderings, a New American Story. Price, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cts. "A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Golden Throne, a Romance. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creativ spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words—the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read Golden Throne.'"—INGERSOLL. $1.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A conversation in rhyme between the Nineteenth Century Infidel and the Galilean Reformer, wherein it is shown there is much in harmony between them. Price, 10 cts.

Prometheus. A poem. "It is crammed with life, thought, and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary beauty."—DR. HENRY W. BELLOWS. $1.

Gottlieb, His Life. A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Price 25 cents.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand, and other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cts.

For all of the above address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Charles Watts's Works.

The History of Freethought. Bound in cloth and lettered. Price, $1.25. CONTENTS: Section I. Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II. What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III. Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV. Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V. Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

The American Secular Union; its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Secularism; Destructiv and Constructiv. 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Christian Evidences Criticised A reply to the "Christian Evidence Society." Introduction by Charles Bradlaugh. Contents: The Origin of Christianity; The Historical Value of the New Testament; Miracles; Prophecies; The Practical Value of Christianity; The Progress of Christianity. Price, $1.

Secularism; its Principles and its Duties. Price, 75 cts.

Tracts. The following tracts by Chas. Watts are published at the low price of FIVE CENTS EACH: Defense of Secular Principles; Is the Bible Reliable? The Christian Deity; Moral Value of the Bible: Freethought and Modern Progress; Christianity, its Nature and Influence on Civilization; Philosophy of Secularism; Science and Bible Antagonistic; Christian Scheme of Redemption. For all of the above works address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

CANADIAN SECULAR UNION

LEAFLETS.

Long felt want supplied at last.

Small cost.—Concise argument.—Written in a spirit of love and candor that will

Awake Thought without arousing Prejudice.

Five Hundred of any one kind for $1.

Sabbath or Sunday, Which?—Historical. Evidence how Sabbath was Changed?—Immortality. The aims and objects of Secularism.—The Bible, What it has done for humanity,

500 for $1.

The Best Leaflets Ever Issued.

Prepared by leading lecturers, and carefully revised by committee of our most able Secularists.

Address CANADIAN SECULAR UNION,
Science Hall, Millichamps Buildings,
4t27 Adelaide St., East, Toronto, Ont.

Books on Practical Steps in Present Needs.

History of Woman's Costume Movement; its first 35 years, Events and Persecutions, Supplemented by Modern Martyrdom. 132pp., fine paper, 25c. Progress vs. Fashion. 32pp., paper, 10c. Woman's Way Out. 32pp., paper, 10c. Love and Transition. Poetic, in two parts; an Epic and an Argument. 191pp., in fine cloth and gilt, 75c.

Sent on receipt of price, by the author,
tojn1 M. E. TILLOTSON, Vineland, N. J.

SELF-CONTRADICTIONS OF THE BIBLE.

A perfectly reliable, accurate pamphlet. Though anonymous, it is now known to be the work of W. H. BURR, one of our ablest correspondents. More than 30,000 copies hav been sold. Price, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

ELEMENTS

OF

UNIVERSAL HISTORY

FOR

HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

This book is just what the busy world of to-day needs—a perfect compendium of history from 2,000 years B.C. on up to 1883, all in a nutshell.—Elmina Slenker.

As a text-book in schools, the book would occupy an important place; in the family it would be no less important, as conveying information that all should be acquainted with.—Susan Wixon.

Mr. Cottinger's intentions in writing this book are excellent, and his standpoint admirable. It may be commended as fulfilling its purpose of a concise and interesting historical text-book.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.

For Schools, in Quantities, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Poetry.

Stephen Pearl Andrews.

Great Light of Liberty,
And hast thou left us by thy flick'ring out
To wander rayless, darkling, like lost stars
Amid this world of fool-ruled, fear-forced slaves?
Nay, rather hav thy truth-bright rays, afar
Scattering spark-like from thy fall, ignit
Ten thousand flameless torches. These, flameless now
No more, but lurid, flashing, floating out,
Shall with a sudden force dispread their heat,
Kindling myriad watch-fires blazing high,
All to illume this death-dark orb of fear,
That needs but cloud-dispelling light and fire
To make it warm as heaven.

Great husbandman and host
Of universal truth! We who are heirs
Of those vast barns, high ricks, wide cribs, deep bins,
That held preserved from waste thy garnered store
Drawn from the world-wide acres of thy tilth,
Shall find in them our wealth to purchase way
To truth of trial and problems world-core deep;
From such sound grain the crushing mills of thought,
And oven heat of human passion-force,
Shall ceaseless grind and bake the bread of life,
Feeding the coming man. J. WM. LLOYD.

Captain Ortis's Booty.

Captain Ortis (the tale I tell Petit told in his chronicle)
Gained from Alva, for service and duty
At Antwerp's capture, the strangest booty.

Then each captain chose, as I hear,
That for guerdon he held most dear,
Craved what in chief he set heart of his on;
Out strode Ortis and claimed the prison!

Such a tumult! for, be assured,
Greatly the judges and priests demurred;
No more criminals alone in that Stygian
Darkness died, but the foes of religion.

There lay heretics by the score,
Anabaptists, and many more
Hard to catch; but, let loose when caught, your Timid squirrels forego the torture.

Never! Suddenly sank the noise,
Alva spoke in his steely voice:
"He's my soldier, sans flaw or blemish;
Let him burn as he likes these Flemish."

"Sire, as you please," the governor said,
"Only King Philip's edict read——"
Alva spoke: "What is king or Cortes?"
"Open the portals!" cried Captain Ortis.

"Loose the prisoners, set them free;
Only—each pays a ransom fee!"
Out, to be sure, poured the gold in buckets,
Piles on piles of broad Flanders ducats.

Ay, and there followed not gold alone;
Men and women and children, thrown
In chains to perish, came out forgiven—
Saw light, friends' faces, and thought it heaven.

Out they staggered, so halt and blind
From rack and darkness, they scarce could find
The blessed gate where daughter and mother,
Father and brother, all found each other.

"Freedom! Our darlings! Let God be praised!"
So cried all; then said one, amazed:
"Who is he, under heaven, that gave us Thought and pity—who cared to save us?"

"Captain Ortis," the answer ran,
"The Spanish lancer; here's the man.
Ay, but don't kill him with too much caressing;
Death's sour salad with sweetest dressing."

Danger indeed; for never hath been
In brave old Antwerp such a scene—
Boldest patriot, fairest woman,
Blessing him, knelt to the Spanish foeman.

Ortis looted his prize of gold,
And yet, I think, if the truth be told,
He found, when the ducats were gone with the pleasure,
That heretic blessing a lasting treasure.

Yet my captain, to certain eyes,
Seems war-hardened and worldly wise.
"'Twere for a hero," you say, "more handsome
To giv the freedom nor take the ransom."

True; but think of this hero's lot;
No Quixote he, nor Sir Launcelot,
But a needy soldier, half-starved, remember,
With cold and hunger that northern December;

Just such a one as Parma meant
When he wrote to Philip, in discontent:
"Antwerp must yield to our men ere much longer
Unless you leave us to die of hunger.

"Wages, clothing, they do without—
Wine, fire even; they'll learn, no doubt,
To liv without meat for their mouths; they're zealous—
Only they die first as yet, poor fellows."

Yes, and I praise him, for my part,
This man, war-beaten and tough of heart,
Who, scheming a booty, no doubt, yet planned it
More like a saint, as I think, than a bandit.

What, my friend, he's too coarse for you?
Will naught less than a Galahad do?
Well, far nobler, no doubt, your sort is,
But I—I declare for Captain Ortis!

—Boston Transcript.

Our Fashionable Preachers.

From John Swinton's Paper.

The New York Tribune publishes a report of the way in which about one hundred of the fashionable preachers of this city are enjoying themselvs while their churches are closed for the season. The Rev. Dr. Parkhurst spends his summer on the coast of Norway; the Rev. Dr. Crosby in the Catskill Mountains; the Rev. Dr. Robinson in the Adirondacks; the Rev. Dr. Wilson on the Pacific coast; the Rev. Dr. Ormiston by the seaside at Long Branch; the Rev. E. M. Deems in the Berkshire Hills; the Rev. James Chambers in the Chenango Valley; the Rev. Dr. Eaton up in the hills; the Rev. Mr. Rainsford in the Rocky Mountains; the Rev. Dr. Virgin on his farm; the Rev. Dr. Taylor in the Highlands of Scotland; the Rev. Drs. Hodge and Van Dyke in Europe; also the Rev. Drs. Worrall and Tiffany; and also the Rev. Messrs. Collyer, Lloyd, Beecher, and others. So it goes all along through the long list.

These fashionable clergymen are recruiting after the overpowering labors of the past winter and spring. The strain upon them has been greater, as you can tell by their looks, than that of the shoemakers of the city or the tailors, or the car-drivers, or the carpenters, or the printers, or the blacksmiths, or the bricklayers, or the hatters, or the cotton-mill hands, or the needle women, or the factory children—who hav no need of wasting their time from June till September in dallying among the hills or by the seaside, or strolling over Europe. It is a tough job to preach a fashionable peach-blow sermon every Sunday, worse than hod-carrying for six days of the week. As for their pay, why it can't compare with that of coal miners, for example.

If these hundred fashionable preachers of the city would pass a few of the dog-days in the tenement-house districts, spending part of their money to help those from whose industry it came—but did you ever hear of such a notion?

Book Notices.

THE MUSEUMS IN THE PARK. Why They Should be Open on Sunday. New York: The Truth Seeker Company, 33 Clinton Place. Price 5 cents.

This pamphlet contains the history of the movement in New York to hav the museums in the park open for the inspection of the public on Sundays. A petition was signed by ten thousand citizens of New York, and indorsed by the resolutions of several labor organizations.

Among the thousands of names signed to this petition were such as Hon. Roscoe Conkling, the chief justice and recorder of the Court of General Sessions, chief justice of the Court of Common Pleas, and many others of like rank.

Mr. Samuel P. Putnam wrote a letter to the trustees of the museum urging the privilege of presenting the petition in person in connection with an address. This was denied him; the address, however, is published and is very able. It first proves the public desire for Sunday opening by the signers of the petition, the resolutions passed by labor organizations, and the sermons preached on the subject by such men as Revs. Heber Newton, Robert Collyer, Theodore Williams, W. S. Rainsford, Felix Adler, and others.

He then argues the justice of the petition, the public good of Sunday openings, the benefit that will accrue to the museums, etc., etc. It also replies to the arguments used against Sunday openings. All in all, this pamphlet is a good document to put into the hands of any one who is liable to call for the privilege of the benefit of any of our public institutions on Sunday.

The same reasons that demand the opening of the New York Central Park Museums on Sunday demand that our State Library be kept open on the only day of the week when "the common people" hav time to use it.—The New Thought.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Permit me to call the attention of our Liberal friends to the famous and wonderful novel, "What's to Be Done?" translated and published by Benj. R. Tucker, of Boston. The author of this novel is the celebrated Russian Materialist, literary critic, and economist, N. G. Tchernychewsky. It is the "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of Russian literature. "What's to Be Done?" as Mr. Tucker truthfully observes, has been an ever-flowing fount of inspiration to the youth of Russia of both sexes for more than twenty years, and mainly to its influence is their present progressiv spirit to be attributed. It is a book for Liberals, Freethinkers, and truth seekers. It preaches the gospel of individual liberty, moral culture, and intellectual development.

Development! Development! Observe, "think, and read those who tell you of the pure enjoyments of life, of the possible goodness and happiness of man. Read them—their books delight the heart; observe life—it is interesting; think—it is a pleasant occupation. Desire to be happy: this desire, this desire alone, is indispensable. With this end in view, you will work with pleasure for your development, for there lies happiness."

For no other crime than preaching this gospel of Freethought and development, which, in the judgment of the Russian rulers, aims at the overthrow of society, religion, and morality, Tchernychewsky was imprisoned, exiled, and buried alive in the wilderness of Siberia.

It is hardly necessary for me to praise Mr. Tucker's translation, as his rare talent and exceptional abilities are well known. Some contemptible fool has given a false, misleading, and absurd outline of Tchernychewsky's book in the New York World. As a Russian, I ask you, Mr. Editor, to do justice to the author of "What's to Be Done?" by publishing this. VICTOR YARROS.

Birmingham, Conn.

ALL IN A LIFETIME.

It has not been my pleasure to read this charming book written by Miss S. H. Wixon until quite recently, and I must say that I was greatly delighted with it. Miss Wixon displays a clear insight into human nature, and consequently givs us both the light and the shade, the good and bad, as we meet it in every-day life. In a word, she hold the mirror up to nature, and givs us genuin portraits of living characters.

There is no nonsense or goody-goody business in the book. The writer is a broad-minded, large and tender-hearted woman, inspired by knowledge and humanity. Her Liberalism is not ostentatious, and yet the soil of her writing grows nothing so well as liberty, truth, justice, and the natural virtues. The writer of "All in a Lifetime" knows nothing of any other "lifetime," and consequently believes in "one world at a time."

W. S. BELL

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY:

OR,

MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who hav helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.

Price, - - - - - $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

The Legends of the Patriarchs. By S. BARING-GOULD. $1.50. The Congregationalist, in speaking of it, says: "There are few Bible readers who hav not at some time wished for just such a volume. It is a thoroughly interesting book, and will be seized with avidity by all students of the Bible.

The Martyrdom of Man. Embracing the four divisions of War, Religion, Liberty, and Intellect A work of rare merit, and written in a superior style. By WINWOOD READE. New edition. 544 pages. Price reduced from $3 to $1.75.

The Old Faith and the New. A Confession. By DAVID FRIEDERICH STRAUSS, author of the "New Life of Jesus," etc. Authorized translation from the sixth German edition. By MATHILDE BLIND. Two volumes in one. The translation revised and partly rewritten, and preceded by an American version of the authors "Prefatory Postscript." Strauss is too well known by the readers of America to require a single word to be said in his praise. Price, $1.50.

The Outcast. A deep, finely-written Radical story. From the London edition. By WINWOOD READE, author of "Martyrdom of Man." 30 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion. Both sides fairly and ably presented. By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

The Radical Pulpit. Comprising discourses of advanced thought. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM and FELIX ADLER, two of America's clearest thinkers. By O. B. FROTHINGHAM: The New Song of Christmas, The Departed Years, Life as a Test of Creed, Apocryphal Books of the New Testament, The Sectarian Spirit, The American Gentleman, The Language of the Old Testament, The Dogma of Hell, The Value of the Higher Sentiments, The American Lady, The Consolations of Rationalism. By FELIX ADLER: The Ethics of the Social Question, Emancipation, Lecture at the Second Anniversary of the Society for Ethical Culture, Our Leaders, Hav We Still a Religion? Conscience. Price, in cloth, $1.

The Real Blasphemers. By Col. J. R. KELSO, A.M. Price, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations. Containing forms for organizing societies, marriage, funeral services, naming of infants, obituary notices, epitaphs, etc. Also 525 Liberal and Spiritualistic hymns for public meetings, funerals, social gatherings, etc. To which are added beautiful recitations for various public occasions. 550 pp. Cloth, 75 cents.

THE HUMBOLDT LIBRARY.

Price 15 cents each number, unless otherwise marked.

1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. A series of familiar essays on astronomical and other natural phenomena. By Richard A. Proctor, F.R.A.S.
2. The Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers. 19 illustrations. By John Tyndall, F.R.S.
3. Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, Author of "The English Constitution."
4. Man's Place in Nature. With numerous illustrations. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
6. Town Geology. With Appendix on Coral and Coral Reefs. By Charles Kingsley.
7. Conservation of Energy. With numerous Illustrations. By Balfour Stewart, LL.D.
8. Study of Languages, brought back to its True principles. By C. Marcel.
9. The Data of Ethics. By Herbert Spencer.
10. Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Numerous illustrations. By By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.
11. } The Naturalist on the River Amazon. A record of 11 years' travel. By Henry Walter
12. } Bates, F.L.S. Not sold separately.
13. Mind and Body. The theories of their relations. By Alexander Bain, LL.D.
14. The Wonders of the Heavens. 32 illustrations. By Camille Flammarion.
15. Longevity. The means of prolonging life after middle age. By John Gardner, M.D.
16. Origin of Species. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. With other disquisitions. By Herbert Spencer.
18. Lessons in Electricity. 60 illustrations. By John Tyndall, F.R.S.
19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. By Richard A. Proctor.
20. Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kalley Miller, M.A.
21. The Physical Basis of Life, with other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
22. Seeing and Thinking. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.
23. Scientific Sophisms. A review of current theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. By Samuel Wainwright, D.D.
24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Illustrated. By Prof. H. Helmholtz.
25. Origin of Nations. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, Oxford University.
26. The Evolutionist at Large. By Grant Allen.
27. History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.H.S.
28. Fashion in Deformity, as illustrated in the customs of Barbarous and Civilized Races. Numerous illustrations. By William Henry Flower, F.R.S.
29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Numerous illustrations. By Andrew Wilson, Ph. D.
30. } Study of Words. By Richard Chenevix
31. } Trench.
32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.
33. Vignettes from Nature. By Grant Allen.
34. Philosophy of Style. By Herbert Spencer.
35. Oriental Religions. By John Caird, Pres. Univ. Glasgow, and Others.
36. Lectures on Evolution. Illustrated. By Prof. T. H. Huxley.
37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. By John Tyndall.
38. } Geological Sketches. By Archibald Geikie,
39. } F.R.S.
40. The Evidence of Organic Evolution. By Geo. J. Romanes, F.R.S.
41. Current Discussions in Science. By W. M. Williams, F.C.S.
42. History of the Science of Politics. By Frederick Pollock.
43. Darwin and Humboldt. By Professor Huxley, Professor Agassiz, and others.
44. } Dawn of History. By C. F. Keary, of the
45. } British Museum.
46. Diseases of Memory. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald.
47. Childhood of Religions. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S.
48. Life in Nature. Illustrated. By Jas. Hinton.
49. The Sun: its Constitution; its Phenomena; its Condition. By Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.
50. } Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. By
51. } Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.
52. Diseases of the Will. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald.
53. Animal Automatism, and other Essays. By Prof. T. H. Huxley, F.R.S.
54. Birth and Growth of Myth. By Edward Clodd. F.R.A.S.
55. Scientific Basis of Morals, and other Essays. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.
56. } Illusions. By James Sully.
57. }
58. } The Origin of Species. By Charles Darwin.
59. } Two double numbers, 30 cents each.
60. Childhood of the World. By Edward Clodd.
61. Miscellaneous Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.
62. Religions of the Ancient World. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, University of Oxford. Double number, 30 cents.
63. Progressive Morality. By Thomas Fowler, LL.D., president of Corpus Christi College, Oxford.
64. Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russel Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.
65. Conditions of Mental Development; and other Essays. By Wm. Kingdon Clifford.
66. Technical Education; and other Essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
67. The Black Death. An Account of the Great Pestilence of the Fourteenth Century. By J. F. C. Hecker.
68. (Special number, 10 cents.) Three Essays, by Herbert Spencer.
69. (Double Number, 30 cents). Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. By Fritz Schultze, Ph.D. Translated from the German by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.
70. Essays Speculativ and Practical. By Herbert Spencer.
71. Anthropology. By Daniel Wilson, LL.D. With Appendix on Archeology. By E. B. Tylor, F.R.S.
72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. By J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.
73. Evolution in History, Language, and Science. Four Addresses delivered at the London Crystal Palace School of Art, Science, and Literature.
74. The Descent of Man; and selection in relation to Sex. By Charles Darwin. In 4 parts. 15 cents each.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Ingersoll's

The Gods. Paper,
In five lectures, comp
"Humboldt," "Thoma
ity," and "Heretics an

The Ghosts. Paper,
Contents: "The Ghost
Woman, and Child," " dependence," "About
"The Grant Banquet,"
Clark," "The Past Ri
Dream," and "A Tribut

Some Mistakes of M
cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talm
plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do
per, 25 cents.

The Christian Rel
Ingersoll, Judge Jerem
George F. Fisher. Pap

Orthodoxy. 56 pa
10 cents. $1.00 per doz.
large, clear type, and could be delivered in
This makes a grand
Liberals should scatter

Ingersoll Catechise
a Number of Vital Qu the editor of the San cents per dozen; 25 c
Millions of these should

Vindication of Th
the attacks of the New ert G. Ingersoll. Price

Address on the Ci
Large size octavo, pap

Ingersoll's Lecture
Bound in one volume. for Mr. Ingersoll's work all his lectures, except doxy," bound in one b calf, library style, and pages, which is sold a price of $5. Sent by ma

Tributes. There h
applications for Mr. I
His Brother," "The Visi
Banquet Toast," and th
"Little Harry Miller's been printed on heavy t minated border, and in ble for framing, and the
to any address, for 50cts.

Prose Poems and S
new book is a gem. It spect. In fact, one of best ever issued. It co ebrated "Decoration D fore published, and all heretofore printed in v brought together till selected from the spee ures, letters, table-talk versations of the autho for and will be accepted a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk cloth, beveled edges; gilt back and side, $2.50; in half calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitly fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine, and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price, $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should hav them.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22x28, $5; panel, 10½x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cents; card, 20 cts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

J. E. Remsburg's Works.

False Claims. Revised and Enlarged. Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture: Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbatic Idea; The Jewish Sabbath; The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; The Sabbath during the Middle Ages; The Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; six copies, $1.00.

Image Breaker. Six Lectures: Decline of Faith, Protestant Intolerance, Washington an Unbeliver; Jefferson an Unbeliever; Paine and Wesley; Christian Sabbath. Each 5 cents; bound, paper, 25 cents; per doz. 40 cts.

Thomas Paine. The Apostle of Religious and Political Liberty. Tells the story of the Author-Hero's life, delineates the leading traits of his character and genius, and vindicates his name from the aspersions cast upon it. Choice extracts from "Common Sense," "American Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason" are given; also, tributes to Paine's character from more than one hundred noted persons of Europe and America, many of them written expressly for this work. Second edition, 160 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound, and containing a handsome steel portrait of Paine. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Apostle of Liberty. An address delivered in Paine Hall, before the N. E. Freethinkers' Convention, January 29, 1884. Price, 10 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Moses to Paul; The Fruit of the Tree of Knowledge; Knowledge Not a Crime; As Much Inspired as Any of It.

VICARIOUS ATONEMENT: Fear; Beginning to Think; Creeds; Self-Control What We Need; Vicarious Atonement Not a Christian Invention; Twin Monsters from Intellectual Pigcarious Theory the Cause of Crime; Revision; The Church's Money-Box; Shall Progress Stop?

HISTORICAL FACTS AND THEOLOGICAL FICTIONS: Church Fictions; Historical Facts—(Civilization, Comparativ Status, Women as Persons, Education, As Wives, Not Woman's Friend, Morals).

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 Cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

Photo-Engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50c.

Ingersoll's Tributes.

REDUCED IN PRICE.

We hav made arrangements whereby we can offer these magnificent prose poems of Mr. Ingersoll's at greatly reduced prices. The Tributes are prinfed on heavy toned paper, 18x22 inches, illuminated border, large clear type, suitable for framing. The titles are:

The Vision of War,
Tribute to his Brother,
The Grant Banquet Toast,
Address at Harry Miller's Grave.

The price of these heretofore has been $1. We offer them now at FIFTEEN CENTS EACH; THE FOUR FOR FIFTY CENTS. Mailed secure from breakage. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

A SKETCH OF THE LIFE
OF
APOLLONIUS OF TYANA,
OR THE
First Ten Decades of Our Era.
BY
DANIEL M. TREDWELL.

Designed to show upon the authority of History that Apollonius of Tyana performed miracles and spoke wise sayings equal to those attributed to Jesus Christ. 350pp., octavo, best style. Price $2.50.
Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

A STUDY
OF
PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY
BY LEWIS G. JANES.

This book treats of the natural evolution of the Christian religion, its historical antecedents in Palestinian Judaism and Roman Paganism; investigates the history of the founder of Christianity in the light of the latest scientific criticism of the New Testament; shows that the true story of the Man Jesus, and his genuin teachings are separable from the later legendary accretions which hav confounded him with the mythical Christ, and traces the natural development of Christian dogma and ecclesiastical institutions. Complete references and full index. 320pp. 8vo, cloth, gilt top. Price $1.50.
Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

SOCIAL WEALTH

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

Price, Cloth, $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
Clinton Place, New York.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

The Present and the Future Republic of North America.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

Price $1.50

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Bible Inquirer. A Key to Bible Investigation. Revised Edition. This pamphlet refers specifically to 148 Bible propositions, with numerous references and citations, that are contradicted in terms by the same number of other propositions in the same book. Price 25 cents.

RUPTURES CURED by my Medical Compound and Improved Elastic Supporter Truss in from 30 to 90 days. Reliable references given. Send stamp for circular, and say in what paper you saw my advertisement. Address Capt. W. A. Collings, Smithville, Jefferson Co. N.Y.

LECTURES.

ting Philadelphia should at-ourse of Science Lectures
g, at the Hall of Friendship.
Girard ave.
ular questions).
ROF. ATKINSON, F.R.A.S.

BERAL LEAGUE No. 257

in Industrial Hall, Broad and nd 7:30 P.M. for lectures and religious and social questions.
st the audience. N.B.—Truth always on hand at cheap rates.

ND SHAKSPERE.

Shakspere could not write.
n by Francis Bacon to the Earl de, A.D., 1590. By WM. HENRY
nts. For sale at this office.

Vettstein's

ry Store, Rochelle, Ill.

jewelry; fine gold and silver racelets, gold and plated jew-
d ware, optical, art, and fancy silver, Elgin watch, $9; 4 oz., nd, 11 jeweled, $14.50; same, 15 adjusted, $22. In filled gold years, 7 jeweled, stem wind,
.50; 15 jeweled, $28; adjusted,
s add $4.50. Ladies' filled, best and $30 for 15 jeweled moved gold, 10 k., $22, 7; $24, 11;
14 karat cases add $8. Gents es cleaned, $1; springs $1; and ered mail. Best spectacle in oods must suit or cash back.

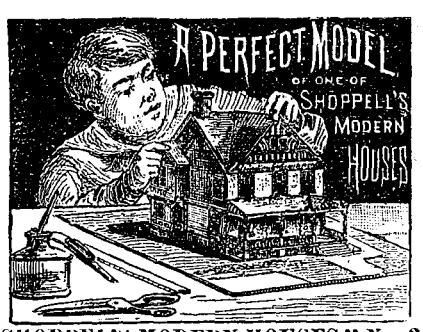
And what is a nicer present for either your lady or gentleman friends than one of my latest improved model badges in solid gold, artistically enameled in three colors? Price, $3, $3.50, $4. With genuin diamond in rising sun, $8 and $10.



OTTO WETTSTEIN
Rochelle, Ill.

. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catch-penny get up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magnetic appliance, but simply a medicin to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

N. B.—Dr. Fellows begs leave to say that he is an Infidel of the most pronounced character. Bro. Liberals, your patronage is solicited.

"SHOPPEL'S MODERN HOUSES" No. 3.

(Just Published, July 1, 1886) CONTAINS:

A colored frontispiece showing the modern style of painting.

A cardboard supplement, ingeniously drawn and colored, to supply all the neccessary pieces for constructing a model house, with plain directions for putting them together.

While the supplement affords both old and young the greatest amusement, it is more than a toy. It is, in fact, a most practical lesson in Architecture; a perfect, scaled model of one of our most popular designs, so exact that it is useful to builders.

55 New Designs for Residences (cost varying from $500 to $15,000).
2 New Designs for Barns.
1 New Design for a Chapel.
Drawings and description of a model Kitchen (by Maria Parloa) and a perfect Cistern.
An Article on Villa Park Associations.

SENT, POSTPAID, ON RECEIPT OF PRICE, $1.

Address
THE CO-OPERATIVE BUILDING PLAN ASSO'N.
191 Broadway (Box 2702), New York.

WANTED—Lady agents actually clear $20 daily with my wonderful entirely new patent rubber undergarments for females. A minister's wife sold 13 first hour. MADAM H. N. LITTLE,
6t27 Box 443, Chicago, Ill.

News of

A MASS meeting to inc
Ireland was held in Un
Robert Blissert was cha pected that the meeting spite of that drawback.

PROHIBITION went into effect in Rhode Island on the 1st of July.

BEECHER preached last Sunday in London. It is reported that his jokes took well.

THE sparring match between Sullivan and Mitchell was prevented by the police.

JOHN DALEY, a reformed papist, attempted to lecture in Wilkesbarre, Pa., last Sunday, but was mobbed and thrown into the river by Catholic roughs.

A PHILADELPHIA man named Graham has built a large barrel, in which he intends to ensconce himself and go through the Whirlpool rapids at Niagara Falls.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH has been returned to Parliament from Northampton by a large majority. It is noted that thus far he is the only candidate who has polled more votes than at the last election.

ELDER ELLIOTT, of the Christian church at Nevada, Mo., has been deposed by his church and renounced by his wife on account of his liaisons with a mulatto woman.

THE Boston yacht Puritan beat the Priscilla and Mayflower in the Eastern Yacht Club's regatta off Marblehead, Mass., last week.

JAMES A. STEELY, of Midway, N. Y., was shot dead, while attending divine service last Sunday, by Miss Emma Connelly. He had slandered the girl.

AN American fishing schooner from Portland, Me., put into Shelburne Harbor, N. S., last week for water and repairs, and was seized by a Canadian cruiser. The offense charged is taking in water before reporting to the custom house.

BOYCOTTERS are being convicted of conspiracy right and left. Our District Attorney Martine has even thought it best to postpone the trials of the indicted "boodle" aldermen in order to deal with this class of offenders. No indictment has as yet been brought against employers who hav conspired to deprive employees of work by lockouts and blacklisting.

THEER is a small war in Texas. The cowboys are driving their herds from the dry sections of the northwest part of the state into Jack's county, along the waters of the West Fork, cutting fences and trespassing upon farms. The farmers are arming to protect themselvs. Several collisions hav taken place, and a number of men are known to hav been killed.

A DYNAMITE factory at McCainsville, N. J., was the scene of an explosion on the 2d inst. which demolished the building and blew ten workmen into atoms. The amount of dynamite which exploded is estimated at 2,500 pounds. Nothing was left of the factory but slivers, and all that could be found of the ten men were shreds of flesh, which, when gathup in pails, scarcely filled four water buckets.

THE Fourth went off in this city with the usual amount of noise. It was celebrated on the 5th. The 4th came on Sunday, and that being a sacred day, superstition got the better of patriotism, and the celebration was deferred. The result was that there were two days of confusion and smoke, the small boys being unable to keep their enthusiasm bottled over Sunday. Comparativly few casualties are reported, and there was less drunkenness, it is said, than usual. Two hundred thousand people left New York without visibly decreasing its population. More than a million stayed in the city.

Odds and Ends.

IN a French railway carriage: "Madame, is smoking disagreeable to you?" "Yes, sir." (Lighting a cigar) "Ah, then I am sorry for you."

A BRIGHT little boy in Brooklyn, at the beginning of Lent, when asked by his Sunday-school teacher who had fasted forty days and forty nights, replied, "Dr. Tanner."

AN old miser, owning a farm in the north of Scotland, found it impossible to do his work without assistance, and accordingly offered any man food for performing the requisit labor. A half-starved man, hearing of the terms, accepted them. Before going into the fields in the morning he invited his servant to breakfast. After finishing the morning meal, the old miser thought it would be a saving of time if they should place the dinner upon the table after the breakfast. This was readily agreed to by the unsatisfied stranger, and the dinner was soon dispatched. "Suppose, now," said the frugal farmer, "we take supper? It will save time and trouble, you know." "Just as you like," said the eager eater; and at it they went. "Now we will go to work," said the delighted employer. "Thank you," said the laborer; "I never work after supper."

A PARTY of ladies were being shown through the Arkansaw penitentiary. One of the party, upon noticing a handsome young fellow, thus addressed him: "You are a very young man to be in such a place as this." "Yes'm." "What must your father think?" "Think that if I could get out I'd do it." "How long are you in for?" "Five years." "What was your crime?" "Selling Bibles." "What!" the lady exclaimed, in astonishment. "Yes, selling state?" "Why, is it a crime to sell Bibles in this Bibles." "It seemed to be, mum." "Oh, what a heathenish country. I am a correspondent for the Apostle at Work, and I shall write up your case. Now," taking out a note-book, "please giv me the particulars." "Well, while I was selling Bibles on the street a man came up and arrested me. I was taken before court and sentenced to the penitentiary." "You don't tell me so." "Yes'um." "And all this for selling the precious book. Where did you get the Bibles?" "Stole them." The note-book closed with a snap.

NOT EASILY DECEIVED.

Young physician (to patient): "Let me look at your tongue. Hm, troubled with dyspep——"

Patient: "Not a bit. I can eat sole-leather."

Y. P.: "Let me feel your pulse. Hm, wakefulness at night."

P.: "Sleep like a top."

Y. P.: "Let me see your tongue. Hm, dizziness and pains in——"

P.: "Nop."

Y. P.: "Let me feel your pulse. Hm, easily tired, with an indisposition to mental exertion of any——"

P.: "Nop."

Y. P.: "Let me see your tongue. Hm, headache and stiffness of the——"

P.: "Havn't had a headache in twenty-five years."

Y. P.: "Let me feel your pulse. Hm, you are using too much tobacco."

P.: "Never touch it in any shape."

Y. P.: "Let me see your pulse—er—I mean your tongue. Hm, too much confined to your desk. You need fresh air and——"

P.: "I'm a letter-carrier."

Y. P.: "Let me feel of your tongue—that is, I should say your pulse. Hm, you hav a tired feeling come over——"

P.: "Never."

Y. P.: "Let me see your—never mind your tongue—feverish at times, with a constant desire for water."

P.: "No, beer."

Y. P.: "Do you drink beer?"

P.: "Oh, yes."

Y. P.: "To excess?"

P.: "No."

Y. P.: "Tell me, how many glasses a day?"

P.: "Sometimes more and sometimes fewer."

Y. P.: "I thought so. We members of the medical profession are seldom deceived in our diagnosis of a case."

P.: "Am I in any danger, doctor?"

Y. P.: "No immediate danger; but its lucky you called me."

Paine Vindicated!

—o—

A thorough and overwhelming reply to the New York Observer's slanderous attacks upon the Author-Hero of the American Revolution. Containing both the slanders and their refutation.

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

—o—

The New York Observer (Presbyterian) having recently reissued its assault upon the memory of Paine, this pamphlet should be circulated everywhere in vindication.

60pp. Price 10 cents; 12 copies, $1.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD

A Fabricated Account of a Scene at the Death-bed of Thomas Paine.

BY W. H. BURR.

This pamphlet shows that the account of Paine's dying moments attributed to Bishop Fenwick (upon which the Observer relies to prove its principal charges) is a forgery, it being impossible that Fenwick could hav written the alleged account.

18pp. Price 5 cents; 25 for $1.00.

For these two pamphlets address

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

of Thought.

f land tenure must be greatly ored lords, the descendants rons and dukes, should not e land and the tillers of the s ownership.—D. M. Bennett.

of the immense age of earth, and the enormous length of time (compared with our historical accounts) during which man has been an inhabitant of the globe, and with the knowledge that man's origin is, almost without doubt, to be derived from a lower order of the animal kingdom, and certainly from very primitiv and savage ancestors, the old account of the first pair, the fall, the curse of the race, the "scheme of salvation," as indicated in the prophesied "seed of the woman," that should "bruise the serpent's head"—all this, upon which is built up the lofty structure of "justification by faith" and "redemption through the blood of the Lamb," crumbles away, and the vast system falls to the ground.—Stoddard's New Faith (No. 119 of Truth Seeker Tracts).

WHO was Jesus Christ? A man or a myth? His history being a fable, is the hero a reality? Do you allege that it was impossible to forge books so large as the gospels? Then the answer is, that for many centuries Christians were skilled in the art of forging epistles, gospels, acts, decrees of councils, etc., etc. Will you urge that this only applies to the Romish church? Then you will admit that your stream runs from a polluted fountain. Who was Jesus Christ? Who was Saint Patrick? Who expelled the reptils from Ireland? Who was Finma-Coul? Who was Odin? Perhaps there was a man named Jesus, who really lived and performed some special actions attracting popular attention, and who became the center of a hundred myths, but beyond this, Jesus Christ is a fiction.—Charles Bradlaugh.

GENTLY and softly the mother bent
Over the baby in sleep's embrace,
Watching the rosy smiles indent
And dimple the little dreamer's face,
And the longed-for kiss she would not take,
Lest peradventure the child might wake.

Gently the mother watched and wept
Over the coffin where lay her child.
Only one thought in her bosom crept
As she bent to the lips in her anguish wild
Again and again the lost kiss to take—
Oh! if the baby would only wake!

—R. K. Munkittrick.

No man in these days stands alone, or towers in unapproachable superiority above his fellows. Nor can any man now play all the parts. A division of labor has taken place in all spheres. The time when the missionaries at once converted and civilized the forefathers of European Christendom, when Charlemagne or Alfred was the master spirit in everything, has passed away, and with it the day of hero-worship, of rational hero-worship, has departed, at least from the European nations. The more backward races may still need, and hav reason to venerate, a Peter the Great.—Goldwin Smith.

IF any man come unto me, etc.—Luke xiv, 26. Think not that I am come to send peace, etc.—Matt. x, 34-36. Everyone that hath forsaken houses, etc.—Matt. xix, 29. The teaching of Jesus is, in fact, save yourself by yourself. The teaching of humanity should be, to save yourself save your fellows. The human family is a vast chain; each man and woman a link.—Bradlaugh's What did Jesus Teach?

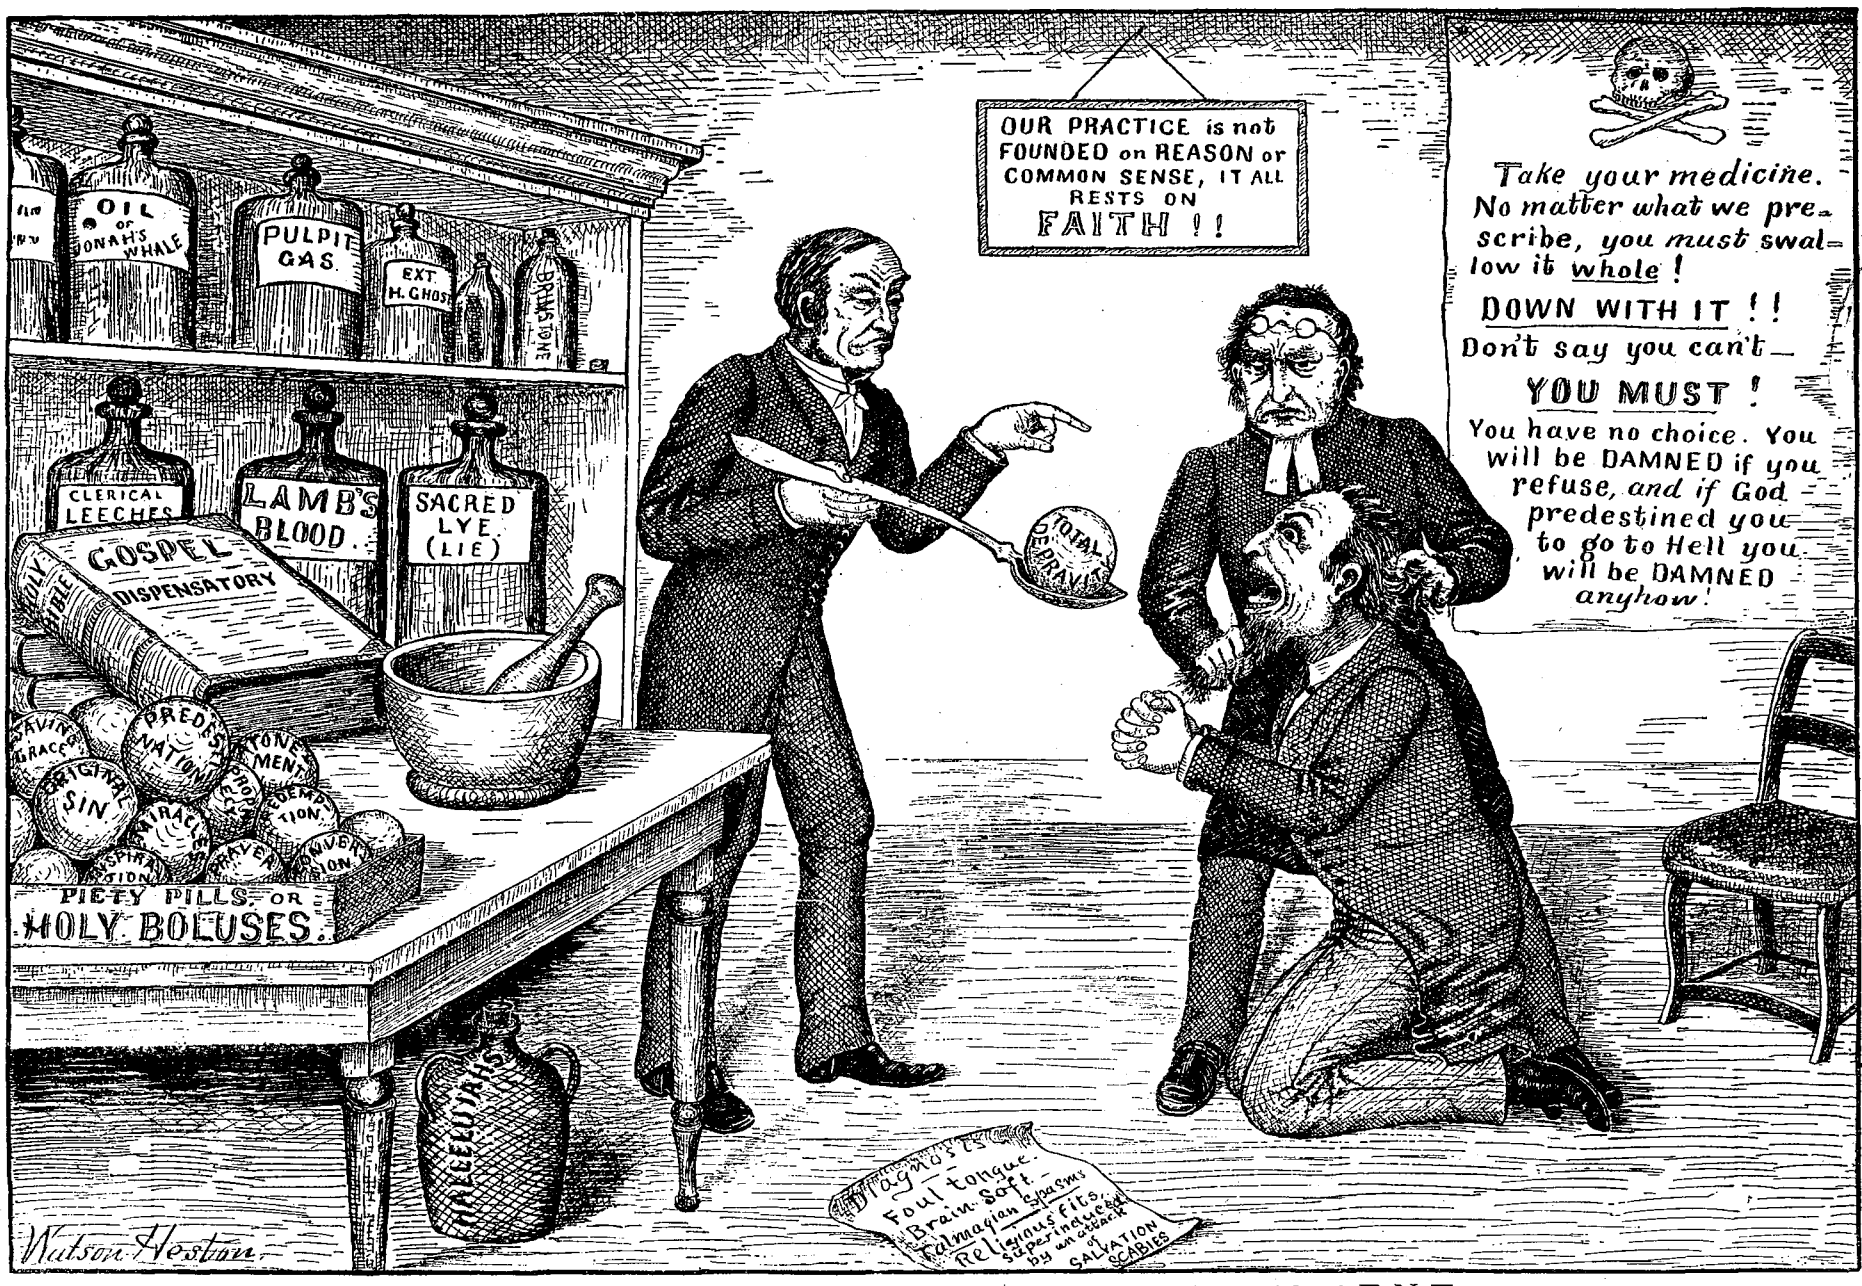
THE medieval maps placed Jerusalem in the center of the earth, ranged lands and tribes in a circle round it, walled them in with a forbidden sea, with heathen Gog and Magog on its desert rim, and a "Gate of Iron" to keep them off. What a "negation" of all this when Columbus opened America, when De Gama doubled the cape, when Marco Polo came back from far Cathay! But what "affirmations" swept them into the hope and faith of man! Such is the religious revolution of our day.—Sam. Johnson, D.D.

CHANCE.

A word unspoken, a hand unpressed,
A look unseen, or a thought unguessed,
And souls that were kindred may liv apart,
Never to meet or to know the truth,
Never to know how heart beat with heart
In the dim past days of a wasted youth.

She shall not know how his pulses leapt
When over his temples her tresses swept;
As she leaned to giv him the jasmin wreath,
She felt his breath and her face flushed red
With the passionate love that choked her breath
And saddens her life now her love is dead.



A faded woman who waits for death,
And murmurs a name beneath her breath;
A cynical man who scoffs and jeers
At woman and love in the open day,
And at nighttime kisses, with bitter tears,
A faded fragment of jasmin spray.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 13. No. 29. PUBLISHED WEEKLY. New York, Saturday, July 17, 1886. 33 CLINTON PLACE. $3.00 per year.

A MODEL FAITH-CURE ESTABLISHMENT.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Aroostook Herald thinks it would be unpleasant for that county should the United States and Canada hav trouble, the only way out of Aroostook being over a railroad which passes through the queen's dominion, and is owned there.

THE census returns for Paris hav just been issued. The population numbers 2,254,306 souls, showing the small increase of 14,378 since the last census taken five years ago, in 1881. In ten out of the twenty arrondissements the population has diminished.

EVANGELIST MUNHALL is conducting a mild revival in Denver, not without criticism. He pitched into his critics the other night. "Some people would find fault with Jesus," said he, "and some with the Angel Gabriel. I am not a perfect man by any means." "I believe it," said an old man, emphatically.

IN London recently a distinguished Baptist minister, having occasion to supply a pulpit where the new version of the scriptures was the only Bible in the pulpit, in opening the book for his text, "Lord, what wilt thou hav me to do?" discovered too late that Paul's exclamation is not contained in the revised version.

THE New York Herald has started Colonel Gilder upon an expedition with the North Pole as an objectiv point. Mr. William Griffiths is the only white man who will accompany him. His intention is to go north with the sealers and whalers as far as they go, then enlist the nativs in the work, and prosecute his journey by their aid. It will be several years before he returns.

"YES," said a New Yorker, "I had a very pleasant time over in Boston. In fact I always do. It's a cultivated city." "Anything new being discussed there in social or literary circles?" "No; nothing new. They are still agitating the questions, 'Who is to write the American novel?' and 'Who is to whip Sullivan?'"

AN amusing story about Mr. H. C. Richards and Mr. Herbert Gladstone is going the rounds. "Depend upon it, ladies and gentlemen," said Mr. Richards, at the close of a recent speech, "we should never hav heard of Mr. Herbert Gladstone had it not been for his father." And it is actually said that Mr. Richards was unable for some moments to understand why the audience roared.—Religious Paper.

CARDINAL GIBBONS and the papal nuncio attended church at Deer Park, Md., where they are sojourning, and so many people crowded upon a porch near the church to see them that the supports gave way, and the people fell to the ground. A dozen persons were more or less bruised, but no lives were lost. This latter fact was referred to as providential, but the falling of the porch was not so considered.

DON'T argue, but avoid religious controversy. At the same time be always ready to converse directly about Jesus, and his love, and his salvation, and what he is to your own soul.—The Watchman. That is, be always ready to make a nuisance and bore of yourself by talking pietistic twaddle to your acquaintances, but when one of them asks you how you know all you say, just refuse to answer, and run away. Great advice! Yet it is the only safe counsel for Christians.

"THERE is nothing in the universe more real than Jesus Christ as he was when on earth, as he is now in heaven, as he will be when he comes to raise the dead and judge the world, and as he will continue to be forever. Of him it is said, in the epistle to the Hebrews, that he is 'the same yesterday, today, and forever.' He is not a fictitious character, merely an imaginary person, born of human fancy, but a real person, with a life history, a part of which was in this world, attached to him. The term 'Christianity' is borrowed from one of his official titles."—Independent. That is the kind of "truth" readers of religious papers get. It will trouble the editor to prove his assertions.

THE Atlanta Constitution reports a ministerial preventiv against cannibals. At a meeting of preachers in Chicago recently the Rev. Mr. Ayres read a long paper, in which he argued that the coming Christian would not use tobacco. He made many strong points, and impressed his audience. Unfortunately, he said in conclusion that even cannibals had sense enough not to eat tobacconized flesh. They never devoured smokers and chewers. When this climax was reached, a smile rippled over the upturned faces of the ministers. Finally one of the brethren took the matter up. He said that he had been in doubt until he heard the story about the cannibals. If it was a man's duty in time of peace to prepare for war, it was just as much his duty to guard himself against cannibals. The exigencies of missionary work or business might at any time require a man to visit Africa or Patagonia. He would run the risk of falling in with cannibals. If the tobacco habit would save him from being eaten, it might also save his life. Perhaps the savages would not think it worth while to kill a man who was worthless as an article of food. As a matter of precaution, therefore, he thought it would be wise to stick to tobacco.

OF the recent marriage of Madam Patti and Signor Nicolini Mrs. Besant has the cruelty to write: "The English are a queer people. They make a great parade of the sanctity of marriage, and rigidly shut their doors, as a rule, against a wife who has deserted her husband for another man. However merciful they may be to the male 'sinner,' they are iron to the female. But in Madam Patti's case all is different; three thousand children sing an ode at her wedding; a rector performs the marriage ceremony; the Prince of Wales, the queens of Belgium and Roumania send congratulations; Lord and Lady Rothschild present gifts; the mayor and corporation of Brecon offer an address; a deputation representing the inhabitants of Swansea lay a valuable service of old China at her feet. All this is very nice, but from the ordinary English point of view rather startling. Madam Patti left her husband for Signor Nicolini and was consequently divorced; after they had lived together for many years they married, for no very obvious reason. If they wanted to marry at all so late in the day, it would certainly hav been in better taste to hav married quietly, instead of making such a tremendous fuss. This is, however, a matter of taste and not of public interest. But it is of public interest to know that, for the future, no divorced wife will lose her position in society; for it cannot be supposed that society will be so base as to treat, say, Mrs. Crawford any worse than it has treated Madam Patti."

The Influence of Religion and Philosophy on Morals.

BY VAN BUREN DENSLOW.

III.

Now, the difficulty with this whole economical system is that modern society knows that industry, i. e., activ, hard-working selfishness, or creating and accumulating capital by labor, is the masculin and main virtue, while the duty of giving or disbursing this capital is the scondary or feminin virtue, wholly subordinate in its utility, and which cannot even be performed until the prior duty of selfishly and industrially accumulating something to giv has first been performed. A recent traveler through Judea wrote that in passing from the one end of that country to the other he saw only one man doing anything, and he was falling off a house. This lethargy is due more to Mohammedan fatalism than to the economical errors of Christianity, but in Italy and southern Europe the feeling that to liv by religious beggary is the highest form of worship has dedicated the best women and men of that country to celibacy, and left the continuation of the race to the robbers and lazzaroni, until the demoralization and ruin are as nearly complete as this idea could prevail to make them. Now our practical western mind defies and overrides this element in Christianity by sheer force of hypocrisy. It pretends to believe that benevolence is always demanded, but it knows better. It knows that every man's first duty is to himself, and it is well it does. It is saved from economical desolation by taking refuge in a system of economical hypocrisy. Another mode in which religion compels hypocrisy is by the inherent insatiableness of its demands. Like every other passion, it will not regulate its own demands, but must be moderated by other and antagonistic forces. If you bow the head, like a Unitarian, its natural tendency is to demand that you bend your back like an Episcopalian. The crooking of one joint in the neck is not sufficient in the presence of God. When you hav bent your back it says, Get down on your knees, like a Methodist. When you hav reached your knees it says, Kiss the ground, like a Catholic. When you hav kissed the ground it says, On your belly, you vile creature, like a Mohammedan or a Persian. And long before you hav reached your belly it has made attacks on its contents by prescribing fasting. And if you consent to fast it requires that you waste the body more vigorously by scourging; and when you hav scourged there are intimations in the New Testament that "there be some who hav made eunuchs of themselvs or taken out their right eyes for the kingdom of heaven's sake."

This is a broad topographical view of the insatiableness of religion. Take a nearer-home view. A young man of good moral character marries and devotes himself to building up a happy home, with the assurance that his young wife is as pious as a woman ought to be, and will make his children a good mother. Pretty soon, when he comes home, he misses her kiss and greeting at the door; walks out of one room into another until he finds her in the closet praying for his soul's conversion and weeping because he is on the road to hell. He doesn't take a great deal of stock in hell, but he wants things comfortable and the pressure of religious persecution in his bedroom removed. So he repents, unites with the church, and for the moment supposes that his home is happy. Pretty soon he misses the kiss and greeting at the door again, walks out of one room into another, and finds his beloved in the closet praying for religious services at every meal and family prayers once a day, for the sake of the Christian appearance and the example to others, as well as for their souls' welfare. He again gently removes the iron pressure of religious despotism from his bedroom, by installing himself as a very indifferent priest, converting his residence from a home into a church, and encumbering his nervous system with a continual round of irksome ceremonies, which make prayer as commonplace as his pantaloons, put on like them for decency and respectability, instead of being like the odor of flowers, the unconscious and rare breath of the uplifted soul. Pretty soon, however, the pious husband again misses the familiar kiss at the door, and again finds the weeping wife upon her knees. Religious persecution is again in his bedroom. This time it is that all his associates who are not church-members, all who drink beer or use profane language, or attend theaters, are to be cut off or shown the door, and that he himself is neither to attend the theater, nor to read the daily papers on Sunday. Meanwhile, by this time the home has become so stagnated that the task of conversation between the pious husband and his daily inquisitor has become nearly impossible, for want of any topics which it is not sinful to talk about. Meals are eaten in pious silence, and all the grace, abandon, and freedom of home has been scared to the demnition bow-wows for fear that imaginary thing, "sin in the abstract," should enter it. At length the domestic persecution begins again. The pious lady, who perhaps performs none of these religious labors herself, wants charitable missions looked after, poor people visited, sick people prayed with, weekly religious meetings attended. By this time the worn-out husband is a walking missionary society, his business and health half ruined, his home entirely ruined, though neither knows why. Suddenly he is startled to find that besides the "rein of grace" under which they hav been living, there is also a reign of nature. Nature reasserting itself in his religious wife, causes her to despise him, because she has so easily twisted him around her finger and converted him into a femininity. So long as her insatiate disposition for religious exaction could find faults in him to remove, it had a field of operations and was happy. When the faults were all removed, lo! he had ceased to be a man! There were not elements of masculinity sufficient in him to attract a woman. By the very act of assuming all these religious and feminin functions at her solicitation he had become so like herself that the opposing masculin qualities of intellect and will, rectitude, manliness, firmness, judgment, integrity, and the like, which, had he preserved them, would hav irritated and yet fed her hungering nature—all these are gone; and he is fortunate if he does not find her, if weakly, dying of sexual starvation, not of the body but of the mind, while if she be strong and vigorous in her sensual nature she will be looking around, notwithstanding her piety, for another partner whose intellectual masculinity is still in full vigor; meanwhile, at every stage in this progress of religious exaction, his real safety consists in an escape into hypocrisy, or back through a skeptical rebellion into intellectual freedom. If he becomes a hypocrit, it is just as satisfying to the spirit of religious insatiableness as if he were sincere, and it does not involve half the wear and tear of nerve. It is the inability of human nature to stand the galling exactions which the inherent insatiableness of religion compels it to make, which causes individuals, races, and nations inevitably to repudiate its authority. God's law, in its nature, must be something that man never has obeyed or can obey, for as soon as man adopts it by legislation or conduct, it becomes man's law, and a new law of God must be set up. Nations which accept and love religion as a persuasiv adviser fall into enervation and decay if they allow it to rule them on its own terms, and are compelled to seek at last salvation in revolt, which ends in restoring religion to its subordinate position.

I do not mean, by these illustrations of the evils indirectly resulting from the too great faith in the principle of forgivness, to imply that it has no place or utility in morals. It has its place, and an exceedingly delicate and useful one it is, in the human heart. It is the great antagonist of the principle of law everywhere, whose proper functions are feminin, to soften the asperities where the law is too severely masculin. All nature is equipoised through the conflict between just such antagonistic forces, whose attitude toward each other is one of general repulsion, subject to particular instances of exceptional attraction and unity. In every human state there is above the courts the pardoning power. No laws are inexorable. In criminal jurisprudence clemency forgivs the crime. In civil, equity relieves in exceptional cases from the law, until it becomes itself so rigid in its system as to lose its distinctiv merit, and then usually legislation relieves from equity. In commerce, bankruptcy forgivs the debt, and the statutes of limitations cry "Peace" to many claims which are still morally due. Yet the defeat of justice that is wrought by this very pardoning power, by chancery from Lord Bacon to Judge Barnard, by special legislation, by bankruptcy, and, in short, by all expedients for intercepting law in human affairs, instructivly shows how dangerous and unreasonable it must be to assume that the forgivness element, or law-defeating element, is the foremost one in the divine government of the moral universe.

Nevertheless, in the home, by the fireside, among friends, while cold respect springs from obedience to rules of right, love is more often born of the grace and kindness that overlook their breach. There is as profound and subtle a philosophy in the parable of the Prodigal Son, illustrating forgivness as the source of love, as there is in the return of Regulus to Carthage, or the sacrifice of his son by Brutus, illustrating the incorruptible integrity of law. To illustrate it more familiarly:

A father closing a door, accidentally catches therein and pinches the little child's fingers. He, in the spirit of law, which is masculin, says, "Aha, you careless urchin, that will teach you better than to get your fingers in the door again!" That is very true, but it snaps a chord of affection, and burns up the two ends of the severed string with the strong fire of hatred. The mother, representing forgivness, which is feminin, says: "Your papa is very sorry, my child. He did not know your finger was there. Let me kiss it and make it well." Here are two little falsehoods and one doubtful statement, but they leave in their wake love.

This mystical word, love, is one with which the chameleon could not compare in many-coloredness. The luster of pearls and diamonds strives in vain to symbolize it. Brilliancy of plumage, and the odors and corollas of flowers, those sexual amulets borrowed by womankind from a lower life, are a few of the scattered syllables through which nature speaks inaudibly the sublime omnipotence of love.

This divine word suggests the chief of all services which religion renders to the world—one which scientific and philosophic Infidelity cannot render—for they hav in them none of this illogical, irresistible, overcoming power, unless enthusiasm in the pursuit of scientific and philosophic truth may be said to be a kind of worship. Man has a religious nature, capable of developing into a passion for a certain mystical union of the human with the divine, of the natural with the supernatural. Upon this nature philosophy operates like celibacy, denying the gratification, but not suppressing the revolt of nature. Let not the language in which this religious love may be described be deemed irreverent if it borrows sensuous imagery from the next lower and stronger passion known to human nature. The mythologies, with their loves of the gods for the daughters of men, the sacred writings, prayers, and hymns of all ages blend the language of this religious fervor, worship, or ecstasy with amorous imagery. The young Catholic maiden's imagination leads her into the life of a recluse by the dazzling imagery which makes her, as a nun, the virgin spouse of God. In the Protestant imagination the church is the bride of Christ, and Solomon's amorous song, which may not be read in public, is interpreted to be the expression of the savior's love toward this bride. The light of this divine enthusiastic passion, the feeling of perfect sanctification and unrestrained communion with God, is the believer's ideal of heaven. Whether such a belief rests on truth or hallucination is wholly irrelevant to the question of its value as a moral force. It is the inner life of all sects; it has its exultations and ecstasies, and its seasons of coldness and hypocrisy. It satisfies a passionate power and an emotional want in the human mind in a degree that often, where it obtains the mastery, subdues and supersedes the other passions, controling lust, intemperance, gaming, avarice, ambition, by the double power of an absorbed preoccupation of the mind in the admiration of what it believes to be admirable in Deity, and by the impossibility of the human mind holding two master passions at once. It produces effect on the nervous system which makes some persons dance, or fall into cataleptic trances, as Mohammed and Swedenborg did, or as Paul at his conversion. It renders others exhilarated, happy, as if with wine, so that that Paul on one occasion could only refute the charge of drunkenness by reminding his hearers that it was only 9 o'clock in the morning—the fourth hour of the day—an argument that, in Chicago, would not hav been deemed conclusiv. You are all familiar with that standard picture of the cross of rock, to which the beautiful maiden clings with both arms, amidst the waves of the ocean, which threaten to engulf her at the next breath. In a strict maritim sense, a yawl-boat, with oars wielded by a couple of rough tars, and a good ship in the offing, would be worth a dozen of it so far as that girl's safety is concerned. But it would not be so expressiv of religious ecstasy. Precisely the same passionate clinging is expressed in the beautiful hymn:

Jesus, lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly,
While the raging billows roll,
While the tempest still is high.

Other refuge hav I none,
Hangs my helpless soul on thee;
Leave, oh leave me not alone,
Still support and comfort me.

All my trust on thee is stayed,
All my help from thee I bring,
Cover my defenseless head
With the shadow of thy wing.

An inseparable set-off to the good effects of this feeling of exaltation is the spirit of religious egotism, and the tendencies toward spiritual aristocracy, exclusivness, and phariseeism to which it givs rise. Each religious sect vaunts itself to be the chosen people of God. The theory of prayer necessarily implies logically a yielding of the divine will to the human, a direction of the infinit intelligence by the finite. Many Christians said to me during the recent war for the Union, and felt all they said, "It is not the armies or the government that will decide this contest; they are but the instruments; God will decide it, and we praying Christians alone move the arm of God."

An elderly Christian lady visiting in the house of one of my philosophic friends begged leave to introduce family worship, to which he consented, provided she would do the praying. When the "services" were ended she asked him if he did not feel that it was an inspiring act, and if they did not all feel happier for it. "Yes," said he, "I always feel a sense of human inflation in the presence of one who I know is able to guide the counsels of the Almighty in even the smallest particular, and still more in the company of one who can so easily and gracefully dispose as you hav done this morning of at least six political issues, and two great national wars. But as for myself, if I should assume to direct the divine government of the world by prayer in the smallest regard, I should tremble with terror lest my foolish counsels might hav some effect."

I now proceed to state the reasons why religion, however open to criticism its moral influence may be, in some points, is still and must continue to be the main moral force in the world, the function of science and philosophy continuing to be that of critics and fault-finders, necessary of course as critics, but not practically efficient as moral workers, while religion —the cowled monk, the hooded priest, the mitred bishop, the fat, sleek, chess-playing curate, the shoulder-hitting Spurgeon and Moody, with their praying bands, and above all the superstitious and bigoted, but faithful, praying women, will, of necessity, do the great part of the world's moral work, i e., of the work of holding the world's conscience up to certain standards of right, and holding its conduct up to its conscience. Such a result might be assumed from the fact that philosophy, in its all-comprehending generalities, can only come to the conclusion that whatever is is right, and science utterly refuses to discuss or frame moral standards, and so ignores the questions of right and wrong altogether; in this dilemma comes religion, with the fine, egotistical frenzy that whatever is is wrong, that depravity pervades alike the pictures of Raphael, the form of woman, and the corallas of the lily, and that it is its mission to set all this right.

Religion is a necessary force in civilization, but it never includes all truth nor all duty. It needs the antagonism of a vigorous scientific and philosophic Infidelity, not only to prevent it from running civilization down into ecclesiastical bondage and barbarism, as illustrated by the great religious crimes, wars, and persecutions of which I hav said little to-night, because they hav all made their due impressions on your minds already, but religion needs to be antagonized by a powerful philosophic Infidelity in order to express, by the joint operation of the two opposing forces, the whole truth and the whole duty of man.

Let us first consider the necessity of religion as a social force, and then the like necessity of irreligion, with the advantages and disadvantages, the rewards and penalties, of each.

Religion is necessary as the cohesiv, binding force in society—irreligion as the emancipating, disintegrating force. The whole truth, including both, is symbolized by the granit rock which underlies all other strata, and from which all others are formed by the action of the elements. Granit has two ingredients, the feldspar or adhesiv element, which, decomposing, forms the slates, shales, and clay—one-half the basis of every fertil soil; the quartz, or disintegrating element, which, decomposing, is formed into the sandstones, and finally into sand, the other half of the basis of all fertil soils. Clay symbolizes adhesion, religion; the shifting sands symbolize liberty, Freethought, Infidelity. Either an excess of the adhesivness or an excess of liberty produces barrenness, in the physical soil as in the moral, while both in due combination result, at once, in the fertility of the valley that blooms with fragrance, and in the grandeur and durability of the icy peaks that lift up their heads among the stars, and control the courses of the winds and the rains in a manner as essential to fertility, though it seems so desolate, as the sod of the valley itself. Religion, I say, is the adhesiv power, the only one capable of insuring unity among men in the promotion of moral and spiritual ideas (which are the first steps toward intellectual and philosophical ideas). To this end religion unites minds into sects, between whose members unity is produced, while reason or philosophy never produces anything but discord. Religion says to the crowd, "Hear ye the Lord." Philosophy says, "Hear me." In the later stages of development, for a man to profess to teach another in the name of God excites the feeling that it is impudent. But in the infancy of the human mind, a man feels that any attempt by another to teach him anything, of his own superior wisdom, is impudent, while the pretense that it is in the name of God allays his vanity, subdues his pugnacity, and makes him ready to listen. Religion supplies motivs, to wit, the desire to feel assured and at rest concerning things we don't understand, concerning the mysterious forces of the universe, to appease the gods, to win their favor, to secure rewards, and avert punishments, which sway every mind except the philosophical. Its means also tend toward unity. It avoids inquiry and disputation, and all wrangling such as divides philosophical clubs. All its congregations meet together at the sound of the same bell, kneel together, view together the same ceremonies, blend their voices together in the same harmonies of song and praise, unite their hearts and lives in the same petitions, listen without expressed dissent, but in the same respectful silence, to the same doctrins, and thus unity is promoted by the same physical drill as in an army, accompanied by the same mental drill as in the school-room.

Auguste Comte's effort to introduce united worship into his philosophy as a means to secure mental unity was illogical, for in philosophy not unity, but diversity, is wanted. When unity walks in, philosophy must walk out. The more logically the church is based on supernatural assumptions alone, like the Catholic, the greater its capacity of accomplishing numerical unity, i. e., of uniting vast masses into one sect, and thus the greater the force and power it can giv to what may happen to be its ideas, and this is the reason why supernatural assumptions are the only basis on which sects can be formed: a natural or scientific idea depending on material evidence is soon either demonstrated by further observation or refuted by experiment, and either its demonstration or its refutation ends all interest in it. Hence for organizing purposes scientific ideas, because demonstrable, are temporary, while supernatural ideas, because undemonstrable, are eternal or relativly so. Catholicism believes in an inspired church, one of whose works is an inspired book. Protestantism, less logically, holds that an invisible and uninspired church produced a visible and inspired book. Catholicism says of the scriptures, "We wrote them." Protestantism, "They wrote us." Protestantism says, "Hear what the men of old said when men were inspired." Catholicism says, "Except the church of to-day be also inspired, it cannot comprehend what these men of old taught. If it is inspired, then hear directly what the church says." Being thus completely furnished in its religious assumptions, its aggregation of numerical force and its power to promote a moral idea are proportionately great. Its kingdom numbers 140-000,000 of subjects, while the divided forces of Protestantism are only 120,000,000. At times it has placed its foot upon the neck of kings, but it was a golden day for Rome when it said to Henry the Eighth, "Your marriage is indissoluble—keep your wife. You are a king, but marriage must bind you as it does a peasant." Contrast this with the act of the foremost Protestant preacher in America in marrying the dying body of Richardson to a woman whose husband was still living, and toward whom her love, as attested by her letters, had recently been warm and tender, thus voluntarily enrolling her as the wife of two husbands, of whom the second had robbed the first of his wife, while the first had robbed the second of his life. The Protestant church has no attitude whatever concerning the perpetuity or Roman theory of marriage, and well perhaps it may not, since it cannot be made effectiv without sanctioning the power to restore the wife to the unwilling couch of a husband whom she hates, and this modern civilization declines to do. It is in accordance with the inferior spirit of our age, therefore, that the church lacks al ke the ecclesiastical power to depose a preacher that is eloquent or to censure a member that is rich. Of course, the liberty to serve God according to the dictates of our own conscience, uncurbed by the moral power of any organization, carries with it inseparably the liberty to serve ourselvs according to the dictates of our own lusts, and to stand by each other with our church organizations in this service. And this in turn resolves a church into an ecclesiastical pleasure club for sustaining oratory, and which feels no particular solicitude about saving anything from hell unless it may be the pew rents and the minister's salary. The reformers could not set the congregations free from pope and bishop in faith without also freeing them in morals. Freethought, if it is to hav a moral code, must base it on expediency and sense of interest alone. It is the consciousness of this fact that now constitutes the chief intrenchment of Protestantism against an utter abandonment of all authority.

(TO BE CONCLUDED.)

Could Jesus Christ Write?—II.

But aside from the foregoing fabricated testimony to the fact of any writing by Jesus, the presumption is that he must hav been able to write. It will not, therefore, be amiss to adduce further apocryphal evidence, such as it is, that he was not illiterate.

In "Pseudo-Matthew" we read that the boy Jesus was sent to a schoolmaster in Galilee named Zaccheus; but the pupil was insolent and undertook to teach his teacher. Having no father after the flesh, he said he was above and before the law, and that he knew how long the schoolmaster's life on earth would be. The people who heard him say these things were astonished, but he said to them: "I will tell you greater things. I hav seen Abraham whom you call your father, and hav spoken with him." After this none of them dared to say anything more.

Again Jesus, at the instance of Zaccheus, was handed over to Master Levi to be taught. Levi asked him to repeat the first letter, Aleph, but the boy was silent. Then Levi struck him on the head with his birch. Jesus broke silence, and after rebuking his master, began to show him his own superior knowledge in this style: "Let the master of the law tell us what the first letter is, or why it has many triangles, gradate, subacute, mediate, obduced, produced, erect, prostrate, curvistrate." Levi was dumbfounded at such precocity, and, like Balaam, became at once a seer, crying out that Jesus must hav been born before the deluge, and he "ought to be hung on the great cross."

A third time Jesus was sent to school. The master, as before, struck him because he was insolent, and instantly fell down dead. Joseph was afraid the boy would get killed for some of these acts, but Mary assured him that God would preserve her child.

A fourth time he was sent to school. Compulsory education seemed to be the law of the elders. Jesus took the book out of the master's hand and read it. The master fell prostrate in humble adoration. Here ended the schooling of the son of God.

The "Gospel of Thomas" repeats three of the schoolmaster stories with some variations. Zaccheus called off to his pupil all the letters of the alphabet from Alpha to Omega. (So it seems that the Jewish schoolmasters in Galilee taught Greek to primary pupils.) Jesus looked up at Zaccheus and said: "Thou who art ignorant of the nature of the Alpha, how canst thou teach others the Beta? Thou hypocrit! First, if thou knowest, teach the A, and then we shall believe thee about the B." Then he began to question the teacher about the first letter, and he was not able to answer. And in the hearing of many the child said:

> Hear, O teacher, the order of the first letter, and notice how it has lines and a middle stroke crossing those which thou seest common; (lines) brought together; the highest part supporting them, and again bringing them under one head, with three points (of intersection); of the same kind; principal and subordinate; of equal length. Thou hast the lines of the A.

The first letter of the Phœnician alphabet seems best to answer to this description.

Zaccheus could do nothing with such a precocious pupil. "Take him away, brother Joseph," said he, "that child does not belong to earth; assuredly he was born before the creation of the world; he is either God or angel." Jesus laughed aloud and said, "Now let thy learning bring forth fruit and let the blind in heart see. I am here from above that I may curse them, and call them to the things that are above, as he that sent me on your account hath commanded me."

At the second schooling (the third according to Pseudo-Matthew) the teacher wrote out the Greek alphabet for him. Jesus returned a similar answer to that made to Zaccheus. The teacher struck him on the head for his insolence. The child cursed him and immediately the teacher fell into a swoon. That ended the second schooling.

Again, another master with full knowledge of the result in the last case persuaded Joseph to send the boy to his school. The child came in boldly but pleasantly, and taking up a book "he did not read the letters that were in it, but opening his mouth he spoke by the holy spirit and taught the law to those that were standing round." The pedagog said it was no use trying to teach such a prodigy, and for that flattering acknowledgment Jesus kindly cured the other master who was suffering the penalty of his rude treatment of the divine pupil. Pseudo-Matthew tells us that the teacher "fell down dead." Thomas says it was only "a swoon."

The "Arabic Gospel of the Infancy" describes the attendance of Jesus at the feast in Jerusalem when he was twelve years old, where the boy confounded the doctors in this wise:

> He put various questions upon the sciences, and gave answers in his turn. For he said to them: "Whose son is the Messiah?" They answered him, "The son of David." "Wherefore, then," said he, "does he in the spirit call him his lord, when he says, 'The Lord said to my Lord, sit at my right hand that I may put thine enemies under thy footsteps?'" Again, the chief of the teachers said to him: "Hast thou read the books?" "Both the books," said the Lord Jesus, "and the things contained in the books." And he explained the books and the law, and the precepts, and the statutes, and the mysteries which are contained in the books of the prophets—things which the understanding of no creature attains to.
>
> And a philosopher who was there present, a skilful astronomer, asked the Lord Jesus whether he had studied astronomy, and the Lord Jesus answered him, and explained the numbers of the spheres and of the heavenly bodies, their natures and operations, their opposition, their aspect, triangular, square, and sextil, their course, direct and retrograde, the twenty-fourths, the sixtieths of twenty-fourths, and other things beyond the reach of human reason.
>
> There was also among those philosophers one very skilled in treating of natural science, and he asked the Lord Jesus whether he had studied medicin, and he, in reply, explained to him physics and metaphysics, hyperphysics, the powers likewise and humors of the body, and the effects of the same; also the number of members and bones, of veins, arteries, and nerves, also the effect of heat and dryness, of cold and moisture, and what these giv rise to; what was the operation of the soul upon the body, and its perceptions and powers; what was the operation of the faculty of speech, of anger, of desire; lastly, their conjunction and disjunction, and other things beyond the reach of any created intellect.

The learned Jesuit Hardouin says that the manuscript of this Gospel of the Infancy was found in a cave near Grenada in 1599. It was written in Arabic on leaden plates. These plates were examined at Rome in 1667, and condemned as fabrications.

The "History of Joseph the Carpenter," purporting to be an address made by Jesus to his disciples on the Mount of Olives, reported by the Apostles, and preserved in the library at Jerusalem, givs particulars of the death of Joseph at the age of 111, after having lived with Mary twenty-one years. The citizens of Galilee anointed the body of Joseph, and at the funeral Jesus repeated a prayer which, says he, "I made with my own hand before I was carried in the womb of the Virgin Mary." But this testimony, implying an antenatal ability to write, must be ruled out as irrelevant.

We come now to a different kind of evidence, transmitted to us in Hebrew by the enemies of Jesus Christ. In the "Book of the Generation of Jesus" ("Sepher Toldoth Jeshu"), the mother of the illegitimate child sends him to a teacher named Elchanan, with whom he makes great progress in learning. By and by the bright young man offends the rabbis of the Sanhedrin, and they publish him as a bastard and an outlaw. With a sad heart, he flees to Galilee, but after many years he returns, and, stealthily entering the sacred Temple, he copies on a piece of parchment the Shem Hamphoras, or Inexpressible name of God, and carries it away with him, concealed in an opening cut in his flesh. With this sacred charm he is able to work miracles, and his brief career as a magician is described by the author of the odious book, which, Voltaire says, was referred to by Celsus in the second century and refuted by Origen. All that we know about Celsus is found in the writings of Origen against him. There was at that time some story about Jesus similar to the "Toldoth Jeshu," of which we now hav at least three versions, to wit: one brought to light near the close of the thirteenth century, another in 1681, and another in 1705, and there appear to be others not yet translated from the Hebrew. All these describe Jesus as a man of learning, who practiced magic, and was stoned and hanged as a disturber of the peace long before Pontius Pilate was procurator in Judea. Many passages in the Talmud also refer to the same Jesus, and speak of him as a learned man, who suffered death under the Jewish laws before the Romans obtained control in Judea.

We therefore conclude that the real Jesus, who was stoned and hanged about 75 B.C., must hav been able to write.

ANTICHRIST.

Freedom Gone to the Dogs.

Make the humiliating record, July 4, 1886, as the day of liberty's doom—the day of American dependence—for on this *in*glorious Fourth we are informed that three men are to be sentenced to the penitentiary in Milwaukee for merely unlawful assemblage and violence of speech. If violent speech is a punishable offense, nearly every priest and preacher should be immediately incarcerated. Do they not consign two-thirds of humanity to endless torment? Think of it; these Anarchists of the pulpit are not satisfied to invoke their helpless almighty's curse on Infidels, but howl for their eternal punishment. The ordinary dynamite Anarchist is an angel of mercy alongside the average minister. The difference is that the minister does not believe what he says, while the dynamiter is generally in dead earnest.

That true manhood is oozing rapidly out of this republic, the leading editorial, on our nation's natal day, in the dastardly Daily News, of which the following are specimen sentences, fully proves:

A PURITAN REVIVAL NEEDED.

Fourth of July orators and Fourth of July writers of a certain stripe are having much to say—apropos of Anarchy and the anniversary—concerning the freedom of speech. "It seems to us that all men should be free to say what they please," ventures one; and another thinks that the right of every man to preach what he chooses without question should be "as sacred now as it was in 1776." The letter of the Constitution is invoked by these people with the same superstitious veneration and credulity that makes faith in relics and revelations possible, and there is a general mushiness and sentimentality manifested which clearly betoken softness in the upper story. And this is none the less mental imbecility because largely born of a desire to conciliate a voting element.

What is needed just now in this country is a renaissance of Puritanism and of so-called Puritan intolerance. We need to recall that the men who made possible this one hundred and tenth anniversary of American independence, of general freedom based upon a contribution from the individual freedom of each, knew that liberty was not to be intrusted to the hands of feeble-minded and unreasoning persons. We need to become as intolerant as the Puritans themselvs were of what they believed to be dangerous nonsense, which, if left free, would destroy the last hope of civil and religious freedom. "The Puritans had no notion of tolerating mischief. They looked upon their little commonwealth as upon their own private estate and homestead, as they had a right to do, and would no more allow the devil's religion of unreason to be preached therein than we should permit a prize-fight in our garden. They were narrow; in other words they had an edge to them, as men that serve in great emergencies must; for a Gordian knot is settled sooner with a sword than a beetle."

Is this the American idea of freedom?

The big fools and the little fools combined from Saturday afternoon to Tuesday morning to make life as unendurable as possible. The incessant din did not cease even on the blessed Sabbath, and there must hav been a very slim attendance at Victor F. Lawson's Sunday-school class, for the Evening News again bewails that this is a land which has some freedom left. That little must be curtailed. It says:

This country is in need of some of that good, old-fashioned spirit which causes men to respect the opinions, the rights, the customs, and the sentiments of others. Optimists may discover in the license which now obtains regarding the religious observance of Sunday a germ of revolution in public feeling which will develop before another decade shall hav passed. By the year 1897, when next the Fourth of July falls upon Sunday, there may exist a more reverent regard for sacred things. A nation whose patriotism can be expressed only in vexatious poppings, and whose minor laws are distorted to permit the annoyance of the graver-minded citizens by irresponsible youth; whose politicians sneer at religious rites; whose municipal governments are perverted by ambitious men to their own uses, and whose primary reason for being is abused until the once-revered idea of personal liberty becomes the suicidal and detestable habit of license, is in a condition that demands attention.

Well, the News, with the rest of the contemptible press of Chicago, is in high glee over the selection of Highwood as a military post The clubs of this city, composed chiefly of stock-gamblers, pledged the government $300,000 to establish a United States military station near Chicago. The bill went through to appoint a commission, and they hav selected and paid $175,000 for the ground. Now, in connection with their brave police, they hope to be sustained by bayonets of the military arm. Truly a "thief does fear each bush an officer," and these fellows are evidently ill at ease with their ill-gotten gains.

In reference to the Anarchist cases, the entire press of the city has worked itself into a frenzy of furious vituperation and malicious misrepresentation. Why? Because if these parties, after being tried by a packed jury of attaches of the capitalistic class—no workingman is allowed on by the state—are acquitted, they hav the clearest cases of criminal libel ever brought into court. The papers are trying to save themselvs by hounding to the gallows men they know to be innocent. Some of the chief staff contributors of our daily papers hav received orders not to allow a word in their favor to appear, but to put in everything they possibly can manufacture against them or their friends.

"What does it profit a nation if it piles wealth to the clouds, but becomes false to the trusts committed to it?" was the ominous query Fred Douglass flung at the high-toned flunkies who banqueted him in Boston lately. Is there any justification for this severe reflection? Let us see: The five deputy sheriffs who were guilty of unprovoked murder of innocent women and men while guarding Jay Gould's "sacred" private property at East St. Louis were tried, discharged, and are scot-free. Had the Milwaukee Anarchists committed a cold-blooded murder in the interest of monopoly, instead of that graver crime of "unlawful assembly"—unlawful because in the interest of labor—they would now be at liberty.

Your correspondent wrote the Tribune July 1st as follows, but the communication failed to appear:

Editor Tribune: Your issue of the 29th ult. contains the synopsis of an article on "Revolutions and Revolutionists," from the pen of Dr. Lombroso, recently published in the Nouvelle Revue, to which you approvingly refer as "a curiously interesting paper." The doctor attempts to scientifically demonstrate that the antecedents of revolutionists and Anarchists are invariably of a criminal character or they are hereditary lunatics. The doctor is good enough to furnish the following startling illustrations in France and Germany in support of his theory:

Thus Jourdan, in the time of the first French Revolution, who from a butcher's boy became a general, cut the throat of his former employer, Launey; personally directed the pillage, the burnings, and the assassinations committed by his troops; caused the killing of seventy-three officials at Avignon; and continued his career of crime until he was himself condemned to death by the Revolutionary tribunal. Then there were Hejeune, of the same epoch, the inventor of a guillotin, which he first tried on fowls; and Jean d'Heron, of Nantes, who wore a human ear on his hat like a cockade, and carried others in his pocket, which he made the women kiss. Quite recently in Austria robbery and assassination hav been used to spread the doctrins of the Anarchists. Stellmacher and Kammerar killed the banker Lysart and several of his family to get possession of a few hundred florins. In Germany, Hoedel, who had thirteen years previously been put under surveillance for theft, and having no ostensible occupation, attempted to take the life of the emperor. Reinsdorf, who planned the Niederwald attack on the imperial family of Germany, was subject to criminal monomania and had been found guilty of assault on a woman. In Paris, during the troubles in 1833, out of thirty-three persons arrested it was found that thirteen had already been condemned for theft. Alcohol is also an important factor in revolutions. The excesses of the Paris Commune were largely due to the excessiv use of stimulants by those who had been nearly starved during the siege. It is not surprising to be told by this scientific inquirer that insanity goes hand in hand with revolutions. The events of 1871 in France sent 1,700 insane patients to the hospitals during a period of eighteen months, and among the leaders of the Commune there were four hereditary lunatics and four others who had been previously under treatment for that disease. Certainly of these ebullitions of the political caldron it may be truly said, "That way madness lies!"

I thank the Tribune for this opportune article, but if it really desires this theory to be of value to its readers it should giv us a few American illustrations, that would be a special boon and also hav a salutary effect on the Fourth of July—putting a quietus on a trinity of evils, revolutionists, Anarchists, and the deadly Fourth of July firecrackers. The Tribune should inform us whether we shall classify Washington with lunatics, murderers, or thieves; whether Ben. Franklin really cut the throat of his former employer, or was a candidate for a straitjacket, or if Thomas Paine, who first wrote "the United States of America," ever chewed off his grandmother's left ear.

E. A. STEVENS.

MRS. LILLIE DEVEREAUX BLAKE will lecture at Dansville, N. Y., July 16th, 17th, and 18th; at Salamanca, 20th and 21st; at Warsaw, 22d and 23d; at Le Roy, 24th, 25th, and 26th, and at Batavia, 27th. Engagements for lectures after August 20th may be made by letter addressed to Mrs. Blake at the above points.

E. C. WALKER lectured June 18th at Elkton, Dakota, and July 4th at Smith's Mill, Minnesota. He will remain a few weeks longer in the North, and is ready for engagements there until September 1st. Address him at headquarters, Valley Falls, Kansas.

The Tent in Wayne Co., New York.

After the discussion at Williamson and the judicious circulation of quite a number of copies of THE TRUTH SEEKER, thus insuring the permanency and continued progress of the good work, I proceeded to Palmyra under the auspices of that genial scholar Dr. H. M. North, and pitched the tent on the circus grounds Friday, June 25th. The holiday season is not propitious for our work. Then the intense heat during the day and chilling cold damp of the evenings prevented ladies being regular in their attendance. It was really at risk of health to attend. Our best attendance was on Sundays; yet, despite all discouraging influences, very much of good was accomplished. Those weak ones liberally inclined hav stiffened their vertebræ; many are investigating, enjoying the novel and delicious sensation of beginning to think for themselvs.

It was amusing to witness the genuin surprise of some when they found, instead of dynamite, fire, murder, and robbery, Secularism taught justice, love, the enjoyment of a real heaven here and now to be won by acts of love, virtue, and gentleness.

I am much indebted to Dr. North and his amiable son and daughter for hospitality and kindness.

In leaving Wayne Co., I desire to express my appreciation of the zeal, courage, and self-sacrifice of Dr. A. Austin, of Williamson, acknowledged to be the most skilful surgeon in the county. He spared neither time nor pains to arouse interest, not alone in Williamson, but in all adjacent villages. Everything possible was done by his accomplished wife and himself to make the sojourn of my wife, daughter, and self pleasant, profitable, and effectiv.

MONTEZUMA, N. Y.—I am now quartered at Montezuma. The Tent is pitched on the public green, thanks to the exertions of Supervisor Ross. This place will ever be one of interest on account of the bitter opposition encountered here by John Remsburg and myself on our first visit, and the furor of excitement caused immediately after the lectures by the death of Mr. and Mrs. Ross's little child, the Christians declaring the death of the child was the direct vengeance of Jesus, on account of its parents bringing the Infidel lecturers to the place. At that time Messrs. Ross and Travis and their wives were the only Liberals here, but, thanks to their most exemplary lives and patient energy, the sentiment of the community has greatly changed. On my first visit I met little but fierce denunciation, frowns, threats, and gnashing of teeth. Now I am most courteously addressed, and faces are wreathed in smiles, with exception of a few very ignorant, uncultured persons, and even in those there are signs of evoluting into, at least, a modicum of common sense and decency. I rejoice at the glorious evidence of what can be effected for right and truth against blind prejudice and dense ignorance by gentleness, perseverance in presenting the truth, and good example. I hope my friend and coworker, John Remsburg, may be able to visit this place and witness something of the glad harvest of the good seed he so heroically and, at the time, hopelessly planted. We had a most interested and attentiv audience last evening (July 8th) at our first lecture in the Tent, and a very large outside gathering—those who dare not enter because of life-long deference to Mrs. Grundy and poor old Mother Church—two decrepit dames who still continue to hold the rod over the timid and less intelligent. But they could all hear just as well, and so no loss was entailed. Mrs. Reynolds will be here on Saturday evening, and lecture in the Tent Sunday evenings, the 11th and 18th. I leave here on the 19th. The Tent will be pitched at Boonton, N. J., where all communications should be addressed until August 3d. Thanks to C. P. Hosmer, of Belle Plaine, Iowa, for bundle of TRUTH SEEKERS and other papers.

C. B. REYNOLDS.

We hav received the following amounts for Mr. Reynolds:

Wm. Wilcox	$1.00
John D. Powers	4.00

Socialism.

While the municipal officers of New York are endeavoring to send Socialists to state prison, and the press is denouncing them as enemies of civilization, the legislature, without knowing it, has passed a straight Socialistic bill affecting one of the worst of the many monopolies that take advantage of the needs of human beings.

A few years ago gas companies charged whatever they pleased per thousand feet for gas. A few years later the legislature passed a bill compelling them to furnish gas for $1.75 per thousand feet. The last legislature reduced the legal price to $1.25.

The gas companies are private corporations, maintained by private capital. And while the interference of the state is a good thing, and should be extended to other abusiv monopolies, it sounds a little odd to hear the philosophical Socialists denounced by the men who hav adopted their principles. The men who voted for the bill reducing the price of gas were state Socialists in fact, though too obtuse, doubtless, to see or admit it.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

Vice-Presidents:

CHARLES WATTS, HORACE SEAVER,
JOHN E. REMSBURG, WILLIAM ALGIE,
THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, ROBERT C. ADAMS,
MATTIE P. KREKEL, TITUS L. BROWN,
JAMES PARTON, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York.
COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com.
E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

The Campaign Fund.

Previously acknowledged	$2,573.12
Vogel & Bukler, Bozeman, Montana	1.00
J. V. Bogert, " "	1.00
S. W. Cook, " "	1.00
Thomas Burke, " "	2.00
J. M. Lindley, " "	1.00
Thomas Garlick, " "	1.00
C. P. Blakely, " "	1.00
Rev. Spein, " "	50
Geo. Nichols, " "	50
N. Story, " "	1.00
Jas. Gourley, " "	1.00
Eley & Elias, " "	1.00
Wm. Nevitt, " "	1.00
L. A. Luce, " "	1.00
John Besser " "	1.00
Thos. Moger, " "	50
Judge Hartman, " "	50
Geo. Barnaby, " "	50
Thos. Warren, " "	50
Mr. Logan, " "	50
Others, per collection " "	24.50
John Mahara	1.00
Frank James, (charter for auxiliary Union)	5.00
W. T. Eastman. " " " " "	5.00
John D. Powers	8.00
Total	$2,634.12

PLEDGES PAID.—W. H. Pepper, $25.

News and Notes.

I had the pleasure while in Butte of witnessing Miln's impersonation of Hamlet, as well as Richelieu and Othello, and he givs one of the finest and best-acted interpretations of that character I hav seen. It was noble, scholarly, animated, and subtle in its delineations of that "wave of the sea" which some critics rightly call the intellectual Dane. Hamlet is so like human life, so like the struggles of universal humanity, that this drama, in its philosophy, wit, pathos, and passion, has become the greatest of the world. It seems to touch all joy and all hope. It is the picture of fate and free will wrought with all the colors that the marvelous genius of the poet can create. In Hamlet we read our own destiny, the conflict that ends only with death. Shakspere and nature are one. They giv no perfect heaven—there is none. The path of progress is the path of suffering and disappointment. The reward, after all, is not in what we reach, but in the effort to attain. So the pilgrim thanks Shakspere and his skilful interpreter for enabling him, by the power of imagination, to take the ills of life as comfortably as he takes the good. The poetry of Shakspere is the philosophy of Secularism, and the profoundest religion that the human heart can hav.

With this glimpse of the wondrous and magical world of Shakspere, which makes all fate glorious, I keep on my way. The country between Butte and Helena is beautiful indeed, with the broad plains, the bright rivers, and the mountains spread along the horizon like mighty jewels. I seem to pass through somewhat familiar landscapes, and at times I might imagin I was traveling amid the rugged portions of New Hampshire, the rocks, the hills, the trees, and the green grass and running brooks are so like. Helena came shining on my vision in the midst of a vast amphitheater, whose stupendous walls are freighted with incalculable wealth. There is gold enough in these mountains, which form the backbone of the continent, for the uses of all the world. I suppose there is enough of the precious metal in every brick building in Helena to make a good bank account for an ordinary man. You cannot take up a handful of dust in the street without discerning the glittering particles. It is reported that this is the land of Ophir, where Solomon found his riches. He couldn't hav missed it if he prospected here. He could hav built a thousand temples from the jewels of this wonderful land.

Only twelve miles away from Helena rolls the Missouri, and I almost had a home feeling to know that this river, flowing so far to the eastward, was plunging through the "gate of the mountains" whose towering peaks girt the extensiv plains. The headwaters of the Missouri, however, are a hundred miles to the east of this point, and its stream flows to the west of Helena, debouches to the north, and then, with an immense sweep, pours its broad waters to the Mississippi.

Helena is one of the most splendid cities of the West, more elegant in appearance than any I hav before seen. Its edifices are large, substantial, and permanent, looking as if Helena had come to stay. Most of the cities of the West hav a come-and-go-look, as if they didn't expect to remain a great while on this planet, and one would not be very much surprised to wake up any morning and find the whole outfit gone. Helena looks much like a New England city a hundred years old, or like a piece of New York. Its principal street has very much the appearance of Broadway, and, watching the throng and the dashing styles, I could almost imagin myself in Gotham. Over across the way I see painted in brilliant gold "The Ideal Billiard Room." That beats New York and even Boston. The "Hub of the Universe," although it has almost everything the human mind can dream of, from Plato down, has not an "Ideal Billiard Room." I wonder what it is. I suppose they hav metaphysical cues and immaterial billiard balls, and of course they hav spiritual drinks, but they don't make one intoxicated, only philosophically resigned. Well, Helena is a bright city; indeed, I can't turn my eyes but I see the gold and the silver quartz. Everybody is making money, either to-day or to-morrow. There is more wealth to the square inch in Helena than in any other city. It comes nearer to the New Jerusalem and having streets of gold than any place I know of. I am afraid that if I stay I shall get rich myself, and that would be such a surprise that I dare not trust myself to so startling an experience, and so I must not remain too long in this delightful capital of Montana.

Of course, where there are money and money-making there is good sense, and where there is good sense there are Liberals; and there are plenty of Liberals in Helena. I had a very good audience last evening, Sunday, at the Rink, and I expect to lecture here again on my return, and I hav no doubt of a packed house.

Mr. A. C. Votaw is one of the most earnest Liberals here—one who is used to fortune's frowns, but who needs no religion to make him a friend of humanity and a tireless worker.

Mr. Ed. Busick, of Beaver Creek, came forty miles to hear my lecture, and I was right glad to see so splendid a Liberal. Labor is sweet when we hav such loyal soldiers for liberty, who are as generous as they are brave.

Mr. S. C. Gilpatrick, one of the first settlers of the country, and a prominent citizen and officer in the territory, I found to be a genial comrade and ardent Freethinker. Mrs. S. C. Gilpatrick is daughter of that gray chieftain of freedom, James Furgus, who is one of the biggest-hearted and grandest Liberals in the Western country. He has always been a pioneer, and has helped to create civilization in Illinois, Kansas, Minnesota, and Montana, and if he were not eighty years of age I hav no doubt he would post off to Alaska and develop the resources of the North Pole. Furgus Falls, Minnesota, are named after him, as is also one of the counties of Montana by act of the legislature, of which he has been many times a member. He has been in every station a bold and uncompromising advocate of Freethought, as the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know who read in its columns his racy speech in the Montana legislature against the employment of a chaplain. He offered to make the prayers himself for nothing if the members needed any, and thus save the treasury four dollars per day—and I hav no doubt his prayers would hav produced some effect, if not upon God, at least upon humanity, while the average petitions of the clergymen affect neither one nor the other. Unfortunately, Montana, although young and spry and of great promis, has got the ecclesiastical bit in its mouth, and it has to trot the religious gait, even like Puritan Massachusetts. In its new constitution it has an acknowledgment of God. Mr. Furgus fought almost singlehanded against this dangerous interpolation, but unsuccessfully. Intelligent men at the bidding of the church stultified themselvs by voting for this political degradation. Religious tyranny is not at an end when a young territory, supposed to represent the vigor of the nineteenth century, in its organic law commits itself to a declaration of barbaric faith. Montana will enter the Union with the mark of intellectual slavery on her brow. It is a burning disgrace. A few more like Furgus and this "damnable iteration" would never hav been, and Montana would hav been a free and independent state indeed.

I also met the Hon. Granville Stuart. He is one of the livest men in the territory. He believes in one world at a time, but he makes that world hum. He is chain-lightning itself.

Mr. Chas. H. Jeffries, one of the leading merchants of Helena, is another whole-souled Liberal, and his hospitality made my visit delightful indeed.

Iver Wollfe, one of the sturdy miners of the country, whose vigor compels the golden smiles of fortune, is another whose generosity and pleasant comradeship I shall not soon forget.

Mr. John Steinmitz, Mr. M. Manuel, Mr. Lewis Davis, Mr. Kranich, Professor Yeager and wife, Colonel Keeler, and others, will make Helena for many a day to come a bright spot to the Secular pilgrim who has something to say for this world.

I had also the pleasure of meeting Mr. E. C. Eyl, of Jefferson City, Montana, a genial gentleman, and, to his credit be it said, a subscriber of THE TRUTH SEEKER. I always feel at home with such a man. I know he has something to talk about, and understands what is going on in the world at large. He makes a good traveling companion, for he has ideas. After my lectures in Montana I shall be in Utah until July 25th. I shall lecture in Denver August 8th and 15th, and in neighboring places during the week days. I shall be in Seward, Neb., August 21st, 22d, and 23d; at Valley Falls, Kan., August 24th, 25th, 26th, and 27th; at Lincoln, Neb., August 29th; at Omaha, September 5th; at Ottumwa, Ia., September 12th; at Chebanse, Ill., September 19th; and at Chicago, September 26th, where I expect to wind up my seven months' campaign in the lecture field amid genial friends such as E. A. Stevens, whose "Chicago Secular Notes" giv increased brilliancy to the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Helena, Montana, June 29, 1886.

P.S.—I think I shall record a vow never to write "occidental" again, for the printer always gets it "accidental." There may be an ax-ident indeed, for when I read that I was heartily in favor of capital punishment. Would I had a "spell" that could reach two thousand five hundred miles, and giv a gentle hint to the printer's devil. I would whisper "sheol" in his ear, and he must thank his stars that I quote the "New Version." S. P. P.

Couldn't Stand It.

At the St. John's Fourth of July celebration a St. John's minister of the gospel opened the exercises by reading a prayer, and the orator of the day, in his speech, advocated the separation of church and state, and held that the Bible in school is of a doubtful policy. At the close of his most eloquent speech I asked for the privilege of making a few remarks, and, most cordially, was given a chance, and by the president nicely introduced to the audience. I said:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: If the speaker who has addressed you has ever done me an injustice, I want to forgiv him now, and I now extend to him the right hand of good-fellowship, and thank him for his courage, goodness, and wisdom in introducing the subject, and advocating the separation of church and state. I believe in the taxation of church property [an almost universal nod of assent from the audience]. There is to-day $750,000,000 of untaxed church property in the United States, and the sheriffs often hav to sell the property of the poor at a sheriff's sale to collect the tax which they are unable to pay.

And after giving my views about the Bible in schools, I gave a lecture about Thomas Paine, and told how much we were indebted to him for the liberty which we enjoy. And so far as I could see or learn there was but one out of the many who got up and left whilst I was talking, and that one was the good man who read the prayer! We are told that it's ill-mannered to get up and leave whilst a minister is talking, and here was a minister who did not hesitate to get right up and leave during my remarks. But why, oh, why did he leave? Was it because he couldn't stand the truths which I was giving to the audience? Or didn't he like to hear me speak kindly of Thomas Paine, the "Author-Hero" of the Revolution, who first aroused our forefathers to declare their independence?

Was he thinking of his church, that don't pay any tax, while just across the road there is Mrs. Hoyt, a poor widow, who would hav been sold out by the sheriff for the taxes which she was unable to pay—but a few of us chipped in and helped the widow out of her trouble by paying the tax for her? or was he thinking that I might shock the whole audience by saying that Trinity, an Episcopal church, has possession of ten million dollars of property on which it is said no taxes are paid? And it is said this church has a host of old tenement houses rented to the poor, but if these are so poor as to be unable to pay they are turned into the street. O cruel, cruel church; if there is a hell, I am afraid some of you will hav to smell fire.

But it may be, after all, that the parson left whilst I was talking because he was sick.

Now I want to say that, of the thousands and tens of thousands of Liberals in Michigan, I believe I am the first and only one who has had the courage to speak a kind word for Thomas Paine at a Fourth of July celebration. And the best of all, the large audience were not offended, but were pleased with my attempt to do justice to the one to whom we are indebted as much or more than any one for the liberty and happiness which we now enjoy. I tried to deliver my speech fairly and kindly and am well pleased that all but the good man who read somebody's prayer were satisfied, and after having closed I felt that my attempt to be just to Thomas Paine upon such an occasion was the most noble act of my life; and after having finished, had Gabriel blown his horn, I felt that I could say, "I'm ready." M. BABCOCK.

Complaisant Mr. Lord.

When John Lord, the historian, was examined for ordination, he was asked by a disciple of Dr. Emmons: "Are you willing to be damned for the glory of God?" His answer was, "No; but I am willing you should." That is the case in a nutshell. Who ever saw a good Christian who expected or was willing to be damned? But who ever saw one who did not expect and was not willing that his wicked neighbor should be damned to all eternity?

Communications.

Political Parties vs. the Workingmen.

I want to suggest a few practical propositions to the men who work for wages in this country. Notwithstanding the errors that have been made by some useless and unreasonable strikes, the might of organized labor has alarmed the capitalists, who have had to call upon the law, which, backed by money and influence, has been interpreted in defense of employer against employee.

With a large number of men constantly idle, and who are ready to take any chance to earn a dollar, it is impossible for a large number of strikes to be successful. Other means must be inaugurated to secure our rights.

Nothing is so grand as the majesty of the law, nothing so invulnerable. Obedience to it is a part of good citizenship, and rightly so. Mark how solicitous the capitalist is about the law. See his purse-strings unloosed to influence legislation. But you take little notice of this law-making business, and not until it conflicts with what you regard as a right do you know of the existence of such a law. The law that oppresses you could not have been enacted had your votes not elected the men who made it. It thus appears you vote against yourself. Precisely so, and that is just what the laboring classes have done from time immemorial. There are two parties, the Democratic and the Republican. The issues between them are very gauzy, very thin; in fact, the main issue with both of them is, how to humbug you—and they certainly have done it effectually.

I will endeavor to show you how both these political parties, each professing unbounded friendship and solicitude for your welfare, deliberately rob you each one personally. Gould, Vanderbilt, or some other railroad magnate wants to add ten or fifteen millions to his fortune. The legislature is almost openly bribed to pass an act granting authority for the issuance of say thirty millions additional stock. If you are at Albany, you will be liable to overhear the price stated that each lawmaker is to receive. The law is passed (majestic law!), the stock is issued, sold at fifty or sixty cents on the dollar; Gould & Co. pocket the proceeds. And now, just here is where the workers pay for the whole business. To pay the increased dividends the salaries of employees are reduced, the rates to the public are advanced; and Gould & Co. are very smart men, and the people certainly deserve the name of fools for allowing it to be possible for such wholesale robbery to take place. In Congress it is done in the same way, varying only in details and magnitude. Corporate powers are increased by Republicans and Democrats alike. A perusal of the daily prints will verify this assertion. Now, the point I desire to make is that God never meant that the tired laborer, after years of unavailing toil, should die in the poor-house and his children people the state prison. God never meant it to be so, but it is so.

Crime is in most part the indirect offspring of injustice. The children of the poor receive but little education, being forced to work at the very age when knowledge is most easily received and better appreciated. By comparison with youths more fortunate in parentage, they revolt from labor and become criminals. Had their father's earnings been sufficient to have kept them at school and given them a fair education, their destiny would not have been forbiddingly dark and their lives a curse to themselves and to their relatives. How shall we remedy this? How save coming generations from the same fearful doom? The remedy lies in the ballot-box. What we need is a new party, its cohesive power riveted by self-interest of every member of it. As it is now, a favored few reap the benefits of party success, the rank and file modestly retiring and allowing the leaders to become immensely wealthy and consequently very influential. Look in at a presidential reception, a sort of self-congratulatory affair, the pomp and show of a few fortunate ones who by hook or crook have risen to temporary eminence. How beaming the smiles, how cordial the hand-shaking, how hearty the appetite! It is not to be expected that they shall forget themselvs and honestly exert their influence for the interest of the majority of their countrymen. Oh, no; that is an idle delusion, oft repeated on the stump but never practiced by the experienced office-holder. Do you not see what a wonderful man your senator or Congressman is? He is the object of interest, not you, his constituents. He poses as a statesman at your expense and sells you out first, last, and all the time. What a sarcastic misnomer is the phrase, "the people's servants!" Do servants dress better than their masters? Do they strut and swell out with self-conscious importance? Do they make laws against the interests of their masters? As a matter of fact, they are the people's masters. For the sake of your manhood, for your wives' and children's sake, turn your backs upon such arrant humbugs. Why do you elect rich men to office? Why not nominate a good man from your own set? Is it the personal appearance, the intense respectability, the pompous carriage, the flow of words, the spread-eagle patriotism, the old stale gags of stump speakers, that makes you walk up like lamb to the slaughter, handing the executioner the knife with which to slay you? Let me tell you that all these qualities, that seem to allure you to your ruin, are but the veriest sham, and are not skin-deep. Stand up like men; be not bought by money, rum, nor promises, to vote for any man. Look these politicians who trade in your life-blood square in the face, and tell them that you have been duped long enough. Remember the remedy is in your own hands; the Constitution gives it to you—you can vote away into merited oblivion these tricksters and traders in your credulity, and supplant them with men from among your own order who will not sell themselves to the money-kings. Political combination must take place ere a fair day's work will receive a fair day's pay. Throw overboard the heelers and boodle-men; let them work the primaries no longer. Let it become impossible for a man to buy an office of any kind. Be moderate in action; shun the Anarchist as you would any bloody demon. Boycotting should not be resorted to but from the meanest and most despicable act of an employer, and after all other means have failed. But you can rest assured, so long as you lay no hands on the person or property of the boycotted individual, and do not in any way disturb the public peace, that your action is entirely legal and cannot be taken from you by any judge or jury in this country. They may convict and send to prison, but such trials and convictions will be reversed on appeal. The Constitution gives to every citizen of this country the right of free action, and if one man or ten thousand men conclude that they will not purchase from nor deal with a certain individual, they have a constitutional right to refrain from so doing, the revised code notwithstanding. Our laws, state, municipal, or town, must not conflict with the Constitution of the United States, but are subject thereto.

The widest possible latitude in the interpretation of criminal conspiracy can include only attacks on the person or bona fide property at the time possessed by said person. It cannot include prospective benefits or profits that may be injured by concerted withdrawal of custom done quietly and without breach of the peace, and which every American citizen has a proper and legal right to do if it so pleases him. It is a dangerous and impolitic act to ignore this constitutional right. Courts and juries are very often in error, and but a few days ago the Court of Appeals unanimously set aside the conviction of a man who had been one year a prisoner at Sing Sing, both on the evidence and the law of the case, consequently he was set free after a year's illegal imprisonment. I merely mention this to show the fallibility of courts and "intelligent and conscientious juries."

"We hold it to be self-evident," says the Declaration of Independence, "that all men are created equal." Let this fundamental truth never be forgotten—"we are created equal." From the hand of your maker you are the equal of any man who breathes, and it is only the development by education and training that makes the social inequalities.

The looking up to men who have attained eminence and regarding them as oracles of wisdom to be gazed on and listened to with fear and trembling, is the curse now, as it always has been, of the men who do the work. Hero-worship is debasing to the masses—it exalts one man at the expense of the whole people. It shifts the burden of thought, of independent action (which is necessary to individual advancement) off from the shoulders of millions onto those of idols who assume the trust and lead them on as sheep are led. And where do they lead you? From the furthest recorded time they have invariably led you directly into the camp of your enemy, the money king. Why do you not revolt? Why do you not do a little thinking on your own account?

It is useless to appeal to the sympathy or the sense of justice of those who hold you in tighter bonds than the sons of Africa were ever held. The metal of their hearts is harder than their coin. The feeble cry of the ministry against the extortions of your masters is drowned in the shout that goes up for sinners to be saved. Would it not be far better to remove the cause of sin, or at least lessen it, namely, poverty, by denouncing the cruel means that the rich and powerful resort to to gratify their avarice? Dare the ministers who preach to rich congregations tell them that a God of justice will bring them to an account for their rapacity and extortions? Dare he announce that all men are brothers, sons of one God, and that God demands of them to love and assist one another, not to lie in wait to entrap and cripple one another? If there is one manly minister who dare stand up and tell them that their great prototype, the gentle and loving Jesus, disowns, despises, and condemns them, let this minister do it now. There never was a better time to tell this incontrovertible truth. But this will not be done to any measurable extent. What then remains as the alternative? Organize for political cohesion. You remember that two years ago Jay Gould gave $50,000 to the Republican campaign fund. You see in this act alone how closely are interwoven the interests of the monopolist with politics. He gave it to insure the passage of laws or immunity from interference in his schemes of monopoly, the success of which tightens faster the iron grip in which he holds a large number of you. Are you a Democrat? Has the recent national success of your party benefited you personally? Are you a Republican? Many Republicans became enormously wealthy during and just after the war. Are you one of them? No? Then what particular benefit has accrued to you by voting the Republican ticket so many years? "Ah," you may say, "it is a matter of principle with me, and a man must not expect a benefit for voting like a good citizen, as his conscience dictates." Very true; he may not expect a benefit, but should he receive an injury?—and an injury he does receive every time he throws away his vote on men who care no more about him than they do for a summer insect. But some one must be benefited by political parties. Suppose we ask Mr. Gould. Mr. Gould, what are you—a Democrat or a Republican? In answer I will quote his own words: "Well, when the working majority is Democratic, I am a Democrat; but when it is Republican, I am a Republican." Mr. Gould has a very acute appreciation of the value of things, and gets down to it in very short order. Now he tells us right here that not only are both parties purchasable, but that their platforms and principles are of no consequence—mere trademarks, as it were, to distinguish the goods—and that he can work one as well as the other; and he does it right along. How he must inwardly chuckle at sight of the heat and anger, the criminations and recriminations, of election times; the enthusiastic parades, the shouts of opposing factions! And I can imagin him, like Iago in the play, skulking behind a Western Union pillar and whispering softly to himself, "Now if the Democrats kill the Republicans, or the Republicans kill the Democrats, or each do kill the other, either way makes my gain!"

Brother workers, there can be reared a party that will do us all material good. It can be organized quietly, orderly, legally, and no power on earth can stop its ultimate triumph if you will it so. Break away from all prejudice for either of the existing parties. That prejudice is but a sentiment, and was implanted in you by platform promises that have never been fulfilled and were never meant to be.

The builders of a country should rule it. The drones have fattened on you long enough. Shake them off. Enough of trickery, fraud, and deception. Set up business for yourselves. No packed conventions, secret conclaves, nor cut and dried primaries, but in the open light of day nominate your men and vote for them. A party that might be denominated "national" need have no intrigues, no underground road to nominations or preferment.

Think for yourselves. The same qualities which you admire in others lie dormant in yourselves. Rather let the whole people, actuated by a common impulse for the general good, rise in the majesty of their greatness than that you should sink to earth crawling before an idol which is human at best, and more than likely inferior to many of you. We want to work together, consult together as a council of physicians might consult over a patient dangerously ill, not to parade our learning, not to invite attention to ourselves, but to suggest the best means for the remedying of our present evils. The organization of a complete political unity of the workers of this country needs but a starting-point, and quick as the morning light it will spread and dispel the darkness and gloom of our present serf-like condition. Can we make a start? Let me conjure you to give this matter careful consideration. We outnumber the "better classes" ten to one. There are men among you capable of administering any elective office to which they might be elected. It is the law-making power which we must control. If every leader of the workingmen in the various cities and towns of this country would make it his aim to impress upon his fellow-members the importance of instant action in this regard, the work would certainly go on to a successful termination. It is our only hope, and it is in easy reach of fulfilment. The dower of a free people is said to be self-government. We have but a spurious article of that kind at present, but we can supply the genuine article if we so will it. And let us will it, one and all.

WILLIAM ALLEN SMITH.

THE Nashville Christian Advocate says: "The 'Church Congress,' recently held in Cleveland, did about what it did last year—that is, gave each of a number of clever men opportunity to invite the others to mount his own particular hobby and gallop on to the millennium."

THE New Hampshire Journal says: "And now we are told that a minister had to leave his pulpit because he used a 'plum-colored handkerchief,' and another for 'rolling up his pants' in wet weather. This is almost as bad as a church we know of which was compelled to reject, at the earnest request of the ladies of the church, a candidate of excellent preaching talent, and universally acceptable to the church on that account, because he had bow legs.

Anarchy Has Been Misrepresented.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I should think your regard for your friend Gorsuch might suggest some check on the malicious misrepresentation in your columns such as is found in "The Coming Danger," of June 26th. Of course, such of your habitual readers as hav noted the statements allowed to Mr. James, Mr. Lloyd, and myself, will not confound the Anarchist principle as taught in Liberty with the crudities of the Chicago Communists, and you hav allowed me to show, in answer to Mr. Gorsuch, that Anarchy and Communism are, as systems of life, incompatible. But since that time a series of articles in the Chicago Alarm hav gone explicitly into the administrativ details of their notion about curbing individual greed and sharing the booty if successful. Which shows not only that they hav method in their madness, and intend government, but that though absurd in reasoning and abusing the term Anarchist, they are not such hypocrits as some who vilify them. Their break-neck course has certainly required some grit, and courage does not yoke in the same gear as hypocrisy. I hav no right to speak for men of whom I know only that they are Communists and prisoners, or fugitivs. D. D. Lum, sympathetic and intelligent, can more appropriately speak of them. Now a word of psychologic appreciation: Without explicitly declaring Atheism, J. L. Andrew declares the ethical principles of right and wrong unconnected with God's existence, presence, or absence. He takes for granted that Anarchists are Atheists, a second point about which I am as ignorant as the first; then he goes on to say that "the logical tendency of Anarchy is to destroy all ethical distinctions and to reduce all morality to a mere figment."

Well, perhaps morality is a mere figment. I find it infinitly variable in times and places; I regard it as a synonym of custom, and neither more nor less substantial than fashion. But the ethical sense or conscience, however elastic or latitudinarian, is personal and by no means identical with morality, the morality of a given social phase, but may be quite opposed to it—e. g., a sincere Swedenborgian among the Mormons, or a sincere Mormon among believers in the eternity of an exclusiv conjugal partnership. But does Anarchism as a philosophy or faith weaken ethical distinctions? It has been mine for a good many years, and my ethical conscience is very acute. My experience says emphatically, No. And I am an Anarchist for the same reason that I am an Atheist, to wit: Because neither in the moral conduct of any government known to me, nor in that of the passional world, human or animal, am I able to discern the hand of a power more benevolent or more just than my own, and I am not Christ-one enough to consider myself as "one with the father."

J. L. Andrew seems to think that the ethical sense is a product of government, since he repudiates it equally as an afflux from deity and as an evolution of personal spontaneity. But I, who hav a stern conscience of rectitude unamenable to interest, know that, whether it is an afflux from some higher order of being or not, I am certainly not indebted to government for it. Neither does it side like Mr. Andrew with "these relations of capital and labor, of employer and laborer," etc., which he says, "hav been contemporaneous with civilization." They are very different now from what they were, as I remember, fifty years ago; still more so from what they were before machinery came into use, but always more or less iniquitous unless with personal coöperation. Having always been opposed to the economic system of hireling labor and speculativ profits as well as to political government with its class privileges, I must hav got my ethical sense somewhere. But wherever I got it, it is because I hav it that I am an Anarchist and advocate of personal rights independent of majority vote or what passes for such. That morality is a product of government, I admit, and that accounts for the prevalent rascality.

Edgeworth.

Hang Everybody!

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In your issue of June 26th, in your discussion of the right of free speech, you advance the doctrin that Most, Spies, Fielden, Parsons, and others of like character and tendencies hav at all times a perfect right to advocate any doctrin which may seem to them right, so long as those doctrins are not carried into effect. According to your ideas, the advocacy of wholesale murder would not be a punishable offense, until those who had become imbued with these pernicious doctrins had actually carried them into effect! You say that "the tendency of a speech must be judged by its results."

The tendency of Parsons's, Spies's, and Fielden's speeches on the 4th of May last, at Haymarket Square, was to incite riot and bloodshed, and there is no question that such speeches as were there delivered were instrumental in inducing those who were listening to commit a breach of the peace, with what terrible results your readers are aware.

Self-preservation is the first law of nature. He who would attempt to deprive me of life could not complain if I should destroy his.

The notice of intention to take mine should not be allowed to be followed to a conclusion, but should at once put him where it would be impossible for him to do so. The fault of our government has always been too great leniency, and if the scum of Europe are allowed to come to our shores and advocate their damnable doctrins, it will never see its second century of existence.

I am a respecter of the rights of all men under our Constitution and laws. I believe that crime not only consists of committing a wrong act, but in inducing others to do so. I consider such men as Parsons, Spies, Most, Fielden, and men of intelligence wrongfully directed are more deserving of punishment than their ignorant dupes. The Constitution of the United States (13th, 14th, and 15th amendments included) is a safe instrument to follow, and it defines the crime of treason as "levying war against it and giving aid and comfort to its enemies." Vallandingham was not caught murdering Union soldiers, but he was inciting others to do so, and was tried and convicted, and I only regret that he had not been shot for so doing, to deter others from a like offense.

We hav closed our ears to the foul mouthings of these fiends long enough, and it is about time we cried Halt.

I hav but little sympathy for the Chicago police who suffered so terribly on the 4th of May. While supposed to be conservators of the peace, they for over two years past allowed these scoundrels to openly make their threats of pillage and arson without protest, and if they were the greatest sufferers by their neglect of duty, they hav themselvs to blame. I see, Mr. Editor, that you in same edition publish the call for funds to defend these murderers, and express a fear that they won't hav a chance to prove their irresponsibility for their own teachings. I attended their Sunday meetings at the Lake Front in Chicago for more than two years, and I heard enough from the leaders to convict them before any intelligent jury in the country. I on more than one occasion combated their treasonable doctrins, and Mr. Parsons openly told me that when the time came they would commence by hanging me to a lamp-post. I am opposed, therefore, to waiting to be killed before taking steps to protect myself, but would put each and every one guilty of uttering seditious language behind prison walls, where their chances of doing wrong would be reduced to a minimum. About a dozen years ago a man by the name of Freeman killed his own child. The tendency to do so was incited by reading in the Bible the story of Abraham offering his son Isaac as a sacrifice for sin. At the moment the knife was about to descend, the story goes, God stayed Abraham's hand and saved his son's life. Freeman had just as much cause to expect divine interposition as had Abraham, but the God which he worshiped stayed not his hand, and he became a murderer. Now, Mr. Editor, who was to blame? The Bible. Its tendency and teachings led Freeman to commit a crime. I would condemn this book for its fallacious doctrins. The good in it will liv; but its false teachings should be destroyed.

Let these men who hav for years openly incited others to riot and bloodshed not shrink like cowards from the consequences of their acts, but show that they are willing to take their chances with their misguided followers. I hope to see them get the full measure of punishment the law will admit of as a warning to others, and that the honor and glory of our country will be upheld. L. Tenney.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

Giv Us Liberty.

I am an individualistic Anarchist, not a Communistic one, and I hav very little sympathy with Most, Spies, Parsons, et al., in so far as their methods and precepts are concerned. But when these men are gagged and their pens broken by the strong hands of a tyrannical government, then their cause becomes my cause, and I protest for them as I would protest for myself. In them liberty is smitten, and every free man should spring to the rescue. When men are jealous not only for the freedom of the free-born and anxious not only for the emancipation of the slave, but jealous of the liberty of tyrants and desirous of the emancipation of slave-drivers also, then we shall know something of what liberty means. Let us face this question squarely. We call ourselvs Freethinkers and say we believe in free speech and free press, but do we? In the majority of cases, No. We as Infidels hold certain ideas about theology, and free speech and press mean to us permission to promulgate these views. The average Infidel means only this, and if you tell him that true free speech includes the right to preach murder, arson, and obscenity, he will shrink aghast. But let us consider. What is liberty? Turn to J. S. Mill: "The only freedom which deserves the name is that of pursuing our own good in our own way, so long as we do not attempt to deprive others of theirs or impede their efforts to obtain it. Each is the proper guardian of his own health, whether bodily, or mental and spiritual. Mankind are greater gainers by suffering each other to liv as seems good to themselvs, than by compelling each to liv as seems good to the rest." This, then, is equal or social liberty in its broad sense, and that branch of it which we are now considering is liberty of thought, "from which," Mill furthermore declares, "it is impossible to separate the cognate liberty of speaking and of writing." According to this definition, then, we hav a right to think, speak, publish, or do anything not necessarily injurious to others. The question turns, therefore, on what is necessarily injurious. A little investigation here makes it apparent that no thought, expressed either by spoken or published word, can necessarily injure or, at least, such necessary injury being impossible to prove, the whole matter is thrown without the pale of legitimate judicial action. To tempt, to persuade, is not necessarily to compel. I am not obliged to fire houses because an incendiary urges me to arson, nor to drink whisky because the rumseller trolls a drinking song in my ear. I am not forced to murder because asked to kill, nor to rob because invited to steal. Whosoever is tempted is tempted more from within than without. If there were no demand, the supply would be ignored. Or if you claim that persuasion is compulsion, then you must allow the criminal who acts because of such persuasion to go scot-free, for he was forced against his will.

Let the tempter tempt, the fanatic shriek, and the incendiary rave; the strong, the virtuous, the intelligent, are not deceived; and the only way to make men strong, virtuous, and intelligent is to giv them liberty, that their faculties may be exercised and purified by actual conflict with seductiv errors. To "protect" mental virtue is to shrivel it into a rudiment. The so-called "pure" girl, who has learned nothing of sex, is the libertin's easiest prey; and the ignorant classes, who are protected by police clubs from hearing incendiary theories publicly discussed, will be poisoned through and through by those theories secretly imbibed.

How, then, shall we combat the errors of licentious speech? By the truths of free speech. In a fair field liberty will overcome license and tyranny, kindness will overcome malice, justice will prevail against greed, purity will cleanse obscenity; or else truth is weaker than falsehood; or else liberty, kindness, justice, purity, are not true, nor fit to survive.

What, would you let a man use obscene language in the presence of ladies, curse you in the public streets, call you a liar to your face, or libel you in the public prints? Most certainly. Can an obscene word injure the soul of a pure woman because her ear givs it unwilling audience? Would not her scorn and contempt, as openly indicated (by word or action) as his filth, wither him with an agony of self-abhorrence? Let a man damn me, if he must, by all the gods in his Pantheon. What of it? They are but shades, and his curses but wind. If he defames me, and his accusation is true, he certainly should not be silenced; if false, I need only to prove that falseness to protect myself and perhaps dishonor him. Let men foam, rant, rave, tempt, conspire, curse, blackguard, or defame; their words are simply vicious, not criminal, or, if criminal, the freely-spoken truth, exposing their danger, is the ample and only just defense against them.

Brother Anarchists, let us hear from you on this matter! We are the defenders of liberty.

Let us, therefore, as free men, stand freely united to defend free thought, free speech, free press, free mails, all of which are now crippled and smitten down by the tyranny of our laws and government.

J. Wm. Lloyd.

Mr. Dana Downed.

We sympathize sufficiently with the writer of the following letter, which the Sun did dare to print, to giv it a conspicuous place in our columns. Among all the daily papers of this city the Sun is by far the ablest, and it is a matter of public concern that it givs so much aid and comfort to the worst enemy of the republic—the Roman Catholic church:

A reader of the Sun for twenty years, I am profoundly disgusted with its late constant truckling to the foreign element and the papal temporal power. A soldier myself in the late war, my ancestors fought at Lundy's Lane, at Trenton, and Cowpens, and at Fort Duquesne, but I stand less chance of getting a political favor than any foreigner landed within five years. I am ready for a nativ American party, and believe it is coming.

Always a Democrat, I am disgusted to see Secretary Whitney place a United States revenue cutter at the disposal of the papal ablegates, and the president sending his marine band to serenade the cardinal prince of the states of the church, thus acknowledging the temporal power of the pope.

I am equally disgusted to see the Sun falsely eulogizing Catholic priests at the expense of Protestants, when our streets are filled with Catholic rum holes, our public institutions with Catholic paupers, our prisons with Catholic criminals, our docks on Sundays with Catholic Sunday-school children, and our street corners with drunken Catholic church-members, and when the Sun can find any week from twenty to forty sleek priests summering at Saratoga hotels. Yet you toady to the Catholic vote and abuse Protestants—you toady to home rule for Ireland and dare not advocate home rule for America.

In a word, the Sun would not dare to print and comment on this for a thousand dollars a line.

A True Son of Amerioa.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - - JULY 17, 1886.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

Chicago Liberals Terrorized.

The Chicago papers must be edited by a set of ignoramuses or knaves. Ever since the so-called Anarchists hav been in jail the journals of that city hav made persistent efforts to connect them with the Freethought movement, saying that the Liberal League of Chicago was the hotbed of Anarchy, that the members were equally guilty with the bomb-thrower, that they are freelovers, and coupling them with the Oneida Communists. Especially do the papers bear down upon the fact that Fielden was once a member of the League. In describing the scene in the court-room at the trial of the Anarchists the papers almost daily hav had something like this to say:

"Mrs. Parsons was accompanied by Mrs. Holmes, who is devoted to the principles of freelove, and in days gone by was Mrs. Swank, and entertained a motley crowd known as the Liberal League by playing a wheezy organ and trying to sing alleged original songs in anything but a musical tone. It is a noticeable thing that a number of the persons who turned to preaching Anarchy were at one time the ardent pupils of that erratic school known as the Liberal League."

Then, to vary the program, an editorial like this from the Times would bias public opinion:

"It is reported that a person of the name of Stevens (a name indicating that its owner is not an importation from the Danube, the Vistula, or the Rhine) has been giving comfort and consolation to Socialist savages, and particularly to the Ethiopian coparcener of the wretch Parsons, by telling them that 'the manner in which the press and the pulpit hav treated the matter [of the Socialist war against society] is subversiv of the right of free speech and opposed to the institutions of free government.'

"The statement that the said Stevens was lately a functionary of an association of religious (or irreligious) cranks called the Liberal League adds no weight to his opinion. Judge Mallory, of Milwaukee, instructed the grand jury in his court that 'men who, by incendiary speeches and wild harangs, cause breaches of the peace, must be held to a strict accountability. The law of this country does not protect any such freedom of speech.' Judge Rogers, of Chicago, instructed the grand jury in his court to the same effect. Judge Cooley, in his great work on 'Constitutional Limitations,' a standard authority, holds the same view, and cites copiously from a great number of judicial decisions that completely uphold the proposition that there is no liberty of speech or of the press in this country or in England (whence we hav derived all the liberty of speech that our fundamental law says shall not be impaired) to incite what is contrary to law or destructiv to the public peace and tranquility.

"There are not a few religious (or irreligious) cranks in this country whose notions of 'the institutions of free government' are doubtless as loose as those of any sympathizer with the Socialist savagery. The Mormons and the curious collection of 'freelovers' in Oneida county, New York, are perhaps as 'liberal' in their notions respecting the 'institutions of free government' as any member of the Chicago society of religious (or irreligious) cranks that carries the name of 'Liberal League.'

"Unfortunately the world swarms with cranks. If there were no cranks, no fanatics, no fools, and no scoundrels, there would be no Socialist propaganda of barbarism, and no sympathizers with their hellish work."

By these means the Chicago journals are endeavoring to force the conviction of the indicted men. Should any of them escape, the editors know that libel suits would follow, and they are determined that there shall be no chance for that. We are informed by one who knows that nearly every reference to the prisoners is a malicious lie. Had not the few Anarchists who once belonged to the Liberal League withdrawn from that organization because it had no sympathy with their wild ideas and still wilder talk, the papers would hav goaded the authorities to searching the houses of the known Freethinkers of the city, and no doubt some of them would hav been arrested for possessing Socialistic literature. In fact, several people hav been arrested who are neither Socialists nor Anarchists. The Socialists, who are not Anarchists, hav been forbidden to meet, and Chicago, owing to the villainous conduct of the press, is under a complete reign of terror. The attacks upon the Liberals hav nearly broken up the League, and the president, L. H. Sawyer, has resigned. The other members are afraid to avow their principles by attending League meetings, and outside speakers can by no means be induced to appear on the League platform.

All this is the work of the daily press, aided by the pulpit, and infamous work it is. So far as the League is concerned, there is no foundation for the attacks. Fielden, it is true, was once a member of the League, and he and a few attendants upon the meetings endeavored to make the League an anti-state instead of an anti-church organization, but his failure was ignominious and he was either expelled or withdrew. The most prominent gentleman opposing him was E. A. Stevens. But, although their open enemy, Mr. Stevens does not desire the prisoners persecuted, and he does not wish the constitutional guarantees of free speech to be broken down because of the recent doings of the Anarchists. Even the worst of criminals deserve fair play in their trials, and this the Anarchists are not getting. Therefore Mr. Stevens protests, and it is to his credit that he does.

The decisions quoted by the Times are of no account. "Judges" are nearly always wrong. They look behind, not forward. They quote the mistakes of our ancestors, and never see that our posterity will laugh at them. They go to a graveyard for their authority, turning their backs upon the rising sun. Judges hav a reputation for wisdom, but in the majority of cases it is only stupidity. With sensible people a judge's opinion has a little less weight than that of almost anybody else.

There is no question that the pulpit and the press hav treated this matter wrongly. They hav asked for the summary suppression of all social views contrary to those generally accepted, and Mr. Stevens is right in saying that their harangs are subversiv of the right of free speech, and opposed to the institutions of free government. The bomb-thrower of Chicago should be punished. If anyone incited or urged or commanded him to do it, then that person should be punished as an accessory to the crime. But the police are dragging into the courts every Socialist they can trump up a charge against, depending upon public clamor to convict. The press is denouncing everyone whom the police drag in, and connecting them all with the Infidels, that the glory of God may more abound. In this dirty work they, of course, hav the aid of the little pulpit-pounders of the city. It is nothing to either the pulpit or the press that the Anarchists are not members of the League; it is nothing to them that Mormonism is a Biblical institution; it is nothing to them that the Oneida freelovers are Christians. Anarchists, Mormons, and Oneida Communists are unpopular, and comparing the Infidels to them will damage Freethought in the estimation of the unthinking and the unread. That is the object of the Chicago press just now, and always has been everywhere the object of the pulpit. The vulture and the jackal hav gone into partnership, and nothing between heaven and earth escapes the grip of the firm.

We hope that the Liberals of Chicago will presently find sufficient courage to resume their work regardless of the screams and howls of the unsavory copartnership. The press will shortly get sober, and the ministers are scarcely worth noticing. When the pulpit ceases its abuse of Freethinkers it will be time for the latter to catechise themselvs to find out what is wrong. As for the press, it voices what it thinks is public opinion, and when the public cools down the papers will soon find room to retract their slurs upon the League. Freethinkers must stand for freedom and fair play regardless of misjudgment or slander.

The Town of Liberal, Mo.

Liberal, Mo., is evidently undergoing some kind of "purification," though the methods used to cleanse the town are of doubtful morality. Just what the trouble is none of the parties thereto explain clearly. As nearly as we can get at the facts, from the evidence hereinafter given, and from our knowledge of the place, obtained from people who hav lived there, the matter seems to be that among the inhabitants of the town there are a handful who hold broad doctrins on the subject of love and marriage, and who are vociferous in airing their opinions in season and out. This expression does not suit Mr. Walser, who founded the town and owns most of the land around it, and he is endeavoring to persuade the sexual reformers to leave. In this he has the powerful oratorical aid of C. W. Stewart. Among those who hav most deeply incurred Mr. Walser's enmity are H. P. and Georgia Replogle, formerly editors of the Liberal, and now publishers of a little journal called Equity; J. K. Moore, editor of the last page of Equity, and Henry Youmans. On Sunday evening, June 27th, a meeting was held at the Liberal Opera House, C. W. Stewart occupying the platform. The report of the proceedings is given by Mr. Walser in the Liberal of July 1st, as follows, under the heading, "Freelove Got a Black Eye:"

"The Opera House on last Sunday evening was literally crowded to listen to the lecture of C. W. Stewart on the subject of morality. Space will not allow us to giv the lecture; we can but giv the results. Every word that fell from the speaker's lips were as broad as chips from a brawny workman.

"The speaker haudled that social evil called freelove without gloves. He divested the hydra monster of its gaudy vestment, ripped open its rotten carcass, and exposed its foul hideousness in all its forms to public gaze that it might be seen as it really was.

"This lecture seemed to be called on the account of the frequent attempts of would-be reformers to subordinate the people of Liberal to polyandry, pimpism, lust, and debauchery, all under the sweet-scented name of freelove.

"After the lecture was over, those of the audience who indorsed the sentiments uttered by Mr. Stewart were requested to rise to their feet. At once the vast audience, with but few exceptions, rose. The reverse side was then put, and those not agreeing with the sentiments of the speaker were requested to rise, and four rose to their feet. Then ensued a scene which was heartrending indeed. A brazen young man, whose aged mother was in the audience, and who has bright, pure, and intelligent sisters, who would naturally expect a brother's protection, and a brother's defense of their honor, arose and placed himself among those whose lustful gratification was held paramount to the purity of mother, sister, wife, or daughter. A shriek was wrung from that old mother's heart which evinced a sense of pain a thousand times worse than would be the fact should death strike the loveliest flower from the family. The scene was so painful that tears flowed from the strongest eyes in sympathy with the poor mother, with a corresponding feeling of disgust for the brazen wretch who stood unmoved, as dead to shame, before his mother's sinking, bleeding, broken heart.

"There was one good lesson taught, though at a fearful cost of sorrow, which was that Liberal was not the place for that class of people. Liberal will not be subordinated to those freelove doctrins and practices, as those will certainly learn who attempt it here.

"The world is wide. If they must pursue that course, they should go where they are welcome, go where they are wanted. As for us, we intend to keep the family altar, as far as we can, pure and undefiled from the taints of the lecherous libertin and gangrenous fumes of the procurers. We speak from a conviction of duty—duty to ourselvs, to our families, our mothers, wives, and daughters; yea, a duty we owe to innocence throughout the land. The people of Liberal say Go, and they mean what they say. There is a point beyond which forbearance ceases to be a virtue.

"It was asserted by one of the four that it would injure the town were it known that it would not be a welcome resort for all classes. Of course 'all classes' means the saloon class, the freelove class, pimp class, as well as an asylum for filth of all kinds. Liberal is not that kind of a place, and we hope the world will know it and appreciate it as fully as the people of Liberal do. We would rather remain a hundred years without one more accession than rise on the fatness of filth. The Freethought people of the world are now forming the material for a monument to human progress, and Liberal shall be an honored stone in that structure or none at all."

When we read this we recognized at once the fact that a fight is going on in the Freethought community we hav so often had occasion to defend. But no further information was obtained till the reception of Equity of July 3d. In that journal was the subjoined from the pen of H. P. Replogle:

"The bitter fight here is not for so-called freelove, for there are not more than a dozen persons in the town who understand or care anything about the sex question, but a question of freedom of speech and press, without being subject to mob violence. Nor are those who hav taken this stand in sympathy with the doctrins of social radicals further than a right to citizenship, a fair hearing, and protection against ostracism for opinion's sake.

"The leading editorial of the Liberal of this week speaks for itself more plainly than I might dare. It completely portrays the character of the writer, his conception of the subject he was treating, just how much regard he has for truth, his mode of dealing with those who differ from him in his opinion; and, with its false representation of the subject, is a straight pointer to the cause of the attempted mob violence of Monday night and the demonstration of the same on Tuesday evening, which was quieted with such difficulty by those who feared the responsibility of its acts. In tone, conception, intention, and manner it is a condensed delineation of the proceedings of the 'sexual morality' leaders at the hall Sunday night. A thorough, impartial investigation would undoubtedly reveal the whole matter as centered in the desire—of those to whose personal interest it would be—to crush this paper because of its attitude on the labor question. This freelove cry is only a cunning dodge to enlist, through the misunderstanding of its principles, the prejudice of the people in removing those who dare fight for the rights of the capital-oppressed toiler. This is the condensed truth of it all."

On the page of Equity edited by J. K. Moore is printed the following, presumably written by Mr. Moore. It is headed "Border Ruffianism:"

"On Sunday evening, June 27th, C. W. Stewart gave a lecture in the Opera House of this place on sexual morality in which he found occasion to recommend shot-gun and boot logic for those who should attempt to teach his family other than that he had been preaching. G. H. Walser then arose and indorsing all of Stewart's mobocratic speech added that this objectionable element referred to by Stewart should be led to the outskirts of the town and invited to leave, and expressions on the same strain. He then called a rising vote of the assembly indorsing Stewart's speech. The most of the people arose. He then called for those who did not indorse it. Four only arose, Owram, Thayer, Youmans, and myself; objecting each of us to some of his expressions. Numbers cried out against any of the four being heard, but finally all were. Walser ordered me to 'shut up' repeatedly, though he was not chairman.

"On Tuesday morning about 2 A.M., as a result of Walser's violence-inciting speeches, a mob came to my door and demanded to see Mr. Youmans. When he asked what was wanted, they demanded an explanation of his conduct at the hall on Sunday evening. On being adversely answered these midnight executors of Walser, Stewart & Co. gave Mr. Youmans twenty-four hours to leave, stoned the house, fired several shots into it, and left a long dirk at the gate of the yard.

"These are the agents and agencies for spreading Freethought and 'Universal Mental Liberty,' the motto inscribed on the hall. I would prefer that Walser, Stewart & Co. lead their own reformatory schemes at midnight themselvs."

Now we get the annexed circular from Henry Youmans, accompanied by this note:

"LIBERAL, MO., July 4, 1886.

"DEAR TRUTH SEEKER: This circular will giv you a slight idea of the state of Liberalism in this town at present. You may publish it if you will. Warren Chase, Jay Chaapel, and many other honorable men here will vouch for the truth of it. HENRY YOUMANS."

The circular, with the exception of a personal attack upon Mr. Walser, which we hav stricken out as irrelevant, is headed, "Justice: To the People:"

"I ask all those whose brains are not run in a pair of bullet-molds to lay aside their prejudices and read what I hav to say. I ask a fair field and no favors. Criminals on the scaffold are given a chance to speak. Victims of lynch law are always allowed a few closing remarks, but last Sunday night I was howled down by an audience of so-called Liberals in this boasted home of freedom.

"C. W. Stewart made an incendiary speech against freelovers, accusing them of advocating and practicing prostitution, and proposed, as an answer to their arguments, to 'fill them full of buckshot.' Walser called for a vote of those who indorsed Stewart's speech. I was among the four who voted against it. My mother (who is a little deaf) thought I voted in favor of the prostitution described by Stewart, when I voted only against his foul lies, brutal language and shot-gun policy. She asked me to sit down. I asked permission to explain, but was denied the privilege. It was evidently a preconspired plot, hatched in the brain of the czar of Liberal, to incite my own mother against me, and through her instigate the mob to assassinate me, as they hav since threatened to do. On the following night they attacked Mr. Moore and myself, shattered his house with stones and with Stewart's and Walser's leaden logic.

"The following extract is from the Liberal, Mr. Walser's paper:

"'A brazen young man, whose aged mother was in the audience; and who has bright, pure, and intelligent sisters, who would naturally expect a brother's protection and a brother's defense of their honor, arose and placed himself among those whose lustful gratification was held paramount to the purity of mother, sister, wife, or daughter. A shriek was wrung from that old mother's heart which evinced a sense of pain a thousand times worse than would be the fact should death strike the loveliest flower from the family. The scene was so painful that tears flowed from the strongest eyes in sympathy for the poor mother, with a corresponding feeling of disgust for the brazen wretch who stood unmoved, as dead to shame, before his mother's sinking, bleeding, broken heart.'

"I defy anyone whose heart is not of stone to conceive of a more savage, devilish, and brutal crime than plotting to array a tender and loving mother against a son because he refuses to be voted, like a sneak, against the dictates of his own heart and brain. I would not stoop to notice these low tactics had he not misrepresented the real motivs of my mother's action in the hall.

"To those persons who gave me twenty-four hours to leave town I would say: If your skulls are so thick as to be impenetrable by an idea, and you still indorse the buckshot argument, place Capt. G. H. Walser at your head when you visit me again, and you will confer a great and lasting blessing upon the town of Liberal. Yours for justice,

"Liberal Mo., July 2, 1886. HENRY YOUMANS."

These extracts show a painful state of affairs in Liberal. Every Freethinker in the country is interested in the well-being of the little town, and does not desire its light hid under a cloud of shot-gun smoke. While the purity of the family and the virtue of the young are subjects of the utmost solicitude, yet if any man's house has been mobbed and shots fired at it, because of the opinions of the owner or of his guest upon any subject on earth, a monstrous and infamous wrong has been committed, the perpetrators of which are a disgrace to Freethought. They are more blameworthy than the brutal Catholics who threw a reformed Romanist into the river because he spoke against their church. We cannot believe that Mr. Walser or Mr. Stewart had any lot or parcel in the affair. But unless they are more vigilant, their own supporters will do the town infinitly more damage than all the slanders concocted by the priesthood. They should bear in mind that they are not responsible for the opinions of Messrs. Replogle, Moore, and Youmans; neither hav they any more right to persecute them for opinion's sake than the Christians hav to imprison every Infidel in the community of Liberal.

In the Liberal of July 8th Mr. Chaapel announces his withdrawal from the editorship of that paper. Hav the action of the mob and the action of Mr. Chaapel any connection with each other?

Chili and the Catholic Church.

The Roman Catholic church has received a setback in South America which Americans particularly will rejoice at. The new president of Chili has been elected on an anti church platform. The campaign has been a stirring one, unusually long and bitter. The issue was distinct, and turned upon the perpetuation of the power of the Catholic church. Under the present laws the government of Chili supports the churches and their collateral institutions, paying the priests as officials. It also repairs the churches when necessary. With a population of between two and three millions, Chili has one archbishop, three bishops, and several hundreds of priests, friars, and monks. All these draw pay from the public treasury. The government also maintains six seminaries for the education of priests. The whole establishment costs several hundred thousand dollars annually. Catholicism is the state religion, and Protestantism exists by sufferance where it exists at all. In the election just held the people were divided into three parties, known as the Clericals, the Liberals, and the Radicals. The former recognize and advocate the supremacy of the church in political as well as spiritual matters. The Liberals advocate a divorce of church and state, the abolishment of orders of religious seclusion, the establishment of free, non-sectarian schools, the taxation of church property, and a constitutional guarantee of civil and religious liberty such as exists in the United States. The Radicals are a dissenting faction of the Liberal party. The Extremists advocate the confiscation of church property and the banishment of all clerical orders. The influence of the German professors who are employed in the national universities is said to be strongly Materialistic and to be the source of the politics of the extreme party. The majority of the young professional men of the country are alleged to be thoroughly imbued with Materialistic doctrins.

The Liberal party has been in power a short time, and the new president, Señor Balmaceda, was the prime minister of the previous administration. The party has already enacted considerable legislation looking toward a termination of the relations between church and state. The civil rite of marriage was established as the only legal form. The records of births and deaths were taken from the parish priests and placed in the hands of civil magistrates. The money formerly appropriated to aid the parish schools was denied them, and a bill to establish a system there of non-eclectic education and various other similar progressiv ideas were introduced. But the Extremists insisted upon more radical measures, and, failing to accomplish them, split off from the Liberal party and nominated a presidential candidate of their own. Balmaceda is a man about forty-five years of age, who has become conspicuous as a leader only since he was selected by Santa Maria to represent the younger generation in his cabinet. He is a graduate of the National University of Chili, has traveled considerably in Europe, and is regarded as one of the ablest, as well as one of the most progressiv, men in the republic. He is reputed to be the author of much of the anti-church legislation that has been enacted by the Chilian congress.

ABOUT the wholesale conviction of the boycotters of this city, and on the labor situation generally, the daily newspapers talk like fools because they think that is the way the people want them to talk. The people are flattered.

THE Army Bill, which has passed the United States Senate, increases the pay of chaplains from $1,500 per annum to $1,800. Our objections to this bill are the same that a bank would hav to a thief stealing $1,800 instead of $1,500.

THE London World says it was the strong church influence brought to bear on the council that alone prevented the University of Oxford from conferring its honorary degree on Mr. Irving. The discussions on the subject were of an unusually lively description.

THE American Tract Society has refused to lease rooms in its building on Nassau street, this city, to the publishers of Our Country, because it is a labor paper and supports the principles of the Knights of Labor. The excuse given with the refusal of the lease was "that the paper seems not in accord with the work of the Tract Society." The trustees are right in this. The Knights of Labor are endeavoring to benefit mankind.

THE New York Observer, which hates the Catholics as only a Calvinist can hate a brother Christian, charges that the Freeman's Journal is the only newspaper in this city which advertises lotteries. The Observer calls attention to the bill in Congress forbidding the use of the mails to those papers containing such advertisments, and unkindly suggests that its passage will be a serious blow to Roman Catholic organs.

A WRITER in the Reporter, of Dunlap, Mo., falls into serious error in the following:

"THE TRUTH SEEKER says that in 66 prisons, containing 41,335 convicts, it was ascertained on inquiry that there was but one avowed Infidel and two so-called Infidels; all the others believing in a life after death."

THE TRUTH SEEKER did not say "all the others believing in a life after death." We said that the balance were Christians, and the point we made, and which the figures prove, is that Christianity does not prevent a person from being immoral. Mr. C. E. Kidd should be careful to understand what he reads before rushing into print.

THE tricks of tonguey lawyers are viewed by the people with more or less leniency, but such a despicable trick as Mr. Choate tried to play upon the plaintiff in the large telegraph suit against the Western Union merits a more severe rebuke than that administered by the judge. Colonel Ingersoll is one of the counsel for the plaintiffs, and Mr. Choate is retained by Mr. Gould's corporation. In beginning his summing up for the Western Union, Mr. Choate dramatically reminded the jury that they had been sworn upon the Bible, a book which Colonel Ingersoll ignored. "What has my ignoring the Bible to do with this case?" interrupted Colonel Ingersoll. "A good deal to do with this case," replied Mr. Choate, with a defiant air. "I ask your honor if my ignoring the Bible makes any difference in this case," said Colonel Ingersoll, addressing Judge Lawrence. "Not the slightest," responded Judge Lawrence, "and I so instruct the jury." The opportunity was a good one for the judge to hav impressed the jury, and, through the press, the country, with the idea that a man's religious opinion is his own private business. It is astonishing that a lawyer of the eminence and acknowledged ability of Mr. Choate should hav resorted to such a shyster trick to make a point for his clients. A man has a weak case when he has to abuse opposing counsel.

IN THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 19th we printed an account of the alleged strange death at Millersburg, Pa., of Samuel Motter. It was a story that had gone all over the country. Motter, it was said, was an Infidel, who, with some reckless companions, had celebrated the "Lord's supper" with bread and beer, after which he had gone home and died, frightened to death by "an immense, ill-formed, and foul beast with great cloven feet, pointed horns, and eyes that flashed fire." This, it will be seen, is the ideal devil of Christianity, and was supposed to hav been sent by God to punish Motter for his blasphemy. Our esteemed contemporary, the Christian Advocate, by writing to the Methodist minister at Millersburg, whittled the story down to a mock service and subsequent death of Motter "with only such fear of death as is common to unsaved men." The appearance of the devil was denied. A gentleman living in Nebraska, where the story appeared in a county paper, sends us further information which reduces the absurd tale to nothing. Last spring Mr. G. H. Gibson, of Loup City, Neb., wrote to the postmaster of Millersburg, making inquiries in the matter, and asked the postmaster to hand his letter to any prominent Freethinker in the place. In reply he received the following, which disposes of the Christian tale once for all:

"MILLERSBURG, PA., April 8, 1886.

"DEAR SIR: The postmaster of this place handed me your letter to answer, and in reply I would say there is no truth whatever in the statement. Samuel Motter died a natural death of heart disease. Yours, etc., J. D. DIMES."

Further comment upon the affair is useless.

Letters from Friends.

WOODSTOCK, VT., July 6, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I look upon it as a duty for every Freethinker that can spare a dollar in the cause of mental freedom to render assistance to one or more of the plans that are in vogue to rout the adversary, Bigotry, that stands arrayed against us. I hav taken this into account, and will for now donate, for the Campaign Fund, $8; for the Tent Fund, $4; for the pictures, $4. The last—the pictures—I wish all Christians to see; they speak for themselvs, showing the inconsistency of a belief that this was the work of an all-wise being.

Please let this be seen. It may cause others to step out and do likewise. Yours for the truth, JOHN D. POWERS.

DECATUR, ILL., June 24, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: W. S. Bell gave one lecture at the Turner's Hall last Sunday afternoon. His subject was "Superstition," and it was the grandest effort I ever heard. It was based upon our observation and experience, therefore none could deny the many good points he made. Mr. Bell came here from Mechanicsburg, where he gave three lectures. He was to hav engaged in a three days' debate with a Rev. Mr. Robbins, of that place, but in order to hav what he considered a plausible excuse for not meeting Mr. Bell, he demanded that Mr. Bell should produce credentials in support of his good character; but the Liberals of the place told him that they would do nothing of the kind. However, the reverend attended the lectures, and at the close of every lecture Mr. Bell invited the clergy to come forward and reply to any objections, but they were as mute as mice.

J. E. Remsburg was there last winter and gave two lectures, aud is to be there again in August.

These two apostles of liberty hav stirred that old hot-bed of bigotry and superstition to its very dregs. So the bigots "must fight if they should win. Increase their courage, Lord."

I hope that the Liberals will make arrangements and secure Mr. Bell's services. They are bound to be highly pleased with him. W. L. SANDERS.

EUREKA GROVE, FLA., June 27, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I notice in your issue of May 8th an article from Sine Die, N. Y., giving Florida down the banks tremendously, with its land swindles, worthless and barren lands, nothing to be raised without fertilizers, etc. Now, I cannot allow such talk in the TRUTH SEEKER family to pass without comment. We hav no doubt about there being plenty of swindlers in New York. Some of them send their victims to Florida, to the West, to Texas, and elsewhere. We hav poor lands, swamps, flats, woods, etc.; so has New York. As large a part of New York is worthless as of Florida, and yet it is called the Empire state, and will be for a long time to come.

I hav lived there, and I say that a man that is willing to work, and knows a good thing when he sees it, can make more in five years in Florida than he could in the state of New York in a lifetime. We hav already a great many Freethinkers in the new settlements, and we want a great many more in this neighborhood; but we want practical folks that can do for themselvs, that can and will help improve and build up the country. Two-thirds of the immigrants to the rich prairies West fail to stay and make success from the fact they are not used to do for themselvs, but worked for or leaned on others, and can't adapt themselvs to circumstances. There are good and bad points to all sections. N. S. HAZEN.

TORONTO, ONT., CAN., July 4, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Had I seen the letter from C. L. Jacobs in manuscript in your waste-basket, instead of occupying about a column and a half of your valuable space, it would hav been perhaps in its proper place. What we want most is what some one knows or can know, not vague speculations that, with a little thought, Mr. Jacobs can see are just as impossible to prove as the existence of a God. What under the sun can be proved by supposing something to be true, and then asking us to believe something unproved in order to demonstrate that the supposition is correct? He says, "Spirit is composed of matter, but all matter is not visible, does not hav weight, nor is it necessarily susceptible to either of the five senses, for instance, gas, electricity, magnetism," etc. All these are known by our senses, and all matter is visible when brought within our range of vision. He then adds two more senses, viz., talking and judging (neither of which are senses). How do you know that what you call lower animals do not talk to their kind and judge? And a horse's judgment is often superior to his driver's. The power to talk is a result of physical formation; to talk well is the expression of ideas gained by our powers of observation through or by means of the senses.

He asks, "Where is the person who has not retired at night with a perplexing question on his mind that he could not solve, and on awaking next morning it was perfectly clear?" This makes it perfectly clear to Mr. Jacobs that the spirit, whatever he means by that, had solved the question. Is it not more reasonable that at the time you could not solve the question you had not sufficient concentration of thought, and that during sleep your tired brain was refreshed. Don't ascribe anything to God or spirits that can be reasonably explained.

Then he talks of a person who has lost a limb feeling the lost member as plainly as if it were really there. This shows that what he calls the spirit is not as wise as his senses, and therefore not superior to them. If he had given any attention to the study of the nervous system he would be able to account for his severed nerves trying to make a liar of his sense of sight. How is it that a disgusting smell will make your spirit sick at its stomach? Study the nervous system, Mr. Jacobs, before ascribing sensation to spirits, or, in fact, to anything but the real cause. WM. CHURCHILL.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., June 26, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Your cartoon in THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 26, 1886, givs evidence that the Bible is true. After a tramp gets into jail he takes no thought for life, what he shall eat, drink, or put on, as it is brought to him at the expense of the city. But it shows, should anyone follow the Bible teaching to the very letter, that it leads him to become a tramp. AUGUST BUESING.

LINCOLN, ILL., July 4, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I notice that a controversy still goes on concerning the propriety, or the etiquet, so to speak, of the TRUTH SEEKER "outrageous flings" of Brother Heston against all and singular the points of Christianity. The burden of those who seem offended seems to be that some visiting friend—say a mother-in-law, or a pious old uncle, or an old aunt with a stock of superstition left over from early life which has "grown with her life," and become the more intense as age and mental weakness creep on—sees something harrowing to his or her contracted vision in a picture. Let us suppose that your friend and whilom subscriber, H. C. Gill, was a Democrat during the campaign of 1884. Of course, he had any quantity of those campaign cuts of Blaine with his "Ingersoll plumes," together with hundreds of other caricatures touching things and events. Why did he not "stop my paper! My Republican visitors don't like the cuts; it hurts their feelings?" No; ten to one he had the papers strung around loose—the baby had them on the floor, the pups tugged them round under foot in the very sight of his friends, and a happy thought went through him as the waving plumes came in sight of his defenseless friends, who, away from their homes, were without ammunition to shoot back. But a picture making light of a miserable, God-dishonoring, contemptible old fable is a breach of decorum—yes, an insult to a person who is deceived by false education, and whose heart is full of rancor and hate toward all of unlike belief. The trouble with our friend is right here—he is yet a slave; freedom with all its satisfaction and glory is not his. I hav been there, and never till I read Kersey Graves's "Sixteen Crucified Saviors" did I get clear "out of the wilderness." Our friend will get there.

I spread the pictures around, and show thereby how foolish and contemptible the botched-up system of "salvation" is. Dig at it and under it; it must go as unworthy. A thing that rewards crime through the merits of a savior is doomed—that is, if science, reason, invention, and discovery proceed, but if the world goes back, then the curse of priestcraft will grow.

To-morrow, when the banks open, I will send you subscription of a party to take the place of our brother who quit because of the cuts.

Yours during the war, A. R. CRIHFIELD.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., July 4, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: When my turn comes to vote on the cartoon question I desire to note the fact that the book of Genesis bears evidence on its face of being a bungling description, rather than translation, of pictural illustrations, called hieroglyphics, in which it was written before letters were invented. Moreover, Josephus, in his "Antiquities of the Jews," incidentally informs us that the copy of Genesis we hav was importantly abridged by the compilers. He informs us that Cain found a people in the land of Nod who had all wealth in common, and lived generously together. To serve his private ambition he found it expedient that he should become a land reformer, and persuaded the people to divide their lands and set bounds around it so that every man should hav the product of his own labor. Their doing so established private wealth, and made exchange of products a necessity. Then Cain invented weights and measures and became a trafficker. His sons became skilled in various kinds of handicraft, manufactured such commodities as the farmers desired, in exchange for their products, which greatly facilitated the designs of Cain. He also organized plundering expeditions against surrounding tribes by which his gains were somewhat augmented, and by which it will appear that the earth was more populous in those days than it possibly could hav been if all were the lineal descendants of one pair.

That story is evidently a part of the original Genesis, left out by the compilers for obvious reasons. In hieroglyphics, it is a graphic illustration of the world's civilization from its inception to the present. Where on earth is the "land of Nod" unless it is the whole earth, whose people hav always practiced the iniquities described? And though they wrangle incessantly about an unfair division of the plunder, as a gang of thieves should hav cause to do, they evidently hav no thought of repenting.

The Tower of Babel, in hieroglyphics, is a graphic illustration of the world's religion, whose deluded dupes vainly hope to gain the kingdom of God without repenting of the transgression that makes a sheol of earth. The confusion of tongues is an appropriate illustration of the numerous sects into which the world's religionists hav always been divided, and hav made the earth a vile pandemonium with their incessant wrangling, fighting, and bickering about the best method of constructing their tower. Finding it impossible to establish a uniform religion, either by force or fraud, they left off the effort, and their tower has a dilapidated appearance common to relics of a barbarous age. Perceiving that the Bible philosophy cartoons the world's religion and civilization, and being, as you are doubtless aware, an ardent admirer and uncompromising champion of the Bible philosophy, I cannot consistently do otherwise that vote for the cartoons every time; though not that I admire them, by themselvs considered, but in the forlorn hope that they will so familiarize us with pictural illustrations of Bible subjects that we shall be able to to read the book of Genesis more intelligently and understandingly than its translators appear to hav done, or desired or intended that others should do.

J. A. TUTTLE.

BUTTE, MONT. TER., June 27, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: The people of Butte hav just been aroused from their lethargy by our secretary of the Secular Union, Samuel P. Putnam, who delivered two lectures here on the 20th inst. Subjects: "Universal Mental Liberty" and "New Earth and Heaven." They were handled in the presence of a large and appreciativ audience. There were a few kickers ignorant enough to make fools of themselvs after the lectures—one in particular (an editor) who said he never knew a Liberal or Infidel lecturer except he was kicked out of some church. Argument apropos of all superstition. Christians hav no other, and say something they must. They know their Bible foundation is tottering, and as they hav no other prop on which to rest they tremble at the approach of reason; and tremble they did at the logic of Mr. Putnam, who gave it to them pure and sensible. Mr. Putnam is an extemporaneous speaker, apt, and therefore always prepared to demolish the Christian theory when occasion requires, as it frequently does, by some arrogant fanatic asking impertinent questions of the speaker during the course of his lecture.

Mr. Putnam was my guest for about a week, when he left for Helena, Bozeman, and other parts of the territory to disseminate freedom of the mind. He is doing up the Christians in Montana, and making a host of friends throughout the whole territory. We ought to hav a score of such men in the Liberal field. Montana is a priest-ridden territory, hence good work is needed badly. After shaking up the people of Helena and Bozeman, and visiting the National Park, Mr. Putnam will return by way of Butte on or about the 16th of July, when he will giv us his ideas on "American Democracy" and "The Glory of Infidelity." I hope in the mean time to hav consummated a Secular Union. We shall soon petition for a charter, and in the future work in conjunction with the National Secular Union fighting, for the Nine Demands, never tiring until they are granted.

Montana is a prosperous country. Her foothills and valleys are covered with nutritious grasses; her mountains and river-beds decked and interspersed with gold, silver, and copper. Her people are wanting in nothing save mental liberty, which a large majority refuse to accept, preferring rather idolatrous worship of an inexplicable nothing. As I write there are from a thousand to fifteen hundred foreigners passing my door to pay their tithing and adoration to a representativ of the infallible pope. I can see an occasional American citizen in this foreign superstitious throng, elbowing his way to kneel before a representation of the gallows that Christ was hung upon.

As Freethought advances the clergy call to their aid all their forces, and in their sermons remind their subjects of the necessity of united effort to bulldoze reason in order to perpetuate ignorance. They are alarmed at the growth of science, and therefore deny their dupes, by positiv injunction, the right of hearing discussion. To induce a Christian to listen to reason we must represent a Hamlet, as did the ex-minister and famous tragedian, George C. Miln, in Butte City last night, the 27th inst. He advertised to lecture on "Candles and Footlights; or, the Church and the Stage as Friendly Forces." He drew a fair audience, principally Christians, and ere they were aware they had listened to a scholarly, refined, and argumentativ discourse on Freethought, free speech, and universal mental liberty. It was grand and logical, and Mr. Miln, as a Freethinker, should not fail to deliver his lecture wherever he plays. He can do much good; his strategy in advertising entices the Christians to a hearing, and before they hav time to retire they are fascinated with his logical eloquence, and thereby hear the argument that otherwise they might never hav heard.

The newspapers of Butte are creed-bound, and therefore insult every Liberal lecturer after he leaves. I will inclose you a sample. If you will shake the editors of Butte as they merit, I will see that they read the article.

O. B. WHITFORD.

MR. KENT EXPRESSES HIS VIEWS.

ITHACA, N. Y., July 1, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to make a few remarks upon Freethought. We are not free to think, when entangled with any collectiv theory. Every individual is a sovereign in himself, or, in other words, a fixed star. My observation is that there are many (a great majority) who call themselvs Freethinkers, who hav embraced a theory called Freethought, and are as sectarian as a church organization. Those are not the fixed stars of sovereignty, but are flying meteors, suspended, transient, fiery bodies. They possess no individuality; they do not possess the faculty of sovereignty. They hav but one talent to improve, and hav not the force to improve that. Not that any are to blame for that they do not possess. Meteors in the moral atmosphere are shadowed forth from universal nature, which is the only fundamental guide to truth when applied to the higher brain. The higher brain is the sovereignty of thought and judge of all the lower faculties and inclinations of the human system. Nature, as we behold it, corresponds precisely with sovereign Freethought. And yet meteors seem to be a necessity; they count when necessary to organize for strength, and thus good and evil balances and rebalances to correspond with nature's necessity for cold and heat, light and darkness. These opposits must ever liv, until our sovereignty of thought strikes the balance of necessity. We cannot make the world the better (or good) only for ourselvs, and that by the sovereignty of thought. We hav the will power to conquer ourselvs when we see our errors, and thus the gate is so strait and the path so narrow that few there will be saved from themselvs. As nature has planted a great variety of thought in her embodiment (man), it seems a necessity that all theories are each a link in the chain of unity that is sure to come just in the future, when the sovereignty of Free-thought meets his brother-members without collision, which is surely a growing tree, and the branches thereof will soon become so strong as to admit the birds of the air (unity and intelligence) in its sovereign boughs. Thus we shall create a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth the righteousness. ZENAS KENT.

P. S.—Please suffer me to add a little. The new heaven and earth, of course, is individual experience. It is a new departure; it is the knowledge and application of science, metaphorically the female of nature, and philosophically the so-called woman in her new dress of unity and equality with man; in a word, the creator of all good, and also of evil. Woman is the center of all worship. Mentally she is our leader, our Christ; physically she is our worshipful. She is our supreme power; she can create good and she can create evil. As the steam power is to the engin, so can she move man. She is to be lifted up. "And I, if I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me." Thus saith her lordship. All hail to science and philosophy by woman.

ST. LOUIS, MO., May 31, 1886.

TREASURER AMERICAN SECULAR UNION, Sir: Please accept the inclosed one dollar, and also my sincere regrets that I am unable to do anything financially for humanity. I think I could hav done something among the friends if I had been able to get out, but I hav not so far. I know something could be done here if there was only some one to do that something. If it was little it would afford us some encouragement at least. With us at least corruption has no need to creep in; it was let in from the beginning. The original link between church and state left justice at the shrine of the bigoted and ignorant hypocrits of Christianity. They hav held the right under our laws from the beginning to impose upon justice and make stock of our individual freedom and right. And everyone who has opposed them has paid the penalty for daring to hav an origiual idea, or refusing to accept what the "howley praste" or minister might say. They had the rudder in the beginning, and their wonder is now that they hav not had this country by the throat before this time. They hav expected before this time to openly claim rule here, and destroy this as they hav every country that has ever been cursed with them. And their efforts lately show how desperate they hav become at their hope deferred. I hav met them and became quite well acquainted with them. I know from my own personal acquaintance, then, why I so heartily despise everything that even bears the semblance of these destroyers of life and liberty. There is another thing embodied in their scheme of robbery and fraud, and that is our marriage ceremonies. We will hav to bear another burden on account of the church marriage until it has beeu declared illegal, which I sincerely hope won't be long. What right has a priest or minister to any revenue from the state or people any more than a barkeeper or carpenter? And if there is any fee attached to any legal ceremony it surely is due to the state, and should be performed by a state official. They are not officials, and should be debarred from doing the work of officials, even though they did it for nothing. For what little of liberty we do retain we should ever be grateful to the noble ones who, like Thomas Paine and Colonel Ingersoll, hav dared to call out in the name of humanity.

MARY DUFF.

LINCOLN, ILL., June 19, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I notice that many of your correspondents are writing about the illustrations. I presume you want to get the opinion of your readers in order that you may govern yourself accordingly in the future. Let me say my say: I am in the "sere and yellow leaf," and hav had much to do with papers and publishing, and hav noticed the matter of illustrations very carefully. Some subjects are not suited by their nature for delineation, but a subject that is susceptible of caricature should be so handled. I can think of nothing more adapted to the artist's pencil than the infinitly ridiculous mass of silly, offensiv, disgusting, and imbecil stuff called "Inspired History," "Plan of Salvation," "Road to Glory," "Vicarious Atonement," "Abraham's Bosom," and so on, ad nauseam. I well remember that in boyhood I was regaled with a picture in the "blessed Bible" of the devil, with forked tongue and barbed tail. I trembled and shivered when I looked upon his majesty's phiz. Yes, pictures are telling things; let them go on. My subscription is in place of that brother who quit because of his orthodox friends not liking the cuts. I will send you some others, now promised, to take his place, also. Let it hit the orthodox—the orthodox hit the Freethinker many hard raps, and tell many lies on him. Yours truly, A. R. C.

BOLIVAR, MO., June 28, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $5, to be applied as per inclosed memorandum. The books that I bought of you last summer are worn out, I having loaned them so much. My TRUTH SEEKER is read by at least a dozen, and I expect to get you some subscribers soon. We all think the illustrations just "immense." They will largely increase your circulation. I shall be able to do something to circulate Liberal books and tracts more than I hav done. There is a large Liberal element here. I am in the grocery business, and hav a good chance to find out, as I am an outspoken Liberal myself. Bolivar is a beautiful little city of three thousand inhabitants, and a Union could be organized here if some one would come and giv us a course of lectures. I hav been in correspondence with Mr. Remsburg, but he has never found it convenient to come here. We hav five churches, but they do not hav it all their own way, by any means, as many of the intelligent people are Liberals and not afraid to defend their views. C. L. CURTIS.

LOGANSPORT, IND., June 15, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: You will find inclosed $5 for THE TRUTH SEEKER. It will be impossible for me to do without this valuable paper. I know I could not be saved if I was to giv up THE TRUTH SEEKER. Just as long as I read it and practice its teachings I am satisfied my salvation is sure. When I look at those pictures I can see my way clear into heaven. THE TRUTH SEEKER sometimes says there is no religion, which I cannot believe, for I am convinced there is religion in THE TRUTH SEEKER. Hoping the work may continue as long as the sun may shine. Yours, JOHN G. KESSLER.

OSHKOSH, WIS., June 11, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Agreeable to promis, I will now send you $3 for another year's subscription for your valuable paper. Now, I am not much given to flattery, but my affection for THE TRUTH SEEKER is so great that I should feel as if I was in an unfurnished house without it. And I heartily indorse all your cartoons. I should like very much to see a dramatic company organized to play some of those Bible pieces. Let them giv it to them in light doses at first, and it would not be long before they could hav an open sea on the stage, containing Jonah and the whale, with all the modern improvements.

At the post-office, the other morning, I met my old enemy, Rev. Mr. McNarey, and he spoke about the weather being very dry, and I told him that when I was a boy all the church folks used to pray for rain in a dry time, but it seems they don't do it any more. Well, one word brought on another, until we got to speaking of ancient and modern times, and I told him that in ancient times our forefathers plowed with a crooked stick, but if a man should do so now people would call him a fool. "And," said I, "it is the same way with religion; what was popular then would not do for us now, for everything must evolute together." Then he seemed to be in quite a hurry, and started off, and as he left me I could not help but remark that the good Lord always selected strong, able-bodied men for preachers, and I said to myself, "Would it not look better if some of our pulpits were filled with some of our crippled soldiers?" I hav heard a great deal about civil service reform, and when I look around and see a lot of big, strong, hearty fellows filling all the pulpits (and I never knew one crippled preacher), I can't help thinking that it is high time that God went into the civil service reform business.

This is the worst priest-ridden town I was ever in, and all the lecturers on the road seem to giv it a wide berth. When I read THE TRUTH SEEKER, no part of it does me so much good as a letter from John R. Kelso, and some of them hit every button on my vest. Tell him to do so some more.

Yours always, GEO. M. HARE.

NEWARK, O., June 27, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: My writing and speaking for several years past has been entirely upon the "labor question," as that is looming up in such a way as to take precedence over all other questions; hence I hav not cared much about any of the religious isms, but when I see an article such as appeared in THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 12th over the signature of L. L. Northup, Materialist, I can hardly refrain from paying it a passing notice, at least. I am emphatically a Liberal, an Atheistic Spiritualist, as godless and untrammeled as the sublime oak. I do not say I am a Spiritualist without giving a reason why. I do not make an assertion without being able to back it up, and whoever does has some of the blood of bigotry coursing in his or her veins. Brother Northup speaks of the "evil influences of Spiritualism, and says some one has been incarcerated within an insane asylum by having received an overdose of humbuggery and supernaturalism by attending Spiritual seances, etc." He further says: "With the many examples where bright intellects hav been beclouded in the attempt to investigate and fathom that fanatical humbug, it seems strange that there should be anyone who would waste their time upon either of those twin relics of barbarism, orthodoxy and Spiritualism." Again he says: "Should you publish the account of all those who break down from the influence of that other delusion—Spiritualism—the number would be appalling." Hear him further: "Renouncing orthodoxy and taking up Spiritualism as a substitute is very much like the old saying, 'jumping from the frying pan into the fire.'" Now, Brother Northup, I am after you. If there is any one thing you Materialists pride yourselvs in, it is in dealing in facts. Will you please inform us wherein consists the evil influences of Spiritualism? Please tell us of one single person in the asylums to-day who was brought to a demented state of mind by and through the influence of Spiritualism—please giv us the particulars of one single case. None of your assertions. We Spiritualists want facts, and we demand the facts of you Materialists. You call Spiritualism a "fanatical humbug." Please tell us how you know it to be a "fanatical humbug." You hav asserted it and our orthodox friends assert the same. Brother Northup, prove your assertion like a man, will you? Will you tell me of a single brilliant intellect which has become beclouded by investigating the "fanatical humbug?" Twin relics of barbarism, orthodoxy and Spiritualism. Indeed! In what respect is Spiritualism barbarous? Will you please tell us? You hav accused Spiritualism of being barbarous, and, of course, Spiritualists are barbarians. Come down now with facts and figures and prove your accusations. I am one of those very fellows whom you speak of as "jumping from the frying pan into the fire, by renouncing orthodoxy and accepting Spiritualism."

Brother Northup, you hav my entire sympathy for the supreme ignorance you manifest in regard to Spiritualism. You hav bit off more than you can "chaw." I am not going to ask you to inform the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER what you really know about Spiritualism, for I am well aware, from the flimsy assertions in your article, that you don't know anything about it, or you would not hav made so many assertions which you cannot prove. Can you disprove Spiritualism? Can you prove Materialism to be true? I challenge any Materialist to prove Materialism to be true. Do you know that death ends all? If so, please tell us how you know it?

Come now, brother, giv us good, solid facts. No more of your assertions, for they are too orthodox for me. My good brother, when you shall hav investigated Spiritualism for over a third of a century, and hav paid several hundred dollars to get the facts, as the writer has done, you will, no doubt, know more about Spiritualism. Yes, sir; I hav spent time and money to get the facts, and I hav got them. When I am asked how I came to be a Spiritualist, I can proudly say, by having it demonstrated to me scores and scores of times, and not in the asylum either. When I ask you why you are a Materialist, what can you say? Hav you had it demonstrated to you? Not much, brother. You can say Materialism is true because it is. It is true because death ends all, because life is the result of organization. Can you prove your position? Aye, there's the rub! Our orthodox friends say we liv after death because we do—because. They say Jesus is the savior of the world because he is. They cannot prove their assertions, neither can you. Are you not in the same boat as far as the facts are concerned? You believe death ends all. Our orthodox friends believe we liv beyond the grave. Theirs is belief; so is yours.

Now, my good brother, you cannot reason immortality out, neither can our orthodox friends reason it in. There is no way of knowing that we liv beyond the grave only by positiv demonstration. If you hav not had that evidence, do you know that I hav not?

I hav had many confabs with Materialists, and I like them, for they are mostly jolly good fellows; but I do object to their calling Spiritualism a "relic of barbarism," a "fanatical humbug," a "delusion," etc. I do object to being accused of "jumping from the frying-pan into the fire," for rejecting orthodoxy and accepting Spiritualism.

Brother Northup, a little parting advice, and I close. Don't make any more assertions about something you don't know anything about; it is not pretty, it is not wise, and whoever does is a bigot. If you hav been too dignified heretofore to investigate Spiritualism, please get down from your exalted position, and set your fertil brain to investigating. Don't ridicule a thing you don't know anything about. You may think it beneath your dignity, but then if Professors Crookes, Varley, and Zoellner, of Europe, and Robert Dale Owen, Judge Edmons, Henry Kiddle, and Professor Hare, of this country, could condescend to investigate the great problem of a continued existence, it certainly would not degrade you; but if your brain could not stand the racket of investigation, and there is danger of your turning up in an insane asylum, you had better let it severely alone, and you would do equally as well to let Christian bigots do the ridiculing, as it illy becomes a Liberal to do so.

One word more. I ask you, brother, in all good nature, to tell us how you know Materialism to be true, and how you know Spiritualism to be untrue, a "fanatical delusion," a "relic of barbarism," attended with "pernicious and evil influences," etc. If you can't do this by facts, forever hold your peace. A. ALLEN NOE, Atheistic Spiritualist.

LEAVENWORTH, KAN., June 25, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: A lady "clairvoyant" has been holding forth in our city for a few days, and so deftly did she and her attendant perform their tricks that quite a number of converts were gathered in. Her attendant would pass through the audience, and she, blindfolded, would describe the articles shown to him. The wording and manner of asking the questions, of course, gave her the name, color, shape, etc., of the article. No one but the attendant was allowed to ask questions. There are as many different combinations of words in asking what an article is as there are likely to be articles exhibited—many hundreds no doubt. But her trump card was reading sealed letters. Cards and envelopes were distributed and people requested to write brief sentences on the cards, slip them into the envelopes and seal them. They were then gathered up and laid upon the table fifteen feet in front of the audience. One at a time they were picked up and laid on the lady's head, and the writers thereof "paralyzed" at hearing their contents accurately read. Some said it was spirits, others that it was mind reading, still others that it was clairvoyance, while a few knew it was the devil. The lady stood at the table, on which was a lamp, and faced the audience. When the first letter was laid on her head she would improvise a fictitious reading. Then the attendant would rip it open, and gazing intently at the card, repeat the lady's pretended reading. Then a confederate would or would not sing out from the audience that he was the writer and that the reading was correct. Then the attendant would pick up another letter (dropping the card at the table in front of the lady in a way to escape observation) and place it on her head; but instead of reading that one she would peek down by the end of her nose under the blindfold and read the card taken from the former letter and just dropped there. Up would jump some astonished well-known citizen and declare himself the writer and that the reading was correct. In the mean time the attendant had ripped it open, verified the reading, dropped the card on the first one, snatched up another letter and placed it on her head, and so on till all were read (the last letter being a blank), and some fifteen or twenty persons had testified to the genuinness of the reading, all of which shows how extremely easy it is to humbug the masses. S. R. SHEPHERD.

Children's Corner.

Edited by Miss Susan H. Wixon, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

Lines

WRITTEN IN MY GARDEN AFTER RAIN.

Sunshine bright warming us,
Singing birds charming us,
Thoughtless of care;
Flowers nodding plumes to us,
Yielding perfumes to us,
Flushing the air.

Rain clouds are leaving us,
Tired of grieving us
With their long stay;
Rain drops hang glittering,
Where the birds twittering,
Swing on the spray.

Sweet now the greenery.
Of all the scenery,
Bright is the stream;
Flashing in splendor still,
Purling so tender still,
Music its theme.

See, on the trelis there,
Clusters thick, rich, and fair,
Longing eyes greet;
There, too, 'mong leaves and stems,
Glinting, lurk garden gems,
Strawberries sweet.

Round us the harvest-yield,
Flooding each stretching field,
Nods in the light;
Proudly the tasseled corn,
Valley and hill adorn,
Radiant and bright.

Thanks to the sun and rain,
Thanks for the fruit and grain,
Thanks for the stream;
Thanks for the good so rife,
Thanks for the joy of life,
Thanks be our theme.

Le Roy, N. Y. John McIntosh.

Little Sun Lee.

PRIZE STORY.

Little Sun Lee lived in far-away China. He was only nine years old, and having no mother he lived alone with his father, who was very poor.

One day Hop Lee (that was his father's name) heard some of his friends talking of "Melika," and they said in their strange tongue that it was many miles away across the deep sea, but it was a fine place indeed, and that everybody had plenty to eat and to wear, and that the "Melican man paid heapee money for washee."

So Hop Lee came home very much excited about this wonderful country, which he had never heard of before, and he told little Sun about it, and after talking it over Hop decided to take his boy and go to the "Melika land," and go into the laundry business. It took him a long time to earn all the money necessary, but at last they were all ready at Canton to take the big steamer and begin their journey. They hoped the land would be better than the sea, which they thought was truly horrible.

At last they arrived at "Slan Flanslisco," and how astonished they were, to be sure! How they gazed in open-mouthed wonder at the buildings, and the people! And how they longed for China because it was their home!

Near the steamer's landing an enterprising Chinaman had set up a Chinese boarding-house, and to this place Sun and his father made their way, and there it seemed quite homelike to poor little Sun, who, having not seen a Chinese child for a whole month, found a good deal of comfort in the society of the Chinese men boarders. The rice and chopsticks, screens, fans, matting, clothes, and everything in the boarding-house seemed so good that Sun and Hop hated to leave it, but Hop had but little money and he could not spend so much while earning nothing.

So before long another Chinaman, Sin Fun, and Hop had opened a little shop where they promised to "washee and ilon velly cheapee for Melikan mans." Here Sun was occupied for quite a while in opening the chests, spreading the matting, putting up screens, and unpacking rice, chopsticks, teacups, fans, and such things, while his father and Sin Fun walked the streets trying in "crooked English" to strike a bargain in tubs, irons, ironing-boards, soap, boilers, and other washing materials.

At last they were ready and their sign hung out. At first trade was dull and Hop discouraged, but as the "Melikan mans" found out how well the partners did their work, trade increased rapidly.

One great hindrance was that neither Sin nor Hop could "vellee well speakee English." So they determined to send Sun to school. The boy didn't know whether to be glad or sorry. First he would think of the strange manners and language of the children, and then he would think of the fact that he would very soon learn their language and then it would be almost as good as if they were Chinese, because he would hav them to play with.

The first day of the school term came, and Hop took his son to school. No one was surprised to see them, because in San Francisco Chinamen are very common. It was decided, after a good deal more of the "crooked English" talk, that Sun should attend the school regularly, and so at the noon hour Hop spent half a dollar in buying a slate, pencil, and reading card for Sun. How delighted he was, having never seen one before, and taking the pencil he began to make lines on the smooth surface of the slate. He marked a little while and then sat "looking into nothing" for a long time.

Suddenly he sprang up, and, running to the back room, he snatched one of the Chinese fans and taking up the slate and pencil he began to make lines in the shape of the picture that was on the fan, three oddly dressed Chinese boys flying a green kite into a red and green sky. Oh, how Sun laughed when it was finished and he thought it would please his father very much! So after the work was done and the gas lit (another "Melikan" wonder), Sun brought the picture and showed it to old Hop. It pleased them both very much, and Hop was very proud of his boy. Well, after this Sun brought the precious slate and pencil home every night, and not only copied pictures but made them up himself Once old Hop tried it, but failed miserably. But this made him think more than ever of his son.

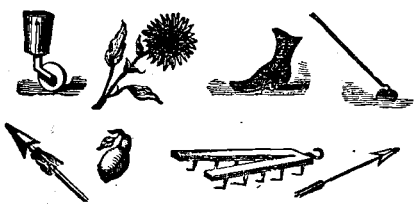
Sun did well at school, also, and from hearing the other children talk he soon spoke very well indeed, and was by this time learning to read and write. But after a few months school closed for the long vacation and time hung heavily on his hands. Now something wonderful happened.

One day as Sun was strolling up one of the largest streets he saw a man surrounded by a group of children, but he could not see what was going on. Now Sun was a very inquisitiv little fellow, and pushing through the crowd, he saw the man standing on a box putting colors from a box onto an outlined picture. Sun waited to see several of the children buy a box of the colors and a brush, and then, waiting for nothing else, he ran as fast as his legs could carry him to his father, and telling him about it, got some money to buy a box of the colors and soon returned very happy indeed. Now the vacation was no longer dull, but Sun began to almost wish it would last forever. With another kind of pencil which he had learned to use at school (lead pencil) and rice paper he copied the pictures off the fans, but now he colored them. He had several of these sketches lying on the counter of his father's laundry one day after school had begun, when a man came in with some work for Hop. He admired the pictures, for they were, indeed, quite nicely done, and looked as if they had come direct from China itself; and I supppose that is what the man thought at the same time he thought they were for sale. Picking out two of the prettiest, he handed Hop seventy-five cents and walked out. Old Hop, prouder than ever of the boy, laid the money down among the remaining pictures, where the others had been, and where Sun would be sure to look on his return from school. In about an hour Sun came running in to get to work with his paints, and supposing the money was his father's, said nothing, but gathered up the pictures. As quick as a wink he missed the two (for they were his best) and asked his father what had become of them. He was then told the story of the man's buying them and he was even more delighted than Hop had expected. He looked as he had the day that copying the pictures had come into his head, and then running back of the store he brought some of his other pictures and some pins and fixed them in the window. After that he took a thick piece of white paper and printed on it in the school letters, "To sell."

He then spoke, asking Hop, who had been looking wonderingly on at this smart little son (Sun) of his, to "comee see," and, going outside the window, looked in at the pictures, which really looked very pretty, and because they were rough and rude, all the more like the pictures on screens and fans from China. Then, snatching his hat, he went up town, where he had seen other and better paints; he invested his first earnings in a splendid new box of colors. People passing the window were attracted by the oriental looking work, and when, one day, a lady came in with some fans and later with some bamboo screens to be decorated, Sun thought his fortune was made. This was all some three years ago, and now Sun has a neat little store on one of the busiest streets of San Francisco, where he works at decorating screens, fans, and such things, and sells tea, oriental tea sets, Chinese dolls, Chinese lanterns, and all those things which are sold in the attractiv looking little Chinese stores to be seen on our principal streets, and where so many pretty little decorativ articles are sold. Sun is very happy in his business, which is both pleasant and profitable; and old Hop is prouder than ever of his ingenious little son, and will always remember the day when, in far away China, he heard the Chinamen talking of "Melika," which was many miles across the deep sea, and that it was a very fine place indeed, where everybody had plenty to eat and to wear.

Cora Stewart (aged fourteen),
Winning the prize of $4 offered by D. B. Cozine in The Truth Seeker of June 5, 1886.

A Word to Competitors for Prizes.



We are sorry to say that some of our young friends are copying stories from newspapers and sending the same to us as original. Stories, in order to receive attention, must be original. Write legibly, on one side of the paper only, spell and punctuate properly, and let your work be that of your own brain and not another's.—Ed. C. C.

Our Puzzle Box.

1.—PI.

Het rowdl si ym nocuryt, ot od odog ym igenrilo. Lyle D. Gault.
Kalamazoo, Mich.

2.—DECAPITATED PUZZLE.

In the above picture find four words, each of which, by losing its first letter, is represented by the next symbol in the puzzle.

ANSWER TO PUZZLES IN THE CHILDREN'S CORNER, JULY 3, 1886.

1.—Be not proud, be not silly, be industrious, be courteous, be not cross, be not selfish, be prudent, be independent. Read from center outward. 2.—They are trying to prop-a-gate.

Solvers.—P. P. Applegate, H. J. Messinger, Olive Manton.

Correspondence.

Bangor, Me., July 2, 1886.

Dear Miss Wixon: You will begin to think I am a very neighborly subscriber, for I hav written you once before. I hav been reading The Truth Seeker a good deal lately. I think the pictures in the front and back pages are very funny indeed. I see by the last paper that there are no letters in print, so that if this is not too long and is a good letter it can be put in at once. If so you will oblige, Marie Stewart.

Springfield, Ill., June 27, 1886.

Dear Miss Wixon: We read The Truth Seeker and like the Children's Corner very much. We go to Sunday-school and hav a nice teacher, but she tells us so many strange things. A few Sundays ago she told us about Christ feeding five thousand people on two fishes and five loaves of bread. I think he had better try that plan now, for we hav lots of little girls and boys in Springfield that are hungry, and I know they would be willing to eat bread and fish. She tells us, too, that God is everywhere, and with us all the time, but our eyes are not the right kind to see him. If I am to go to heaven I want to see what kind of a looking creature God is before I get there, for I might not like him. I hope he is better looking than they picture the devil, but then papa and mamma say there is no such a being as the devil. I must not tire you this time, and may be you will let me tell you more about our Sunday-school some other time. I am nine years old and in the third room at school. I nearly always get one hundred per cent on everything that I do. I hav a little sister, Gracie, seven years old, and a brother five years old. This is my first letter. I am a little seeker for truth. Lulu D. Neihart.

[A bright girl is Lulu, and her first letter is bright too.—Ed. C. C.]

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

Essays on the Sacred Language, Writings, and Religion of the Parsis. By Marten Haug, Ph. D., Late Professor of Sanskrit and comparative philology at the University of Munich. An account of the ancient Zoroastrian religion and literature. Price, $4.50

Essence of Christianity. By Ludwig Feuerbach. Translated from the German by George Eliot. Price, $3.75.

Exeter Hall. A Theological Romance. "One of the most exciting romances of the day." Price, paper, 60 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Faith and Reason. A Concise Account of the Christian Religion, and of all the Prominent Religions before and since Christianity. With elaborate Index, 17 pp. By Halsey R. Stevens, Extra cloth, 12mo. 441 pp. Price, $1.50.

Family Creeds. By Wm. McDonnell, Author of "Exeter Hall." Price, cloth, $1.25; paper, 75 cents.

Festival of Ashtaroth. A tale of Palestine, founded on the destruction of the Moabites by the Jews. By A. C. Middleton. Price, 10 cents.

Figures of Hell; or, the Temples of Bacchus. Dedicated to the licensers and manufacturers of beer and whisky. By Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson. A book full of facts and figures in regard to the liquor traffic. Price, $1.

Genesis I-II: An Essay on the Bible Narrative of Creation. By A. R. Grote, A.M. Price, 50 cents.

Golden Mean on Temperance and Religion; or, Common Sense in Eating, Drinking, Thinking, and Living. By John E. Burton. Price, 10 cents.

Golden Throne. By Samuel P. Putnam, Author of "Prometheus" "Gottlieb," "Ingersoll and Jesus." A Radical Romance of pioneer life, delineating the virtues of natural humanity as opposed to the hypocrisy of a supernatural religion crowded with incident and full of progressive ideas and the poetry of the future. Price, $1.00.

Good Sense, or Natural Ideas opposed to Supernatural. Translated from the French of Baron D'Holbach, author of the "System of Nature." Price, $1.00.

Gospel of the Kingdom, According to the Holy Men of Old. By the author of "Samson, a Myth-story of the Sun." Two volumes of poetry. Price, 50 cents.

Government. An Essay by Charles Moran. Price, 20 cents.

Half Hours with Some Ancient and Modern Celebrated Freethinkers: Thomas Hobbes, Lord Bolingbroke, Condorcet, Spinoza, Anthony Collins, Descartes, M. de Voltaire, John Toland, Compte de Volney, Charles Blount, Percy Bysshe Shelley, Claude Arian Helvetius, Francis Wright Darusmont, Zeno, Epicurus, Matthew Tindall, David Hume, Dr. Thomas Burnet, Thomas Paine, Baptiste de Mirabaud, Baron de Holbach, Robert Taylor, Joseph Barker. By "Iconoclast," Collins and Watts. Price, 75 cents.

Heathens of the Heath (the). By Wm. McDonnell, Author of "Exeter Hall." Price, $1.25.

Helvetius; or, The True Meaning of the System of Nature. Translated from the French. Price, 20 cents.

Heroines of Freethought. Containing Biographical Sketches of Freethought female writers. By Mrs. Sara A. Underwood. Price, $1.75

Historical Jesus of Nazareth. By M. Schlesinger, Ph. D., Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, Now York. Extra cloth, 12mo, 68 pages. Price, 75 cents.

History of Moses, Aaron, Joshua, and others, deduced from a review of the Bible. Also remarks on the morals of the Old and New Testaments, and some of the ancient philosophers. By J. M. Dorsey. Price, 75 cents.

History of the Christian Religion to the Year 200. An exhaustive examination of the proofs of the authenticity of the books of the New Testament, showing conclusivly that the canonical gospels were unknown up to A.D. 170. By Judge Chas. B. Waite. 450 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $2.25; sheep, $3.50; half morocco, $4.00.

History of the Council of Nice, A.D. 325 with a Life of Constantine the Great, and a general exhibition of the Christian religion in the days of the early fathers. By Dean Dudley. $1.

Humanity and the Progress of International Law. By Edward W. Hearing. 15 cents.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
T. Clappison, Hamilton, Ont.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
E. A. Stevens, 750 West Lake st., Chicago.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

MONTANA.
O. B. Whitford, Butte City.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 315 North 10th st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

Mottoes for Freethinkers

We hav received a supply of illuminated motto cards, which we offer for sale. These mottoes are intended to take the place of the "God-bless-our-home" placards which disfigure the walls of so many houses. They are printed on heavy cardboard, 9 inches by 22 1-2. The motto is in black, with colored borders, with an illuminated monogram of U. M. L. The following are the various readings:

THE LIVING HAV A RIGHT TO CONTROL THE WORLD.

FREE THOUGHT WILL GIV US TRUTH.

SUPERSTITION IS THE CHILD OF SLAVERY.

REASON IS THE LAMP OF THE MIND, THE ONLY TORCH OF PROGRESS.

THE SCHOOL-HOUSE IS MY CATHEDRAL.

UNIVERSAL MENTAL LIBERTY.

THE TIME TO BE HAPPY IS NOW, AND THE PLACE TO BE HAPPY IS HERE.

NEVER TROUBLE TROUBLE TILL TROUBLE TROUBLES YOU.

THE WORLD IS MY COUNTRY; TO DO GOOD MY RELIGION.

The price of each of the foregoing is 25 cents.

For Freethought societies there is a large card 22 x 15 inches, printed in colors, with an engraved heading, containing the Nine Demands of Liberalism. Framed it makes a splendid ornament for the lecture-rooms of Liberal societies. Price, 30 cents. Any of these will be sent postpaid, securely wrapped, on receipt of price.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York City.

LITHOGRAPHS
OF
CHARLES DARWIN

Admirers of the Great Naturalist, and practically the father of Evolution, will be glad to know that we hav a fine lithograph of him for sale—size 18½x24 inches on heavy plate paper. Framed, the picture will make a splendid ornament for the parlors of Freethinkers. Price, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

Price, Twenty-Five Cents.

THE

TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL

—AND—

FREETHINKERS' ALMANAC

1886.

(E. M. 286.)

WITH THIRTY PORTRAITS OF DISTINGUISHED EUROPEAN FREETHINKERS, SCIENTISTS, AND PHILOSOPHERS, AND NUMEROUS OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
Calendar for 1886,	5
Freethought in the United States, 1885,	17
How the Church Filches from the State,	24
Public Contributions to the Church,	28
The Religion of Crime,	31
Chaplains in our Army and Navy,	32
The Higher Life. By Courtlandt Palmer,	34
My Dream. By Samuel P. Putnam,	37
The American Secular Union,	40
Statistics of our Foreign-born Population,	49
The Curate of Churnside. (Selected Story.) By Jas. Payne,	50
How Voltaire Died. By the Editor,	64
The Iron Virgin,	77
Religious Divisions of the World,	82
Paine Memorial Hall. (Illustrated),	83
The Story of 1885,	84
Immigration to the U. S. 1820–1884,	87
Freethought in Australia,	88
Freethought on the Continent,	92
Subjects of Illustration,	95
Freethought Journals,	100
Religious Denominations,	102
Area and Value of Farms,	103
Population of Large Cities,	103
Liberal Lecturers,	104

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Lick Observatory,
Girard College, Philadelphia,
Freethought Hall, Waco, Texas (Interior view),
Freethought Hall, Waco Texas (Exterior View),
The Tent,
Iron Virgin,
Paine Hall,
Moncure D. Conway,
Saladin,
Annie Besant,
Mary Wollstonecraft,
G. W. Foote,
Austin Holyoake,
J. S. Mill,
George Eliot,
Geo. Standring,
Ernst Haeckel,
Auguste Comte,
Edward Gibbon,
Max Muller,
Thos. Huxley,
Voltaire,
Chas. Darwin,
Rousseau,
Humboldt,
Byron,
Shelley,
David Hume,
Goethe,
Robert Burns,
Richard Carlile,
Herbert Spencer,
Castelar,
Bradlaugh,
Chas. A. Watts,
J. A. Froude,
John Tyndall.

NEW YORK:
THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY,
33 CLINTON PLACE.

HISTORY
OF THE
INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT
Of Europe.

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER, M.D., LL.D
Revised Edition—2 vols—Price, $3.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
tf 33 Clinton Pl., New York city.

Sabbath-Breaking.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG,
Author of "False Claims," "Bible Morals," Etc.

The best and most thorough work ever written on the Sunday Question from a rational point of view.

Large and Handsome Print.

SINGLE COPIES, - - 25 cents.
SIX COPIES, - - - $1.00.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

BOOKS ON MEDICAL AND SOCIAL SUBJECTS:

PLAIN HOME TALK AND MEDICAL COMMON SENSE. By Dr. E. B. Foote. In one handsome 12mo volume of nearly 1,000 pages, fully illustrated. Cloth, $3.25—in English or German A new cheap edition at only $1.50.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. By Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes, at $1 each, or $5 per set; or five volumes in one for $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. 250 pages, illustrated and cloth bound. (The fifth volume of "Science in Story.") 50 cents.

HAND-BOOK of Health Hints and Ready Recipes. A valuable reference pamphlet of 128 pages. By Dr. Foote. 25 cents.

SANITARY-SCIENCE SERIES (Dime Pamphlets). By Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., viz.: "Bacteria in their Relation to Disease," representing the germ theory, advocating personal and public hygiene and opposing vaccination; "Health in the Sunbeam," considering the blue-glass curé—of value to sick and well. By mail, 10 cents each.

HEREDITY (Books and Pamphlets). "The Law of Heredity," by Prof. Brooks, 336 pages, cloth bound, $2; "Heredity," by Loring Moody, 159 pages, cloth, 75 cents; "The Law of Heredity," by F. H. Marsh, 10 cents; "The Alphabet of the Human Temperaments," with illustrations, by Dr. E. B. Foote, 10 cents; "Generation before Regeneration," by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 10 cents; "Reports of Conventions and Parlor Meetings during 1882," 10 cents; "Third Annual Convention of the Institute of Heredity, May 29, 1883," 10 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

REPLY
TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S
"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."
By B. W. Lacy

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. By KERSEY GRAVES, auther of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrins. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 25 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religions history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

PAINE'S AGE OF REASON.
The Greatest of all Anti-Biblical Works.

By THOMAS PAINE,
"The Author-Hero of the Revolution."
Price, Single Copies, 25 cents. Six copies for $1.00.

THE CRISIS.
By Thomas Paine.

Speaking of this work in connection with the proposed independence of America from Great Britain, Washington wrote: "A few more such flaming arguments . . . will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation."

Price, 35 cents.

For either of these works, or any of Paine's writings, Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL.
Price, 25 cents.

S. P. Putnam's Works.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution, with some Criticisms of Universology. Price, 20 cts.

Waifs and Wanderings, a New American Story. Price, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cts. "A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Golden Throne, a Romance. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creativ spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words—the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read Golden Throne.'"—INGERSOLL. $1.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A conversation in rhyme between the Nineteenth Century Infidel and the Galilean Reformer, wherein it is shown there is much in harmony between them. Price, 10 cts.

Prometheus. A poem. "It is crammed with life, thought, and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary beauty."—DR. HENRY W. BELLOWS. $1.

Gottlieb, His Life. A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Price 25 cents.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand, and other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cts.

For all of the above address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Charles Watts's Works.

The History of Freethought. Bound in cloth and lettered. Price, $1.25. CONTENTS: Section I. Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II. What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III. Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV. Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V. Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

The American Secular Union; its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Secularism; Destructiv and Constructiv. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Christian Evidences Criticised A reply to the "Christian Evidence Society." Introduction by Charles Bradlaugh. Contents: The Origin of Christianity; The Historical Value of the New Testament; Miracles; Prophecies; The Practical Value of Christianity; The Progress of Christianity. Price, $1.

Secularism; its Principles and its Duties. Price, 75 cts.

Tracts. The following tracts by Chas. Watts are published at the low price of FIVE CENTS EACH: Defense of Secular Principles; Is the Bible Reliable? The Christian Deity; Moral Value of the Bible: Freethought and Modern Progress; Christianity, its Nature and Influence on Civilization; Philosophy of Secularism; Science and Bible Antagonistic; Christian Scheme of Redemption. For all of the above works address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

CANADIAN SECULAR UNION
LEAFLETS.

Long felt want supplied at last.

Small cost.—Concise argument.—Written in a spirit of love and candor that will

Awake Thought without arousing Prejudice.

Five Hundred of any one kind for $1.

Sabbath or Sunday, Which?—Historical. Evidence how Sabbath was Changed?—Immortality. The aims and objects of Secularism.—The Bible, What it has done for humanity,

500 for $1.

The Best Leaflets Ever Issued.

Prepared by leading lecturers, and carefully revised by committee of our most able Secularists.

Address CANADIAN SECULAR UNION,
Science Hall, Millichamps Buildings,
4t27 Adelaide St., East, Toronto, Ont.

Books on Practical Steps in Present Needs.

History of Woman's Costume Movement; its first 35 years, Events and Persecutions, Supplemented by Modern Martyrdom. 132pp., fine paper, 25c. Progress vs. Fashion. 32pp., paper, 10c. Woman's Way Out. 32pp., paper, 10c. Love and Transition. Poetic, in two parts; an Epic and an Argument. 191pp., in fine cloth and gilt, 75c.

Sent on receipt of price, by the author,
tojn1 M. E. TILLOTSON, Vineland, N. J.

SELF-CONTRADICTIONS OF THE BIBLE.

A perfectly reliable, accurate pamphlet. Though anonymous, it is now known to be the work of W. H. BURR, one of our ablest correspondents. More than 30,000 copies hav been sold. Price, 15 cents. For sale at this office.

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR
HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

This book is just what the busy world of to-day needs—a perfect compendium of history from 2,000 years B.C. on up to 1883, all in a nutshell.—Elmina Slenker.

As a text-book in schools, the book would occupy an important place; in the family it would be no less important, as conveying information that all should be acquainted with.—Susan Wixon.

Mr. Cottinger's intentions in writing this book are excellent, and his standpoint admirable. It may be commended as fulfilling its purpose of a concise and interesting historical text-book.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.
For Schools, in Quantities, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Poetry.

What Does it Matter?

Wealth, and glory, and place, and power—
What are they worth to me or you?
For the lease of life runs out in an hour,
And death stands ready to claim his due;
Sounding honors or heaps of gold,
What are they all when all is told?

A pain or a pleasure, a smile or a tear—
What does it matter which we claim?
For we step from the cradle into the bier,
And a careless world goes on the same.
Hours of gladness, or hours of sorrow,
What does it matter to us to-morrow?

Truth of love, or vow of friend—
Tender caresses or cruel sneers—
What do they matter to us in the end?
For the brief day dies, and the long night nears.
Passionate kisses, or tears of gall,
The grave will open and cover them all.

Homeless vagrant, or honored guest,
Poor and humble, or rich and great,
All are racked with the world's unrest.
All must meet with the common fate.
Life from childhood till we are old,
What is all when all is told?

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox in the Utica Herald.

The Silent Aztec.

The silence of dead centuries
That lie entombed on yonder hills
Is his. These dreamful poppy seas
Wave on; he lists! His silence fills
The land. He leans, as if he heard
God speak through some still gorgeous bird.

His babes about; the golden morn
Strikes godlike on yon holy hill;
His wife and daughter grinding corn,
"Two women grinding at a mill."
O mystery! Yon sun of old
Was god, was god and ample gold.

Yon golden hills had flocks of snow;
These valley fields had far increase.
He saw his white sails fill and blow
By poppy isles in flower seas.
The wood dove sang for him his loves,
His harshest note the soft wood dove's.

The Spaniard's hand is laid upon
His fields, his flocks, hard, fast, and tight.
But, oh! this glorious golden dawn,
The golden doors that close at night.
His gold-hued babes, her russet breast,
Are his! The world may hav the rest.

—Joaquin Miller in the Independent.

Sunday Laws.

From the Boston Herald.

If some enterprising publishing house should pick out the decisions of Massachusetts judges enforcing the Sunday laws in all their integrity, and publish the same as a work of pure fiction, entitled, "Model Madmen," the absurd story would be laughed to scorn. If such a book were looked upon as a serious matter at all, it would probably be thought by the public to be an unwarrantable libel upon the honorable and honored body of our judiciary. And yet the decisions that are to be found in the law reports of Massachusetts, which hav been pronounced by judges of the highest court of the commonwealth, appear so ridiculous that one would almost believe that they were uttered in jest by a mock court.

Happily, these Sunday laws are not always strictly enforced, for if they were it is saddening to think how many of us would be placed within prison walls for "criminal" acts committed on Sunday.

If the reader who is curious in regard to such matters will just take up the 13th Massachusetts Reports and turn to the case of Pearce vs. Atwood, he will find an instance which will interest him, for it was a splendid case of "the biter bitten." It happened away back in 1814, when there was a great attemp made to enforce the Sunday law, especially in the western part of the state, in Hampshire county and elsewhere. There was an officer in those days—the tithingman—whose special business it was to enforce the Sunday laws. The office has been long since abolished; the laws yet remain. Pearce, the plaintiff in the case referred to, was arrested by the tithingman on Sunday, and he brought suit against that individual. The supreme court held that to make the arrest on Sunday was a violation of the Sunday law, and so they sustained the action. The decision was given by Chief-justice Parker, who was a very liberal man. In that decision the chief-justice makes certain reflections which it would be well to bear in mind even at the present day. He says:

"This is not a Jewish Sabbath, so that a poor man in these days would not be stoned to death for gathering sticks on the Sabbath, although that was the punishment inflicted in the time of Moses, and although some of our ancestors so far regarded the laws of Moses as of perpctual obligation as to propose for their code the punishment of death for the crime of disregarding or carelessly observing the Sabbath. All arguments drawn from the Jewish law respecting the Sabbath are, therefore, out of place, except so far as any provisions of that law may hav been recognized and promulgated by our savior, or by the legislativ authority of our own commonwealth. We are not aware that there is upon record any express precept of our savior or of his apostles enjoining the observance of one day as more holy than others; and yet we are far from questioning the religious obligation which all Christians are under to separate to religious uses the first day of the week, since that is the time which, from the days of the apostles, was set apart for that purpose, and since the legislativ power or the uniform usage of every Christian state has exacted the observance of it as such.

"Indeed, if this argument, founded on the Jewish law, could prevail, we are at a loss to perceive how the defense set up in this case could be aided by it; for, if all work and labor be unlawful, surely the mere secular work of holding court or arresting a supposed offender must be within the general prohibition. Nor would these labors form so meritorious an exception as many works of charity which are even permitted to be done on the Christian Sabbath."

Some of the horse railroad cases are curious and interesting. In the year 1883 there was a case decided declaring that a street car conductor violates the law in running his car on Sunday. In the case referred to a conductor in the employ of the Metropolitan railroad was struck by a Highland railroad car on Sunday and injured. The injury was caused by the carelessness of the defendant, but he set up as a defense that they were all violating the law, and the court sustained that defense. The fact is that the courts were much more liberal than the legislature, and disapproved of the Sunday laws. Evidently they thought then, and think now, that the best way to hav these laws repealed is by strictly enforcing them.

In rendering the decision in the last case named, that of Day vs. Highland Street Railway, Judge Colburn says:

"It is not within our province to determin the wisdom or the expediency of the law, or how far there has been a change in public sentiment in relation to the proper manner of observing the Lord's day. These considerations are for the legislature. We can only take the law as it is written, and apply it according to its obvious meaning and the intention of the legislature.

"We do not intend to decide that a street car may not be so run on Sunday as to come within the exception of the statute and be employed in a work of necessity or charity. We only decide that in this case there was not evidence which would warrant a jury in finding that this car was run from considerations of necessity or charity, and that the jury should hav been so instructed. We cannot hold that the mere fact that some of the passengers on the car were lawfully traveling rendered the running of the car lawful." Another curious case to be found in the Massachusetts Law Reports is that of a man who went to a Spiritualist meeting and got injured. The railroad company, when sued for damages, thought they had the plaintiff, and set up as a defense that he was traveling on Sunday, but the court held that it could not decide that a Spiritualist meeting was not as good as any other

The case of Hamilton vs. the city of Boston, reported in the 14th of Allen's reports, is a very interesting one. The decision is a liberal one, and yet it sounds oddly. "We are of the opinion," says the decision, which was given in 1867, "that a person walking with a friend on Sunday evening less than half a mile, with no apparent purpose of going or stopping at any place but his own home, much less of passing out of the city, and no object of business or pleasure, except open air and gentle exercise, is not guilty of traveling or liable to punishment under this act."

In 1885 the case of Baker vs. the city of Worcester. This man was injured by a defect in the street, and sued the city for damages. Hon. W. W. Rice appeared for the plaintiff, and Hon. F. P. Goulding for the defendant. The defendant claimed that Baker was violating the law by traveling on the Lord's day. He stated that he "went out partly for exercise and partly to make a call," and that, when on his way home again, he went out of his way about an eighth of a mile. Judge Aldrich, before whom the case was tried, declared that the plaintiff was traveling in violation of the law, and ordered a verdict for the defendant. Judge Aldrich, however, is a very pious, as well as a very, very dignified man. His dignity is but rarely ruffled, say some people, although once in a great while he changes his decisions so quickly that the change may be dignified or otherwise. Upon one occasion, not very long ago, he sentenced a man to three years' imprisonment. The prisoner said, "Better make it state prison." Judge Aldrich flushed in the face, looked at the man, and then, in the tenderness of his heart, accommodated the prisoner. He made it state prison—and added another year, making it four instead of three! Wendell Phillips and Judge Thomas Russell, however, got the prisoner released at the end of the three years, believing that a year's extra imprisonment was too long for a man to serve because he asked even so dignified a judge as Peleg Emory Aldrich to change his place of residence. In that instance Judge Aldrich overruled his decision—in the Baker case the Supreme Court did the work. The decision of the Supreme Court reversing Judge Aldrich's decision, says:

"The only other ground for distinguishing the cases is that in Hamilton vs. Boston the purpose of the plaintiff in walking was merely for recreation; in this case there was also the purpose of making a social call. Neither act is prohibited by law, if that is material. It is not unlawful under the statute or as against public policy to pay friendly visits or to indulge in the recreation of walking on the Lord's day. It is unlawful to travel for the purpose of doing either; but it is not the purpose, but the fact of traveling for the purpose, that renders the act unlawful. Upon no principle can the same walk be held to be traveling if for the purpose of making a friendly call, and not traveling if for the purpose of air and exercise. The construction of the statute cannot be tenable which will hold a person to be an innocent passer-by if walking for recreation, but an unlawful traveler if walking to call upon his neighbor; and which will impose the character of a traveler violating the law upon any person who, on a Sunday evening, seeks social intercourse outside of his own household."

The case of Davis vs. the city of Somerville was where a party who was injured by a defect in the highway brought suit against the city for damages. As in the case referrred to, the defendant set up the defense that the plaintiff was traveling on the Lord's day. Davis proved that he was going to a funeral, but admitted that when returning from the funeral he made a deviation from his own proper course home, in order to enable a friend whom he was with to make a call. The court held that he had a right to go to a funeral, but that he had no right to return by any devious path, and, as he had done so, he could not maintain an action for damages. Thus it will be perceived that Herald readers need not fear to attend the funerals of friends if they happen on Sunday, but must get home by the shortest way. They may think the laws absurd, and that the decisions read like the utterances of mock judges; but they may smile—they must bear in mind that the laws are upon the statute-book and may be put in full force and operation at the instance of any crank or enemy. If any who read this should find themselvs forced to buy a horse on Sunday, and, unfortunately, get cheated, they will do well to remember that there is no redress for them in law. In such a case the Sunday laws would throw their sheltering arms around the dear scoundrel. Thus, in the interests of morality, a man may cheat his neighbor on Sunday and the law can take no notice of the transaction, although both men may be punished for trading on the Lord's day! Judge Thomas Russell once said that he was proud to be descended from the early settlers of New England, and extremely glad that he was descended by eight generations. And when one considers the Sunday laws and other of their statutes, one can well agree with the learned judge that it is much more pleasant to be a descendant than to hav lived among them when Blue Laws not only existed, but were executed in all their extremity upon the unrighteous and ungodly.

New Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

MEN, WOMEN & GODS.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER,

Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Price, Cloth, $1.00; Paper, 50 cents.

The Trade Supplied at Special Discounts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Photo-engravings of Miss Gardener are for sale at this office. Price, 40c.; with autograph, 50c.

FREETHOUGHT WORKS.

For Sale at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

Hume's Essays. Essays and treatises on various subjects. By DAVID HUME, Esq. With a brief sketch of the author's life and writings, to which are added dialogues concerning natural religion. Price, $1.50.

Idols and Ideals, with an Essays on Christianity. By MONCURE D. CONWAY, the brilliant Rationalistic preacher of London. $1.50.

If, Then, and When. From the doctrins of the Church. By WARREN SUMNER BARLOW. 10 cents.

Image Breaker (the). By JOHN E. REMSBURG. Six lectures bound together, 25 cents. Separately, 5 cents each. 1. The Decline of Faith; 2. Protestant Intolerance; 3. Washington an Unbeliever; 4. Jefferson an Unbeliever; 5. Paine and Wesley; The Christian Sabbath.

Infidel's or Inquirer's Text-book, being the substance of thirteen lectures on the Bible. By ROBERT COOPER. $1.

Ingersoll in Canada. A Reply to Wendling, Archbishop Lynch, "Bystander," and others. By ALLEN PRINGLE. 15 cents.

Is Life Worth Living. By WILLIAM H. MALLOCK. Contents: The New Import of the Question, Morality and the Prize of Life, Sociology as the Fountain of Morality, Goodness as its own Reward, Love as the test of Goodness, Life as its own Reward, The Superstition of Positivism, The Practical Prospect. The Logic of Scientific Negation, Morality, and Natural Theism, The Human Race and Revelation, Universal History and the claims of the Christian Church, Belief and Will. Paper $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Jehovah Unveiled; or, The Character of the Jewish Deity Delineated. A new and valuable book. 35 cents.

Kneeland's National Hymns. 35 cts.

Koran (the). A new English edition of the Koran of Mohammed, to which is added the life of Mohammed, or the history of that doctrin which was begun and carried on by him in Arabia. Price, $1.50

Letters of Junius. Two volumes in one. From the latest London edition. $1.50.

Letters to Eugenia; or, A Preservativ Against Religious Prejudices. By Baron D'HOLBACH, author of the "System of Nature," etc. Translated from the French by ANTHONY C. MIDDLETON, M.D. Price, $1.00.

Life of Paine. By J. E. REMSBURG. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Life of Thomas Paine, author of "Common Sense," "Rights of Man," "Age of Reason," etc., with critical and explanatory observations on his writings. By GILBERT VALE. $1.00.

Love and Transition: A Plea in poetry for the practicalization of known truth. By MARY E. TILLOTSON. $1.00.

Love Ventures of Tom, Dick, and Harry. A Spicy Narrativ. "And they were naked and not ashamed." 50 cents.

Man's Nature and Development. By HENRY GEORGE ATKINSON, F. G. S., and HARRIET MARTINEAU. $1.50.

Modern Thinkers: What they Think and Why. (Principally on Social Science.) By VAN BEUREN DENSLOW, LL. D., with an introduction by R. G. Ingersoll. With eight portraits: Comte, Swedenborg, Adam Smith, Jeremy Bentham, Thomas Paine, Fourier, Herbert Spencer, and Ernst Haeckel. 384 pages. $1.50.

Moral Education: Its Laws and Methods. By Prof. J. R. BUCHANAN. A new method to conquer crime, disease, and misery, which churches, colleges, and governments have signally failed to do. $1.50.

Moral Physiology; A Brief and Plain Treatis on the Population Question. By ROBERT DALE OWEN. 60 cents.

Mortality of the Soul and the Immortality of its Elements. By A. SNIDER DE PELLEGRINI. 10 cents.

Myths and Myth-Makers: Old Tales and Superstitions interpreted by comparative Mythology. By JOHN FISKE, M.A. LL.B., of Harvard College. $2.

Origin and Development of Religious Ideas and Beliefs, as manifested in history and seen by reason. By MORRIS FINSTEIN. $1.

Orthodox Hash, with a Change of Diet. By WARREN SUMNER BARLOW. 10 cents.

Paradise Lost; or, The Great Dragon Cast Out. 60 cents.

Personal Immortality and Other Papers. By JOSIE OPPENHEIM. Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages. 75 cents.

Ingersoll's Works.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising, "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cts; cloth, 1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Ebon C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50cts; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50cts; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to Be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black, and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo, paper, 10 cents. $1.00 per doz. post paid. Printed in large, clear type, and containing as much as could be delivered in two ordinary lectures. This makes a grand missionary document. Liberals should scatter it generously.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscan. 5 cents; 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3. Millions of these should be circulated.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer, by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 10 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 15 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume. To meet the demand for Mr. Ingersoll's works, the publisher has had all his lectures, except the latest on "Orthodoxy," bound in one beautiful volume, in half calf, library style, and containing over 1,300 pages, which is sold at the exceedingly low price of $5. Sent by mail postpaid.

Tributes. There hav been so many applications for Mr. Ingersoll's "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," the "Grant Banquet Toast," and the recent address over "Little Harry Miller's Grave," that they hav been printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing, and the four will be forwarded to any address, for 50cts, or either one for 15cts.

Prose Poems and Selections. This new book is a gem. It is a model in every respect. In fact, one of the richest, brightest, best ever issued. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," never before published, and all the famous "tributes" heretofore printed in various shapes, but never brought together till now, many other gems, selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, letters, table-talks, and day-to-day conversations of the author. The work is designed for and will be accepted by admiring friends as a rare personal souvenir. To help it serve this purpose, a fine steel portrait, with autograph fac simile, has been prepared especially for it. Price, in silk cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50; in half calf, mottled edges, elegant library style, $4.50; in full Turkey morocco, gilt, exquisitly fine, $7.50; in full tree calf, highest possible style and finish, $9.

The Busts of Voltaire, Paine, and Ingersoll. Cabinet size; true to life, price, $1.50 each. Every admirer of these apostles of Religious Liberty should hav them.

Photographs of Colonel Ingersoll. Superb photographs, 22x28, $5; panel, 10½x17, $3; boudoir, $1; cabinet, 40 cents; card, 20 cts.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,

J. E. Remsburg's Works.

False Claims. Revised and Enlarged. Price, 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Antislavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture: Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbatic Idea; The Jewish Sabbath; The Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; The Sabbath during the Middle Ages; The Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; six copies, $1.00.

Image Breaker. Six Lectures: Decline of Faith, Protestant Intolerance, Washington an Unbeliver; Jefferson an Unbeliever; Paine and Wesley; Christian Sabbath. Each 5 cents; bound, paper, 25 cents; per doz. 40 cts.

Thomas Paine. The Apostle of Religious and Political Liberty. Tells the story of the Author-Hero's life, delineates the leading traits of his character and genius, and vindicates his name from the aspersions cast upon it. Choice extracts from "Common Sense," "American Crisis," "Rights of Man," and "Age of Reason" are given; also, tributes to Paine's character from more than one hundred noted persons of Europe and America, many of them written expressly for this work. Second edition, 160 pages, printed on fine tinted paper, neatly bound, and containing a handsome steel portrait of Paine. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Apostle of Liberty. An address delivered in Paine Hall, before the N. E. Freethinkers' Convention, January 29, 1884. Price, 10 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Ingersoll's Tributes.

REDUCED IN PRICE.

We hav made arrangements whereby we can offer these magnificent prose poems of Mr. Ingersoll's at greatly reduced prices. The Tributes are printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22 inches, illuminated border, large clear type, suitable for framing. The titles are:

The Vision of War,
Tribute to his Brother,
The Grant Banquet Toast,
Address at Harry Miller's Grave.

The price of these heretofore has been $1. We offer them now at FIFTEEN CENTS EACH; THE FOUR FOR FIFTY CENTS. Mailed secure from breakage. Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

SOCIAL WEALTH.

The Sole Factors and Exact Ratios in Its Acquirement and Apportionment.

By J. K. INGALLS.

CONTENTS: Economic Schools: a brief review of their Origin and Growth; Rise and Growth of Capitalism; Unearned Increase: profit, interest, rent; Conservation of Wealth; Tools and Improved Machinery; The Nature of Wages; Private and Social Wealth; Land Ownership; Private Property in Land; Capital and the Productiv Factors; Partnership and Co-operation; Law of Contracts; Money and Credit; Of Value or Economic Ratios; Taxation as a Remedy; Reforms, not Remedies; Suggestions to Legislators; Conclusion.

Price, Cloth, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
Clinton Place, New York.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM,

The Present and the Future Republic of North America.

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is in communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously and interestingly written.

Price $1.50.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

A STUDY OF PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY

BY LEWIS G. JANES.

This book treats of the natural evolution of the Christian religion, its historical antecedents in Palestinian Judaism and Roman Paganism; investigates the history of the founder of Christianity in the light of the latest scientific criticism of the New Testament; shows that the true story of the Man Jesus, and his genuin teachings are separable from the later legendary accretions which hav confounded him with the mythical Christ, and traces the natural development of Christian dogma and ecclesiastical institutions. Complete references and full index. 320pp. 8vo, cloth, gilt top. Price $1.50.

Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER Office.

A SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF

APOLLONIUS OF TYANA,

OR THE

First Ten Decades of Our Era.

BY

DANIEL M. TREDWELL.

Designed to show upon the authority of History that Apollonius of Tyana performed miracles and spoke wise sayings equal to those attributed to Jesus Christ. 350pp., octavo, best style. Price $2.50.

Sold at THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

THE ORDER OF CREATION.

A Discussion Between

Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton, Reville.

On the Conflict between Genesis and Geology.

CONTENTS:

I. Dawn of Creation and of Worship. By Hon. W. E. Gladstone.
II. The Interpreters of Genesis and the Interpreters of Nature. By Prof. T. H. Huxley.
III. Postscript to Solar Myths. By Prof. Max Muller.
IV. Proem to Genesis: A Plea for a Fair Trial. By Hon. W. E. Gladstone.
V. Dawn of Creation. An Answer to Mr. Gladstone. By Albert Reville, D.D.
VI. Mr. Gladstone and Genesis. By Prof. T. H. Huxley.
VII. A Protest and a Plea. By Mrs. E. Lynn Linton.

This is a new book and contains the latest discussion on the mistakes of Moses. The names of the participants are a guarantee of its able character.

Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

ADAMI AND HEVA.

BY S. P. PUTMAM.

A poetic version of the Indian Story of the Garden of Eden, in which its superiority to the mutilated copy—the Genesis legend—is shown.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE HUMBOLDT LIBRARY.

Price 15 cents each number, unless otherwise marked.

1. Light Science for Leisure Hours. A series of familiar essays on astronomical and other natural phenomena. By Richard A. Proctor, F.R.A.S.
2. The Forms of Water in Clouds and Rivers, Ice and Glaciers. 19 illustrations. By John Tyndall, F.R.S.
3. Physics and Politics. An application of the principles of Natural Science to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot, Author of "The English Constitution."
4. Man's Place in Nature. With numerous illustrations. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
5. Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. By Herbert Spencer.
6. Town Geology. With Appendix on Coral and Coral Reefs. By Charles Kingsley.
7. Conservation of Energy. With numerous Illustrations. By Balfour Stewart, LL.D.
8. Study of Languages, brought back to its True principles. By C. Marcel.
9. The Data of Ethics. By Herbert Spencer.
10. Theory of Sound in its Relation to Music. Numerous illustrations. By By Prof. Pietro Blaserna.
11. 12. The Naturalist on the River Amazon. A record of 11 years' travel. By Henry Walter Bates, F.L.S. Not sold separately.
13. Mind and Body. The theories of their relations. By Alexander Bain, LL.D.
14. The Wonders of the Heavens. 32 illustrations. By Camille Flammarion.
15. Longevity. The means of prolonging life after middle age. By John Gardner, M.D.
16. Origin of Species. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
17. Progress: Its Law and Cause. With other disquisitions. By Herbert Spencer.
18. Lessons in Electricity. 60 illustrations. By John Tyndall, F.R.S.
19. Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. By Richard A. Proctor.
20. Romance of Astronomy. By R. Kalley Miller, M.A.
21. The Physical Basis of Life, with other essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
22. Seeing and Thinking. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.
23. Scientific Sophisms. A review of current theories concerning Atoms, Apes, and Men. By Samuel Wainwright, D.D.
24. Popular Scientific Lectures. Illustrated. By Prof. H. Helmholtz.
25. Origin of Nations. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, Oxford University.
26. The Evolutionist at Large. By Grant Allen.
27. History of Landholding in England. By Joseph Fisher, F.R.H.S.
28. Fashion in Deformity, as illustrated in the customs of Barbarous and Civilized Races. Numerous illustrations. By William Henry Flower, F.R.S.
29. Facts and Fictions of Zoology. Numerous illustrations. By Andrew Wilson, Ph. D.
30. 31. Study of Words. By Richard Chenevix Trench.
32. Hereditary Traits and other Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.
33. Vignettes from Nature. By Grant Allen.
34. Philosophy of Style. By Herbert Spencer.
35. Oriental Religions. By John Caird, Pres. Univ. Glasgow, and Others.
36. Lectures on Evolution. Illustrated. By Prof. T. H. Huxley.
37. Six Lectures on Light. Illustrated. By John Tyndall.
38. 39. Geological Sketches. By Archibald Geikie, F.R.S.
40. The Evidence of Organic Evolution. By Geo. J. Romanes, F.R.S.
41. Current Discussions in Science. By W. M. Williams, F.C.S.
42. History of the Science of Politics. By Frederick Pollock.
43. Darwin and Humboldt. By Professor Huxley, Professor Agassiz, and others.
44. 45. Dawn of History. By C. F. Keary, of the British Museum.
46. Diseases of Memory. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald.
47. Childhood of Religions. By Edward Clodd, F.R.A.S.
48. Life in Nature. Illustrated. By Jas. Hinton.
49. The Sun: its Constitution; its Phenomena; its Condition. By Judge Nathan T. Carr, Columbus, Ind.
50. 51. Money and the Mechanism of Exchange. By Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, F.R.S.
52. Diseases of the Will. By Th. Ribot. Translated from the French by J. Fitzgerald.
53. Animal Automatism, and other Essays. By Prof. T. H. Huxley, F.R.S.
54. Birth and Growth of Myth. By Edward Clodd. F.R.A.S.
55. Scientific Basis of Morals, and other Essays. By William Kingdon Clifford, F.R.S.
56. 57. Illusions. By James Sully.
58. 59. The Origin of Species. By Charles Darwin. Two double numbers, 30 cents each.
60. Childhood of the World. By Edward Clodd.
61. Miscellaneous Essays. By Richard A. Proctor.
62. Religions of the Ancient World. By Prof. Geo. Rawlinson, University of Oxford. Double number, 30 cents.
63. Progressive Morality. By Thomas Fowler, LL.D., president of Corpus Christi College, Oxford.
64. Distribution of Animals and Plants. By A. Russel Wallace and W. T. Thiselton Dyer.
65. Conditions of Mental Development; and other Essays. By Wm. Kingdon Clifford.
66. Technical Education; and other Essays. By Thomas H. Huxley, F.R.S.
67. The Black Death. An Account of the Great Pestilence of the Fourteenth Century. By J. F. C. Hecker.
68. (Special number, 10 cents.) Three Essays, by Herbert Spencer.
69. (Double Number, 30 cents). Fetichism: A Contribution to Anthropology and the History of Religion. By Fritz Schultze, Ph.D. Translated from the German by J. Fitzgerald, M.A.
70. Essays Speculativ and Practical. By Herbert Spencer.
71. Anthropology. By Daniel Wilson, LL.D. With Appendix on Archeology. By E. B. Tylor, F.R.S.
72. The Dancing Mania of the Middle Ages. By J. F. C. Hecker, M.D.
73. Evolution in History, Language, and Science. Four Addresses delivered at the London Crystal Palace School of Art, Science, and Literature.
74. The Descent of Man; and selection in relation to Sex. By Charles Darwin. In 4 parts. 15 cents each.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

SCIENCE LECTURES.

Liberal friends visiting Philadelphia should attend the Spring Course of Science Lectures every Sunday evening, at the Hall of Friendship League, Ninth and Girard ave.

Debate at 2:30 (Secular questions).

PROF. ATKINSON, F.R.A.S.

FRIENDSHIP LIBERAL LEAGUE No. 257

meets every Sunday in Industrial Hall, Broad and Wood sts., at 2:30 and 7:30 P.M. for lectures and free discussions on religious and social questions. Able speakers interest the audience. N.B.—Truth Seeker publications always on hand at cheap rates.

BACON AND SHAKSPERE.

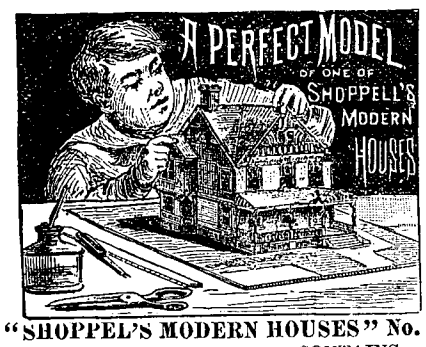
Proof that Wm. Shakspere could not write. The Sonnets written by Francis Bacon to the Earl of Essex and his bride, A.D., 1590. By WM. HENRY BURR. Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

SPECIAL SALE!

Desiring to unload an accumulation of debts, I will offer until further notice all my elegant stock of fine goods at

WHOLESALE COST.

An elegant pair of diamond ear-drops $200, worth $300; another pair, $125, worth $200; another pair, $65, worth $100; an elegant brooch, arabesque style, 17 diamonds, $140, worth $225; another, line of beauty, 11 diamonds, $220; worth $325; another, 3 stones, $125, worth $200; same, $80, worth $125. Rings and studs same reductions. Smaller diamond goods 25 per cent below lowest market price. A superb, extra heavy, embossed case watch set with large diamond, $135, worth $200; lady's watch to match, $90, worth $125; $100 watches, $70; $80 watches, $60; $65 watches, $50; solid gold chains, necklaces, bracelets, and jewelry, 25 per cent discount. Sent C. O. D., subject to inspection, or cash refunded if not satisfactory.



BUY NOW AND SAVE MONEY.
OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove. He has for twenty years treated exclusivly all diseases of the Sexual Organs, in the cures of which he stands preeminent SPERMATORRHŒA and IMPOTENCY as the result of self-abuse in youth and sexual excesses in maturer years, causing night emissions by dreams, loss of sexual power, rendering marriage improper and unhappy, etc., are cured permanently by an outside application in sixty days. NO STOMACH MEDICIN USED. It is one of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries, which is entirely unknown to the medical profession. It is not a catch-penny get up, such as a pad, belt, pastille, nor magnetic appliance, but simply a medicin to be applied externally on the parts affected, which cures by absorption. Send five 2-cent stamps for his "Private Counselor," giving full information. Address Dr. R. P. Fellows, Vineland, N. J., and say where you saw this advertisment.

N. B.—Dr. Fellows begs leave to say that he is an Infidel of the most pronounced character. Bro. Liberals, your patronage is solicited.

"SHOPPEL'S MODERN HOUSES" No. 3.

(Just Published, July 1, 1886) CONTAINS:

A colored frontispiece showing the modern style of painting.

A cardboard supplement, ingeniously drawn and colored, to supply all the neccessary pieces for constructing a model house, with plain directions for putting them together.

While the supplement affords both old and young the greatest amusement, it is more than a toy. It is, in fact, a most practical lesson in Architecture; a perfect, scaled model of one of our most popular designs, so exact that it is useful to builders.

55 New Designs for Residences (cost varying from $500 to $15,000).
2 New Designs for Barns.
1 New Design for a Chapel.
Drawings and description of a model Kitchen (by Maria Parloa) and a perfect Cistern.
An Article on Villa Park Associations.

SENT, POSTPAID, ON RECEIPT OF PRICE, $1.

Address
THE CO-OPERATIVE BUILDING PLAN ASS'N
191 Broadway (Box 2702), New York.

WANTED—Lady agents actually clear $20 daily with my wonderful entirely new patent rubber undergarments for females. A minister's wife sold 13 first hour. MADAM H. N. LITTLE,
6t27 Box 443, Chicago, Ill.

A SHORT LESSON IN HISTORY.

A double-page picture contrasting science and theology, showing how the one has labored for human advancement, and how the other has always opposed it.

Price, six copies, 30 cents; one dozen, 50 cents; twenty-five copies for $1; one hundred copies for $3. We wish that the friends of Freethought would distribute thousands of these telling pictures.

THE MODERN BALAAM.

Showing the Balaam of modern times to be the priests. It is a splendid pictorial argument. Price per dozen, 30 cents per hundred, $1.50.

News of the Week.

EIGHT French torpedo boats were lost in a recent storm with their crews.

LAST Monday was Orangeman's day. It was celebrated in Belfast, Ireland, and other places. As usual, there were collisions between the Catholics and Protestants.

C. D. GRAHAM, the Philadelphia cooper, went through the whirlpool rapids at Niagara Falls, last Sunday, in a barrel of his own construction. He was considerably shaken up, but came out uninjured.

THE prohibitory act in Rhode Island is having the effect to close up some hotels. The Rhode Island liquor dealers need to take lessons from their brothers in Maine, who sell liquor regardless of prohibitory statutes.

BROOKLYN nuns hav been in the habit of sending children to this city to beg money of saloon and store keepers. Last week the children were arrested, taken back, and the nuns warned against further violation of the vagrancy laws.

PARSON DOWNS, of Boston, is again in trouble. This time an unmarried member of his congregation swears that the Rev. Mr. Downs is the father of her child. The grand jury hav found a bill of indictment against the accused clergyman.

THE Brooklyn Socialists held a mass-meeting last Sunday at which all those connected with the trial and punishment of the boycotters were fiercely denounced and resolutions passed boycotting, as a "last trump card to be played," the existing political parties.

IN the suit of the Bankers and Merchants' Telegraph Company against the Western Union, in which two million dollars' damages were claimed, the jury returned a verdict for $240,000. The rulings of the court also leave the Bankers and Merchants' company free to sue in other states.

WAITE, the confessing member of the board of "boodle" aldermen, has been locked in the House of Detention because he ate so much that the district attorney could not afford to keep him. He will now liv at the county's expense, and Mr. Martine can lay by a little money for a rainy day.

SIX boycotters were convicted in one of the courts of this city last week. Three men were sentenced to the city prison for ten days, two to thirty days in the same institution, and one to the same period in the penitentiary. The men were all foreigners, and most of them could not speak English.

IN the recent election of members of Parliament, England, Gladstone and the Home Rulers hav suffered defeat. It is reported from London that Lord Salisbury is negotiating with Lord Hartington for the formation of a coalition ministry, on a basis of certain concessions to Ireland and the laboring classes throughout the empire.

A NEGRO murderer was hanged in the Tombs yard on Friday the 9th inst. He died in full hope of a glorious resurrection and immortal life. He was attended during his last hours by a priest and several sisters of charity. He confessed and received the last sacrament. He is now in heaven. His victim, a married woman with whom he was intimate, is in sheol.

THE Liquor-Dealers' Protectiv Association of this city, at a meeting held on the 8th, resolved in favor of Sunday closing, and demanded that the mayor enforce the Sunday law—close groceries and butcher and barber shops, and "hold them to the strictest letter of the law." In this way they hope to induce the public to demand of the legislature a repeal of the Sunday law.

THE steamer Alameda from New Zealand brings news of a fearful volcanic eruption in that country last month. An entire range of mountains, 120 by 20 miles, emitted forth fire and smoke, accompanied with earthquake rumblings, and in some instances violent explosions. Many small nativ villages were entirely destroyed. Twenty-one lives are known to hav been lost.

AMERICAN fishing vessels engaged in catching small herring for the sardine-canning industry hav been warned away from the coast of New Brunswick. The Canadian authorities avow that they will not permit Americans to catch herring along their shores for any purpose whatever. Secretary of State Bayard has remonstrated to the British minister. It is probable that the price of French sardines will now rise.

Gems of Thought.

ENGLAND is under a pitiable subserviency to the theological machinery that burdens the world, which it must learn to throw off before it can be truly free.—D. M. Bennett.

"DESIGN, represented as a search after final cause until we come to a first cause," says F. W. Newman, "is an argument, I confess, that brings me no satisfaction." Design implies the use of means for the attainment of ends. Man designs, plans, contrives, and uses secondary agencies to accomplish his purposes, because unable to attain his ends directly. But how absurd to speak of contrivance and design in a being of infinit power and knowledge! Man, to build a steamship, has to fell trees and hew them into various shapes; get iron from the earth and smelt it in furnaces, and work it into bolts, braces, nails, etc.; hundreds of workmen, carpenters, joiners, blacksmiths, cabinet-makers, painters, etc., labor for months before the vessel can be launched. If man possessed the power to speak into existence a steamship, would he contrive, plan, and use means to construct it? On the contrary, would it not come instantly into existence as a complete and perfect whole?—B. F. Underwood.

WHAT parallel can there be between an enormous and a very moderate expenditure, or between prodigious luxury and ordinary comfort? If a man taxes me with having squandered fifty dollars on a repast, is it an irrefutable retort to tell him that he has spent fifty cents? The limited and rational expenditures of an industrious man produce no evils, economical, social, or moral. I contend that the unlimited and irrational expenditure of idle millionaires does; that it wastes labor, breeds luxury, creates unhappiness by propagating factitious wants, too often engenders vice, and is injurious for the most part to real civilization. The most malignant feelings which enter into the present struggle between classes hav been generated by the ostentation of idle wealth in contrast with surrounding poverty. It would, of course, be absurd to say this of a man living on a small income, in a modest home, and in a plain way.—Goldwin Smith.

Wi' sma' to sell and less to buy,
Aboon distress below envy,
Oh, who would leave this humble state,
For a' the pride of a' the great?

Amid their flarin', idle toys,
Amid their cumbrous, dinsome joys,
Can they the peace and pleasure feel
Of Bessy at her spinning wheel? —Burns.

EVILS are not the less by reason of their continuance, nor the lighter for having been foreseen, and it is folly to ruminate on evils to come, or such as, perhaps, never may come; every evil is disagreeable enough when it does come, but he who is constantly considering that some evil may befall him is loading himself with a perpetual evil, and even should such evil never light on him, he voluntarily takes on himself unnecessary misery, so that he is under constant uneasiness, whether he actually suffers any evil, or only thinks of it.—Cicero.

To measure life, learn then betimes, and know
Toward solid good what leads the nearest way;
For other things mild heaven a time ordains,
And disapproves that care, though wise in show,
That with superfluous burden loads the day,
And, when God sends a cheerful hour, refrains.
—Milton.

TAKE, therefore, no thought for the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof. —Jesus.

THE further we go in philosophy and religion, the less dogmatic and positiv we can be. If we see but one point, one side of truth, we are apt to assert most vehemently that we are right, and we alone. But if our vision is extended, if we see more than one side, we grow less positiv. Our belief is less narrow and intolerant. In one sense it is undoubtedly true that the more light we hav the more we doubt. We see this exemplified everywhere. The quack, acquainted with but one set of symptoms, and with no knowledge of all the complicated influences which may affect the disease of his patient, is the most positiv of men. The broad, cultured physician is much less certain.—Stoddard's New Faith.

SEEST thou a man wise in his own conceit? There is more hope of a fool than of him. The sluggard is wiser, in his own conceit, than seven men that can render a reason.—Prov. xxvi, 12, 16.

THE infidel is he who deliberately declines to speak what he thinks, or to trust humanity with what helpful truth has been entrusted to himself. I could not but smile to hear it said the other day, "One assumes an awful responsibility to teach a doctrin not sanctioned by the church." What is that, I thought, to the audacity of refusing your own honest doubt?—Sam. Johnson, D.D.

To discuss the credibility of the miraculous conception and birth would be to offer an insult to the human understanding. Keightley's "Mythology of Greece and Italy," and Sir Wm. Jones's "Gods of India," giv many precedents of sons of gods miraculously born. Italy, Greece, and India must, however, yield the palm to Judea. The incarnate Chrishna must giv way to the incarnate Christ. A miraculous birth would be scouted to-day as monstrous; antedate it two thousand years, and we worship it as a miracle.—Bradlaugh's When were Our Gospels Written?

HE that loves a rosy cheek,
Or a coral lip admires,
Or from starlike eyes doth seek
Fuel to maintain its fires,
As old Time makes them decay,
So his flames must waste away.

But a smooth and steadfast mind,
Gentle thoughts and calm desires,
Hearts with equal love combined,
Kindle never-dying fires;
Where these are not, I despise
Lovely cheeks, or lips, or eyes.
—Thomas Carew.

Odds and Ends.

A LADY once said she could always know when she had taken too much wine at dinner—her husband's jokes began to seem funny.

MR. FROUDE says the Irish cannot govern themselvs. Perhaps Mr. Froude has heard how the Irish govern American cities, and based his opinion on the impression thus made.

Now doth the howling swell who can't afford to go to the country, begin to take a kindlier view of the farmer relativ in the swamp at Wayback, whom he called a yokel and a yop last December.

SHEEP placed on Key West Island lose their wool in the second year. We hav an Island in the East River with the same peculiarity, only a little more so. Prisoners usually lose their wool about fifteen minutes after they arrive.

"A HEN has to feet." "He done it." This was what Superintendent B. B. Russell, of Brockton, placed upon the blackboard for the pupils to correct. This was the way one boy corrected it: "He didn't done it; God done it."

THIS is the time of the year when the definition of the word "ridicnle" is keenly understood and appreciated by the small boy who appears among his companions for the first time this year just after his hair has been sliced off by his mother.

BOBBY had spent the greater part of Sunday afternoon committing to memory the Lord's Prayer. As he knelt at his mother's knee at bedtime, he looked up to her and said: "Mama, won't God be surprised when he finds I can say two prayers?"

IT must seem sort of queer to H. R. Wilson to be investigated by twenty Presbyterian clergymen. But then, clergymen hav been investigated so much themselvs lately that they simply monopolized the situation, and it seems eminently proper that some one else should hav a chance.

AMANDA: "Reginald, I understand you hav been circulating the report that we are engaged around town." Reginald: "And so we are, my dear." Amanda: "Yes, I know; but it seems as though a man who cared for my future happiness ought not to say anything that will prevent me marrying some good man."

AGAINST her conscience. Scene—Highlands. Sunday. Tourist: "Can you sell us threepenny worth of milk, Missus?" Mrs. McJob: "Whit did ye say? Losh me! Sell mulk on the Saubath day? Na, na! I couldna' dae that; but as ye seem dacent boys, I'll jist gie ye thripence worth for naethin', an' ye'll jist mak me a praesent o' a shullin'."

COMING out of the theater, the other night, after the impressiv performance of Booth's "Hamlet," attention was drawn to the effusiv delight of a young lady who was thus trying apparently to show her gratitude to the gentleman upon whose arm she was resting: "I've had a real good time, George," said she, "and it's a real lovely play. It's so full of quotations."

A PRACTICAL application of scripture: Winnie's mother had been combing the little girl's long and handsome but wind-tangled, romp-snarled hair. When the operation was finished—and it was not unaccompanied with severe pulls—Winnie asked, "Did you get out many hairs, mamma?" "Yes, dear, was the answer, "quite a good many." "Then God'll hav to number them all over again, won't he?"

A DAKOTIAN met an old friend while on an eastern trip. "I hear that Bill Applejack, who went out to your country, has failed in business.' "Yes." "Hard times?" "No." "Too much competition?" "No, I think not." "Too little attention to business?" "Oh, no, he worked hard." "I don't see why he failed, then." "Well, you see, a few determined gentlemen on the board of trade got a new inch rope around his neck and forced him to make an assignment." "Horses?" "Horses."

A WISE FATHER.

Youth: "I hav come to ask you for the hand of your daughter."

Physician: "You hav?"

Y.: "Yes, sir. I hav enough of this world's good's to support her in comfort, even in luxury."

P.: "Yes, I am aware of that, but will you treat her kindly? Will you be a gentle husband?"

Y.: "Sir, I swear—"

P.: "Oh! never mind swearing. Your intentions are all right, no doubt, but I must be sure that you won't worry and fret the life out of her after you get her. Take off your coat and let me sound you to see what kind of a liver you've got."

FIVE CENTIMENTAL.

The sun was just setting upon the western horizon, when a solitary horsecar might hav been seen wending its way up-town.

Its refulgent beams touched with a ruddy glow the nose of a tramp on the further end of the seat, and lent a club flush to the pale cheek of the youth who sat on the nearer end, while it kissed the ripe lips of the maid who sat between them to a deeper crimson.

The youth, who had been eyeing the maiden all the way up town to the full extent of his powers, sighed, and for the fiftieth time tried to attract her attention. Fair, indeed, seemed to him the unconscious beauty, and his opinion seemed to be confirmed by the conductor, who just then came along and yelled:

"Fare!"

The youth handed him a ten-cent piece. The young lady passed him a five-cent piece, which he at once handed to the youth in change.

The five-cent piece had a hole in it, but the youth did not refuse it. He saw his chance.

Glancing sentimentally at the young lady, he raised it to his lips, aud then hung it on his watch-chain as a souvenir.

It was neatly done, but then the young lady having courteously passed along the tramp's nickel, paid her own fare with a free ticket.

The conductor smiled, and the tramp said musingly:

"Ah, there, Arthur, don't put your arm around me until we get beyond the houses."—Puck.

Paine Vindicated!

A thorough and overwhelming reply to the New York Observer's slanderous attacks upon the Author-Hero of the American Revolution. Containing both the slanders and their refutation.

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The New York Observer (Presbyterian) having recently reissued its assault upon the memory of Paine, this pamphlet should be circulated everywhere in vindication.

60pp. Price 10 cents; 12 copies, $1.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC CANARD

A Fabricated Account of a Scene at the Death-bed of Thomas Paine.

BY W. H. BURR.

This pamphlet shows that the account of Paine's dying moments attributed to Bishop Fenwick (upon which the Observer relies to prove its principal charges) is a forgery, it being impossible that Fenwick could hav written the alleged account.

18pp. Price 5 cents; 25 for $1.00.

For these two pamphlets address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

BIBLE MYTHS

AND THEIR

Parallels in Other Religions.

Being a Comparison of the Old and New Testament Myths and Miracles with those of heathen nations of Antiquity, Considering also their Origin and Meaning. With numerous illustrations.

The object of the work is to point out the myths with which the Old and New Testaments abound; to show that they were held in common with other nations; and then trace them to their evident origin and explain their meaning.

"It is unquestionable true that the results of a rationalistic study of the Christian scriptures are nowhere else so accessible as they are now made in the work before us."—N. Y. Sun.

1 vol. 8vo. Cloth. About 600 pages.

Price, $3.50.

THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Place, New York.

MOSES BEFORE THE COURT;
OR,
The Forgery of the Old Testament.
Dedicated to the clergy
BY
H. J. SEIGNEURET,
Secularist.

Price, - - - - - 10 cents.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.

THE CONVENTIONAL LIES OF OUR CIVILIZATION.

From the German of MAX NORDAU.

SEVENTH EDITION.

A most powerfully written book.—Phila. Record. This Book is not a Book! It is a Deed! and those who oppose it will prove that they fear it.—Vienna News. Price, 50 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY:

OR,

MEN OF BUSINESS WHO DID SOMETHING BESIDES MAKING MONEY.

A BOOK FOR YOUNG AMERICANS.

BY JAMES PARTON.

This book contains 400 pages, plainly printed, treating of forty-six characters in history who hav helped the world; together with eight portraits. Mr. Parton's works need no commendation. They are standard.

Price, - - - - - $1.25.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

THE RISE OF

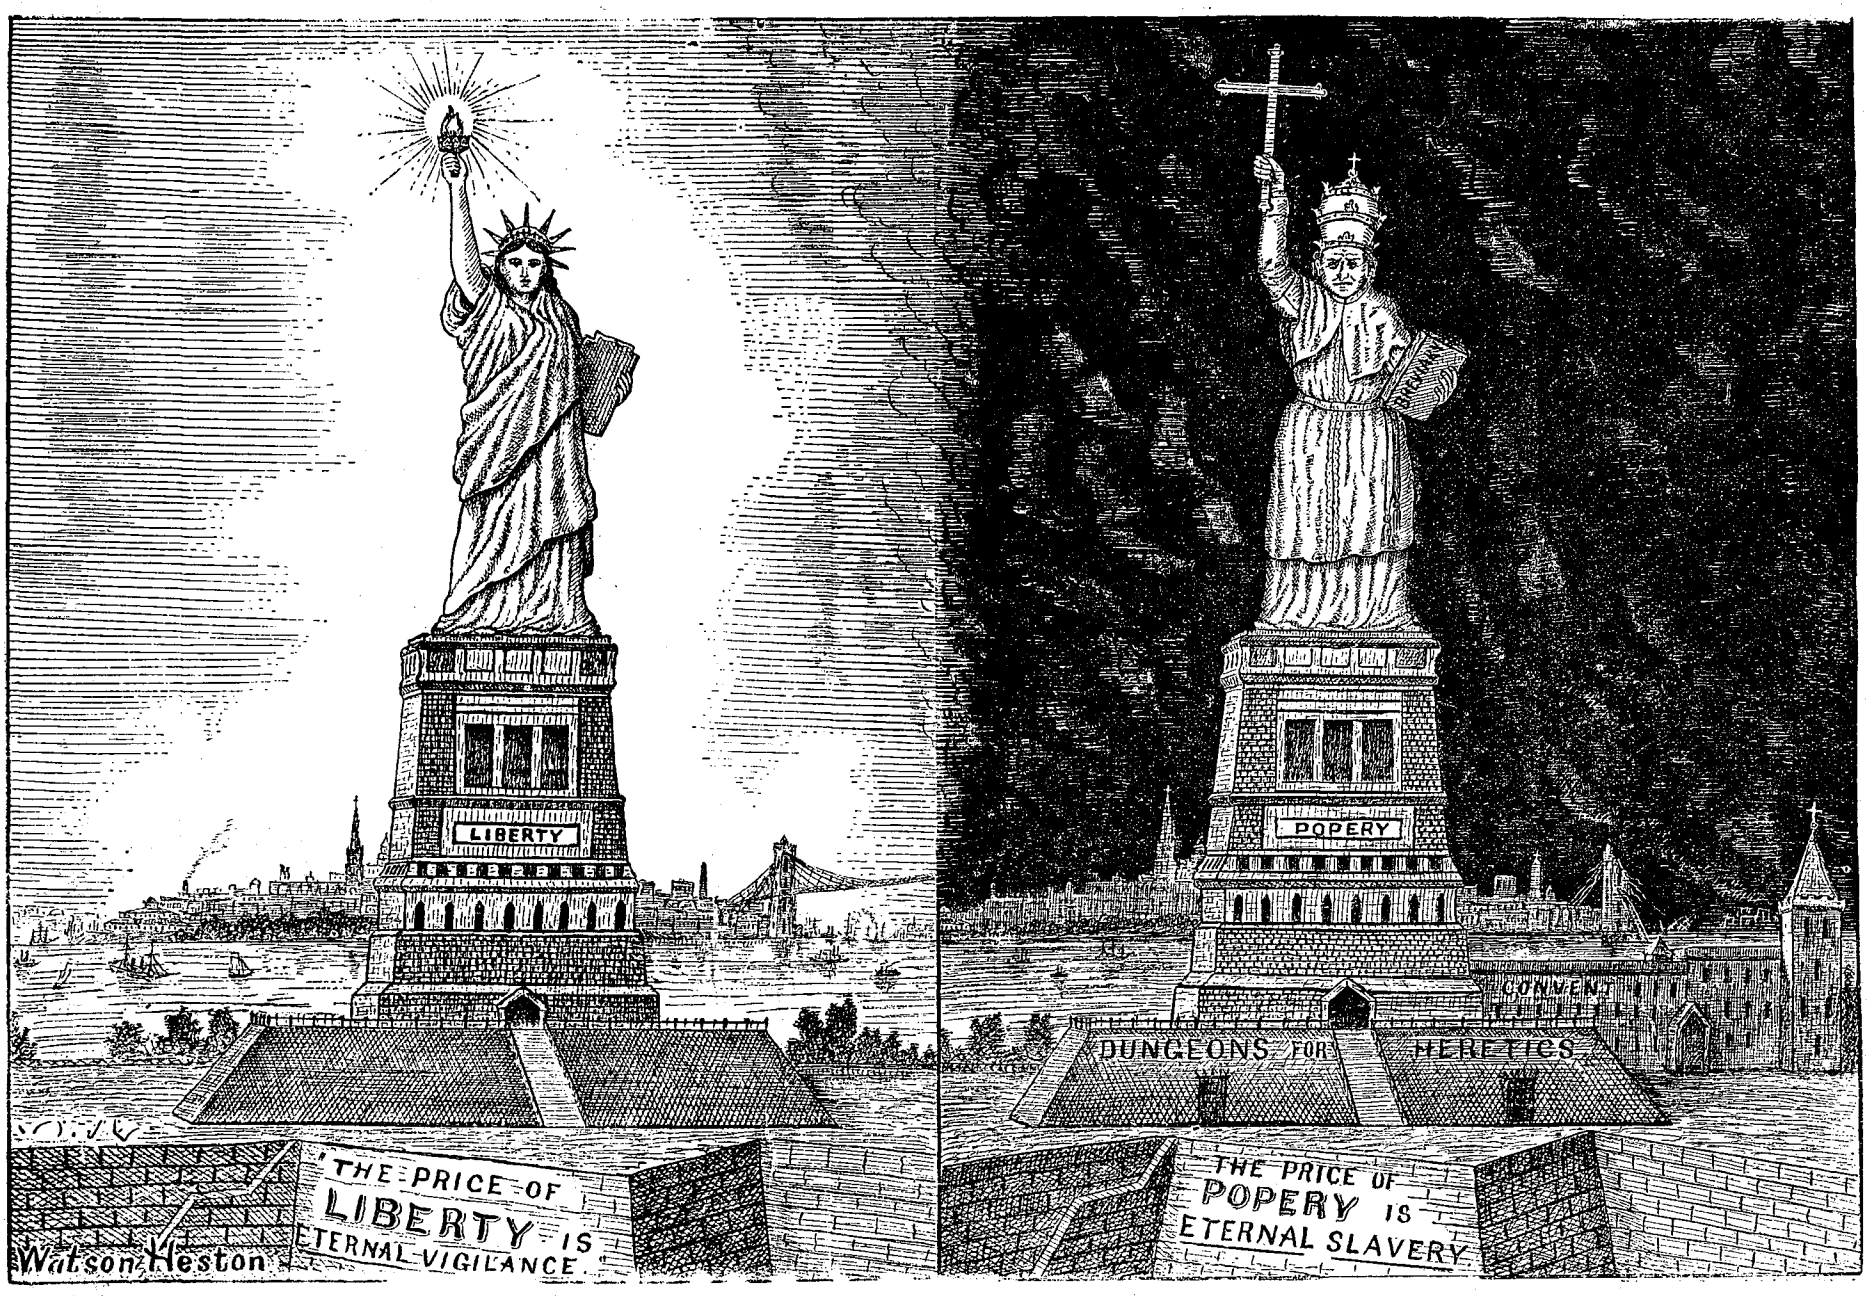
INTELLECTOAL LIBERTY

From Thales to Copernicus.

By FREDERIC MAY HOLLAND, Author of "The Reign of the Stoics."

"This is a book not only to be read once, but to be kept and referred to, and pondered over from year to year. It is a guide-book of Liberalism through the past centuries prior to 1600, the era of Copernicus and Bruno. It does not take the place of other histories like Gibbon, Hallam, or Lecky but it makes them intelligible by pointing out the white light that has been cast upon the lurid clouds of ignorance, superstition, and cruelty, from the little stream of Freethought that has flowed in its ragged, broken, and obstructed course down through the ages which now liv only as our realm of Memory and Admonition."

Octavo, 458 pp. PRICE, $3.50.



Address THE TRUHT SEEKER.

THE TRUTH SEEKER

A JOURNAL OF FREETHOUGHT AND REFORM.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-class Matter.

Vol. 13. No. 30. PUBLISHED WEEKLY. New York, Saturday, July 24, 1886. 33 CLINTON PLACE. $3.00 per year.

NOW AND THEN.

A "Transfiguration" of the Bartholdi Statue which may be expected under Catholic rule.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Denver Tribune-Republican declares its belief that the "present hot weather is directly caused by Brother Munhall's learned discourses on hell."

THIRTY years ago Bishop Kerfoot wrote to Bishop Whittingham: "If trial by peers is ever a humbug, it is when any order of clergy are the jurymen. They will indict a brother for being suspected, and then hang him for being indicted."

FATHER FULTON, of the Society of Jesus in New York, has convened a meeting of fathers who preside over the colleges, in order to consider some questions connected with the intellectual advancement of the pupils. It is about time that the Catholics should take some such step as this. Father Fulton and his priests will find a large field and no competitors.

ACCORDING to statistics, Cincinnati deserves to be called the "City of Churches" rather than Brooklyn, as it has one church to every 1,250 inhabitants, while Brooklyn has one church to every 1,975 inhabitants. There is no necessary connection between these figures and the fact that in Cincinnati beer sells at three cents per glass, while in Brooklyn it costs five.

AT this season of the year the papers are retelling the old story of Isaiah Thomas, who used to make almanacs. When he was preparing the one for 1780 one of his boys asked him what he should put opposit the "13th of July." Mr. Thomas, being engaged, replied, "Anything, anything." The boy, thus ordered, returned to the office and set, "Rain, hail, and snow." The country was all amazement when the day arrived, for it actually rained, hailed, and snowed violently.

THE study of oaths and expletivs, says the Chicago News, is very interesting. We hav never yet met a person who was not addicted to the use of oaths, though many people use them unwittingly. The ladies, for example, hav a pet oath in the words "dear me;" they think it means "dear I," but it doesn't. "Dear me" is a corruption of "Dio mio," meaning "my God!"

SAMUEL G. KAY, of Pittsburgh, Pa., attended church regularly, was activ in the Young Men's Christian Association, a prominent leader in the Murphy temperance movement, took great interest in lectures by clergymen, and was the head and front of nearly all movements to bring Talmage to Pittsburgh. Nevertheless he forged another man's name to three checks, amounting to $800, and then skipped the town.

DAVID BELL, of Buffalo, recently told this story apropos of the monster Scotch petition against the Irish Home Rule bill, and as illustrating the attitude of the Scotch toward the Irish: A minister was making a pastoral call at the cottage of a shepherd, and in the course of conversation spoke of the goodness and power of God, and his might in making the world, the sky, and heaven, and populating the earth with men and women. When he got through an auld wife broke in with the question: "An' did he mak' the Eerish, too?" "Yes, most certainly," was the reply. "Ay, then," was the rejoinder, "He has muckle tae answer for."

THE Arkansas Traveler contains this memorandum of a prayer-meeting: Man at a mourner's bench. Preacher, approaching him, asks: "My poor friend, do you feel repentant?" "Yes." "You feel bad, doubtless?" "Yes, and if I always feel this way I will never do it again." "Do what again?" "Get drunk." "My friend," whispered the preacher, "I hav been there, and I do not doubt the sincerity of your repentance."

SOME years ago James Freeman Clarke, in speaking of Unitarians, said: "One of our main advantages, as heretics, is freedom from the care of our reputation. How much time the orthodox lose in avoiding or abetting the charge of heresy! We enjoy already as bad a reputation as we can. We are already Infidels and Deists in the popular esteem. The theologians hav already prejudiced the public against us as much as possible; and no matter what we say, they can not make the matter worse. Thus we are saved from the necessity of watching our own shadow, and can go boldly forward following truth."

THE New York Tribune voices the sentiment of despotism everywhere when it says, "The right of free speech does not giv the right to teach wicked doctrins." So thought the Jews when they crucified Jesus, so thought the Christians when they murdered Hypatia, so thought Calvin when he burned Servetus, and the Boston gentry when they drove Garrison through the streets with a halter about his neck. The czar of Russia would not object to the Tribune's kind of "free speech"—the kind which first assumes that everybody is wicked who does not love the czar, and that the wicked shall not speak. If Horace Greeley could assert himself he would kick the editor of the Tribune into the middle of the East River.—Winsted Press.

A UNITARIAN writes to the Evening Post concerning the eligibility of Colonel Ingersoll to membership in the Unitarian church. The writer says: "The Unitarians, by the genius of their ecclesiastical system, would be constrained to regard an application for membership on his [Colonel Ingersoll's] part as sufficient evidence that he had experienced the change of heart that could alone fit him for their fellowship, and therefore would require of him no dogmatic test, any more than they would of a Calvinist or a Brahman who wished to unite with them. All they care to know of any candidate is that he sincerely desires to coöperate with them in the promotion of truth and righteousness and the upbuildiug of a Christ-like character"—the term Christ-like being understood.

THE First Methodist Protestant church of Camden, N. J., is not an unusually wealthy institution, but it can afford to hav a church-fight. The other day Steward Drummond was checking off the weekly subscriptions of the congregation when Trustee Guthridge entered the church and asked where a certain five-dollar subscription was. Drummond said he had not seen it. Guthridge called him a liar. The steward tried hard to restrain his temper, but the trustee kept piling on the hard words until forbearance ceased to be a virtue, and Brother Drummond went for Brother Guthridge. Mrs. Drummond's restraining hands on her husband's coat tails were all that prevented the trustee from receiving a thrashing. The result will be a regular church trial.

The Influence of Religion and Philosophy on Morals.

BY VAN BUREN DENSLOW.

IV.

Shall I attempt to sketch the advantages of that religious organization whose bright side is the unification of thought, whose dark side is sectarianism? It was to print the Bible that Faust invented types. It was to serve or overthrow religion that the sciences and philosophy hav been studied. They hav not had the effect desired, but all their beneficence has resulted from the delusion that they would hav that effect, just as the alchemic search for the philosopher's stone introduced chemistry, and the astrologer's search for the hidden clews of human destiny revealed the undreamed-of glories of astronomy. To extend the lustrous triumphs of the cross Columbus was commissioned; Oxford, Cambridge, Dartmouth, Harvard, and Yale were founded, and that collegiate system which everywhere precedes the common-school system of education was introduced. Motivs hav little to do with results. As a means of converting Indians Dartmouth failed. As a means of educating Webster it succeeded. The church has always abounded sufficiently in good and humane works of every kind, so that the class of men who want to brace up their reputations morally always join it in preference to a philosophical society. Hypocrisy is the homage which vice pays to virtue. If there were no sound, healthy, valuable fish swimming under the surface of the great religious deep, there would be no gulls hovering over its waters seeking and illustrating corruption.

Not that I would concede that civilization is in any more distinctiv sense religious and Christian than it is intellectual and pagan. Whence comes monogamy and with it the glory of the pure and holy union of one man to one woman? Not from polygamous Judea, but from Greece, Rome, and Germany; from the Aryan, not the Semitic, races. Whence comes our art, in all its varieties of poetry, painting, sculpture, music, gymnastics, dancing, literature, history, architecture, and the like? Not from somber and mercenary Judea, but from pagan Greece, Rome, and the Gothic races. Whence come the masculin theories of virtue which, fortunately, reassert themselvs through the power of skepticism, and make it consist in courage, fidelity to truth, industry, ambition, prowess, health, physical nobility, blood, pedigree, race, culture, gentility, and the other Roman virtues, thus practically repudiating the Christian or feminin virtues of humility, patience in suffering, self-denial and self-sacrifice, poverty, chastity, which in Christian churches are taught by men, but hardly believed or practiced except by women? Nor ought they to be. If the vigorous skeptical common sense of the male sex and its endowment of intellect, passion, force, industry, and will by their creator were not sufficient to make it ignore in practice the feminin theory of virtue which was enunciated by Jesus, and to substitute therefor the Roman standard of virtue in which ambition is the pivotal quality, industry would cease and civilization would drift backward into barbarism. It is the exaltation of the feminin virtues above the masculin, those that fit for suffering above those that fit for conquest, that has always made Christianity seem natural, healthy, and easy for women; awkward, hypocritical, and half-hearted in men. Very few men ever become religious except through female influence. It is not the man that preaches the gospel, but it is his mother, wife, or sister, who has retained his intellect, by some fee of affection, to act as her attorney. These feminin virtues are very useful to soften the asperities of the world after the masculin virtues hav conquered it. As they are the cause of woman's subjugation by man, so if man should practice them they would cause his subjugation by nature, i.e., his decline from wealth, power, and civilization into poverty, weakness, and barbarism.

And now let us turn to irreligion, or the emancipating force as a social power. The world's rulers, thinkers, and revolutionists; its Platos, Copernicuses, Napoleons, Bismarcks, Garibaldis; its Shaksperes, Franklins, Humboldts, Goethes, Voltaires; its philosophers, historians, poets, inventors, explorers, and originators, are essentially all irreligious. Irreligion brings out the individual in his emancipated manhood, and bids him make the most of himself, for no vicarious mantle of another's merit will ever reward his indolence, or giv him glory in exchange for his mere wishes. In Protestantism it makes him his own pope, in Parkerism his own priest, in Unitarianism and Deism his own Christ, and, finally, in the Atheism of pure philosophy, and the scientific Materialism of Darwin, it makes him his own God. There is none higher. One of the most noted philosophers now living, and the ablest one of the economic school that America has ever produced, once said to me, and not, I think, at all in a manner that forbids its repetition, it being simply the blunt expression of his inmost faith, "These preachers," said he, "go into the pulpit and try to persuade the people that salvation is in Jesus Christ. But I tell you that salvation is in ME and in my books." He meant that morality grew as man grew in wealth, and that the science of wealth was the key to morals. All philosophic minds of intense originality and individualism approximate to this feeling, if they do not express it.

The advantages of the irreligious position are the independence, integrity, and often dignity which it imparts to one's thoughts, investigations, and statements of truth. It renders a man fitter for scientific analysis, for discovery in the domain of physics, for historical narration, and often for representing and wielding government over men. The religious statesman, the religious general, the religious philosopher, and the religious physician are all contradictions, and are very likely to be frauds.

The state is never so bloody or so unjust as when it attempts to promote the gospel. Sectarianism is the very worst qualification a man can hav for dealing with questions of the weal or woe of nations. Had Nero not been a sectarian bigot of the heathen pattern, had he been as free from religion as Augustus Cæsar, he would not hav persecuted the Christians. Had the lion-hearted Richard been as free from religion as Lord Palmerston or Disraeli, instead of dyeing the sands of Palestine with English blood, in the wars to recover the holy sepulcher, he might hav imported Arabian scholars to teach the arts of the Saracens to his subjects. Had Queen Mary been as free from religion as Voltaire, she would hav been as free from the blood of the innocent. Had Cromwell and William of Orange held creeds in statesmanlike contempt, they would not hav cursed both England and Ireland with centuries of mutual hate. Some one has said, "When men are on the throne, women govern." Certain it is that when saints are on the throne, the devil reigns. Righteousness is best defended when men of no religion wield the state, and religion itself flourishes best when it cannot budge a bayonet or a constable. History is told with least bias, the law is framed and administered with most integrity, and science discloses its facts most instructivly to those on whom creeds sit lightly. This gain to the world is often purchased at the cost of painful isolation to the individual. The man who thinks is more solitary than the hermit on Mount Athos cliffs. To the extent that he is original, he is alone. In the degree that he is loving, this solitude is exile. Byron has said of mere social isolation, which is not to be compared with the religious:

To sit on rocks, to muse o'er flood and fell,
  To slowly trace the forest's shady scene,
Where things that own not man's dominion dwell
  And human foot hath ne'er or rarely been;
To climb the trackless mountain all unseen,
  With the wild flock that never needs a fold;
Alone o'er steeps and foaming falls to lean—
  This is not solitude; 'tis but to hold
  Converse with nature's charms, and view her stores unrolled.
But 'midst the crowd, the hum, the shock of men,
  To see, to hear, to feel, and to possess,
And roam along the world's tired denizen,
  With none to bless us, none whom we can bless;
None that, with kindred consciousness endued,
  If we were not, would seem to smile the less,
Of all that followed, flattered, sought, and sued—
This is to be alone; this, this is solitude.

To differ from prevailing sects and schools, whether of the religious or of the irreligious, in one's views of life, duty, and destiny, adds to the gloom of solitude the vulgar insults of suspicion. It is to liv under another God, in another life.

Perhaps some souls are driven by this isolation into moral recklessness. Usually, however, few men reach this religious solution until the very studies which brought them hither hav, by their drain on nervous power, subdued the passions which might make their isolation dangerous. But to the more richly endowed this solitude is peopled with a nobler race than society. To this class belong that chosen few who come forth upon society like Mohammed from his cave, like Swedenborg from his dreams, like Moses from the mountain of the law, or Buddha from his slavery, or Jesus from his temptation, armed with a Koran, a vision, a decalog, a gospel, or an emancipation that shall be Infidel to all the past only that it may bequeath a nobler orthodoxy to all the future. Such willingly receive their temporary crucifixion by the vulgar that they may win a truer homage and a wider fame than could hav been theirs by chiming in weakly and pleasurably with the religious fashion of the hour. There is a one-sided class of, as I think, unphilosophical philosophers, who are determined to account for the world on a simple plan by throwing away or denying the facts which make it complex; they insist upon running it by some one force instead of through the antagonism of opposing forces, and especially in the world of ideas they would insist that no one truth, which is but a name for some force in nature or in thought, should clash with any other truth, but that all facts should be bent to harmonize with some one theory, instead of being left, as they are in nature, to sustain conflicting theories. Such men ask, How can it be that a religion, if begun or sustained in part upon myths and fictions, can end in utility and truth? Well, science began in the fictions of incantations, fortune-telling, alchemy, sorcery, magic, witchcraft, astrology. Its origin is as full of myths, and its history as full of romance, lies, and impositions on the human mind as is the history of religion. The faculty of deceiving and of being deceived is not arrested by turning one's attention to science. Does not Herodotus tell of a race, I think the anthropophagi, who do carry their heads under their arms? That is part of the early science, ethnology. And did not a reverend scientist of early New England write that the Connecticut river at a certain point flows through banks so narrow that its waters by pressure became indurated, and as solid as iron, so that the point of the sharpest knife could not be thrust into them? That was part of the science of the day. In cosmogony science is now riding two horses in opposit directions, one that the earth has been constantly cooling since it became a planet, the other that most of its early cosmical changes were produced by ice.

We cannot measure all truth by one standard. We discover the truths of anatomy by the dissecting knife. But if we search with that implement to find the source of life, or the cause of beauty, we convert both life and beauty into a hideous mass of disgusting entrails. We cannot detect all truth by one test or measure it all by one standard. Scientific truth is proved by experiment. Mathematic truth requires demonstration. Poetic truth is too subtle for either. Its only test is, Does it so shadow forth those things that universally please, and conceal that which in nature mars our pleasure, as to render us the highest possible pleasure, refined from the dross of the actual, and complete in the charms of the ideal? The truth of the Greek Slave or of Powers's Eve, as a work of art, lies not in the question, Did she ever actually exist? but in the question, Is it a perfect grouping of the elements that please? Does it delight the cultivated taste? If so, it is true to nature and to art. Religious truths may be drawn alike from historic truths or from historic fictions. Their test is, Do they exalt the religious passion, the passion to liv a pure and holy life, a life very near to the divine ideal; to the suppression of the other passions of ambition, avarice, self-indulgence, sensualism, and the like? Whether Jesus was crucified is not so important as the broader fact it shadows forth, viz., that all men who seek to change man's standards of right and wrong will be crucified, for the bigotry of the human heart arrays itself against every moral revolutionist; if it did not do so, moral laws could hav no permanency. And it does not follow that because one man, who was crucified, was a Christ, therefore the balance were not criminals.

Whether Moses found the decalog engraved on tablets of stone is less important than the fact that he succeeded in engraving it on those tablets of the human heart which in their eternal succession are more durable than stone. Whether Jesus was of immaculate conception or whether he rose from the dead is less important than the fact that he is the most influential mind that ever walked the earth by virtue of his vaster influence upon its intellectual and moral development. Next to him probably ranks Buddha, the Hindoo prince, who at the sight of a slave beaten by the lash descended voluntarily from the palace to the hovel, and became and continued for years a slave, in order that, having been made perfect through suffering, he might, not by war but by love, gently lead the masters out of despotism and the bondsmen into liberty. Resembling Jesus more nearly than any other in the benevolence of his life, he resembles him also in the extent and nature of his influence. And next to these might rank Confucius, Moses, Mohammed.

I hav thus tried to shadow forth a few faint outlines of this difficult, wonderful picture which history presents to us of the moral influences of religion. The libraries of the world are filled with volumes upon it. I hav not even hoped to do justice to it in an hour.

In conclusion let me say that the great intellectual forces which antagonize religion, viz., science and philosophy, are like the day. They open up to us the world in which we dwell, its infinit capacities, its minute beauties, its myriad wonders, its grand anthem of causation. As we admire it all, we shudder at the thought that night, the mantle of all this beauty, the cover of crime, the terror of simple minds, will in a few hours spread its dark pall over all and lock the world in its deathlike embrace. We start back from that darkness and blackness of terror—the night.

And religion is that night. In it the soul rests the sweeter for not knowing aught but that it feels the sense of rest. It says to man, Work not, but trust. It locks the mind fast in its peace, while now and then horrible crimes stalk forth under its shadow and win the execrations of the ages. But while the mind thus rests, high over all breaks forth the glory of the heavens—star upon star, world upon world, which the day has hidden, pierces the great depths of God, until the soul exclaims, Why did I think the day revealed knowledge? It wholly hid a thousand worlds to reveal imperfectly but one. But night, mantling one world to reveal millions, is the great revelator.

Happiest and sanest is he to whom the day discloses its near work and useful knowledge, and the night its rest and gleams of other worlds; to whom observation, reason, and experiment unfold their daily lessons of utility, and, with regular alternation, religion lifts up its somber, gloomy wings, dripping with darkness from every pinion, like the night, that through them may glint and glisten the stars of a loftier, though trembling, wavering, twinkling hope. If the worlds it reveals should all be rolled away as a scroll, and death, as an eternal sleep, should prove that those glistening hopes were delusiv; that in grasping for the dazzling prize of immortality our ambition had overleaped the beneficence which guides the universe; if there be any sentient minds anywhere who will see these hopes go out, these stars extinguished, they will weep for pity that fate was not more just to those who dreamed so nobly. But if aught of these sublime and heavenly visions, which through all ages hav canopied the earth in its darkest hours with unnumbered and celestial glories, is to be realized—if, indeed, the enfranchised soul,

Eternal, boundless, undecayed,
A thought unseen but seeing all;
All, all in earth and skies displayed,
Shall it survey, shall it recall.
Before creation peopled earth
Its eye shall roam through chaos back,
And where the furthest heaven had birth
The spirit trace its rising track;
And where the future mars or makes
Its glance dilate o'er all to be,
While sun is quenched and system breaks,
Fixed in its own eternity;
Above, or love, hope, hate, or fear,
It livs all passionless and pure;
Its age shall fleet like earthly year,
Its years as moments shall endure.
Away, away, without a wing,
O'er all, through all, its thoughts shall fly,
A nameless and eternal thing,
Forgetting what it was to die;

if this or aught like this vision be converted into our after-death experience, as we look back on the speculations and philosophies which came to dull our sense of those bright religious dreams, we shall say, Why, indeed, did we suppose it was the day that lighted up the world? It was night, deep, illimitable, mysterious night—aye, darkness and mystery, these were the great revelators.

Gems from Jones.

Here are some "gems from Sam Jones," as the Sun calls them, being paragraphs from sermons preached in Indianapolis by the Georgia revivalist, with comments by Si Slokum:

Gem the first: "Here is my theology; it is all I need. If you want to do good God will help you do good, and if you want to do bad the devil will help you. That's enough theology for anybody."

As all religionists claim that we are "free agents," it would seem that we should be left to do as we will, and when we want to do good or evil do it without help from God or assistance from the Devil—I believe in giving the Devil a capital D—and that's the way all good or evil is done, depend upon it, sans God, sans Devil.

Gem the second: "I hav heard of churches which claimed to be the only church of God. The old hardshells do it, I believe. I don't know how they are up here, but if they are the same as they are down in Georgia the Lord has turned over the whole business to a mighty ignorant crowd."

If this isn't reflecting on the business management of God, then what would be? God, who doeth all things well, as is claimed, knew what he was about when he "turned over the whole business to a mighty ignorant crowd," most certainly, and Sam Jones givs him an undeserved slap, it seems to me. Sam Jones stultifies himself when he criticises the Lord, I think.

Gem the third: "Sympathy is a good deal better than dignity. I've seen some old preacher get up in his pulpit, and he looks like he is five miles away, and he has got dignity enough to fill two worlds. Dignity is the starch of a shroud. When I die, and am lying stiff and cold in my coffin, I'll hav as much dignity as anybody, but I am never going to be dignified till I do die."

It is evident that Jones knows himself, as far as dignity is concerned. With not the least dignity in life, there is no doubt that he will make as dignified a corpse as the next man, provided he isn't twisted out of all shape by disease. Yes, Jones as a defunct, without being contorted, will assume a dignity that he had not a particle of in life, and it may suffice him to know this.

Gem the fourth: "Now, some sister, I expect, will turn up her nose at me because I am not dignified. Bless you, the Devil has got a mortgage on that nose, and he will foreclose it some of these days, and get the old gal with it, too."

This is of Jones exceedingly Jonesey; a "gem from Jones" as is a gem. Talmage may hav equaled it, but Beecher never worked off anything like it. Comment falls fainting by the wayside before the dazzling rays of this "'Gem' of purest ray serene." To be sure, I might etch the harrowing picture of the "Devil foreclosing on that nose, and taking the old gal with him," but cui bono?

Gem the fifth: "We hav got to learn that money will help a man to heaven, just like it will help him to New York. I can get to New York city without a cent, but I will hav to walk every step, and beg my bread along the road. You can get to heaven without a cent, but you will find Jordan a hard road to travel."

This is a "gem" without a flaw from center to circumference. Jones tumbled to it down in Georgia, where, as one of the "po' white trash," he "toted" cotton for a black boss, and dropped to the easiest way of getting money for the journey to heaven—namely, blooming out as a revivalist. I wish I had the "gift of gab," I would get onto the "revival" racket at once. There are thousands, if not millions, in it. There is nothing new to the heaven-bound ones in this "gem," for they are all on it to a man, getting money to help them on their journey. There was that pious merchant who died of late, whose effigy in brass so greatly adorns our city, he went in for a big pile to help him on his way to heaven, and got it. Unfortunately he had to part with a large portion of said pile to appease an outraged government, which he had bamboozled by false invoices. However, with a large stock of piety and a still big "pile," he got safely through to heaven, it is presumed. But I should like to ask Jones if he, in his proposition, does not reflect on the utterances of the Master, who advised the rich to giv up all they had to the poor, and who said a camel could go through a needle's eye as easily as a rich man through the gate of heaven. However, times aren't now as they used to was, and it takes money to do things that it didn't take in earlier days. One thing is evident, that Sam means to get all he can of money, in order to go to heaven by first-class conveyance, and it must be admitted that traveling to heaven by palace-cars is pleasanter than hoofing it, and that Jordan is indeed a hard road to travel, as Sam says, when one is obliged to take to Shanks's mare, and face all sorts of weather and road-impediments; and Sam wants to go in the pleasantest manner. No hoofing in his; oh, no, not for Sam.

Gem the sixth: "A man who livs under the cook stove and sleeps in the pantry belongs to the animal tribe. A man who livs in the library, with the finest authors, is an intellectual man. A man who walks arm in arm with God is a spiritual man."

Of course, Sam would deny belonging to the "animal tribe," and we all know he is not an "intellectual man;" he, of course, must be a "spiritual man walking arm in arm with God." How fortunate for Sam that the Lord is not so particular about the company he keeps as Sam is himself! Now, Sam, who is but a mere "worm," wouldn't walk arm in arm down the street with the "worm" who sells gin, and yet the Lord condescends to lock arms with Sam the worm, and Sam criticising his doings, too, at that! If Sam is really a "spiritual man," as he implies, "walking arm and arm with God," then it must be admitted that the latter is democratic to the backbone, if not to a fault, howsoever cruel he has ever been to his creatures; much more democratic than the writer, who owns up that he wouldn't walk arm in arm with Sam Jones down Broadway, at 4 P.M., unless handsomely paid for so doing, and for the reason that he doesn't think Sam is half what he paints himself to be, but one working the religious racket for all it is worth to him in shekels, a line of "business" requiring A1 copper-fastened hypocrisy to conduct successfully, which, according to accounts, Sam is doing.

Gem the seventh: "It is not the mysteries of the Bible that bother me. It is the Ten Commandments. It is so hard to liv up to them. It is not the mysteries of the Bible that hurt me. It is the Sermon on the Mount."

No religionist allows the mysteries of the Bible to bother him, and, of course, Sam does not. They all swallow them whole as one does an oyster, except a countryman or a woman who chews it. Talmage says it is easier to swallow them than to explain them, and he is right. But the Ten Commandments bother Sam—yes, aha! no doubt! They do the most of religionists, who, like Sam, find 'em "so hard to liv up to." A rara avis, the rarest of rare aves, is he who does liv up to them, which is not Sam Jones by a long shot. Sam complains that the Sermon on the Mount hurts him. What's the matter with the sermon, Sam? You don't think you are quite pure in heart, do you? You are afraid that your light does not so shine before man as to show all your good works, eh? You don't want to pluck out your right eye which looketh with pleasure on the shekels, or cut off thy right hand which clutcheth greedily the trade dollar, eh? Well, it is tough, Sam, and few of us are equal to it. You can't love your enemies, can you, Sam? There's where the sermon pinches all of us the hardest, Sam. Then, I suppose, it is hard not to turn away when a fellow strikes you for a quarter, eh? And above all, Sam, you know you cannot be perfect, as commanded, and so consequently are not as your father. But I think the shoe pinches the hardest, Sam, in that part where you are advised not to lay up treasures on earth—eh, Sam? And here you are scooping in the shekels by the hatful, and looking ahead for more. Yes, Sam, that sermon hurts you. It hurts us all. We can't liv up to it, and there is little use trying when failure is sure to follow. You know, Sam, that you can't serve two masters, and you havn't the nerve to giv up Mammon. Yes, Sam, that sermon hurts you "bad." There is no doubt of it, but I am surprised that you should hav owned up to it.

There were several other "gems" in the collection made by the Sun, but they were flawed, cracked, or hav no particular brilliancy, and so not worth the "setting" here. Here is the way Sam "hulled" the Indianapolitans, giving them a shot right "between wind and water," as it were:

One trouble with you Indianapolis folks is that you are hide-bound, like an old Texan steer. He will never fatten while the sun shines until you can loosen his hide. Laughter loosens the hide so that you can grow religious. You all need the currycomb more than you need corn. There is just as much religion in laughing as in crying. But if you don't liv right, be solemn as the grave every day, for you ought to be solemn.

Great is Sam Jones, and in the gullibility of the multitudes he finds his profit. SI SLOKUM.

Our London Letter.

Mr. Gladstone's appeal to the country in consequence of the defeat of his Irish Home Rule bill has stirred up much bitter feeling amongst his opponents, more especially with the religious element, and shows that the godly are as bigoted and as much opposed to liberty as they ever were. Spurgeon is reckoned a great authority on the question, and his utterances in opposition to Home Rule are quoted as eminently authoritativ by the very individuals who hav previously treated him with contumely. It is edifying to find the church and Tory party falling back on the opinion of a man whom they hav always considered as a clerical mountebank and impostor; and although he has gained a little notoriety through his attack on Gladstone, he will after the general election be relegated to the obscurity from which he so suddenly sprang. All these pious impostors are greatly averse to toleration except as referring to themselvs, and still cling to their old policy of ruling by might in preference to right. They know well enough that as liberty advances education will increase, and result in opening the eyes of those hitherto so deeply immersed in ignorance to the fact that blind leaders of the blind are incumbrances to progress, and the sooner their occupation is gone the better for humanity. Notwithstanding the influence of the great Spurgeon there are many wearers of the cloth who are so much better than their fellows that they would grant emancipation to all who want it, leaving the issue to the future. It is unfortunate that this is so, for if the clergy of all denominations combined to conserve the present iniquities their end would be all the speedier; but a fair sprinkling of them display a greater amount of wisdom, knowing that by apparently siding with the more enlightened members of the public they will retard the day of their extinction.

The bishop of Worcester stated his opinion the other day that the agitation against the sale of advowsons should be strongly resisted, as it was not conduciv to the welfare of the church to permit the parishioners to choose their own parson, and there is no doubt that he is so far correct, for the people would scarcely care about selecting for their spiritual guides those samples of rascality and immorality who are now placed in such positions by the various patrons of livings. One of these shining lights is now awaiting trial for indecent assaults against boys, but he is not likely to lose his situation if he has powerful friends; such trifling matters do not seriously affect a parson's character, probably because with the majority of them their characters are already so bad that nothing can make them worse.

The Anti-Infidel, edited by W. R. Bradlaugh, has taken the field, with the very decided advantage of a large staff of powerful writers on the side of Christian evidence. The first number of the new series I hav carefully read, but as the ancient and exploded design "argument" takes the place of honor I was somewhat disappointed, as, to induce subscribers, it was announced that some rather remarkable proofs of the "truths of the Christian religion" were to be adduced. I am afraid the owners of this periodical will not make a fortune over the venture, as believers won't buy it, and unbelievers, who hav generally been the supporters of such papers, will hav had enough in the first number to satisfy their longings to see these truths incontrovertibly proved so that they will not require any further evidence of a like nature.

The Lord's Day Observance Society is coming to the front once more, the last success being the closing of the Folkestone Exhibition on Sundays. During the summer months, however, such places are not very extensively patronized on the weekly holiday, so that the evil effects of such interference are not so much felt; and as long as the average Englishman is not very seriously inconvenienced he will put up with a great deal of repression of this description, not being such a supporter of matters of principle as he professes to be. He is a long-suffering being, and frequently would figure better under the emblem of a donkey than that of a lion. J. D.

London, June 29, 1886.

GENERAL BOOTH, of the Salvation Army, is reported as saying in effect that unless the people pay more money into his treasury, the whole scheme of saving souls will fall into desuetude. The Army is not very prosperous of late, and without the shedding of lucre there is no remission of sins.

Spiritualists and Mediums at Onset Bay, Mass.

Onset is now in the hight of its summer bloom and beauty, and, whatever may be said to the contrary, there is no place superior, as a seaside resort, for healthful breezes, refreshing, invigorating odors, and lovely landscape and water scenery. It is, as many are aware, one of the summer homes of Spiritualists, although those of opposit convictions find here a sweet respit from the cares and turmoils of a too busy and activ life. It is said there exist here strong vital and magnetic currents capable of recuperating exhausted energies and imparting new life and strength. Whether that be true or not, one may here listen to a great deal of talk about "strong magnetism," "magnetic forces," "superior powers," "highly vitalized elements," "the higher intelligences," "harmonial conditions," "attractiv influences," etc., etc. When we get to the "bottom facts" of many of the terms in use—when we reach the core of words—there is really to be found a great truth hidden under a mass of verbiage.

Once in a while people need new conditions, change—a different and larger sphere of action. When the pulses move slow and laggard in the old routine, placed in a new atmosphere they go bounding. Most people require a larger life than that they liv. Climatic and dietetic changes are excellent, but no less necessary is a change in the social condition. "Ah, then," you say, "shall we break away from our old and long-tried associations and try new ones?" Not necessarily. But take the long-time associate into another society—another and different round of labor—and mark the effect. "Why do men get tired of the wife so readily?" I hav been asked sometimes. To my mind it seems quite plain that in the majority of instances it is because, while the husband absorbs from the larger conditions of life, his mind growing broader and stronger, the wife gropes along in the same little narrow groove in which she began, and hence, when they compare notes, the one is a long stretch ahead of the other. Sometimes it is the wife who, with untiring wing, soars aloft, while the plodding husband grubs, wingless, near the earth. Really, one is as good as the other, only the conditions of living hav been different and wrong. A man once sought a divorce from his wife, for no particular reason, only she was "sour and cross." "Was she ever so when you courted her?" inquired the good-natured lawyer.

"Well, she pouted sometimes."

"And what did you do then?"

"Oh, I kissed her and petted her."

The lawyer laughed. "Now," said he, "my friend, go home and try it again. Kiss her with a lover's kiss, pet her, buy her sweetmeats, take her on excursions, and play the lover exactly as you did in your courting days. Try it a year and then come to me." The man took the advice, followed it, and never visited the lawyer again, for, he said, he had "the sweetest and best wife in all the wide world!"

But many, besides Spiritualists, rush upon extremes, and having been hampered, crushed, repressed, in various ways, without trying to better old conditions they rush upon new ones, which prove sometimes worse and more disastrous than the first. It is often so with the come-outers from orthodoxy—they become quite as bigoted in Liberal ideas as ever they were in strait-laced theology.

The "season" here is fairly commenced, and "mediums" are almost as plenty as blueberries, but if I am a good judge, business among them is not so flourishing as in former times. "Materializers" are at work, however, as I observed last evening, while passing several mediumistic abodes, from whose darkened chambers strains of music floated coaxingly.

Said one buxom materializer to a lady, "If ever you see more than one spirit at a time issue from the cabinet, you may believe there's trickery there, for no mortal medium can produce more than one spirit at once."

"Does the medium produce the spirits, then?" was asked.

"Well, they are made up out of the medium's form somewhat, of course!" was the reply. This may partially account for the queerity of the fact that when our friend, Robert Wade, caught a "spirit" last summer, it happened to be only the medium herself! But mediums do materialize—dollars; and there's no mistake in that materialization, and they generally go away from Onset with well-filled pockets, and elastic consciences.

I never saw a class of people affect titles as do the Spiritualists. Nearly every second one you meet is a doctor or professor. It is funny, yet the truly natural physician, who has power to locate and diagnose disease, and, more than all, to cure without the aid of drugs or medicin, is a blessing to his kind, and, without a diploma, is of greater value to the world than he whose only recommendation is his collegiate course and printed parchment. It has been my privilege to meet a few who possess the gift of healing without medicin, and among them may be mentioned Dr. A. S. Hayward, of Shawmut avenue, Boston, well known as a physician, writer, and worker in Liberal ranks, and especially in trying to do away with the statute prohibiting natural healers from exercising their particular gifts. He has done signal service in this direction, and still has more to do before bigotry and prejudice shall giv way to let the sun of truth and science shine. Dr. Hayward advocates Dr. Warren F. Evans's methods in treating disease, as shown in that author's work entitled, "Mental Cure," and published by Colby and Rich. This is an excellent work, as is also the book entitled, "Vital Magnetic Cure," both of which hav gone through six or seven editions. I think these books are for sale on THE TRUTH SEEKER shelves, and Dr. Hayward is also agent for them. They contain solid matter well worth reading.

While many Spiritualists are in advance in Liberal sentiments, and hav really done great good in the world in breaking down the old and rotten foundations of theologic tyranny, yet in another direction they are extremely credulous, and allow themselvs to be humbuged and hoodwinked to the last degree, allowing the alleged "spirit world" to take the place of this, our lovely human world. There is so much here in this present world to engage our attention that it really seems a waste of time to devote so much energy to a state of future existence that we shall know all about, if it be a reality, full soon enough. However, the Spiritualists are a genial, pleasant, and agreeable people, and I number many true and genuin friends among them. And if I am ever brought to believe that disembodied spirits are indeed a reality, I shall be only too happy to proclaim the fact to all the world, alike to friend and foe.

SUSAN H. WIXON.

Chicago Secular News.

A good many years ago, certain individuals belonging to a Methodist congregation, of which Brother Moody was a leading light, built a large block in the center of the business portion of this city—southeast corner Washington and Clark streets. The basement and ground floors readily rented for stores and manufacturing purposes, the upper floors for offices. One large hall in the center of the building was reserved for the church, although it is oftener rented for lectures and concerts than used for "divine" services. The good deacons were thus enabled to evade taxation and turn a nimble penny for themselvs—a penchant so peculiar to most professors of piety. The offices rented for high figures; the deacons chuckled over the "snap" they were practicing on the dear public, but concluded this bonanza was additional proof that religion was a real good thing and that the Lord would prosper his own.

But there were other deacons who had property to rent who had failed to label it, "Methodist Church Block," and who were assessed for taxes. They saw through the blind of their Methodist brethren, and were jealous, so that a few Liberals found it an easy matter to start petitions to the legislature for a special act in this case, which was passed. The case was then appealed to the supreme court of Illinois, which decided that this block was not exempt, "except that portion of it used for purely religious purposes." The good fight won, the public went to sleep on the matter, and nothing further has been heard of the Methodist Church Block, everybody supposing that it was paying its proportion of taxes. "When thieves fall out, honest men get their dues," is an adage oft quoted. The county of Cook is about bankrupt, and there is a row among its county commissioners. Investigations are the order of the day. Chairman Klehm, of the committee investigating the work of the assessors, has discovered the fact that this Methodist Church Block has paid no taxes for a number of years, and how long it has evaded taxation he cannot now say. An effort will be made to compel them to pay back taxes. It is certain that the trustees of this block must hav connived with the assessors at this violation of law. The assessments of Chicago are wonderfully and mysteriously made, and if anyone "sees" one of our amiable assessors he will make an arrangement that will be satisfactory, presumably for a consideration. In this case, the trustees of the church will doubtless put in the ancient claim that "Jesus paid it all."

Apropos of the Knights of Labor, the controling element of the order in this city is best recognized by its acts. Nearly all who prate with Powderly about not going into politics are notorious political "heelers," and many of them hav been rewarded for their political influence in the order at the hands of our city officials, notably Messrs. Murphy and Rodgers, who manage to take turn-about as chairman of District Assembly No. 24. Since the howl in the press against Anarchists and Socialists has become general, these "political mechanics" are desirous of currying favor with the powers that be or are to come, so that in case of a change in the political caldron this fall they might be able to retain their appointments by the favor of the solid citizens—millionaires et al—so District No. 24 demanded that the assembly of which Parsons was a member should expel him forthwith. This order the assembly, which knew him best, steadily refused to obey. Not succeeding in this effort, they then, at a subsequent meeting, issued a mandate that all Anarchists and their friends be expelled from the order, and that in future "all of their ilk" be carefully excluded. At another time such action might be justifiable, but it showed that these pusillanimous Knights were willing, after Parsons's heroic surrender and while yet under trial, not only to traitorously desert him, but to prejudge his case so that the public might think they considered him guilty. While sworn to defend their "brother" at all hazards, these cowards connive at his assassination. Sweet specimens of manhood this "chivalry of labor" presents! Knights of Labor indeed, who descend to such mean, malicious slander—

> That abominable tittle-tattle,
> The cud eschewed by human cattle!

A. R. Parsons sends forth from his cell a memorable letter, which shows that the principles of the Knights and those of the Socialists are nearly identical, and I wish to explain to your readers why this is so. There are in the order a few earnest reformers whose study of political economy invariably lands them in the category of Socialists of some school or another. Then there are the great mass of members who seek in the order protection, succor, and redress. Then there are the men who are there for the "boodle" they can get outside the order for the influence they are supposed to maintain within. The Socialists in the order hav invariably been so vastly superior in intellectual attainments and knowledge of political economy to the mere trade-unionist and their brother-knights, that the assemblies, ambitious to gain distinction for ability, would invariably select them to draft platforms, write resolutions, etc. Thus a few Socialists hav laid the fundamental principles of the entire order. To this little objection was raised, and if it was not labeled "Socialism" the ignorant and indifferent would pass it without question. If a Socialist was nominated for office, though, the other element murmured that he was too radical, and the men that let out their thinking to the priest and politician would vote him down. Though not too radical to write the principles of the order, they were too advanced to hold office and put them in execution. Why? Because most of these would-be labor reformers never want any of these principles carried out. That would please the "boodle" men, who are so eager after the offices that they didn't care a rap who laid down its principles. With characteristic indifference as to the offices, the Socialists only cared to write its platform. In this they hav fairly succeeded, but their disinterestedness in one direction has proved a danger to the execution of the dearly-fought-for principles. The state assembly of the order meets next Tuesday, when the action of District No. 24 will be ratified or rejected. As some assemblies hav delegated men of brains to attend, there will be a determined fight on the action of these office-holding Knights of Labor.

While these noble Knights of Labor hav nothing but condemnation for Parsons in his hour of trial, they are making extraordinary efforts to secure the commutation of the death sentence of James Dacey, who murdered Alderman Gaynor in a cowardly manner, and then feigned insanity. Both Dacey and his victim were of the order of political pimps. The alderman ran a saloon, but was shot down in another whisky shop. They say that "birds of a feather flock together," and I presume that "Jim" Dacey, the ward tough and pot-house politician, is much nearer the admiration of the leaders of the Knights of Labor in Chicago than a man who voluntarily surrenders himself to be tried for an offense that was committed by some one—at least, in their imagination—in the interest of labor.

The Emperor William yesterday made a speech to the effect that "religion is the basis of all human order, and I rejoice that it is growing firmer among us. Revolutionists, however, who cherish confused notions of right and wrong, are still busy all over Europe. If they should undermine faith and morality, a general upheaval of right and justice would follow. Your task is to guard this basis and remain strong in right." There seems to be a "confused notion" about the basis of human order between Emperor William and the distinguished editor of the Chicago daily News. The former, who is very pious, says it is "religion;" the latter, while pious in editorials (he is just now engaged in the laudable endeavor to defame a young girl's character, as she has sued the paper for a former libel, and is publishing the nastiest details of the trial that possibly can be imagined), thinks Gatling guns are the basis of order. Every day something like this appears:

> Dr. Gatling, inventor of the famous gun, has devised a piece of ordnance for the suppression of riots. It weighs but fifty pounds, is capable of firing one thousand shots a minute, and can be mounted on a police patrol-wagon. With such an apparatus as this, an unorganized mass of people would stand no show of overcoming a score of officers.

Election is a long way off, and the heedless workingman will hav forgotten it all by fall.

THE Truth Seeker Company hav issued E. C. Walker's contributions to THE TRUTH SEEKER on "Bible Temperance" in a 48-page pamphlet, selling for ten cents.

Figures About Religious People.

By way of the London Secular Review we get the following estimate of the sectarian divisions of the world. The estimate is Bishop Fisher's, though who or what he is the editor does not tell us. The total number of people in the world Mr. Fisher givs as 1,458,000,000:

Brahmans and Buddhists		600,000,000
Parsees, Confucianists, Shintoists, Jains, etc.		100,000,000
Unclassified pagans		160,000,000
Christians	Roman Catholics, 225,000,000 Greek Catholics, 75,000,000 Protestants, 110,000,000	410,000,000
Mohammedans		180,000,000
Jews		8,000,000

The 860,000,000 of Pagans are found chiefly in Asia and Africa, and comprise 99–100ths of the population, with scattered millions in the Americas and islands of the sea. The 410,000,000 Christians constitute the body of Europe and nine-tenths of the Americas, with a few millions in Asia, Africa, and the islands. The Mohammedans are found chiefly in Asia and Africa. The Jews are scattered in all lands, without a home or country. The Greek Christians are mainly in European Russia, with a few millions in Asia and the smaller principalities of south-eastern Europe, extending into Africa. Western and southern Europe is divided between Roman Catholicism in proportion to three parts Romanists to two parts Protestants. The Romanists hold substantially Austria, Italy, Spain, and Portugal, with a large fraction of France, a considerable part of Germany, the larger part of Ireland, and a strong following in England. The Catholics hav almost entire South and Central America, with the whole of Mexico, and a powerful constituency in the United States and Canada in North America. In America as a whole —North, Central, and South—there are over sixty million Roman Catholics to about forty-eight million Protestants. Protestantism has its principal home in Great Britain, Germany, Switzerland, the Scandinavian kingdoms of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, and in the United States of America and the British provinces, and some of the smaller and larger islands. This, says Saladin, is approximately a correct cast of the religious status of the world today.

En bloc it shows two-thirds of the whole to be pagan, or, including the Mohammedans and Jews as antichristian components of the pagan fraction, three-quarters of the whole—not less than 1,050,000,000. The remaining fraction of 410,000,000—a little more than a quarter—Christians, of which fraction more than one-half is Roman Catholic, one quarter (nearly) Greek, and a trifle over a quarter Protestant. Of the race he estimates that 500,000,000 liv in houses partly furnished with the appointments of civilization; 700,000,000 in huts or caves with no furnishings; 250,000,000 hav nothing that can be called a home, are barbarous and savage. The range is from the topmost round—the Anglo-Saxon civilization, which is the highest known—down to naked savagery. The portion of the race lying below the proper line of human conditions is at the very least three-fifths of the whole, or 900,000,000.

Addressing Jehovah, Saladin comments: "Observe that I, O Lord, am counted in among the Christians; so are all the readers of this journal, and of all such journals over the world; and thou knowest, O Lord, the kind of Christian I am. In this England alone, O Lord, there are hundreds of thousands who think with me when they think at all; but I make thee welcome to set them down as Christians if the lie thereby involved may tend to thy glory. At the rate at which thy blessed gospel is being spread, when thinkest thou it will 'cover the whole earth as the waters cover the channel of the sea?' How long, O Lord, how long?"

Spiritual Photography.

My letter of June 25th in THE TRUTH SEEKER of July 3d, in consequence of an error which occurred in the printing, might be understood to indicate that the committee had been so surprised by the results of the two meetings which had then been held as to need to confer with regard to them. The "unexpected circumstance" was that on the following day was to be held the last meeting of the investigation, for the reason that Mr. Keeler expected to leave the city for the summer immediately, and the committee wished to include the results of that meeting in their report. As this would be their final report, giving not only the trials made, but our conclusions, it was necessary to confer upon it.

Nearly three weeks hav elapsed; Mr. Keeler is still in Brooklyn, with no expressed intention of soon leaving; but, although Mr. Robinson has been informed that we do not consider the results as furnishing any evidence in favor of Spiritual photography, we hav not been offered anything further. The evidence which we hav secured against the genuinness of the pictures produced in our presence is of a character which appears to me decisiv, and will be fully explained in the report which we hav in preparation. HENRY M. PARKHURST.

New York, July 15, 1886.

The American Secular Union.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, President.

Vice-Presidents:

CHARLES WATTS, JOHN E. REMSBURG, THADDEUS B. WAKEMAN, MATTIE P. KREKEL, JAMES PARTON, HORACE SEAVER, WILLIAM ALGIE, ROBERT C. ADAMS, TITUS L. BROWN, HELEN H. GARDENER.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sec., 33 Clinton Place, New York.

COURTLANDT PALMER, Treas., 850 Broadway, New York.

CHARLES B. REYNOLDS, Chair. Ex. Com.

E. M. MACDONALD, Chair. Fin. Com.

News and Notes.

From Helena I passed along up to the headwaters of the Missouri through a lovely valley. The most productiv soil in the world is found here between the ranges of hills. Beyond the headwaters, eastward we whirled up the Gallatin until we reached the garden of Montana, in the midst of which is the handsome city of Bozeman, named after an old frontiersman killed by the Indians, and his tomb is now in the breast of one of the mountains near by. I was met at the station by that stanch Liberal, Mr. J. M. Lindley. I had the pleasure of a few days' rest before delivering my lecture on Sunday evening. In the mean time I made the pleasant acquaintance of the many Freethinkers of the place, and had some delightful drives about the country, which is indeed beautiful, with mountain scenery of every kind, clear atmosphere, and splendid skies. The land here produces over one hundred bushels to the acre, and the best potatoes in the world. The strawberries are as good as God ever made—if he made them, for which I hav no evidence; but the strawberries are delicious, I know, and that is all-sufficient for my philosophy. On Saturday evening my good friend, Judge Lewis, took me out to the Methodist camp-meetiug. When we got there we found that the Lord had blown their tent down, and all the ministers were at work driving down the stakes. I guess they found that much harder work than converting sinners. I havn't the slightest doubt but they went in for an extra quantity of spring chicken to satisfy their ministerial hunger created by a little honest labor. I do like to see a clergyman hard at work. I met the Presbyterian minister driving home his cow. It did my heart good to know that in this, at least, he was worthy of his hire. He was really helping humanity to the extent of one cow, at least. On Sunday morning, having nothing else to do, and my friend Lindley and his wife offering the temptations of good company and a glorious lunch, we went to the camp-meeting again. The dinner was good, and those who ate it were excellent folks; but I cannot vouch for the sermons. The first thing the ministers did was to take up a collection. Not having tasted of the good things (spiritual) presented, I did not feel like paying until I had a sample of the goods. It was amusing to see how rapidly the crowd thinned out when it came to the solid part of the proceeding. I did go to meeting in the afternoon. The minister advanced the strange doctrin that if God had made the Bible so plain that everybody could understand it, then nobody would believe that it was a divine revelation. According to this theory the only way to prove the truth of the Bible is to make it a sort of Chinese puzzle. If we understand it, it is not the word of God; but if we do not understand it, why, then we hav reason for believing that it is of heavenly origin. God had to speak in riddles in order that the world might hav some faith in his utterances. Of course, if he gave a common sense revelation, then its readers would ascribe it to common sense, and not to God, according to the minister's logic. Perhaps they would, and thus God was compelled to be absurd and contradictory in order to vindicate his ways to man. I was so overcome by this logic that I came away, wondering what stuff ministers are made of.

There were three thousand at the camp-meeting on Sunday, and with this and Fourth of July celebrations I was afraid I should not hav much of an audience, but the hall—the largest in the city—was filled completely, and I never spoke to a more appreciativ audience. The Liberals of Bozeman are a splendid band, indeed, and my visit so far has been an exceedingly happy one.

I was pleased to find that Mrs. Lindley had come from one of my old camping-grounds, in what now seems to me the far East, Janesville, Wis., in whose Unitarian church I once delivered the gospel according to common sense, provided it didn't disagree with the Bible. I now preach common sense whether or no. Mr. Lindley enjoyed the brilliant ministrations of Lloyd Jones, an old confrère of mine, and one of the brightest and most generous-minded men in the Unitarian ranks. But for all that, Mrs. Lindley is no longer a Unitarian, but a first-rate Liberal.

If we had more workers like Mr. Lindley, we would revolutionize the world in a short time. He has lived in this country for over a quarter of a century. He has met all sorts of accidents by flood and field. He has faced the wild Indian, with his deadly arrow ready to fly, and the bullet has whistled along his path. He has slept beneath the snows of winter. Fortune and misfortune hav checkered his career, but he has met both with an equal mind. He is Radical from head to foot. He has the enthusiasm of humanity, but makes no pretense. If anything is to be accomplished, however, he is the man to do it.

Judge Lewis, who gave a most happy introduction to my lecture, is one of the strongest men in the territory, and has the courage of his convictions. He is highly cultivated, and has a well-stored mind. Such a man is a tower of strength to our cause.

Tom Burke of Ours—I was glad to meet him, indeed—that vigorous campaigner and chairman of executiv committee for Montana. Strange to say, we met for the first time at a Methodist camp-meeting. Only think of it! Who can tell what is in our stars? I never imagined when I read his stimulating letters that our pathways would cross right under the shoutings of the saints. If the ministers had only known it, I guess they would hav offered an extra prayer or two. As well, however, might they undertake to change the granit hills as friend Burke in his impetuous and splendid devotion to Freethought.

James Gourley is one of our noble Spiritualistic Liberals. He takes in everything—this life and the next—but with plenty of good sense, and a magnanimous mind. The difference is not one of quality, but of degree. He seeks the hereafter through the glory of this world, and therefore our harmony is as deep as the heart, and hope, and aspirations of humanity.

W. W. Alderson, editor and proprietor of the Avant-Courier, was once a Methodist minister, and one of the most brilliant men in that denomination. He was too good to stay there. He now publishes one of the livest papers in Montana. He is courageous in the expression of his opinions, and by his frank and impartial method of publishing a newspaper he has been of very great service in the extension of Liberal ideas. He is president of the Freethought society here, established by Dr. York, and I believe that in time this society will be a noble social and intellectual power. There is certainly excellent material in this county for a Secular Union and for activ work.

Mr. Cook, another Liberal, is always employed by the Christians to do their work, for they know they won't be cheated, while they are not quite so sure of their own brethren. This is a compliment to Liberalism that I find is constantly being paid.

Mr. G. V. Bogert, one of the prominent men of the city, was once an Episcopalian, but in obedience to his intellectual convictions he was obliged to sever his connection with the church. He frankly explained his skepticism to the bishop, and the bishop said, "Keep right on in the church; it makes no difference." This only made Mr. Bogert more determined to quit a church that cared not for belief or unbelief, provided one made himself useful to its worldly prosperity.

Many other friends I met in Bozeman who are thoroughly interested in Freethought. Mr. G. L. Henderson came down from the National Park to attend the lecture. I was glad to meet him. He was one of the first Liberals I met in New York city when I left the church. The readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER know him as an able advocate of our principles. I came with him to-day up to the Park. I am now at his Cottage Hotel. The Mammoth Hot Springs are before me, the Cap of Liberty, etc. I am in the very gates of Wonderland. To-morrow, with Mr. Henderson and others, I shall begin to traverse this marvelous region. I expect to be a changed man when I come forth. I am going to the Devil's Kitchen, the Devil's Half Acre, and I know not what other theological domains. However, the bright new moon is shining over my right shoulder, and so, with careless heart, I trust my fortune in this fantastic realm. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Yellowstone National Park, Wyo., July 5, 1886.

Obituary.

DIED.—At Glen Shaw, Allegheny Co., Pa., Xavier Wittmer aged 91 years, 1 month, and 25 days.

"Grandfather" Wittmer was born at Baden, in Germany, May 16, 1795, reared in the Catholic faith, and married at the age of twenty-seven. He raised a family of six children, some of whom preceded him to "the land of the free." His wife being dead, and no special ties to bind him to the fatherland, he turned his face toward the West and sought a home beyond the sea. He landed at Glen Shaw in 1857, and set industriously to work to pay for and improve his little homestead. Sterling worth and honest work brought their reward, and long before his death he had the satisfaction of seeing his children comfortably settled around him.

Mr. Wittmer, never very "religious," long ago ceased to pay tithes to the church, and transferred his allegiance to nature. He delighted in nothing so much as reading good books, and social intercourse with his neighbors. To-day his children and grandchildren are among the most intelligent and respected people in the county, and a number of them are members of the Pittsburgh Secular Society. He retained his mental vigor up to his ninetieth year, and used it to good advantage. His life was useful, and his death peaceful. He was laid to rest in the Allegheny cemetery on the 13th inst., the funeral ceremonies being conducted by Messrs. Harry Hoover and Thomas Grundy. H.

Pittsburgh, Pa., July 14, 286.

Communications.

Anarchism and Ethics.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I was not aware till I read your last paper that I had cautioned you to flee from the wrath to come. I want to pour the vials now on your correspondent J. L. Andrew, but will try not to hurt him much. Mr. Andrew says the logical tendency of Anarchy is to destroy all ethical distinctions, and then proceeds with a "statement of its principles," every one of which involves an ethical distinction. I say that Anarchists alone draw correct ethical distinctions. To prove it, let us consider the last six of the so-called Ten Commandments, which are allowed to form a summary of the received morality commanding attention by its brevity and point. "Honor thy father and mother"—if honor means consider thyself particularly indebted to—is a command which I, as an Anarchist and a parent, feel inclined to amend by substituting, "Honor thy son and thy daughter." Filial affection is, indeed, natural, but filial duty is a relic of barbarism. The obligation is all the other way. There can be no responsibility more imperativ than that involved in creating intelligent beings; hence, if there be a God, as Christians and others tell us, we owe nothing to him, but he owes everything to us; and if collectiv society brought me into being, as Mr. Andrew says, collectiv society has no claim on me, and I hav every claim on it. But I am not inclined to press this claim as state Socialists do press it. Having arrived at maturity, I will call it quits, if collectiv society will cease to treat me like a minor. "Thou shalt not kill" is an admirable command. The Anarchist, indeed, like other people, holds that it admits of exceptions, but he makes fewer exceptions than anyone else. It is justifiable to kill in self-defense. But it was not self-defense which made a million men kill each other in the Franco-Prussian war or the American civil war. Wherever there is killing somebody must be very much to blame. This is a principle not recognized by the governmental morality which rests on war, and is, essentially, war. And here we may see the great difference between the Anarchistic morality and the governmental. Both regard much the same actions as reprehensible; the former because they disregard natural law and produce evil through the operation of natural law to the perpetrator and others, the latter because governments find it necessary to conform in some degree to natural law. But the governmental morality, unlike the Anarchistic, justifies these actions, if, as Lord Macauley would say, they hav been preceded by the performance of certain mummery and the uttering of certain gibberish. "Thou shalt not commit adultery" is a command which, taken in the bare letter, would certainly be nullified by Anarchy; but taken in what is understood to be the spirit as prohibiting all violations of natural sexual law, it would not be abolished, but established, by Anarchy. The fundamental sexual vice is excess. Excess is made possible, first, by marriage, which makes the wife the property of the husband, and, secondarily, by the ignorance and dependence in which women are kept for the sake of this institution, which thus becomes the cause of prostitution. If love were free, the relations of the sexes would be regulated by the desires of the least amorous; that is to say, indulgence would be reduced to a minimum. "Thou shalt not steal," like the rest of the governmental moralities, is good in itself, but is not understood to be applicable to thefts "preceded by the performance of certain mummery and the uttering of certain gibberish." Go through the proper mummery and gibberish, and, though you may not "steal the goose from the common," you may "steal the common from the goose," and even the man who tends the goose from both. It is in the effort to perpetrate such thefts as these—in war and conquest—that government originated, and it is to maintain them that government continues to exist. "Thou shalt not bear false witness" is a good maxim. It is tolerably evident that almost all the lying in the world is the direct result of institutions and could hav no possible motiv if they did not exist. "Thou shalt not covet anything that is thy neighbor's" expresses the very central idea of Anarchy; but, N. B., the example must be set not by the little coveters who want bread, but the big ones who want land. Mr. Andrew, though evidently but little informed upon his subject, is as evidently not a fool, and, therefore, I hav much hope of his conversion. He correctly says that the chief danger of the American republic consists in the lack of public moral support for the liquor law and the Comstock law and all the other products of our wisest statesmanship. But he forgets to ask whether, if this danger should culminate in the fall of all these cherished institutions, the American people would be any the worse off. I defy him to show that Anarchy or any approach to Anarchy "caused the degeneracy and extinction of the nations of antiquity." It was always tyranny which did that.

In a later part of his essay he speaks of society as an organism, its progress as "evolution," and Anarchism as an a priori theory based on mere abstractions. Here, as usual, he shows very imperfect acquaintance with the doctrin he is attacking, and, besides, falls into the very fault of indefinit language which he charges against those who talk of natural rights and abstract justice. The word "evolution" is a mere cant, doing duty for the word "providence" as an apology for wrong and a plea for apathy, unless we determin what the actual history of the evolutionary process is. Now, to begin at the beginning, we Anarchists well know, in spite of Mr. Andrew's assertion, that natural passions, greed, lust, anger, revenge, were and are the prime causes of crime and war. War gave rise to conquest, conquest to government, government to institutions, such as land monopoly, chattel-slavery, marriage (with its Siamese twin, prostitution), priestcraft, etc., every one of which established license for one class, and tyranny for another—license and tyranny not being mutually exclusiv terms, as Mr. Andrew, in common with many others, supposes, but correlativ terms, expressing opposit sides of the same state. This was the first great change. For a long time its results seemed final. Republics became monarchies, and monarchies republics; but, as Gibbon remarked, the power everywhere belonged to the military class, so that the only true democracies were those very small states in which every man was a soldier. Even in Gibbon's time, however, another change was proceeding, and his observation is no longer true. To mobilize a modern army costs so much, and valor is so impotent against improved artillery, that the power has passed from the soldier to the capitalist. This is the second step—the establishment of modern bourgeois democracy. Now, if there be any agency against which money is as impotent as heroism against bullets, an agency which makes the rich man's wealth his danger, and the poor man's nakedness his coat of proof, that agency will overthrow the system resting upon wealth, and bring in Anarchy, for it needs a duller man than Mr. Andrew not to see that the modern providence, evolution, is separating the rich further and further from the poor, and arraying them against each other for a final conflict. Such an agency is dynamite.

Finally, allow me to giv my reasons for thinking that Anarchy will be a blessing to mankind. I do not think it will remove the causes of crime, but I do think it will reduce their effects to a minimum. Murders may be committed still, but there will be no more Borodinos and Magentas. Rape may be committed sometimes, but it will not, as now, be organized into a legal and religious institution. Theft may be committed sometimes, but land monopolies and protectiv tariffs will be no more. Besides, I am persuaded that those minor crimes, which government, the great criminal, regards as such, will be far less common than they are now; first, because the abolition of license involves that of tyranny, which would remove full half the motivs for them; and second, because it would remove all the protection chicanery givs to crime, and leave it to the merciless weeding of natural selection. Where, to illustrate, is the murderer safest—in New York or in Arizona?

C. L. James.

Eau Claire, Wis.

Charles Bradlaugh and His Scotch Critic.

I was very much grieved to see in the Boston Index of July 1st that Mr. Underwood givs a certain Scotchman an opportunity to vent his spleen at Charles Bradlaugh and those associated with him in England in advocating the cause of Freethought. Now, who is Charles Bradlaugh? And why is it that any Freethinker in Europe or America should attempt to disparage him in the great work to which he has devoted his life? Mr. Bradlaugh is a man of first-rate talents, and of unimpeachable character in all the relations of life. A child of no opportunities by birth, he forced his way by sheer merit to a position among the greatest lawyers at the English bar, and among the most far-seeing statesmen of the British Parliament. Had he been a religious indifferentist, or even a known Agnostic, as he is, and devoted his ability and attainments exclusivly to the practice of the law, as our rebel countryman, Benjamin, did in London, like Benjamin he might now be possessed of a fortune. Or had he been satisfied to show his contempt for the worship of Christendom by spelling the name of God with a little g, as another distinguished politician did, he might by this time be heir apparent to the premiership of England. But he furnishes the rare example of a man endowed with powers of mind sufficient to command both wealth and popularity devoting himself exclusivly to the deliverance of his fellow-men from the bondage of superstition. In Parliament, every speech he has made and every measure he has proposed has had in view the welfare of the people. His wisdom as a statesman, his generosity and fairness, are such as to amaze and compel the admiration of his enemies, as well as of his friends. In his speech in the House of Commons on the 10th of June, Mr. Gladstone cheered the sentiments he uttered, and went without his dinner till he heard it to the close. Although the Irish Home Rulers in the Parliament to which Mr. Bradlaugh had been four times elected steadily voted with the Tories to keep him out of his seat, he did not resent it in the last short-lived Parliament, after he had secured his seat, as many a man might hav done, but advocated their cause because he deems it both right and wise to do so. Without asking a fee for his services, as other lawyers do, he givs legal advice in many instances to those Radicals who ask it in defending themselvs against the persecution of their enemies. He is no holiday, amateur reformer, who fires a shot now and then into the fortress of superstition for the fun of seeing the splinters fly, but, with the devotion of a martyr, has given his whole life and strength to the cause of Freethought, taking the hardest kind of knocks and the bitterest misrepresentations of the Tories and the clergy unrepiningly. His honesty and fairness, as well as his eminent ability, are so appreciated by his Northampton constituents that he has been returned to the new Parliament, which is to meet next month, with an increased majority over the former vote.

Now, this is the man who is attempted to be spit upon by Mr. Underwood's Scotch friend, and who, with his following, that any English statesman would be proud of, is compared to Falstaff's ragged soldiery in their march through Coventry! How a man of any Freethought sympathies, in the terrible struggle we are making against the almost overwhelming power of the organized superstition of eighteen hundred years, can find it in his heart to reproach Mr. Bradlaugh as this Scotchman does, I cannot conceive. The only way of explaining the fact is that it is an outburst of envy—that meanest, cursedest, most unscrupulous, and unmanly passion of the human soul, which, instead of rejoicing that the cause we love has a leader more gifted and doing more good service than ourselvs, would pull him down into obscurity and hamstring him, so that we might be lifted into his place.

Look at the quality of the Radicalism of Mr. Underwood's Scotch friend. He says that the Freethinkers of Scotland are more nearly allied to the Tories than to the extreme political ideas of Bradlaugh, by which he means Bradlaugh's republicanism. He thinks these cultured gentlemen north of the Tweed could be gathered together if they only had a Free Religious Association, such as they hav in Boston, and such a paper as the Index. Then he begins his reproach of "the organization of which Bradlaugh is the central figure, which is so obscured by side issues such as republicanism, etc., and so thoroughly permeated by ignorance, and the worst forms of demagogism, that no man of education is attracted toward it."

Now, it would take millions of the class of men this Scotch friend of Mr. Underwood belongs to, and a million of years of such kind of efforts as they would put forth, to convert a single churchman to the cause of Freethought, and when he is converted he would not be worth the powder necessary to blow him into the state of existence where he was a thousand years ago. This gentleman's heart is with the British Tories, the hereditary robber class who hav plundered the English, Scotch, and Irish people of their land, which is their sole source of comfortable life. If they could, they would monopolize the atmospheric air and dole it out for pay to their fellow-men as they do the wealth, the intelligence, and the political power of the country. Mr. Bradlaugh is engaged, with the party he leads, in a deadly intellectual and moral war against this power and the superstition which supports it; and all this Scotch Freethinker can do is to dishonor him by comparing him and his associates to Falstaff's military recruits. If this Scotchman is a fair sample of the men of education in that country, and if this consorting with Tories and spitting venom at reformers like Bradlaugh are the legitimate effect of education, then I say, if there were any infernal regions inhabited by heartless, malicious, and envious devils, let such education go to the bottom of it!

It does seem, Mr. Editor, as though some of us would never get the idea into our heads that what the Freethought movement in this country and England needs, above everything else, is to get that very class which this degenerate Scotchman despises, the common people, enlightened, and on our side, because of the power they wield by their votes. Massachusetts, which likes to consider herself as the brain of the national body politic, still persists, by a large majority, in insulting and injuring some of her best citizens who are Agnostics in religion by destroying their testimony in a court of justice. The reason is that the masses of her people who are represented in her legislature are priest-ridden, and so ignorant that they do not see the injustice of the thing. If the Freethinkers of Boston and other places who are aggrieved would send out in the rural districts for a year or two such missionaries as Reynolds and Remsburg, the people might be civilized, and this burning reproach of the state be wiped away. Mr. Bradlaugh has sense enough to see what we do not yet see in this country, that, in the House of Commons, which is the representation of the people of England who now vote and rule the empire, his great and arduous work is to enlighten them so that they may vote intelligently on the issues that are pending. The arrant folly of putting the cart before the horse in matters of reform by law is seen in the defeat of Gladstone's scheme for doing justice to Ireland by the people of England. They are not enlightened, and, of course, choose representativs to Parliament like themselvs.

Before finishing what I hav to say, allow me to express my surprise and sorrow that Mr. Underwood should hav got his own consent to giv publicity to the letter of his Scotch friend. I cannot believe, when I consider Mr. Underwood's long and valuable services in the cause of Freethought, that he indorses the cold-blooded, supercilious, and dastardly assault which that writer makes upon our worthy coworkers in England. And yet it looks like it, for why should he allow so respectable a journal as the Index to be made a mouthpiece for such an unprovoked assault? All attempts, either by envious Englishmen or Scotchmen, to put dishonor upon Mr. Bradlaugh will be unavailing. This grand movement in the civilized world for the liberation of the human mind and conscience from false standards of truth and right is the birth of time. It advances slowly and surely, like an ancient glacier, plowing its way through rock-ribbed mountains of ignorance and prejudice, and while it may be retarded, it can never be stopped. Bradlaugh, Ingersoll, and the rest of our leaders are only its spokesmen and interpreters.

Enon Valley, Pa., July 10, 1886. A. B. B.

Mr. Freshman, Christian—Mr. Benjamin, Jew.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: That my articles in your paper hav met with favor among the most prominent Christian clergy, the following letter from Dr. Heber Newton will demonstrate:

I hav read your article with interest and can quite readily understand the feeling which it manifests. It is needless for me to assure you that I hav not the slightest sympathy with many of the methods of work of those who are seeking to spread Christianity amongst the children of Israel. I hav no wish to convert them to an ecclesiastical or dogmatic Christianity, and I hav seen very little evidence of genuinness in the so-called conversions. A juster attitude of Christians toward Israel would, I am sure, do away with its present reluctance to glory in the greatest son of Israel.

Encouraged by the above, permit me to furnish you with more truth for which you are seeking.

Since I succeeded in establishing beyond a shadow of a doubt the false colors under which the counterfeit Christian, Rev. Freshman, is sailing, I will appeal for justice—not to that hypocrit, for a man of brass and audacity based upon ignorance as displayed by that hireling is beyond the reach of all human virtues—but to intelligent Christian leaders like Drs. Crosby, Hall, and Deems, who are led, or rather misled, by that champion of ignorance, Freshman. To you, doctors of divinity, who are a pride to humanity in general and Christianity in particular, I, in the name of truth and true Christianity, which I revere, appeal that you open your eyes and look to the shame and disgrace you are heaping upon the religion you are preaching by the means you are adopting to spread Christianity, by hiring man-catchers like Freshman.

Since you are determined to augment the numbers of Christians, why not resort to a more legitimate mode, i.e., by printing as an advertisment, "The highest cash price paid for cast-off Jewish religion and no questions asked?" Besides the great saving in the commissions paid to agents of the Freshman clique, you will be spared the mortification of assault and battery from my pen upon your ignorant and falsifying representativ of the ex-rabbi gentry.

I, who am neither Infidel, Atheist, nor Agnostic, am yet forced to doubt the stability of Christianity. Judge how in despotic countries Christianity is propagated according to the gospel of St. Matthew x, 34, "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth. I came not to send peace, but a sword;" how the blood-and-iron ruler of Germany displays his methods of opposing those whom he religiously dislikes; how the Russian Bear buries his claws in the hearts of his Roman Catholic subjects; how the crazy permanent immersion of the Bavarian monarch is supposed to emanate from his religious opponents; how the all-absorbing question of Home Rule is not a question of freedom, but of southern Irish Catholics against northern Protestants!

But even in this land of the brave, the knight of labor of the Brooklyn Tabernacle actually incited his hearers to brutal force against the greatest Freethinker of the age, Colonel Ingersoll; and now the more rational divines are willing to accept the statement of every tramp who, while professing Christianity with his lips, with his hands is receiving the greenbacks!

Show me the names of Freshman & Co. attached to any benevolent institution. To the contrary, he is constantly begging. Fifty cents will secure his miserable organ, twenty-five cents will afford anybody the opportunity to see him parading in fringes, phylacteries, and scrolls. Five dollars and more toward his family and religious abode will secure the donor's name to appear conspicuously in his money-making enterprise. Begging, begging, begging, all for Christ's sake!

But many may remonstrate and say, "Ain't we in a free country where everybody is entitled to eke out a living the best way he knows how?" Yes, I reply. Thank God, we are in a free country. But do we not limit our freedom and restrict the liberty of even those who hav been high church members, but are reckless in their financial dealings, reckless in building uninhabitable abodes, reckless in "boodling" away our streets and avenues? Why then not restrict the liberty of the Freshman type who is receiving money on deposit for heaven's sake, and appropriates it for his own earthly use, who is constructing abodes unfit for the spiritual habitation, and who receives boodle for the voting down of heavenly avenues? Why not provide quarters for the Rev. Freshman in Sing Sing, not only for his own crimes of obtaining money under false pretenses, but also to convert those high-toned fallen Christians, Messrs. Fish, Buddensiek, and Jaehne?

I will now proceed to argue from a business point of view. Will any Christian merchant giv up his well-established, profitable, and legitimate business for some wild-goose-chase speculation of which not only he himself has no knowledge, but upon which even the schemers are unable to throw light? How, then, can Christianity expect that the Jew will part with his old established religion, which gained him credit throughout the world by being backed by his Bible, patriarchs, prophets, psalmists, Meyerbeers, Mendelsohns, Montefiores, Zunzs, and Rothschilds, to enter into a new enterprise, Christianity, whose arithmetical problem not only he himself is unable to solve, but concerning which even its advocates display the highest degree of ignorance, and dare not come up to answer one or two questions from the New Testament?

Gentlemen of the Christian clergy, why not take a lesson from the Jew?—he who first exclaimed, "Love thy neighbor as thyself; one law shall prevail among the homeborn and the sojourner;" he who for thousands of years, one of a mere handful in comparison with other nations, underwent the greatest persecution to the present day. He has never sought converts. In fact, his sages teach him, "Converts to Israel are like leprosy." Yet those few converts to Judaism, who could be counted on the fingers, did not only liv for their conviction, but died for it at the stake. Converts like Freshman, it is true, liv for Christianity as long as the Christian Greenback sticks to them; but remove it, they, like the heathen laundryman, will say, "No payee, no washee" souls.

For further demonstration I need only point out how already, four years ago, I accused Freshman of being ignorant of his new-found religion, and obtaining money under false pretenses, for which my check of $500 was deposited with the New York Herald, but he never came up to the scratch. One would think that during the elapse of the four years he should hav been able to study up the question. But, alas! study is out of his line. Besides, he is so busy extracting diseased souls and putting in new and healthy ones in their place that study is out of question.

But I was asked by not a few, Why make an example of poor, ignorant Freshman, when many born Christian ministers are equally as ignorant, and not capable of expounding Christian theology? I fully admit this to be a fact. Yet those born Christians could at least boast of their birth, but as to that renegade Christian, his birth only serves him as an advertisment to be a son of a rabbi, that he has stumbled against Christ through conviction.

After all, the only part of Christianity he practices is clinging like a leech to the Christian pocket-book, minus Christian theology. This entitles him to damn me and the rest of the eight million Jews, not only during lifetime, but even after death, simply because I, instead of following his begging expedition, endeavor to make an honest living by the sweat of my brow.

I therefore appeal to you, honest Christian leaders, to save true Christianity from further degradation, and, like Joshua of old, force your modern Achan, alias Freshman, "to giv glory to the Lord God of Israel, and make confession unto him, and tell now what thou hast done, hide it not from me."

New York, June, 1886. A. Benjamin.

C. L. James, Anarchist and Alderman.

The following sketch from the St. Paul, Minn., Daily Globe of July 4th of one of The Truth Seeker's best known contributors will be read with interest by Mr. James's friends. It is needless to say that the sketch was written by an opponent of its hero's philosophy:

Something of a stir has been created by the publication in the July number of the North American Review in the "Notes and Comments" department, of an article by Charles L. James of this city, under the title, "Anarchism Defined by an Anarchist." Mr. James, who, with Mayor Grinnell and others, was carried into the city government on a Knights of Labor tidal-wave this spring, has long been very prominent as one of the queer characters of this region. The eldest son of George P. R. James, the famous English novelist, whose "Solitary Horseman" is yet a charm to conjure with in the realms of romantic fiction, Alderman James inherited all the literary tastes of his distinguished parent, and has from childhood devoted himself with wonderful assiduity to literary pursuits. His study of ancient and modern literature, while it has given him the reputation of being a universal encyclopedia of knowledge, has rendered him a "Freethinker" in the widest sense of the term, and he has from time to time astonished the local public by the promulgation of curious theories in ethics and political economy. In many respects a remarkable character, a polished scholar, a bold and original thinker, and, but for his unfortunate manner of delivery (which resembles a fractured bag-pipe), a powerful speaker, his eccentricities in thought, speech, and costume hav caused him to be generally called a crank by the unappreciativ. He is a typical Anarchist of the educated species, and, as such, is worthy of study. As he minds his own business, meddles with nobody, and never carries dynamite with him, he is only a speculativ Anarchist, and there is no stigma on his reputation, except that he is a member of the Common Council. His successful debut as an Anarchist on paper has made him perfectly happy, and as he is the only Anarchist in this region, the people of Eau Claire, who hav always been proud of him as a curiosity, are now prouder still on the same account. Mr. James's occupation is circulating a Milwaukee paper, and he is sometimes called the "newsboy alderman." He continues quietly about his business, and is not considered a dangerous character. He has never carried out his Anarchistic theories in practice, except that he has been of great assistance to the mayor in keeping the city government in a state of inextricable confusion since his last election; and his proclamation of Anarchism in the North American is not considered nearly as serious an assault upon the public peace as was a volume of Swinburnian poems which he wrote and published some years ago. His prominent position in the management of city affairs, and his eccentric speech and manners, as he goes about the city arrayed in garments apparently obtained from the wardrobe of the Cardiff giant, selling his Milwaukee newspaper and crying "Morning paper, Cap!" make him one of the most prominent figures in the current life of the city. He is talked of for the legislature and is willing to go.

The Friends of the Frenchwomen.

Vichy becomes monotonous after three weeks' stay, notwithstanding the varied amusements, in the casino, in the church, and in the theater; but one never gets weary of the beautiful parks. Some one has said, "God made the country, but man made the town." With man's help, God made the park. One of these parks borders the river Allier, on the margin of which hundreds of Frenchwomen wash clothes. Saw a tub in two, and you hav the kind of protection from the water in which, on their knees, these poor people wash wool, shirts, coats, or anything they can turn a few sous from, the day long. Frenchwomen, like the German women, are a hard-working class, and hundreds of thousands of them are miserable looking in old age. It is a shame to see fat priests, that never work, liv on their toil.

The German and French women hav a real friend. The first hav a friend in the dog who drags all the truck he can in a cart to market, or milk to town. You can see in Germany dogs harnessed to carts, clumsily and heavily made for a dog to draw; but the dog pulls to the death. As soon as he stops at a customer's house, he falls to the ground to sleep and rest.

The hard-working Frenchwomen, the salt of the earth, the old and young; women at seventy or eighty that hoe the fields; the young of every age, that wheel a barrow, drive to market, wash clothes at the river shore, wear wooden shoes, make their own stockings, whose miserable pittance for the wear and tear of a life would not buy the trousseau of the bride of a bourgeois, hav a friend. This friend of the Frenchwoman's is not a man, or any of his kind, but it helps her do the hard work she is compelled to do. It appears to be patient under the load it has to draw. Sometimes woman and beast are harnessed together, and make slow progress toward their destination, where she is to bargain, and he to stand in sober earnestness, for hours, until there is none to barter, or nothing to sell. In sunshine and storm, this friend of the Frenchwoman is ready to do her service. It is not a splendid creature to look at, but is strong and hardy. It does not sing; it can and will work. It asks nothing but food for its pay, that is all.

There is another friend of the Frenchwomen. He is a man—but who can tell? He looks like a man, but dresses like a female; he is always with them, He does no work of any kind. He sings and prays. and plays a first-class game, for his belly. He gets pay from the government, out of the taxes and tears raised from the product of the labor of these poor women, that wear wooden shoes and work from sunrise until sunset. This friend also takes all the pennies he can wheedle out of them for prayers and masses. In return this friend givs them wind. He is at the christening of the new Frenchwoman that is to wear wooden shoes, and rejoices at the gold he gets. He is in at the death of the old Frenchwoman, whose wooden shoes hav been kinder to her than her people; but this friend still takes cash, with no smile, only in his heart. They say he is kind. Yes, for himself. They say he is sympathetic. Yes, for himself. They say he has a soul. That may be; but it must be very small—a little one, not to be compared with the soul of the jackass, the real friend of the Frenchwoman. C. E.

Vichy, France, June 25, 1886.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

FOUNDED BY D. M. BENNETT.

E. M. MACDONALD, - - - Editor.
C. P. SOMERBY, - - Business Manager.

PUBLISHED BY

THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY.

33 Clinton Place, New York.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

Address all Communications to THE TRUTH SEEKER COMPANY. Make all Drafts, Checks, and Postal Orders payable to CHARLES P. SOMERBY.

SATURDAY, - - - - JULY 24, 1886.

SUBSCRIPTION RATES.

Single subscription	$3 00
One subscription two years, in advance	5 00
Two new subscribers	5 00
One subscription with one new subscriber, in one remittance	5 00
One subscription with two new subscribers, in one remittance	7 00
One subscription with three new subscribers, in one remittance	8 50
One subscription with four new subscribers, in one remittance	10 00
Any number over five at the same rate, invariably with one remittance.

The State Convention.

The responses to our invitation to an expression of preference as to the location of the next Convention of the New York State Freethinkers' Association are neither as numerous nor as decided as we could wish, and leave the matter just where it was in the beginning. So far, White Sulphur Springs is the choice, and it is probable, if the Convention is not held in connection with the Congress of the Secular Union, that that place would be the most suitable. The objection of greatest force is that the town is rather far east. The advantages, however, seem to outweigh this objection.

But before the locality is definitly decided the officers of the Association would like to hear further from those who propose to attend. The response must be immediate, as the time is short.

Our Public Schools.

Again this question is pushed to the front by the Catholics, who are determined that it shall not down till they receive the reward they seek—the subsidizing by the state of their parochial schools. And who that knows the history of Romanism—is familiar with her tireless energy, her stealthy hunt for power—will doubt that before another decade passes the question will hav to be decided in hundreds of communities at the polls? This time the Catholic propaganda comes in the form of a discussion between the Rev. Patrick F. McSweeny, rector of St. Bridget's church, New York, and Howard Crosby, the well-known militant Presbyterian "divine."

The discussion, however, is very much one-sided, Mr. Crosby confining himself to the statement that a division of school funds among the sects would lead to war between Catholics and Protestants, and that heretical schools as well as religious would necessarily be subsidized. The chief interest, therefore, of the paper in the current number of the Catholic World lies in the expressions of Mr. McSweeny, who has a plan—in fact, several plans—whereby our government can be converted into a huge machine for the teaching of Christianity, to the great glory of the churches Catholic and Protestant, and to the corresponding confusion of the Infidel and Agnostic. The all-encompassing plan is to unite the two chief bodies of Christians in this work and make a simultaneous charge upon the Constitution. After capturing the government, the two thieves would divide the booty according to religious convictions of the marauders. It is needless to say that in this division the Catholic church would receive her share.

The main, and perhaps only, obstacle to this scheme, says Mr. McSweeny, "is the fear which the Protestants seem to hav of the pope and of the church." In this fear the bishop sees signs of acknowledged weakness, and takes it as a compliment to the Romish church. He goes further, too, and sets down the real trouble to be "that Protestants are fast losing all belief in any revealed religion." He is, he says, "more convinced every day that the time is rapidly approaching when there will be only two great camps—that of the Catholics and that of the Infidels. Such sincere and earnest Christians as still belong to Protestant denominations will betake themselvs to the tents of the former, and the others will be ranged under the banner of naturalism."

Keeping this complexion of the inevitable war in mind, Mr. McSweeny tells what his church wants and means to hav, and invites the Protestants to come in and share with her the work and profit. Starting with the unproved assertion that the school is the children's church, he shows how, could he hav his way, that church would be supported by the state and conducted by the priests. He says:

"Secular instruction is no doubt useful, and perhaps necessary, in a republic especially; but why need it be divorced from religion? In England the state encourages those who wish to educate their own children by giving a per capita allowance to private schools for each child who passes the examination of the public board in secular branches. Why could not this be done here? Let them even examin the teachers, if thought necessary, in the secular branches, leaving to the parents the liberty of saying of what denomination they shall be. The state would thus pay, as at present, only for the secular instruction. What harm would be done to anybody, except to a bigot, if the child is also trained to be a good Christian at the expense of his parent or of his church? For those parents who are indifferent, let things go on as at present, although the cost per capita is fully twice what it would be if the work was done by the church, assisted by the state. I am actually educating fully nine hundred children, and I am giving as good a secular education as that at the public schools, for less than half the cost. Many other pastors are doing the same. It is too much to expect the churches to provide both religious and secular education, especially as their members are already taxed for the state schools."

In the face of the flippant manner in which Mr. McSweeny speaks of secular instruction as "no doubt useful, and perhaps necessary, in a republic especially," we think the public will not err if it takes his statement of the quality of his school "with a grain of salt." As to the cost, we should hav been better satisfied had he given us figures. Figures, it is said, do not lie. Whenever we read an advertisment of a parochial school, the remark comes back to us of a Catholic employed as porter in a store in this city who had withdrawn his children from the parochial school and sent them to the public school. "I want them to learn reading, writing, and arithmetic," he said in answer to the question why he made the change; "something besides the catechism."

In his plea Mr. McSweeny very properly lays great stress upon the rights of minorities. "Intelligent men," he says, "are always in the minority, but they can and do lead the majority." As the Catholics are in the minority in this country, he begs for justice for the minority, and protests against majority rule in the matter of schools. No doubt—or rather there is grave doubt, but for the sake of the argument we will ignore it—Mr. McSweeny will as eloquently plead for minority rights when the Christians hav complete control of the government. In that case schools must be built for all the sects, the hated Infidels and Agnostics as well as the loved Christians. The Catholic church is pretty compact, and few schismatics disturb its serenity. But there is the Greek Catholic church, and we hav a few Catholic reformers in existence, fellows like Père Hyacinthe, of France, who do not believe in celibacy for priests, nor in the confessional for women. Schools must be provided for these, as well as for the most orthodox Catholic who ever kissed the pope's toe. But it is when we begin to number the Protestant sects that the task to be undertaken by the government appals the imagination. Everyone knows, too, that Protestant sectarianisms will not mingle, and when Mr. Crosby said that "Roman Catholics and Protestants will fight like cat and dog if you hav the state subsidizing denominational schools," he no doubt had a shrewd squint in that eye with which he looked at his fellow-churchman. Is there a Presbyterian in the country who would send his child to a school to be indoctrinated with Universalism? Is there a Methodist in the thirty-eight states who would send his boys and girls to a school taught by a Mormon? Yet Mormons are Protestants, and very vigorous ones just now. Could an Episcopalian patronize a Unitarian school, or an Adventist an Anglican? How would a Puseyite get along with a Progressionist, or a Congregationalist with a Ritualist? In short, would any one of the nearly two hundred Protestant sects desire their children instructed in the creedal tenets of any other? Then we hav the Materialists, the Positivists, the Spiritualists, the Agnostics, the Ethical School of Religion, the Free Religious Society, and other heretical bodies of people whose claims must be considered. What would the state do for them? They are in a minority now, but they are fast growing, and the rights of minorities are as sacred as the rights of majorities. What a lot of schools must be subsidized in every town—one for each sect, and one for those of no sect! England has one hundred and eighty odd religious sects; the United States about the same. Think of the possibility of having to build one hundred and eighty school-houses in every school district! Rich as the government is, it would bankrupt the national treasury.

Yet if we are to hav religious schools, there is but one other alternativ, which is for the government to define what religion is, or pick out one or two sectarianisms and allow the instructors to teach no others. That, however, would be a unification of church and state, which is prohibited in Article I. of the Amendments to the United States Constitution.

We must regard Mr. McSweeny's plans as failures.

Knights of Labor, Anarchists, and Socialists.

The two following extracts are worthy of careful perusal and deep thought:

From Labor Budget, Organ K. of L.

Socialism, Anarchism, and murder find no defenders in the K. of L. If a conflict should ever occur as the results of Communism, the Knights of Labor will be found upholding the Constitution of the United States and laws of the country against all transgressors. The Knights of Labor are the stoutest opponents yet placed against Socialism and Anarchy. They are friends of the law and of order. They believe in order, and are determined that the laws shall be obeyed. Down with Socialism and Anarchy. Up with education and equality. As to the whole tribe of Anarchists, Nihilists, and Socialists, there can be but one opinion among good citizens. Opposed to law and order, which are as necessary to labor as to capital, they are the enemies of the human race, and there is no place for them in this country. They hav no sympathy with honest labor, and the workingmen, whose cause they injure, should be the first to denounce and oppose them. The honest workingmen are good citizens, and they know that this is the best country for them in the world. They seek not to destroy, but to build up. Their worst enemies are the destructivs who do not know how to value free institutions. They and their whole doctrin and following should be driven from the country, or, better still, from the face of God's earth.

From the Kansas City Journal.

We do not assert that the Knights of Labor are directly responsible for the recent terrible carnivals of blood in Chicago and Milwaukee, but we do charge that the methods pursued by the Knights of Labor during the recent strike in the Southwest hav been the strongest possible encouragement for such red-handed murderers as Parsons, Fielden, and others to institute a reign of anarchy in Chicago and Milwaukee. Are the actions of the mob in Chicago any worse than that of the band of Knights which ambushed a train near Fort Worth and fired a deadly volley from Winchester rifles into the ranks of the officers of the law? Hav the followers of Parsons and Fielden perpetrated any more heinous act than did the Knights who derailed the train on the Missouri Pacific near Wyandotte, and hurled innocent men to their deaths? Hav Parsons and Fielden propounded any more Anarchical doctrin than did the striking Knights at Parsons, who claimed the rights of belligerents in time of war? We submit in all fairness that the record of the Knights in the Southwestern strike furnishes them with but limited capital with which to point the finger of scorn at the followers of the Anarchist Parsons.

There is, doubtless, a great deal of honest and righteous indignation in the remarks of the Labor Budget, and there is also a large amount of cold, unvarnished truth in the reflections of the Journal. Not the least necessity exists for the Budget to work itself into a passion against all Socialists and Anarchists, because there are both Socialists and Anarchists who are as good citizens and as law-abiding as any Knight of Labor, and in honesty and intelligence they are the peers of anybody. They certainly hav what Mr. Tucker would call the superior "scientific grasp." As the Journal points out, they are no more incendiary in their acts than the Knights, and they do not seek to accomplish their aims through laws scarcely less burdensome than the wrongs sought to be remedied. That "they and their whole doctrin and following should be driven from the country, or, better still, from the face of God's earth," as the Budget declares, is the most dangerous and un-American sentiment that we hav anywhere seen.

The suspicion arises that when the Labor Budget classes "Socialism, Anarchy, and murder" indiscriminately together it does not know what it is talking about. What the noble order of the Knights of Labor need is to be delivered from the stigma brought upon them both by the violent acts of their members and by the reckless rant of their organs.

The law will attend to Anarchists and Socialists who break the law. Those who do not break the law hav as much right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness as anybody else.

When Was Christ Born?

To THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Your remarks as to when Christ was born require a little addition, it seems to me. Matthew says Christ was born in the days of Herod the king; that on account of Herod's order to slay the infants Joseph fled with the child into Egypt and there remained until after Herod's death, and until he heard that Herod's son Archelaus reigned in his stead.

Luke says Christ was born when his parents went up to Bethlehem to be taxed, and that this taxing was first done when Cyrenius was governor of Syria.

Josephus says Herod died a few days after an eclipse of the moon. He wanted to kill some of his own children, but so feared the people he dared not attempt it till he found his end was so near. This eclipse has been calculated back and found to be of date in March B. C. 4. Josephus relates that after Herod's death Archelaus was confirmed in the government and reigned ten years and was then banished; that Judea and Syria were united under one government and Cyrenius was sent out from Rome to be governor; that he ordered a tax of the Jewish nation, and that this tax was heinously taken by the Jews. Any student of Josephus must observe how very accurate is he whenever he speaks of minutiæ; and although he givs no dates he relates events in such order that we can get quite close to dates. Those chapters in the Antiquities are especially minute—more so than those in the War. As Luke refers to Cyrenius in the past tense, we may infer that his office had ceased. Anyhow, this first taxing by Cyrenius ended in the thirty-seventh year after the battle of Actium. At least, if Luke is taken, Christ must hav been born eleven years after Herod's death. From the accounts by Josephus we can see about how, where, and when that sect arose among the Jews—that new philosophy similar to Essenism he describes—which coöperated later with some older one, and in the vast confusions forgot much, added and mixed much, and developed into Christianity under the teachings of that master genius we know as Paul, an inspired, earnest, eloquent soul, if ever there was one—i. e., a genius.

So far as exposing contradictions of Bibles is concerned I would not turn my hand over to do so, were it not from desire of destroying idolatry—Bible fetichism. The Bible it really, when read with enlightened eyes, a most fair work, of extraordinary interest, and teeming with wisdom in places. Priestcraft has made of it a God with most fatal consequence to ignorance. Philo, the great Jew, the foremost man of all the Jewish world in or about A.D. 1, knew how to interpret it—as an allegory (the Pentateuch, I mean). C.

Our correspondent's data appear to be quite correct according to the records. Josephus has given us pretty much all we know of the history of those times, especially as affecting the Jews. His history cannot be successfully contradicted except as to certain exaggerations of numbers and stories of marvelous events. But Luke, as we before remarked, seems to make a blunder every time he undertakes to giv dates. Evidently he was unacquainted with Jewish history, and Rabbi Wise says that both in the gospel and in the Acts the writer betrays a want of knowledge of the Hebrew, of the laws and customs of the Jews, and of the geography of Palestine.

As to the Essenes, Josephus describes them as existing about the year 20 B.C., at which time he tells us that Herod especially favored Manahem the Essene. Several years ago our correspondent "Antichrist" drew attention to the apparent identity of Manahem the Essene with Manaen of Acts xiii, 1, 2:

"Now there were in the church that was at Antioch certain prophets and teachers, as Barnabas, and Simeon that was called Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, and Manaen, which had been brought up with Herod the tetrarch, and Saul."

This Manaen of Acts answers in name to Manahem the Essene, a school-teacher who once met Herod the Great when a child, and clapping the boy on the back, prophesied that he would be king and would reign long. Substitute in the above passage "the Great" for "the tetrarch" and we would hav Manahem the Essene associated with Barnabas, Lucius of Cyrene (perhaps Luke the Evangelist), and Saul of Tarsus, afterward called Paul. And Josephus says that Herod also especially favored Pollio the Pharisee, another prophet, who, when Herod was once upon trial of life and death, told the judges, by way of reproach, that "this Herod, whom they suffered now to escape, would afterward inflict punishment on them all" (Ant. xv, 1).

Many years after this trial (which was about 37 B. C.), Josephus tells us that Herod sent two of his sons to Rome to enjoy the company of Cæsar, "and they lodged at the house of Pollio, who was very fond of Herod's friendship." Paul undoubted ended his days at Rome, and "Antichrist" maintains that he died as early as the year 10 B.C. In his letter to the Philippians Paul says: "All the saints salute you, chiefly they that are of Cæsar's household." And when the apostle was sent to Rome the writer of Acts twice tells us (xxv, 21, 25) that it was for a hearing before Augustus.

Editorial Notes.

THE Church Times, of England, protests against the erection of a church as a memorial to Elizabeh Fry, on the ground that "that excellent Quakeress was not, strictly speaking, a Christian." The Church Times may be right. Who can tell what is real, simon-pure Christianity?

ON "Corpus Christi" Sunday a procession of priests passed through the streets of Montreal bearing the "host." As the "host" passed the St. Johns military school the commandant ordered his men to present arms and kneel. This was termed "presenting arms to God." As the order was a violation of military regulations, the commandant is likely to be court-martialed.

IN enumerating the portraits in the TRUTH SEEKER ANNUAL for the current year, the Hartford Times has a bit of philosophy highly disagreeable to Christians. "It remains an uncomfortable fact," it says, "in any study of the world's religions, that so many of the world's great ones hav repudiated all creeds, even the scheme of Christianity itself as a divine order." Truly, it is an uncomfortable fact, but not at all astonishing.

IN the recent elections in England the clergy of the Established Church took a very decided stand against the Home Rulers. On one Sunday the archbishop of York, primate of the church, selected as the text upon which to build a sermon the advice of Paul to the Ephesians, which he abbreviated to read, "Put off the old man, which is corrupt." Mr. Gladstone ought to feel very friendly toward the Church of England.

THE following from the Beacon is the latest argument against Sunday newspapers:

"The Sunday newspaper tends not only to destroy the sacred character of the Sabbath, and to make the public worship a farce for those who read it, but it is supplanting the religious press. A person who reads a daily paper all the week, and an edition with a supplement of the same on Sunday, has no time left for a religious weekly, and the weekly is soon dropped."

We extend such sympathy as we hav on hand to the religious editors, but cannot just now see what they are going to do about it. The publishers of the Sunday papers are undoubtedly too worldly-minded to heed their protests.

COLE YOUNGER, one of those celebrated Minnesota bandits, the Younger brothers, is said to be a man of great ability and considerable education. Since his imprisonment he has studied the Bible carefully, and now regularly preaches to his fellow-convicts in the Stillwater penitentiary. But, after all, the transformation is not very great from a robber to a preacher. Both get a living from the world without giving anything in return.

In the midst of his infirmities, during which he has sometimes for days together been unable to hold a pen, Mr. Spurgeon has issued his nineteen hundredth sermon. Luminous, as well as voluminous, may this devoted servant of God be long spared to the church on earth.—Religious Paper.

If Mr. Spurgeon would cease his enormous consumption of beer and brandy, that "devoted servant of God would be spared a good deal longer to the church on earth," and his "infirmities" would be fewer. A beer and brandy drinking parson will hav the rheumatism and gout just as severely as the most woful sinner.

A PRETTY little Sunday-school tale has been used by nearly every religious paper in the land to fill up an odd corner of its columns. It is about England's queen. Victoria was asked by some person, inquisitivly inclined on political subjects, to what she attributed the source of England's greatness. Her answer was both laconic and pious: "The Bible." It is a pity to touch so fervid a story with cold truth, but Mr. J. N. Masters, of Rye, England, wrote to Sir Henry Ponsonby, the queen's secretary, to know whether or not it was true. Mr. Ponsonby has written in reply that "there is no truth whatever in that commonly-believed story." Thus has another bulwark of Christianity gone overboard.

IF we may judge by the following piece of commercial paper, brought to light by a religious journal, God participated rather more activly in the affairs of the world one hundred years ago than at present:

"Shipped, by the grace of God, in good order and well-conditioned, by Messrs. H. Vanderburgh and Co., in and upon the good brig called Betsy and Sukey, whereof Giles Hollister is master, under God for the present voyage, and now riding at anchor in the port of Newbern, and by God's grace bound for New York, 417 bbls. of tar; 47 bbls. Turpentine; 44 bbls. Pitch; 6 Venison Hams; 4 Deer Skins, and one bbl. of fat, to be delivered in good order unto Mr. Hamtramock, or to his assigns, he or they paying freight, with primage and average accustomed—In witness whereof, etc.—and so God send the good ship to her destined Port in safety. AMEN. Dated at Newbern, 16th Feb. 1785. Giles Hollister."

A bill of lading in those days, it appears, was a theological document as well as a receipt for goods shipped.

THE Bayshore Journal brings news of the death of Mrs. C. A. Codman, of Brentwood, L. I., which occurred on July 2d. The town of Brentwood was founded by a handful of radicals, of whom Mrs. Codman was one. She and her husband hav been known beyond the community for their good works, and as disciples of a faith which the average Long Islander finds it difficult to understand. Positivism to a Christian is synonymous with heresy, but though outspoken in their convictions Mr. and Mrs. Codman had the good will of all. The Journal says of the funeral services: "The tenets of their faith called for no assistance from a clergyman, at least from none in this neighborhood, but those who assembled to render tribute to the many virtues and excellences of their departed friend were none the less earnest and heartfelt in their expression." Mr. Codman's grief at his loss is shared by many friends.

THE Index quotes from a contemporary thus: "A writer in the Congregationalist says that he does not find much 'burning piety,' 'unquestioning faith,' and 'self-sacrificing ardor' among the German candidates for the ministry." As to the "burning piety" it no doubt still exists, but, fortunately, on account of an increase of worldly knowledge, these times no not allow of its oldtime expression and exercise.

Lectures and Meetings.

MRS. LILLIE DEVEREUX BLAKE will lecture at Warsaw, N. Y., July 22d and 23d; at Leroy, 24th and 26th; at Batavia, 27th; at Clifton Spa, 30th, and at Weedsport, August 4th.

W. F. JAMIESON is holding a debate with Rev. D. O. Van Slyke, of Wisconsin, in the Opera House at Madison, Dakota, on the questions: 1. "The Existence and Being of the God of the Bible." 2. "Infidelity (Freethought) is Superior to Christianity." There is a call for Mr. Jamieson to go to Leon, Iowa, to debate with a Rev. Wilson. If the Leon Liberals can defray the heavy cost of so long a journey the debate will probably take place early in August. His address is Lake City, Minn.

C. B. REYNOLDS has been for the past week at Montezuma, N. Y., where he has encountered violent weather, but succeeded in disposing of quite a quantity of Liberal literature, and forming a Secular Union. Mr. Reynolds goes next to Boonton, N. J. He writes: "Now let all desiring Tent effort write me at once. And all New York Liberals prepare for a glorious meeting of the New York State Freethinkers' Association. The cause requires that every man and woman do their duty, and help by their presence to boom the movement in the Empire state.

THE Dillon, Montana, Examiner of June 19th contained this notice of the missionary efforts of the American Secular Union's secretary: "On Thursday morning last handbills were circulated around the city, anuouncing that Samuel P. Putnam, secretary of the National Secular Union, would deliver free lectures at the Court-house on Thursday and Friday evenings. During the day Mr. Putnam, accompanied by Mr. William G. Emerick, succeeded in making many acquaintances, and put in his time agreeably. He was driven out to Mr. Emerick's residence for dinner, and when he reached the Court-house in the evening he found a large audience there to greet him, including many ladies. At nine o'clock Hon. W. S. Barbour introduced Mr. Putnam, and that gentleman announced that he would use as the basis of his argument the subject, 'Universal Mental Liberty.' For an hour he held the closest attention of the large audience, and made a good argument in favor of Freethought, and against all religious forms, being frequently interrupted by applause. He is a fluent, easy, and natural speaker, graceful of gesture, and has a method of reasoning his case without offending his hearers who are opposed to his views. Last evening Mr. Putnam had another large audience to hear his lecture on the 'New Heaven and Earth.' He was listened to attentivly."

WHEN J. E. Remsburg made his first tour East as a Liberal lecturer, four years ago, he had two engagements. Last August he started East on his seventh semi-annual tour with sixty engagements. This year he is so thronged with calls that he will not be able to cross the Mississippi before November. He had contemplated a trip to Colorado in August, a trip through the Northwest on his return, and a tour East about the last of September. The announcement that he would make a tour of the northwestern states, however, brought so many calls that he has been compelled to abandon his Colorado trip, decline all calls for lectures east of the Mississippi as well as Kansas and Missouri, and begin work a month earlier than usual. He is now filling engagements for thirty-six lectures in Nebraska. The following is his program for that state:

Salem	Thursday, July 15
Humboldt	Friday, July 16
Liberty	Saturday, Sunday, July 17, 18
Mission Creek	Sunday, July 18
Wilber	Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, July 19, 20, 21
Waverly	Thursday, Friday, July 22, 23
Greenwood	Saturday, Sunday, July 24, 25
Louisville	Monday, Tuesday, July 26, 27
Arlington	Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, July 28, 29, 30
Osceola	Saturday, July 31, Sunday, Aug. 1
Omaha	Monday, Aug. 2
Palmyra	Tuesday, Wednesday, Aug. 3, 4
Edgar	Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Sunday, Aug. 5, 6, 7, 8
Indianola	Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Aug. 10, 11, 12
Central City	Saturday, Sunday, Aug. 14, 15
Crab Orchard	Tuesday, Wednesday, Aug. 17, 18

In Iowa and Minnesota he has the following engagements:

IOWA.	MINNESOTA.
Tama City,	Worthington,
Osceola,	Dundee,
Randolph,	Fairmount,
Oelwein,	Alma City,
Buffalo Grove,	Janesville,
Colfax,	Smiths Mill,
Holstein,	Barnum,
Fredericksburg,	Utica,
New Hampton,	St. Charles,
Cresco,	Ashby,
Deerfield,	Garden City,
Hampton,	Ada,
Orange City,	Long Lake.
Grinnell,
Muscatine.

In addition to the above, Des Moines, Manchester, Nevinville, Princeton, Casey, What Cheer, Farley, Columbus Junction, Bonaparte, and Missouri Valley, Iowa, and several towns in Minnesota and Dakota also expect to arrange for lectures.

Letters from Friends.

GALLOWAY, TEXAS.

MR. EDITOR: I wish we could hav a lecturer visit us this fall. There are a great many Liberals here, but few are outspoken.

The cartoons are perfectly splendid, and I don't see how anyone can object to them. With best wishes for the success of THE TRUTH SEEKER, I am, Respectfully, J. P. MILLS.

SAN JOSE, CAL., June 23, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Your cartoons are very welcome to your readers. I like them very well. You hit the nail just at the head to pierce superstition to the core. The Liberals owe you many thanks for your liberal outlay. May they also support you freely in order that you can cover the higher expenses you hav incurred for your eminent paper.

H. M. COTTINGER.

CHAMPLIN, MINN., June 29, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed find $3 for my renewal.

THE TRUTH SEEKER is much appreciated in our family, and we expect long to remain among its humble supporters.

The following story, which we consider good enough for your "Odds and Ends," is purely original, and occurred in one of the large churches in our city of Minneapolis, where last winter they were having a huge revival. The pastor, in his "warming-up" zeal, was making his usual rounds, soliciting victims. Meeting a good-natured Scandinavian in the congregation, he accosted him with the usual interrogatory, "Don't you want to work for Jesus?" Our friend met him with a wide stare, and the reply, "Naow; me got von yob; cut ice out Lake Calhoon." MRS. F. I. BIRD.

EAST SAGINAW, MICH., July 11, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Everyone seems to hav the specimen craze. Not long ago I received from Washington territory a nice box of real Indian money. The lady who sent me this queer coin says her husband was once an Indian trader, and while among the Alaska Indians he collected this money, and now, as she has no use for it, she sends it to me. The Indian money, or wampum, as the Indians called it, is a rare sea-shell, an inch or more in length, the size around of a large knitting-needle, slightly bent, tapering and hollow. The value of each piece to them was four cents. I hav quite a bit more of this odd currency than I care for, and, the editor willing, I will say anyone who would like a piece of Indian money may hav it and welcome if they send a stamp to pay postage. MRS. F. A. WARNER.

LINCOLN, ILL., July 10, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: You hav often noticed, I hav no doubt, that when you corner Christian mythologists in regard to "miracles" and show the unreasonableness and impossibility of any such things ever happening, they always take refuge behind their bulwark, "Oh, nothing is impossible with God." When they seek flight from reason and science I take issue and silence them in this way:

1. God cannot make twice two six.
2. God cannot make the millstone run both ways at once.
3. God cannot destroy himself.

A dose of this heroic treatment closes their mouths and they go off, as the bigots always do, longing for the Inquisition and fagot. The old sects are passing into the impenetrable next, the younger ones are getting more careless and less dogmatic. This is the hope of final reformation. A. R. C.

WEST BRIGHTON, N. Y., June 29, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: One word in regard to pictures. They are just grand. They hit the mark every time. I wish I could hav been brought in contact with them when I was full of theology. It seems as if they would hav woke me up.

I hope you will get two subscribers for every one who says "Stop my paper" on account of the pictures. If I didn't like them, I could easily pass them over. I don't believe an editor has all sunshine in the pilgrimage of life. I hav cut out many of the pictures and sent them to friends for missionary purposes. I think they hav had the designed and desired effect.

I was pleased to learn through THE TRUTH SEEKER that Dr. Austin had Reynolds go to Marion and stir up their minds by way of remembrance. He can do it every time, even if he doesn't claim to be inspired by God. The D.D.'s were wise in not attacking him. SAMUEL E. SKINNER.

STONEHAM, MASS., July 10, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I write for the purpose of sending some money to keep our Freethought flag waving in the breeze. I am always glad to see it come, although I do not hav time enough to read it. Brother Heston's last materialization of "Home Rule in Ireland" is superexcellent. I can imagin the combatants opening the exercises by singing, "I am so glad that Jesus loves me." Seeing it, an Infidel must feel sad to think he lacks religious devotion. One is reminded of Lizzie Doten's poem:

> We mock at the Catholic bigots in Rome,
> Who strive with their dogmas man's reason to fetter;
> But we turn to the Protestant bigots at home,
> And find that their dogmas are scarce a whit better.

I would be glad if Mr. Reynolds and his gospel tent would come this way. How I envy Miss Wixon her loving task! I wish Liberals would hav Sunday gatherings for their children, where isms were lost sight of, and honor, reason, investigation, and facts that are seen alike by all could be taught; where seven days instead of one would be considered "holy;" where white lies of all descriptions would be tabooed; where self-control and self-government could be inculcated; where human rights could be freely spoken of; where prevention instead of punishment for criminals could be considered; where strict, inflexible justice would be given in easy lessons; where fun and instruction could be judiciously blended, and where—well, I might talk a long time and then not say half that might be said. But I do hope to see more schools or meetings established for the children. Some of us older ones realize the benefit of beginning to think rightly. But schools where knowledge and not faith would be the standard would help our future generations to hav less murder, hatred, lying, etc., etc.

Success to the host of speakers; may the coming Convention be a grand success. But nothing can kill out Freethought. It is bound to grow brighter and broader every year. C. FANNIE ALLYN.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., June 23, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I am very glad to find you interested in exposing Catholicism. Teaching by pictures is very effectiv if those who see them can properly apply them. I am sorry to say I do not think yours often hit the mark, but as I could not do as well, probably I had better say nothing. Catholicism and republicanism are a contradiction. It is impossible for them to coalesce. One or the other must go down. One teaches people to believe; the other teaches people to think. The policy of the first is to keep its adherents ignorant; the policy of the latter to enlighten all.

Our grand doctrin of freedom in religion for all is taken advantage of by the Catholic organization, which is not wholly a religious organization, but political and religious combined. Before it gets power, it wears its religious mask. When it has power, it is political. No man should be allowed to vote at our polls who does not abjure all other potentates. My own conviction is that Catholicism is at the bottom of Home Rule, and that Rome Rule will be the right reading. Eternal hostility to Catholicism should be taught to every American. E. M. DAVIS.

AYER, MASS., July 4, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: By "Letters from Friends" I see that some timid ones are afraid to show the pictures to their orthodox friends. I do not hesitate to show the pictures as soon as I open the paper, and it is with difficulty that I can draw the clergy and the stern churchmen into a discussion, knowing, as they do, their weak and defenseless position. Let the good work go on; the pictures cannot overmatch the description of the past nor the facts of the present. Illustrations—object teaching—hav long been in the Bible; the work of human imagination. Other descriptions in the Bible are worthy of illustrations. Imagination was not exhausted by the first edition. Those who accept the description of the Jewish Jehovah should not object to the picture, nor to being mirrored by seeing the "priest and Levite passing by" a man already robbed, of whom they had nothing to expect. They seem not to be expressly proud of their prototypes; their only defense is as that of a dog with a mounted cat enlivening his ideas, "Ta'int I, ta'int I."

The Christian church does not like to behold its natural face in the glass; they would like to turn from their bloody record and forget what manner of men they were, what church they belong to now. They should receive with a good grace what they gave—cartoons and pet names. Whose fault is it? Who began it? There is a vast difference between the picture of a hideous crime and the crime itself. Some time let us see that old one-horse iron cart that scared the creator of worlds. Watson Heston has a large field to work in yet. His spirited pictures are a great aid to faith. They make it easy. ELIJAH MYRIOK.

BIG CREEK, N. Y., July 11, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Universal mental liberty is a subject that is much talked about by many women as well as men, but if practical demonstration is the key-note to its success, many seem to "shoot wide of the mark."

I was never more forcibly reminded of this fact than when I read in the public print that even men calling themselvs not only "Liberals," but "reformers," and in the town of Liberal, Mo., too, recommended "shot-gun and boot-logic" to drive individuals out of the town because they honestly differed with them in reference to the principle of love, and its proper expression or manifestation.

The inspiration that has been handed down from "the dead past" tells us that "love is the fulfilling of the law." But the inspiration of the present, if such demonstrations are taken as evidence, would seem to indicate that mobocratic lawlessness had taken possession of not only "the rank and file," but professed leaders in the advocacy of "universal mental liberty," even in a hall dedicated to its claims.

What a comment on the reformatory teachings of to-day! Where is there any spot or place on "God's green earth" that this claim can be actualized if even in Liberal, Mo., its leading minds so far forget to practice what they teach in theory as to be instrumental in inciting a mob, if not themselvs found in it as leaders?

The eyes of very many men and women hav been turned in the direction of this town, and its founder, for a practical illustration of the possibility of "universal mental liberty" becoming a fixed fact at least there, if nowhere else, in this boasted "land of the free and home of the brave."

As I understand the term liberty, it means no more and no less than to be free to do only what is right, even if those who claim to be its most worthy advocates are not so near perfect but that they think unkind thoughts toward others whose influence is in danger of affecting their pockets, whether they do their internal convictions or not, and for this reason nature, or natural law, has attached a penalty to every violation, even if "civil law," so called, does sanction it, as is clearly indicated by our law-makers granting licenses to sell liquor, keep houses of prostitution, etc. These licenses do not save the liquor-dealer from demoralization, to say nothing of the deplorable effect liquor has on the drinker, and his family, if it goes no further, which is not usually the case, as all observing minds are qualified to bear ample testimony to the contrary. And as for prostitution, it's destroying many of the fairest and best, by men voluntarily walking into its gilded precincts but to scatter the seeds of disease and death in many homes where purity and chastity would gladly flourish forever and aye.

JULIA C. FRANKLIN.

GUNNISON, COL., June 30, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Inclosed is $10. I am owing you a little over a year's subscription. I desire to pay you up to May, 1888. This, perhaps, will enable you to forgiv me for running behind this past year, which to me has been an extra close one in money matters. But I told you a year ago how it was and asked you to wait, and I thank you for your kindness to an old subscriber like me. You will see that I am one of the oldest, starting with the paper and Saint Bennett in Illinois. My sympathies are with you in your efforts to diffuse the truth, and I like your broad, Liberal way of doing it. Right here let me hold up my hand in favor of the pictures you are issuing lately. It seems to me they are an excellent argument to a large number who could not otherwise "see the point." I am glad you try to obey Paul's injunction to be "all things to all men, if, possibly, you may save some." All the early part of my life I've been a churchman; went out of it into Materialism, but hav since been converted by "proof palpable" to Spiritualism. Of course I should like THE TRUTH SEEKER better if a little more space was given to my peculiar philosophy, but I am not to dictate how you should run your paper. I like your fairness to all sides, and I read and like what the Materialistic correspondents hav to say. They are all right as far as they see—I only pity them, as I do the Christians, that they cannot see farther, for I think they can't enjoy life to its fullest, as they might if they had their eyes open. Evolution will bring things round all right in time. There's no use trying to hurry up nature. People hav got to grow into knowledge. The turkey-stuffing process won't do for humans. The passage out of superstition into the light of Freethought must be gradual as the growth from youth to age. But my sheet is full. Truly thine in sympathy, WARREN RICHARDSON.

NEW YORK, N. Y., July 9, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Oh, you bad man! Do you know what you are about? You a truth seeker, indeed! Father M——n and myself used at intervals to amuse ourselvs by looking at your TRUTH SEEKER journal, but you hav done it now. It takes a good deal to make the holy man grind his teeth. We enjoyed much, you may believe, your funny pictures depicting the squirming, pretentious, and presumptuous fooleries of those heretical Methodists and Presbyterians, and all orthodox heretics, but now we perceive you hav made an onslaught also upon the holy Mother Church! the church of the holy Virgin! Oh, my! I hav no patience with you.

I perceive now what had disturbed the composure of my holy confessor. Tossing your crumpled paper into my lap, frowningly, he exclaimed aloud, "Read! read!" and then darted out of the room. And, I assure you, I did read. Now, I am not good at logic, but for you to confound our soul-soothing absolution or forgivness of our holy father at Rome through God's ten thousand ever-ready priests with the heretical brawlers and bellowers surrounding us, can only be excused by ignorance or neglect in childhood.

I write unadvisedly, for I am but a poor, weak woman, and, I suppose, all I may say will only provoke a smile. The poor wretch who is to be hanged to-day—how much better the Catholic certainty of forgivness than the heretical bolstering of a mere hope! Who ever knew a holy Catholic priest deserting a felon in his last moments and neglecting a criminal in the State prison? SISTER BERTHA.

P. S.—If our streets become, through THE TRUTH SEEKER, as red with blood as my scribble, you hav only yourself to accuse. S. B.

PACIFIC, MO., July 3, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Will you please pardon my intrusion on your time and space? The thought has often imposed itself on me, If mind rules matter, then what rules the movements of the world—the heavenly bodies? There has been much said of late, in regard to it, in THE TRUTH SEEKER, but no motiv cause has as yet been given. According to the science of astronomy, the movements are precise, the cause unchangeable; all remains within the figure. How can that be? Astronomy says gravitation and attraction are the cause. But how can that be it to my unscientific mind? Gravitation, Webster says, is the tendency to center, and common say has it that water runs down hill till it finds its level, but then it stops; and so with attraction. Webster says it is the power in bodies which is supposed to draw them together. Now, if those are the principles which constitute the moving powers, I cannot see how they can keep moving at the rate they do—although they do. I think—in fact, I reason—that there is something outside of what we conceive as gravitation and attraction which keeps things apart within their sphere, and moving, besides its opposit, i.e., the causes given; besides, if I should dare to express my own feeling, my own reason, in regard to it, I would say that the body, such as our earth is, hard and concrete, does not sail around at all, and at such speed, but only moves on center. The reasons are its own condition; its poles, which are, of course, positiv and negativ; itself the law of gravitation and attraction. What could counteract it? What could keep it in its sphere, its orbit, in the all-the-same around about it? I can find no motiv cause in that; perhaps science can explain it.

Yes, Mr. Editor, mind rules matter. Mind measures space and determins movements, establishes systems, makes laws for man's guide and movement, builds up heavens and sheols for not believing one thing or another; and yet it is no entity, a mere nothing. Can you explain the riddle? A thought has come to me again while writing, namely, that all Spiritual causes and phenomena are involved and conditioned by and in the causes which constitute gravitation and attraction—the idea for which I would call respectful consideration, as that will giv a hint, a clue, as to cause or no cause, as to being object matter or subject cause.

I will just say that I approve of the new departure—the pictures; no matter who growls. The matters they represent are veritable facts. These ought to prevail, and any Liberal that cannot bear them has not yet unloaded the theological mind. With best wishes and hopes for a fair consideration of what is said and written, I will sign myself, A. H. K.

NEWARK, N. J., July 11, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Our public schools are the bulwark and only guarantee of a republican form of government, and sectarians are trying to break them up. They were not considered godless by our forefathers. They were good enough to educate them, and they are good enough to train up the rising generation now. Educate the people, and bigots can't rule. Our public schools are supported by intelligent people, foreign and nativ—Americans who reverence the great god of nature, and not man gods. Our motto is, "God and our nativ land," and not God, church, and fatherland. Love of god and country should be the first lesson taught in our public schools, and not obedience and loyality to church. Jesuits declare our schools godless because they are not allowed to educate our children. Now, sir, all mankind were born without knowledge, and by age we acquire intelligence. In my infancy I was taught there was a devil and a burning hell. What a monstrous and wicked lie that was to keep people from doing wrong! It is an insult to any person of intelligence to hold up an individual devil, or a burning hell; and because we won't allow those people to educate, preach, and instil this wickedness to our youth they declare we are godless and heretics, and doomed to hell. If their prayers could save life, stop tornadoes, stop God's lightning from knocking down his churches, save the ship-wrecked marriner, raise the dead, cure disease, stop pestilence, and lead to chaste lives, they would be some benefit to mankind in general. But they don't. Christians would not kill their devil if they could, for if he was dead their occupation would be gone. There would be no five-dollar masses for the poor, nor fifty-dollar for the high, nor ten cents for a poor sinner to go to church to pray. W. W. MORRIS.

HORNELLSVILLE, N. Y., July 4, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: Please find inclosed post-office order for one year's renewal of my subscription to THE TRUTH SEEKER.

There has not been much excitement here over Liberalism since C. B. Reynolds left. Our financial success through the lectures this spring was not very encouraging, yet we hav the gratification of occasionally meeting with its effects in the form of severely "offended" Bible-worshipers, who hav had the misfortune to find their indifferent friends supplied with Infidel handbills to make more difficult their conversion.

It is not the predominance of radical Christians that makes the town so indifferent to the Freethought cause, but pure ignorance, established and maintained by inherited mediocrity. Out of a city of twelve thousand population—and I believe that every house inside the corporation limits was supplied with a handbill—it was difficult to secure an attendance of fifty at each lecture, and nearly all those were connected with the Liberal League. We were blessed with the presence of several curiosity-struck deacons, who sneaked their presence several times into the hallway to listen undiscovered by the ticket window, and noiselessly steal a peep through the keyhole at the "children of the devil," and when discovered and invited in would reluctantly seat themselvs, after having availed themselvs of the benefit of our liberality by begging a free admission from our usual charge of ten cents.

Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds made some brilliant addresses here, and hav won the friendship and good wishes of the Liberals of the town, and we hope that the effects of the lectures hav been more keenly felt by the church than they are willing to admit. CHAS. COUDERMAN.

MERRILL, MICH., July 7, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: In reading the H. C. Gill comedy pro and con, I am induced to add my mite to the subject. I suppose that I hav walked over the ground many times, years ago, on which Mr. Gill treads when he goes from his shop to his meals, etc.

The time was when I knew many of the solid Christians of Madison, O., and I can well recollect some of the fiendish accusations brought against my wife and myself at the time of which I am speaking. We were trying as best we could to teach people to be Liberal, and to do their own thinking.

Mrs. Hunt was what is called a trance speaker. We held public meetings in Madison and vicinity, and for this nearly gratuitous work we were made to feel the full force of that beautiful passage in the Bible which says, in effect, "If any come among you and preach not this gospel, let them be accursed." We did not preach the gospel of blood atonement, and consequently the Christians of Madison went for us as the devil went for the hogs, and if they did not say every mean thing about us that could be said, it was because they could not think of anything more to say.

Some of those "good souls" said that Mrs. Hunt ought to be served as the witches were—that is, murdered. And they attacked her moral character, and seemed determined to create the belief in the community that she did not possess one good trait—not a single redeeming quality.

And these very Christians, or their descendants, are they whom Mr. Gill is so exercised over for fear their holy eyes may be injured by looking at the pictures in THE TRUTH SEEKER.

I think Mr. Gill is a well-disposed man, but his moral spine is rather too weak. He is not fitted to be the champion of an unpopular cause.

Having passed through the fires of persecution myself, I am prepared to say that a brave honesty of purpose is far better than a cowardly disposition. I presume friend Gill believes in rendering good for evil, and so do I, but my way is to put the good just as strong as possible. Milk for babes, but meat for the old ones, is my rule.

I admire the pictures. Yours straight, N. HUNT.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., July 8, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to report from this city on the progress of Freethought. We closed our League meetings, the last Sunday in June, to be opened again next fall, after having run very successfully for two years and a half without any vacation. While we did not hav large meetings, nearly all who came were thinkers, and some of them the most prominent Liberals of our city. The League furnished a place where all had a respectful hearing upon all subjects, free speech being carried out to the letter. The labor movement is now the absorbing topic in this city. The working classes are having a powerful effort made upon them to crush out all organizations of labor by persecutions and misrepresentations by the courts and press. People outside of Milwaukee and hundreds inside of the city think that we had a terrible "riot" here the 5th of last May from reading the papers, when the facts are that there was not any disturbance at all except what the police and soldiery made. The Republican press want to make a political "boom" out of it, and mean to reëlect Governor Rush because he had a few unarmed and innocent men shot down. But it begins to react upon him in a way that does not promis an election for him. The churches here all side with the money power, and will do all they can to keep the working classes down, as they always hav done in the past. I consider that there has never been a time in this country's history so fraught with danger to the rights of the people as now. And just in proportion as the working classes organize and become aggressiv to the money power, will these persecutions and efforts to crush out labor organizations increase. But the only way is for the working class to organize, and then stand by their principles firmly at the ballot-box.

A. B. SEVERANCE.

VINELAND, N. J., July 12, 1886.

MR. EDITOR: The destitution now suffered by wage-laborers is a generally conceded real distress, wrongly induced, the cause of which should be removed. The oppression felt by vast numbers who hav a competence, but find no satisfactory exercise for their best powers or desires to alleviate misery and make themselvs and humanity happy, is a known abnormal state subversiv of rights. Both conditions are legitimate products of the false system of culture that desecrates human ability and arrests progress. Teachings that train minds to trust in atoning saviors, and in worship of omnipotent, triune idols; that ignore reason and the justice-sense as moral guides, must stultify expanding intelligence, dim nativ foresight, and blind historic sight that should read the past and draw inferences. Christian faith crushes true faith in personal strength and knowledge, palsies aspiration for noble endeavor, and establishes corrupt characters and customs, which, being defended by persistent ostracism and various arts, are claimed as the only respectable line of adherence and habits. Thus made popular, they ensnare, cowardize, and hold to the use of the desecrating power all who conform to the customs, however their minds may be unconvinced. Fear of the Grundy and boycott racks has been tyranny's courage-crusher ever since my young eyes opened to the light of thought.

Perception of that debasing fear aided my love of truth and human weal in studying cause and effect in religions and social lines. Seeing imminent danger to the republic in the strife and greed of partisan candidates strengthened my solicitude for a worthy people and true democracy. That fear and danger became objectiv actors on subjectiv convictions, producing my two early-born themes, individual integrity, and bravery to sustain it; national justice, and integrity to administer it. These begot their score of auxiliaries (termed hobbies), and people see just one of them. They all abhor tyranny and the frauds that prop it; all see a large line of relief from slavery in honest change of injurious customs. Most heads that are not in the dupe's noose see the causes of misery, but few devise a process of escape by reformation, though revolutions, as yet, hav been, and are likely to be, sanguinary. Those with a competence and free minds might profitably scan the population. Master Powderly, of the Knights of Labor, says ninety-nine hundredths of the Knights are Christians, and doubtless does not see that system a fundamental factor in their hardships. Honest bigots may not note the craft that will aim to lay the blame and penalty of riots on unbelievers. Knights of Labor should be shown, if possible, that the policy of that system controls the issue of their good right arms, and makes their left powerless to obtain redress.

Religious duping, treasury-enriching by tithes from poverty, are cruel desecrations. Minds controled by creeds are easy prey to crafty misers with pious callings, and to some other schemers.

Can it be the Knights of Labor Unions will read the mockery Talmage offers as consolation to their trials, and not note the cold emptiness resorted to for reconciling them to their lot? In his discourse, I think the first one, he begins with a recognition of the seriousness of their sufferings, speaks of privations, cites cases, and woman's connected sorrows, with seeming sympathy; then, without allusion to any means of relief, commends patience, duty in acceptance of labor, as the great earthly blessing; exalts the privilege of employment, being the power that takes men from idleness, temptation, and sin generally. It is the pulpits' and thrones' old cry, with which they hav ever pelted down uprising heads. Organized laborers and myriads more of church-members, with "the means of grace" dinned into their passiv ears and psychologized brains every Sunday and half of the evenings in the week, it is feared, will see no farther than to help doom themselvs to deeper darkness by choosing their civil laws from the priests' book, instead of our fathers' Constitution. With unrelaxed zeal to effect such change, and no strong, orderly force to thwart it; with military forces mainly biased, like the G. A. R., swearing allegiance to and on the old war-book, it looks misty round the desecrated capitol, and from its cloud-wrapped dome seems to issue a hoarse whisper crying: "Lovers of liberty, men and women, few or many, weak or strong, awake and work unitedly for the freedom without which life is death!"

M. E. TILLOTSON.

CALISTOGA, CAL., June 28, 286.

MR. EDITOR: I am just recovering from a severe attack of pleuro-pneumonia. Our family has had but little sickness for over twenty years, never having need of a doctor during that time. We did not call in one this time, either, though my family was a little doubtful for a while as to which way the tide of life would turn. With some knowledge of physiology, anatomy, and general laws of health, we hav been able to avoid much sickness, suffering, and expense. But on this occasion I was attacked, cornered, and overwhelmed so completely that my best resolve to throw it off was ineffectual.

You will pardon this reference to myself when you learn it is but introductory to a few incidents that follow. A sister some twenty-five years ago presented me with a Testament, very fine print, and her sisterly advice. Later on in life, she observed in me a leaning from the church, and in the goodness of her heart counseled me to beware, etc. Said she, "The ideas you hav will do to liv by, but not to die by." Of course I understood the full significance of her remarks and the weakness of her logic. I replied, "Anything that is good enough to liv by is good enough to die by." Thus her reasoning failed to move me, and, the print of the Testament being so small, I failed to read much of it. However, I had gone through quite a religious experience, and had books of coarser print to test my doubts and lack of knowledge, and as fate would hav it, I was where I was. Well, through it all I remembered her warning, and this, my first severe illness, might prove a practical test of it. While still conscious, I instructed my family as to my wishes in case of serious illness or a fatal ending of it, and lay down to the test. I will not say it was a fair one; certainly it was not final. I simply state the facts, and leave others to draw their own conclusions.

I had no fear of death or its supposed consequence. I had no hope in Jesus, and did not want any. Sheol had no terrors for me, and I thought that if I ever met a being with the personale of Satan, my experience would be somewhat like that of fabled Eve of old, that is, the word of God would prove more than half a lie.

One of my neighbors, young and well-to-do, came to see me, and in course of conversation I sent home several pointed thoughts. He did not try much to sustain his waning faith in hell or heaven, but frankly admitted that he had known a number of men of my way of thinking, and they were all honest, upright citizens. I replied, "Can you say as much for your own side?" He said, "You must remember we are many, while you are few." "True to a great extent, but you should remember that you hav had your Christ and Bible eighteen hundred years, as you claim. Then where is the virtue of your faith? Those most imbued with it, who liv by it and trade in it, and those who believe it, are no better men and women, and hav no better children, than those more remote." At this and several other times he expressed a fear that I would injure myself by too much talking. I giv him credit for being sincere. Still, I would hav suffered a little reaction to know that I had planted an idea in good soil that would in time produce good fruit. I did, in fact, suffer a little from it, even though my effort proves abortiv. He is a Presbyterian.

Religion of the older type, and indeed of the more modern, is rather dull on the market here. It has been a sort of bull and bear game for all it was worth, and has settled down to almost a dead level. It finds but few takers, and those are not blessed with too much mental capital. I hav seen but one of the many young men within my circle of acquaintances—which extends up and down the entire valley, though not including all of the inhabitants—who has taken to the ministry. He is the son of the Calistoga Presbyterian minister, a very good young man and of fair ability. By the way, this resident minister has moved to another field more proportionate to his ability—presumably larger, of course. He reorganized the church in Calistoga, and had the largest support ever given to any minister here. Still, either he or the Lord was not satisfied, and he has gone.

Ten miles below us, in the heart of the vine industry of this valley, is situated the town of St. Helena, a pretty place, a healthy place, and a wealthy place. But there, too, the religious article is at low ebb. While several churches keep up their show for Jesus, one, the Methodist, fails to sustain its minister. So say the local papers—"Brother Stevens has gone to shoving the plane for a living." I hope he is thankful that he has a useful means of support left. The 4th of July is to be celebrated on the 5th. I am perhaps as loyal as any of my acquaintances, still I hav not taken part in such affairs, except once, for several years. I hav a solid contempt for any system that forbids a patriot, who has spent several of the best years of his life in defense of his country, to celebrate the anniversary of our country's birth on the day it occurred. I addressed a letter to the orator of the day touching upon the point and inclosing Mr. Wakeman's address on Thomas Paine, suggesting that he incorporate a few ideas in his forthcoming Fifth of July speech. It was a little cheeky, but he took it good-naturedly, and replied that he would read it carefully, and try to work some of it in.

I am acquainted with R. F. Grigsby, the person who wrote you from Napa, in your issue of June 12th. He means what he says, and is a solid citizen. J. C. WEYBRIGHT.

Children's Corner.

Edited by MISS SUSAN H. WIXON, Fall River, Mass., to whom all Communications for this Corner should be sent.

"Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupations
That is known as the Children's Hour."

The Crow and the Kingbirds.

An old crow sat on an apple-tree
Where rested a bird's nest cosily;
And four little eggs were in the nest,
By a mother's love warmed and caressed.
Tired, the mother bird hied away
For a drink in the heat of the day;
Down hopped the crow. "Now, for a lunch
And in this egg I'll make a punch!"
So saying, he quickly dispatched
The four little eggs meant to be hatched.

Now, it so turned out and chanced to be
That two kingbirds this act did see.
"We'll fix him! We'll fix him!" said they;
"For stealing eggs he dearly shall pay."
At him they flew with sharpened bill,
And pecked his face and eyes until
The blood flowed free and the crow fell down
In a meadow just outside the town;
And the kingbirds then pecked from his head
The feathers till 'twas raw and red;
They pulled the feathers from his back
Until his wings and bones did crack,
And the poor old crow you would not know
As to the forest, weak and slow,
He winged his way, pursued by those
Two unrelenting, savage foes.

A blind and bloody crow was he,
And racked with pain and agony,
When he reached at last the wooded shade
Beyond the meadow and the glade;
And there resolved he never would
Steal eggs again for fun or food.
And all the robins and the wrens,
The blue birds—yes, and even hens—
The sparrows and the swallows, too,
Sang and twittered as if they knew
The kingbirds did a graceful thing,
And each deserved the name of king.
They all agreed 'twas better, too,
To be an honest bird, and true,
That 'twas never well to be a thief,
And, like the crow, to come to grief.

S. H. W.

An Evil-Minded Boy.

CHAPTER I.

"I'll make him suffer for it," were the words that came from Henry Eliot's lips, as he sat all alone on some logs back of his father's house. "It's all his fault—I know it is!"

Just at that moment he heard a loud whistle, when he stood up on the logs and looked over the back fence, and saw the boy he was just thinking about, and it was the one he hated, Harry Parker. Harry was calling his dogs, as all the boys of the village were going over the river in their little canoe to a place called Rockford Glen, to hunt. They all had their rifles and small baskets with lunch, as they intended staying all day. The dogs were now up with them, and they started down the river path to the little house they had built themselvs to hav fun and keep their canoe in. Henry watched them till they were out of sight, and wished he could hav gone with them, for it was such a delightful morning; but he knew the boys all disliked him, and he imagined that Harry Parker was the cause of it. He sat down on the logs again, till he got very lonesome and angry. He then went up to the house, and his mother, seeing how lonesome he looked, said, "Why didn't you go over to the glen with the boys this morning?" Henry, not liking to say he thought the boys disliked him, said he didn't know they had gone.

Well, after dinner, Henry, being bound to make Harry Parker suffer, went to his room to think of some plan. He locked the door, as he did not wish to be disturbed. He then sat down, and if you had been there then you would hav thought he was breaking his brain working at an arithmetic example, or something of the sort. He thought of different things, and at last came to the conclusion that the only and best way was to take revenge on all of them, which he was going to do in the following way. If he could get Dick Fry, the only colored boy in the village, to help him—for he thought two could work it better than one—he would break into the boys' house along the river path, and steal the things out of it.

"I think it's the only thing I can do that I won't be caught at," he said. "If I can get Dick we will do it right after the boys get home."

He did not waste a moment, but got his hat and ran down to Dick's house. He whistled when he got there, and Dick came out. "Wad you want?" Dick said. "Look here. I want to tell you something," and Henry told him the whole circumstance, and added that they would stand on the logs till the boys came past the fence, and then they (Henry and Dick) would jump over the fence and go right up to the boys' little house.

"Is dar anyfing in dis dar for me?" asked the darkey.

"Yes, certainly; we each get half," replied the mean-hearted boy. If he had not stolen and been dishonest, the boys would not hav disliked him.

"All right, Hen; I'll go right away wid you." And the two went and waited on the logs.

CHAPTER II.

We must now go back to the boys on the island. Well, they arrived there, and till twelve o'clock they got nothing but a wild duck and squirrel, both shot by Joe Garrick. The boys, now being hungry, ate their lunch and went farther up the island, and were very successful; they got some wild duck, wild rabbits, squirrels, and other wild game. It now being near five o'clock, the boys started for home and reached there about an hour later, all looking very happy. When they passed the fence, Henry became very angry when he saw the good luck they had. So when the happy hunters passed, Henry and Dick quickly jumped over the fence. "We must hav a hatchet to knock the door open," said Henry, and he went back and got a hatchet.

They then started on, but they did not use the hatchet, as Dick had a key that just fitted the lock. They were both surprised to see how nice the house was fixed. It was painted green outside, and inside there was a carpet on the floor, some pictures on the walls, chairs, a little table, and a cupboard.

"We will make things look nice, won't we, Dick?"

"Yessah. I wonder what's in this cupboard?" and they opened the door. There were different things in it, and on top there was a sheet of paper which Henry read, and learned that Joe Garrick was president and Harry Parker treasurer. Then Henry turned to Dick and said "You see that if H. Parker keeps the money here, for he is treasurer, and we find it, it will be blamed on him."

"Yessah," said the colored boy. "And he is just the one I hav most spite against. Now, Dick, where do you think he would keep it?"

"What's in dis drawa?" And Dick pulled the drawer out, and, sure enough, there was $5 in it.

"You're a daisy, Dick," remarked Henry. "Now, divide it up, quickly, and we will lock the house and go back, for it's getting very dark out, and it's after seven o'clock by their clock here. We are all through now, Dick; come on. Dick," he continued, "you must be very careful not to let anybody know anything about this."

They had a long chat on the road, and by this time they were home.

CHAPTER III.

It was two days later when all the boys went up to the house. They asked Harry for some money out of the treasury to get some things to fix their canoe with. As nobody had dared to touch the money but him, he opened the drawer, and saw at once the money was missing.

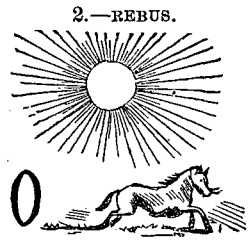
"Oh, boys!" said he, "the money is gone."

"Gone?" shouted the boys. "Yes, gone," he said.

There was great confusion at that moment. They said nobody took it but him, because he was the only one who had a key to the house. He said he was innocent, but they would not hear it. At last, however, they came to the conclusion to study over it, as they always knew him to be honest before. Time passed on, the boys finding out nothing, till one day one of the boys saw Dick and Henry talking together, and it struck him that perhaps these boys would know something about the money. He didn't want to go and talk to Henry, so he waited till he saw Dick on his way home; he then stopped him and asked him about it. The darkey told the whole story. This boy told all the other boys, and they all gave Harry Parker a cheer for being found honest at last. After a little while the whole village knew about Henry. He was about to be arrested, but the boys said there was enough shame for him. No one wanted to talk to him or hav anything to do with him. He became so lonely and sad that he ran away, and no more since has been heard of him.

Harrisburg, Pa. HERMAN S. TAUSIG.

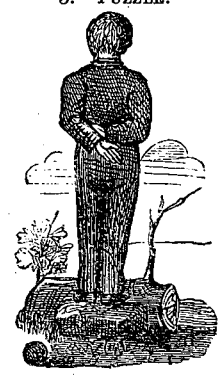
Winning D. B. Cozine's second prize of $2.



Our Puzzle Box.

1.—ENIGMA.

My first is in rat, but not in cat;
My second in even, but not in flat;
My third in eat, but not in drink;
My fourth in study, but not in think;
My fifth in liv, but not in dead;
My sixth in ink, but not in lead;
My seventh in finger, but not in head.
My whole is a city in the Middle States.



HERMAN S. TAUSIG.

2.—REBUS.

What a wise man once said.

3.—PUZZLE.

Objects seen in this picture: Parts of a watch; a nimble beast; weapons of defense; twenty pounds; what a tired dog does; a ship's book; belongs to the body; pleasant in summer; what a doctor often does; a kind of pork; a bent stovepipe; what cows do; anger.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES IN CHILDREN'S CORNER, JULY 10, 1886.

1.-288. Because it is too (two) gross. Ichabod (Samuel i-iv). Some say it was Joshua, the son of Nun. 2.-Tomato, called also love-apple.

SOLVERS.—Kitty Henderson, H. J. Messinger.

Correspondence.

LISBON, IA., July 10, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: My pa takes THE TRUTH SEEKER. I read the Children's Corner. I am eight years old. I had a little sister, but she died. I hav a pet bird; I call it Ned. I hav five brothers and one sister. We hav two of your books called "Story Hour" and "Apples of Gold." I help make out the puzzles. I guess I must close for this time.

Yours truly, MAGGIE SAILOR.

CLEVELAND, O., June 11, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: Having read THE TRUTH SEEKER for some time, I enjoy the Children's Corner much. Not seeing any letters from Cleveland, I thought I would write one, because I think you are a a true friend to all children and seekers after truth. My mother and father think a great deal of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Mother calls it her Bible. I hope soon to be able to get the "Story Hour" and "Apples of Gold." I am thirteen years old. When I get through school I hope to be able to write something for the Children's Corner. I trust you will think this worth putting in the Children's Corner.

MILLICENT SCOTT.

CALISTOGA, CAL., June 30, 1886.

DEAR MISS WIXON: The sunny hours hav multiplied until the days are very long, and sometimes very warm. The mercury seldom climbs to one hundred—still, the eighties are quite warm, unless we get an ocean breeze.

At San Francisco and some other places on the immediate coast the summer winds are often quite cool. People wear wraps and overcoats, like Eastern people, in winter. Of course, the mercury does not fall so low, but I suppose it is the cool winds, laden with moisture, that penetrate and chill. But, as these ocean breezes push inland, they follow up the bays and rivers, and thence out into the broad and narrow valleys. While they part with some of their moisture, the warm hillsides and plains temper them rapidly. By the time they hav gone forty or fifty miles inland they hav lost their chill, and are cool and delightfully refreshing. Sometimes they come up like your pleasant Eastern zephyrs; at others with greater force, breaking on the groves, hills, and ridges, into gusts, puffs, and whirls. We seldom hav heavy winds or driving storms among the hills and smaller valleys.

But, oh, how dusty our roads do get in summer! We seldom hav rain after the 20th of May until about the 20th of October. Sometimes a nice shower falls later in spring, and comes earlier in fall. These are like what some people call angel's visits, few and far between.

The sunny hours, though long and warm, perfect the golden grain. They throw a golden flush on sunbrowned cheeks, and paint with crimson streaks many a luscious fruit. They hang over the dark-green vines, and warm the purple clusters into refreshing sweetness. They envelop the stony hilltops, and peep into the shady glens, and in their pathway springs up many a scarlet flower—flames of beauty and a source of joy forever. The red, the white, and blue, and star-shaped flowers of every hue, all sown by nature's bounteous hand, they cheer our rough and sunny land.

'CAUSE IT WON'T WORK.

Appropriate answers are often given by little children when talking among themselvs or answering older persons. I often find myself smiling at some quick reply or thoughtful tone. A hearty laugh sometimes breaks the monotony of the hour, and starts our thoughts on some pleasanter theme.

I will relate an incident, or apt reply, from a little three-year old girl, that occurred only a few days ago. It came so unexpectedly and so quick that those who heard it enjoyed a merry laugh. I passed the busy little maiden where she was cutting paper with the scissors in her left hand, and said, "Maud, why don't you work with the other hand?" "'Cause it won't work," was her quick reply.

J. C. WEYBRIGHT.

ELEMENTS
OF UNIVERSAL HISTORY
FOR
HIGHER INSTITUTES IN REPUBLICS AND FOR SELF-INSTRUCTION.

By Prof. H. M. Cottinger, A.M.

This book is just what the busy world of to-day needs—a perfect compendium of history from 2,000 years B.C. on up to 1883, all in a nutshell.—Elmina Slenker.

As a text-book in schools, the book would occupy an important place; in the family it would be no less important, as conveying information that all should be acquainted with.—Susan Wixon.

Mr. Cottinger's intentions in writing this book are excellent, and his standpoint admirable. It may be commended as fulfilling its purpose of a concise and interesting historical text-book.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Price, Cloth, $1.50.
For Schools, in Quantities, $1.00.
Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Bible Inquirer. A Key to Bible Investigation. Revised Edition. This pamphlet refers specifically to 148 Bible propositions, with numerous references and citations, that are contradicted in terms by the same number of other propositions in the same book. Price 25 cents.

TRUTH SEEKER LIBRARY.

The World's Sages, Thinkers, and Reformers. The Biographies of three hundred of the most distinguished teachers and philosophers (who were not Christians), from the time of Menu to the present. By D. M. BENNETT. 1,075 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4,00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Champions of the Church; Their Crimes and Persecutions. Biographical sketches of prominent Christians. A companion book to "The World's Sages," etc. By D. M. BENNETT. 8vo., 1,119 pages. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. Vol. I. givs a full account of all the gods the nations of the earth hav worshiped, including Jehovah, Satan, the Holy Ghost, Jesus Christ, Virgin Mary, and the Bible. 835 pages, 8vo. Vol. II. describes fully all the religious systems of the world, including Judaism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity; the latter occupying 372 pages, going fully into its merits. 949 pages. By D. M. BENNETT. Written in prison at Albany. In cloth, $3.00 per volume, or $5.00 for the two volumes; in leather, $7.00; in morocco, gilt edges, $8.00.

Supernatural Religion. An inquiry into the reality of divine revelation. Decidedly the most thorough and exhaustiv work on the claims of supernaturalism ever written. By F. W. NEWMAN, Emeritus Professor of the London University. 1,115 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $4.00; leather, $5.00; morocco, gilt edges, $5.50.

The Great Works of Thomas Paine. Including The Age of Reason, Examination of Prophecies, Reply to Bishop of Llandaff, Letters to Mr. Erskine, Essay on Dreams. Letter to Camille Jordan, The Religion of Deism, Common Sense, The Crisis, and The Rights of Man; the whole preceded by the Life of Paine, and a steel-plate portrait. 800 pages, 8vo. Cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco; gilt edges, $4.50.

Analysis of Religious Belief. An examination of the Creeds, Rites, and Sacred Writings of the world. By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY, son of the late Lord John Russell, twice Premier of England. Complete from the London edition. 745 pages, 8vo. In cloth, $3.00; leather, $4.00; morocco, gilt edges, $4.50.

The foregoing volumes are called "The Truth Seeker Library." If all are ordered together and sent by express, one dollar will be deducted from the price of each.

Agents for the Truth Seeker.

CALIFORNIA.
J. E. Clark, Los Angeles.
Dr. J. L. York, San Jose, Cal.

CANADA.
W. B. Cooke, 170 1-2 Yonge st., Toronto.
James Foster, Welland, Ont.
T. Clappison, Hamilton, Ont.

IDAHO.
A. Erwin, Murray.

ILLINOIS.
E. A. Stevens, 750 West Lake st., Chicago.
F. F. Follet, 302 State street, and Brentano Bros., Chicago.

INDIANA.
J. R. Monroe, Indianapolis.
T. P. Monroe, postmaster, Dunkirk.

KANSAS.
Chris. Brown, Burlington.

MAINE.
B. C. Hussey, Oakfield (Post-office, Smyrna Mills).

MASSACHUSETTS.
Joseph Marsh, Northampton.

MICHIGAN.
A. Atwood, Eaton Rapids.
S. D. Moore, Adrian. Box 465.
Swan & Co., 87 Woodward ave., Detroit.

MISSOURI.
Dr. Wolff, 620 North 5th street, St. Louis.
Joseph L. Andrew, Liberal.

MONTANA.
O. B. Whitford, Butte City.

NEBRASKA.
Thos. Foreman, 106 & 108 So. 14th st., Omaha.

NEW YORK.
Brentano Bros., Union Square, New York.
Chas F. Gaul, 365 Monroe st., Brooklyn.

OHIO.
N. Hexter, 303 Superior street, Cleveland.
Van Epps & Co., 259 Superior st., Cleveland.

OREGON.
Wm. Chance, Astoria.
B. F. Hyland, Corvallis.

PENNSYLVANIA.
Dr. J. H. Rhodes, 315 North 10th st., Phila.
George Longford, 1106 Leopard st., Phila.
H. Clay Luse, Waynesburg.
W. F. Schade, 3,706 Butler street, Pittsburgh.

TENNESSEE.
Ferdinand Pfister, Nashville.

TEXAS.
L. Andruss, Denison.
T. Theo. Colwick, Norse.

UTAH.
James Ashman, Salt Lake City.
D. F. Keeler, Park City.
W. F. Reybould, Salt Lake City.
John A. Jost, Ogden.
Henry Booth, Stockton.

VIRGINIA.
Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville.

ENGLAND.
Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

Mottoes for Freethinkers

We hav received a supply of illuminated motto cards, which we offer for sale. These mottoes are intended to take the place of the "God-bless-our-home" placards which disfigure the walls of so many houses. They are printed on heavy cardboard, 9 inches by 22 1-2. The motto is in black, with colored borders, with an illuminated monogram of U. M. L. The following are the various readings:

THE LIVING HAV A RIGHT TO CONTROL THE WORLD.

FREE THOUGHT WILL GIV US TRUTH.

SUPERSTITION IS THE CHILD OF SLAVERY.

REASON IS THE LAMP OF THE MIND, THE ONLY TORCH OF PROGRESS.

THE SCHOOL-HOUSE IS MY CATHEDRAL.

UNIVERSAL MENTAL LIBERTY.

THE TIME TO BE HAPPY IS NOW, AND THE PLACE TO BE HAPPY IS HERE.

NEVER TROUBLE TROUBLE TILL TROUBLE TROUBLES YOU.

THE WORLD IS MY COUNTRY; TO DO GOOD MY RELIGION.

The price of each of the foregoing is 25 cents.

For Freethought societies there is a large card 22 x 15 inches, printed in colors, with an engraved heading, containing the Nine Demands of Liberalism. Framed it makes a splendid ornament for the lecture-rooms of Liberal societies. Price, 30 cents. Any of these will be sent postpaid, securely wrapped, on receipt of price.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York City.

LITHOGRAPHS
OF
CHARLES DARWIN

Admirers of the Great Naturalist, and practically the father of Evolution, will be glad to know that we hav a fine lithograph of him for sale—size 18½x24 inches on heavy plate paper. Framed, the picture will make a splendid ornament for the parlors of Freethinkers. Price, 25 cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER,
33 Clinton Pl., New York.

S. P. Putnam's Works.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution, with some Criticisms of Universology. Price, 20 cts.

Waifs and Wanderings, a New American Story. Price, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cts. "A prose epic of the war, rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Golden Throne, a Romance. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creativ spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words—the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read Golden Throne.'"—INGERSOLL. $1.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A conversation in rhyme between the Nineteenth Century Infidel and the Galilean Reformer, wherein it is shown there is much in harmony between them. Price, 10 cts.

Prometheus. A poem. "It is crammed with life, thought, and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary beauty."—DR. HENRY W. BELLOWS. $1.

Gottlieb, His Life. A Romance of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Price 25 cents.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand, and other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cts.

For all of the above address
THE TRUTH SEEKER CO.
33 Clinton Place, New York.

Charles Watts's Works.

The History of Freethought. Bound in cloth and lettered. Price, $1.25. CONTENTS: Section I. Definition of Freethought and its Early Struggles for Life. Section II. What it Owes to Mohammedanism. Section III. Freethought Martyrs and Confessors. Section IV. Freethought in Conflict during the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries. Section V. Freethought Triumph in the Nineteenth Century.

The American Secular Union; its Necessity, and the Justice of its Nine Demands. (Dedicated to Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll.) 32 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Secularism; Destructiv and Constructiv. 22 pages in cover. Price, 10 cts.

Christian Evidences Criticised A reply to the "Christian Evidence Society." Introduction by Charles Bradlaugh. Contents: The Origin of Christianity; The Historical Value of the New Testament; Miracles; Prophecies; The Practical Value of Christianity; The Progress of Christianity. Price, $1.

Secularism; its Principles and its Duties. Price, 75 cts.

Tracts. The following tracts by Chas. Watts are published at the low price of FIVE CENTS EACH: Defense of Secular Principles; Is the Bible Reliable? The Christian Deity; Moral Value of the Bible; Freethought and Modern Progress; Christianity, its Nature and Influence on Civilization; Philosophy of Secularism; Science and Bible Antagonistic; Christian Scheme of Redemption. For all of the above works address THE TRUTH SEEKER, 33 Clinton Place, New York.

KERSEY GRAVES'S WORKS.

Sixteen Saviors or None. BY KERSEY GRAVES, auther of the World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; The Bible of Bibles, and Biography of Satan. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.

Bible of Bibles; or, Twenty-seven Divine Revelations, containing a description of twenty-seven bibles and an exposition of two thousand biblical errors in science, history, morals, religion, and general events. Also a delineation of the characters of the principal personages of the Christian Bible and an examination of their doctrins. Price, $2.

Biography of Satan; or, a Historical Exposition of the Devil and his Fiery Domains. Price, 35 cents.

The World's Sixteen Crucified Saviors; or, Christianity Before Christ. Containing new and startling revelations in religious history, which disclose the oriental origin of all the doctrines, principles, precepts, and miracles of the Christian New Testament, and furnishing a key for unlocking many of its sacred mysteries, besides comprising the history of sixteen oriental crucified gods. $2.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.
33 Clinton Place. New York.

REPLY
TO REV. L. A. LAMBERT'S
"NOTES ON INGERSOLL."
By B. W. Lacy.

A thorough exposure of the Catholic priest's sophistry, unfairness, and historical misstatement.

Price, Cloth, $1; Paper, 50 Cents.

Address THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Sabbath-Breaking.

By JOHN E. REMSBURG,
